of which the plaintiff was injured, it was held that no cause of action was alleged, as it was not alleged that the defendant was guilty of gross negligence. The court said: "It is our opinion that in order for an invited guest in an automobile to recover of the owner and driver of the car for an injury occasioned by the negligence of the driver, it must be pleaded that such negligence was gross negligence. See, in this connection, the reasoning set out in Self v. Dunn (1871) 42 Ga. 528, 5 Am. Rep. 544. See also, in this connection, Civil Code 1910, § 3473; Huddy, Automobiles, 5th ed. 890; Massaletti v. Fitzroy (Mass.) supra. We understand that it has been an open question in Georgia as to what degree of negligence is owed by the owner and driver of an automobile to an invited guest. We have reached the conclusion that, in order for the invited guest to recover from the owner and operator of an automobile for an injury received by reason of the negligent driving or handling of the machine, there must be facts pleaded that show gross neglect upon the part of the owner and driver of the machine. We have examined cases from other states, and in all cases where there seems to be a holding to the contrary the cases were dependent upon the particular facts there pleaded, such as the driving of the automobile at a reckless rate of speed over the protest of the invited guest, or the racing of the car with other vehicles over his protest."

And in Cody v. Venzie (1919) 263 Pa. 541, 107 Atl. 383, where an invited guest was injured while riding in the defendant's automobile, it was held that the different degrees of negligence are recognized in Pennsylvania, and that when a gratuitous carriage is for the sole benefit of the guest the law requires slight diligence, and holds the carrier responsible only for gross neglect, but an instruction that wanton and wilful negligence was necessary in order to sustain the action was held erroneous. The court said: "As carriers may be properly classified according to the relation which exists between them and their passengers or guests, so the duty which carriers owe to their passengers or guests may likewise be classified. On grounds of public policy, a carrier for hire owes to his passengers a duty of the greatest care, for he is paid to carry safely. Gratuitous carriers are, however, in an entirely different category. In England and in this country, and in the courts which recognize and in those which do not recognize kinds or degrees of negligence, 'the measure of liability of one who undertakes to carry gratis is the same as that of one who undertakes to keep gratis' (Massaletti v. Fitzroy (1917) 228 Mass. 487, L.R.A. 1918C, 264, 118 N. E. 168, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1088, 18 N. C. C. A. 690, and cases cited therein); and hence, from the well-settled law on the subject of bailments, we may ascertain and define the duty which the gratuitous carrier owes his guest. In First Nat. Bank v. Graham (1875) 79 Pa. 116, 21 Am. Rep. 49, and again in Woodruff v. Painter (1892) 150 Pa. 96, 16 L.R.A. 451, 30 Am. St. Rep. 786, 24 Atl. 621, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 872, we quoted with approval from Story on Bailments: 'When the bailment is for the sole benefit of the bailor, the law requires only slight diligence on the part of the bailee, and of course makes him answerable only for gross neglect. When the bailment is for the sole benefit of the bailee, the law requires great diligence on the part of the bailee, and makes him responsible for slight neglect. When the bailment is reciprocally beneficial to both parties, the law requires ordinary diligence on the part of the bailee, and makes him responsible for ordinary neglect.' It follows, therefore, that when a gratuitous carriage is for the sole benefit of the guest the law requires slight diligence, and makes the carrier only responsible for gross neglect; if it is for the sole benefit of the carrier the law requires great diligence, and makes the carrier responsible for slight neglect; and where it is for the benefit or pleasure of both parties, as in the instant case, it requires ordinary diligence, and makes the carrier responsible for ordinary neglect. We believe, however, for the reasons hereinbefore suggested—though the matter is wholly foreign to the present case—that justice would be better administered, and incidentally a better citizenship result, if juries were specifically told what were the duties and liabilities of the parties, without laying stress on the words, 'great,' 'ordinary,' or 'slight,' at the same time telling them why the law is so. A dogmatic statement as to what the law is, without stating the reason why it is so, receives but little heed from one who does not understand why he should as a man, and should not as a jurymen, give effect to his natural sympathy for those in distress; and his antagonism is not lessened by also dogmatically informing him, without explanation, that it is his duty to take the law from the court, or, almost equally useless unless the reason is given, that sympathy should not be considered in deciding the case. Inasmuch as the reason and spirit of the law are the life of the law, the course suggested would also tend to a better appreciation of the law by the judges themselves, and would aid in producing that uniformity and certainty so much needed in these days, when attacks are made upon the law for no other reason than that it restrains unlawful conduct. It follows from what has been said that the court below was clearly right in treating the case as one different from that of a carrier for hire; but it erred when it held that plaintiffs could not recover except upon proof of 'wanton and wilful' negligence, which is different even from gross negligence (1 Thomp. Neg. § 20); and also when it decided there was not sufficient evidence on the real question in issue to submit it to the jury. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that defendant was exercising ordinary care when he turned his Ford car at right angles while running downhill at a speed of 25 or 30 miles an hour. Some men might believe that it would be safe so to do, while others, equally honest, would believe the contrary. Whether those who so believed would be reckless, or those who did not would be overcautious, is a matter for the jury to determine. Whether the fact that the Ford automobile is a light vehicle affects the question; whether ordinary care did not require the defendant to run straight ahead, turn around, and afterwards proceed on the crossroad; whether he made the turn because of something said or done by plaintiffs; and whether his wife's suddenly calling attention to the signboard threw him off his guard—are also matters for the jury, and not for the court."

3. Effect of statutes.

In some jurisdictions the question under consideration is governed by statutory provisions.

Thus, in Roy v. Kirn (1919) 208 Mich. 571, 175 N. W. 475, a statute providing that the owner of an automobile shall be liable for an injury occasioned by the negligent operation of such motor vehicle, whether such negligence consists in violation of the provisions of the statutes of the state, or in the failure to observe such ordinary care in such operation as the rules of the common law require, was held applicable as between the driver of an automobile and an occupant thereof, and not merely between the driver or his principal, and the public.

And in Jacobs v. Jacobs (1917) 141 La. 272, L.R.A.1917F, 253, 74 So. 992, it was held that the driver of an automobile who has invited a guest to ride with him is not absolved from responsibility for negligence or imprudence merely because he is performing a gratuitous service, and that although an invited guest, being a mere licensee, is not entitled to the consideration due by a carrier to a passenger for hire, he is nevertheless entitled to the benefit of the provision of the Civil Code that any act of negligence or imprudence that causes injury to another obliges him who was at fault to pay for the injury; and it was held that the responsibility of the driver of an automobile for the safety of his guest is not limited to his duty to abstain from acts of gross or wilful negligence, but demands that he avoid the ordinary negligence or imprudence referred to in the Civil Code.

And in Nichols v. Pacific Electric R. Co. (1918) 178 Cal. 630, 174 Pac. 319, where the Code provided that a carrier of persons without reward must use ordinary care and diligence for their safety, it was held that the driver of an automobile was liable for an injury to his guest which was proximately caused by the driver's negligence in case the guest was not guilty of contributory negligence.

And in McKeen v. Iverson (1921) — N. D. —, 180 N. W. 805, a finding by the jury that the death of plaintiff's husband, who was riding as a guest with the defendant, was due to the reckless driving of the latter, was held supported by the evidence, and the court stated that by statute every person is responsible, not only for his wilful acts, but also for an injury occasioned to another by the want of ordinary care in the management of his property, except where the one injured by the want of ordinary care brought the injury upon himself.

4. Respondent superior.

In most of the cases the owner was personally driving the car, but the general rule has been held applicable where his employee was operating the car, and the question of respondent superior was expressly raised.

Thus, in Lowell v. Williams (1918) 183 App. Div. 701, 170 N. Y. Supp. 596, affirmed in (1920) 228 N. Y. 592, 127 N. E. 916, in holding that the fact that the plaintiff was riding as a gratuitous guest in defendant's automobile did not prevent the application of the rule of respondent superior as between the latter and her chauffeur operating the car, the court said: "It is said that the doctrine is not applicable, as between master and servant, in relation to a gratuitous guest invited by the master, as in the present case, to ride in a carriage or automobile purely as a courtesy or kindness. The question of appellant's liability, presented by the plaintiff, must be answered from the cold legal standpoint, unaffected by other considerations. That the owner of a vehicle inviting another to ride with him as a favor nevertheless owes some duty to his guest cannot be disputed. He cannot wilfully injure him, or expose him to unnecessary or unusual dangers. Nor can it be disputed that in such case the owner would be responsible for his own personal negligence in caring for his guest. Such was the case of Patnode v. Foote (1912) 153 App. Div. 494, 138 N. Y. Supp. 221, where the guest recovered for damages sustained by reason of the reckless driving of the host. The contention that the owner is not responsible seems to be based upon the theory that, the plaintiff accepting defendant's invitation, and placing herself, as did appellant, in the care of the chauffeur, the latter was acting for her as much as for the appellant, and for the time being was the servant of both. The doctrine of Massaletti v. Fitzroy (1917) 228 Mass. 487, L.R.A.1918C, 264, 118 N. E. 168, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1088, 18 N. C. C. A. 690, appears to turn upon degrees of negligence, whether slight, ordinary, or gross, which the court holds still exist in Massachusetts. In that case the court held that the defendant could not be held liable to an invited guest, save for gross negligence. We do not recognize these distinctions or degrees of negligence in this state, referring entirely to the degree of care required in the particular case presented—some relations demanding extraordinary, and others but ordinary, care. If a man fulfils the obligation of care placed upon him, he is not negligent; and if he fails, he may be adjudged negligent. It seems to us that, once it is conceded that the appellant owed to her guest the duty of reasonable care, she cannot escape liability for the negligence of her chauffeur on the facts in this case. It may be that the doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply to every case of a person riding gratuitously, upon a friendly invitation from the owner of a vehicle. There may be cases where the relation of the owner of the vehicle and the person so invited would partake of the nature of a joint adventure, in which the chauffeur, the general servant of the owner, would, for the time being, become the servant of both, or where the doctrine of assumption of risk might bar recovery. In such cases the doctrine of respondeat superior might not apply. But on the evidence here there is nothing to justify a finding of joint adventure or assumption of risk. Indeed, there is some evidence from appellant's chauffeur tending to show active personal supervision of the operating of the automobile by the appellant. But the mere fact that the plaintiff was a guest, riding free, accepting a courtesy and kindness from appellant, does not prevent the application of the rule."

As to liability of parent for injury to child's guest by negligent operation of car, see annotation in 2 A.L.R. 900.

5. Application to facts.

In driving his automobile while accompanied by a guest the operator is required to use reasonable and ordinary care not to increase the danger to the guest by fast and reckless driving, and he is guilty of negligence rendering him liable to the guest, where he operates his machine in violation of the speed laws, and an injury results to the guest, who was not guilty of contributory negligence. Spring v. McCabe (1921) — Cal. App. —, 200 Pac. 41.

And in Beard v. Klusmeier (1914) 158 Ky. 153, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1100, 164 S. W. 319, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 342, it was held that one who invites another to ride in his automobile must exercise ordinary care not to increase the danger of such undertaking, or create a new danger, and is liable to his guest for injuries caused by such rapid driving of the car, against the protest of the guest, where it results in a collision with an obstruction in the street.

And in McGeever v. O'Byrne (1919) 203 Ala. 266, 82 So. 508, the court stated that the evidence showed without dispute that the defendant was guilty of gross negligence in driving his automobile, loaded with passengers who were his invited guests, at a speed of approximately 40 miles an hour, over a crossing of two of the main thoroughfares of a city, and it also appeared, without the possibility of any conflicting evidence, that this reckless misconduct was the proximate cause of a collision with another car, which resulted in plaintiff's injury. The question at issue in this case was the assumption of risk, or contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

In Borys v. Christowsky (1916) 9 Sask. L. R. 181, 27 D. L. R. 792, 34 West. L. R. 346, 10 West. Week. Rep. 291, a finding for the plaintiff was sustained where there was evidence that the defendant took his hands off the steering wheel of his automobile while driving at a high rate of speed, and that this caused an accident and injury to the plaintiff, the court stating that defendant's act constituted gross negligence and rendered him liable to the plaintiff for injuries received while riding with him, by his consent. It is not entirely clear in this case whether or not the plaintiff was an invited guest.

In Masten v. Cousins (1919) 216 Ill. App. 268, where one count alleged that at the defendant's invitation the plaintiff was riding with him in his automobile, and that defendant so negligently drove the car along the highway that the plaintiff was thrown therefrom and injured, it was held that the question of negligence was for the jury, there being testimony that the defendant, against the plaintiff's repeated protests, was driving the car along the highway at 40 miles an hour, and that it left the highway, collided with a tree, and threw the plaintiff out and injured her, and under the facts the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was held applicable.

And in this case, under another count alleging that the defendant, while the plaintiff was an invited guest in his car, negligently drove and operated it at a speed greater than that prescribed by the Motor Vehicle Act, and that the car left the road, collided with a tree, and injured the plaintiff, it was held that a prima facie case of negligence was made out by evidence supporting the allegations.

In Pinckard v. Pease (1921) 115 Wash. 282, 197 Pac. 49, where one was driving a doctor to his house, and was trying to reach the bedside of a patient in the shortest possible time, it was held that he was not guilty of negligence, it appearing that he drove his car without chains over a hard, straight piece of wet road at 30 or 35 miles an hour, and as he approached a curve he applied the brakes, but because of the slippery condition of the road the speed was not lessened as much as he anticipated, and the car skidded, resulting in an accident and injury to the doctor. The court said: "We are not dealing here with the degree of care that Hugh Pease would be held to in case he had injured someone on the highway. The degree of care which he was called upon to exercise should be measured by what a reasonable man would have done in the same circumstances. He had with him a medical man whose purpose was at one with his; that is, to reach the bedside of Mrs. Pease in the shortest possible time. They were engaged on the same errand. In this degree they were actuated by the same feeling, and to hold either one of them liable for negligence under these circumstances, the negligence must have been practically gross or wilful. The exercise of a fine and discriminating judgment in such circumstances is not practical or obligatory. The driver cannot be said to have done differently than a reasonably prudent man would have done under the same circumstances. The curve was not a specially sharp one, and the speed at which he was going was not excessive, in view of the imperative nature of the errand, and an attempt was made to slacken speed at the curve. So far as the appellant's responsibility to the respondent is concerned, we can find no act of negligence, and at most it was, as agreed to by the respondent, the result of a mistake of judgment."

In Avery v. Thompson (1918) 117

Me. 120, L.R.A.1918D, 205, 103 Atl. 4, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1122, it was held that a finding was justified that the defendant did not use the reasonable care required toward his guest, where it appeared from the evidence that he was familiar with the premises, and knew that he was approaching a grade crossing, and that, although the whistle of an approaching train had been blown, and an automatic bell was ringing, and he saw the train approaching a short distance away, he attempted to drive over the crossing and was hit by the train.

And in Tennessee C. R. Co. v. Vanhoy (1920) 143 Tenn. 312, 226 S. W. 225, the question of negligence on the part of the driver of an automobile in which plaintiff's deceased was riding as a guest was held for the jury, where there was evidence that he was an experienced driver, familiar with the dangerous character of the railroad crossing where the accident occurred, and that he ran his car upon the track at a crossing, at which his vision was obstructed to the extent that he could not see an approaching train till within a few feet of the track, without stopping, looking, and listening.

In Barnett v. Levy (1919) 213 Ill. App. 129, where one, claiming to be a guest, sought recovery for an injury alleged to have been caused by the defendant's negligence in operating an automobile, the question of the defendant's negligence was held properly left to the jury, there being no dispute but that the accident was due to a blow-out of a tire, but no direct evidence as to what caused the blow-out, and the evidence as to the speed of the car being conflicting.

In Jacobs v. Jacobs (1917) 141 La. 272, L.R.A.1917F, 253, 74 So. 992, where the provision of the Civil Code that any act of negligence or imprudence that causes injury to another obliges him who was at fault to pay for the injury was held applicable in the case of an invited guest, it was held that the driver of an automobile was not liable for injuries sustained by his guest, where it appeared that the driver had inquired about the condition of a thoroughfare before entering it, and was informed that it was all right; that the car, while traveling at a moderate rate of speed on a prominent street in a city, ran into an open canal extending across the thoroughfare without any guard rail, barrier, red light, or other warning of danger; that the glare of an electric light between the driver and the canal prevented his seeing the danger until it was too late to stop while going at an ordinary speed; that the driver had never traveled over that route before, and had no knowledge of the dangerous situation; and that the guest had traveled over the route several times, and was acquainted with the situation, but that he did not warn the driver or complain of the speed.

And in Ortwein v. Droste (1921) 191 Ky. 17, 228 S. W. 1028, where a recovery was sought for an injury alleged to have resulted to the plaintiff through the negligence of one who had invited her to ride, the evidence was held to support a verdict for the defendant, there being testimony that on a rainy morning he met the plaintiff and invited her to ride, and that when going down a hill the automobile got in the car track while being driven at a moderate speed, and commenced skidding, and turned completely around and ran into a pole.

And in Connolly v. Ritter (1915) 43 Pa. Co. Ct. 527, where the deceased was jolted out of a car, it was conceded that the deceased was riding with the defendant as a guest, and that the duty of the defendant was to exercise ordinary care only, and it was held that a nonsuit was properly granted, the testimony of the defendant, who was called as a witness by the plaintiff, showing that he was a competent chauffeur, that he used due care at and before the happening of the accident, and that he was familiar with the road conditions.

In Powell v. Berry (1916) 145 Ga. 696, L.R.A.1917A, 306, 89 S. E. 753, 13 N. C. C. A. 858, where recovery was sought against the driver of an automobile, for the death of one riding with him as a guest, it was held that the voluntary drunkenness of the driver was no excuse for negligence, and that it did not relieve one from exercising the degree of care required of a sober man under the same circumstances, the court holding that ordinary care is not to be measured by what every prudent drunken man would do under like circumstances, but by what every prudent sober man would do under the circumstances.

In Lochhead v. Jensen (1912) 42 Utah, 99, 129 Pac. 347, which was an action against the owner of an automobile for an injury sustained by one whom he had invited to ride with him, an instruction that it was the duty of the defendant "to use due diligence in the driving of the same, so as to have it under reasonable control at all times to avoid injury; and it is the duty of the driver . . . to keep a reasonable lookout for any obstruction or dangers that may be in the road upon which he is driving, and if he fails to do so, and through his negligence causes injury to others, then he is liable therefor," was held prejudicial in the case, since it presented questions of negligence beyond those charged in the complaint; there was, however, no intimation that the court considered the general rules laid down unsound.

b. Guests at sufferance.

In some cases involving an injury to a guest at sufferance riding in an automobile, a distinction has been made between the degree of care required in the operation of a car in which one is riding as an invited guest, and one in which the guest was merely one at sufferance.

Thus, a distinction is made in Lutvin v. Dopkus (1920) 94 N. J. L. 64, 108 Atl. 862, between a case where the person injured was riding at the owner's invitation, and one where he had himself requested the owner to allow him to ride, the court there holding that where the plaintiffs requested the defendant to convey them in his automobile to a certain place, and their request was allowed, and an injury to them occurred, the plaintiffs were mere licensees, and that the defendant owed them only the duty of refraining from acts wantonly or wilfully injurious. The court said: "The conceded fact is that they solicited the defendant, as brother members of the organization, for the use of his automobile to take them to the picnic grounds and return. The act of the defendant in acceding to their request possessed none of the elements of a contract, and involved no element of invitation which can bring it within the rule of law applicable to a passenger upon a railway train or a hired bus, or to those cases of express or implied invitation upon which reliance is placed in the appellant's brief, and which involve, as a consequence of the legal relationship thus established, the application of the rule of due care. The legal status of the plaintiffs here exhibited is that of licensees, to whom the only legal obligation imposed is that of refraining from the perpetration of acts wantonly or wilfully injurious."

20 A.L.R.—65.

And in Crider v. Yolande Coal & Coke Co. (1921) — Ala. —, 89 So. 285, where one was riding in a motor truck as an accommodation, and without charge, it was held that he was a mere licensee, and assumed all the risks of the carriage, except such as might result from wanton or intentional wrong, or a failure to exercise due care to avert injury after his danger became apparent. And in this case a count which merely alleged negligence, and contained no charge of wanton or intentional injury, was held insufficient to state a cause of action.

And the evidence in the Crider Case showing that the one riding on the motor truck for his accommodation was thrown therefrom when the car, which was traveling 20 or 25 miles an hour, in rounding a curve, turned 2 or 3 feet to the right to allow an automobile to pass, and hit a hole, it was held that the driver was not negligent in respect of the immediate and emergent duty presented by the actual conditions obtaining at the time of the accident.

But in La Rose v. Shaughnessy Ice Co. (1921) 197 App. Div. 821, 189 N. Y. Supp. 562, where a boy ten years old climbed on a motor truck and was allowed by the driver to ride for some distance, a part of the time on the seat, it was held that he was not subject to the treatment of a mere trespasser, but that the driver owed him a higher duty than merely to refrain from doing him a wanton injury, and that the duty owed was not discharged, where, in a crowded section, the driver of the truck slowed down and told the boy to get off, and then, without giving him an opportunity to do so, increased the speed, by reason of which the boy was thrown under the truck and injured.

And in Grabau v. Pudwill (1920) 45 N. D. 423, 178 N. W. 124, where a boy fourteen years old got upon the running board of the automobile of a neighbor while it was in a town, and remained thereon with the knowledge and implied consent of the driver during a trip into the country, it was held that he was a guest by sufferance, and that the driver owed him the duty to exercise ordinary care for his safety. The court said: "The plaintiff received no invitation to ride upon the car. Yet the defendants knew all the time that he was upon the running board of the car. He was in plain sight. He was a guest of the defendants, by sufferance. It is true that he was a gratuitous guest, but this alone is not sufficient to relieve the defendants from at least the exercise of ordinary care for his safety. In fact, we can see but little difference between defendants' duty toward him as a gratuitous guest, after the acquired full knowledge of his presence on the running board, than if they had, in the first instance, invited him as their guest. The defendants, however, contend that, before there can be any liability on their part, it must appear that they were guilty of active negligence. We do not think that rule should be applicable to a case of this character. If there is any evidence of negligence, such that the minds of reasonable men might draw from it different conclusions, it should have been submitted to the jury. We think there was such evidence." And in this case the question of the defendant's negligence was held for the jury, where the evidence tended to show that the boy was allowed to stand on the running board during a trip on a country road for a distance of 6 or 7 miles, and that the automobile, at a curve in the road, left the highway and collided with a pole, after running approximately 40 feet, and that the boy's leg was lacerated by contact with a wire fence.

c. Contributory negligence.

The question as to personal care of guest as affecting his right to recover against a third person is treated in the annotation in 18 A.L.R. 309; and, as affecting his liability to a third person, in the annotation in 18 A.L.R. 365.

It has been held that ordinarily a driver is intrusted with caring for the safety of the occupants of his car, and that unless the danger is obvious, or is known to the guest, he may rely upon the assumption that the driver will exercise proper care and caution; but that if an adult guest in an automobile driven by another sees, or ought by due diligence to see, a danger not obvious to the driver, or sees that the driver is incompetent or careless, or is not taking proper precautions, it is his duty to give some warning of danger, and that a failure to do so is negligence. Tennessee C. R. Co. v. Vanhoy (1920) 143 Tenn. 312, 226 S. W. 225.

And in McGeever v. O'Byrne (1919) 203 Ala. 266, 82 So. 508, infra, it was held that a passenger riding with another in an automobile owes the duty to exercise due care, and may be guilty of such negligence as to bar a recovery against the driver of the car for an injury.

And in Powell v. Berry (1916) 145 Ga. 696, L.R.A.1917A, 306, 89 S. E. 753, 13 N. C. C. A. 858, where recovery was sought against the driver of an automobile for the death of a guest riding with him, it was held that one riding in a car driven by another, though a mere guest and having no control over the person driving the car, may be guilty of such negligence as to preclude a recovery for an injury resulting from the negligent operation of the car, and it was held that if a driver, from intoxication, is in a condition which renders him incapable of operating it with proper skill, and this fact is known, or palpably apparent to one entering the car, this is a fact which may be proved for the consideration of the jury to throw light on the question whether such person exercised ordinary care in entering the car, or remaining in it, or in reference to his conduct while in it, and that it might also be shown as bearing on the guest's negligence that he took drinks of liquor with the driver of the car, and furnished some of the liquor, and upon the evidence in the case the question of contributory negligence was held for the jury.

And in Tennessee C. R. Co. v. Vanhoy (Tenn.) supra, where plaintiff's intestate was killed at a railroad crossing while riding as a guest in defendant's automobile, the question of contributory negligence was held for the jury, there being evidence showing that she had ridden in automobiles but a few times, and was unfamiliar with their operation, that she was on the rear seat so that her view was obstructed by those seated in front of her, and that she did not know they were approaching a railroad track, and had no reason to believe that the driver, who could see the approach of a train before she could, would not exercise due care.

In Rappaport v. Roberts (1918) — Mo. App. —, 203 S. W. 676, it was held that an invited guest was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, where there was evidence that he objected, within a block of the scene of the accident, to the speeding up of the car in order to race with a car which had just passed, although he sat still until the accident occurred, and did not insist that the car be stopped, or that he be allowed to get out. The court said: "He was riding as a guest, and was not in control of the automobile, and unless the danger was obviously very great, and the time elapsing after his claimed remonstrance was long enough for plaintiff to be deemed to have acquiesced in the race, he ought not to be considered guilty of contributory negligence merely because he did not do more than remonstrate in the manner in which he says he did. He was riding at the invitation and by favor of the man who was driving, and the negligence of the latter cannot be imputed to him. This rule, of course, does not absolve plaintiff from exercising ordinary care for his own safety. He must exercise all the care which ordinary caution required of him under the circumstances. Burton v. Pryor (1917) — Mo. App. —, 198 S. W. 1120. But the time was too short to make plaintiff amenable to the charge of contributory negligence, on the ground that, after making objection, he remained quiescent in the car until the collision occurred. In other words, the question of contributory negligence in this case should depend solely upon whether plaintiff instigated the race by suggesting it to the driver, or whether it was against his advice and over his objection, and not upon the fact that he thereafter sat still and made no other, or more effective or insistent, objection, in the short space of time afforded."

In Lochhead v. Jensen (1912) 42 Utah, 99, 129 Pac. 347, it was held that the question of contributory negligence should not be left to the jury where there was no evidence to show that the guest did or said, or failed to do or say, anything, or that he had exercised any control or direction over the operation or handling of the machine, or that he in any way consented to or acquiesced in the manner of its operation.

In Avery v. Thompson (1918) 117 Me. 120, L.R.A.1918D, 205, 103 Atl. 4, it was held that an invited guest who was injured when the driver of an automobile drove in front of an approaching train was not guilty of contributory negligence, where she had neither direction nor control over the operation of the car, and was a stranger in the locality, and it appeared that she was the first to see the approaching train and gave timely warning to the driver. The court said: "The plaintiff cannot be held guilty of contributory negligence, as is earnestly urged by the defendant. The negligence complained of was the act, not of the railroad company, but of the defendant in the management of the machine, and no act, or failure to act, on the part of the plaintiff, can be deemed the proximate cause of the accident. She had neither direction nor control of its operation. That was absolutely within his power. She neither consented to nor acquiesced in the particular management or mismanagement that caused the tragedy. She was a stranger in the locality and was sitting quietly on the back seat, in full and justifiable reliance upon his capacity as a competent driver. She was not inattentive, because she was apparently the first to perceive the train, and at once gave warning. He heard her exclamation. Had he heeded it and stopped, as he might have done, all would have been well. Instead, he hesitated, then put on speed and plunged rashly into obvious peril, into the very jaws of death. She was powerless to prevent it. Clearly, no blame can be attached to the plaintiff."

And in McKeen v. Iverson (1921) — N. D. —, 180 N. W. 805, it was held that a finding was justified that the deceased, who was killed while riding in the defendant's automobile, was not guilty of contributory negligence in getting into the defendant's car, although the defendant was more or less intoxicated, it appearing that several others also got into the car, and that the fact that the guests were somewhat intoxicated, and that the deceased participated in the use of liquor by the defendant, would not bar a recovery, it appearing that the accident resulted not from the defendant's incapacity to handle the car, but from his lack of care, and desire to do a stunt to frighten his guests.

And in Masten v. Cousins (1919) 216 Ill. App. 268, where the plaintiff sought to recover for an injury sustained while riding as a guest in the defendant's car, when it was being driven by the latter 40 miles an hour and left the highway and collided with a tree, it was held that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, there being evidence that about ten minutes before the accident she had requested the defendant to slow down, and he had done so, and that just a moment before the injury she had again requested him to drive slower.

In Crider v. Yolande Coal & Coke Co. (1921) — Ala. —, 89 So. 285, where one who was riding on a motor truck for his accommodation stood upon the floor of the car, leaning with his back against the cab, or hood, over the driver's seat, with one arm resting on the top of it, and lost his balance and fell from the truck when it struck a hole, it was held, in an action by him against the owner of the truck, that he was guilty of contributory negligence barring a recovery.

In Rappaport v. Roberts (1918) — Mo. App. —, 203 S. W. 676, where the evidence was conflicting as to whether the guest requested the driver to speed up the car and pass another, an instruction which did not submit to the jury the question whether or not the plaintiff made such a request, but merely submitted the question whether directing the driver to speed up was negligence, was held erroneous. And in this case another instruction that before the plaintiff, a guest, could recover, it must appear that his injury was caused by the negligence of one or more of the defendants, "without any fault, neglect, or want of ordinary care and prudence on plaintiff's part," was held not properly to submit the question of contributory negligence, in view of the statement that the plaintiff must be without any fault or neglect, and a statement in the first part of the instruction that the plaintiff must exercise the "highest degree of care and caution."

In McGeevor v. O'Byrne (1919) 203 Ala. 266, 82 So. 508, an instruction was held erroneous and prejudicial, in an action by a guest to recover for an injury sustained while riding in defendant's automobile, that plaintiff's mere knowledge that defendant was under the influence of intoxicants, and of his driving across city streets at an excessive speed, would, as a matter of law, bar any recovery for defendant's simple negligence, the court holding that this withdrew from the jury the essential factor of plaintiff's volition in continuing the journey up to the place of the collision, as to which the evidence was in dispute, and also withdrew the question of plaintiff's assumption of the risk of injury, which rested in debatable inference.

In the McGeevor Case it was alleged in one plea that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence which proximately contributed to cause his injuries; that the defendant, for a distance of a quarter of a mile preceding the accident, had been driving along one of the main streets of the city, which intersected one of the thoroughfares constantly used by automobiles; that the plaintiff knew these facts; that defendant, while so doing, was driving at an excessive rate of speed—40 miles an hour; that plaintiff, with knowledge of these facts and the danger, negligently sat in the doorway of the automobile with his feet resting on the running board, which was obviously dangerous to a man of ordinary prudence, and that his injuries followed as a proximate cause of plaintiff's negligence, it was held that such plea was not subject to demurrer on the grounds that it failed to show facts which in law constituted contributory negligence or assumption of risk; that it failed to show that plaintiff had any control over the operation of the car or the one driving; that it showed that the defendant was in control of the machine, and did not show any facts which cast upon the plaintiff the duty of protesting or warning defendant against driving at the alleged high rate of speed. And another plea, averring the same facts as the one above, with an addition that the defendant at the time was under the influence of intoxicating liquor, and that plaintiff, with knowledge that the car was driven as stated while the defendant was under the influence of intoxicants, knowingly and wilfully rode at the high rate of speed without protest or objection, and which alleged that an ordinarily prudent man would not have done so, was held not subject to any of the grounds of demurrer above stated. And another plea, alleging in substance that the plaintiff and defendant took several drinks of whisky and beer, and joined in a ride for mutual pleasure, and that plaintiff willingly and voluntarily rode in the car for about a quarter of a mile at a speed of approximately 40 miles an hour, knowing that defendant was under the influence of intoxicants, and that the car was loaded above its capacity, and its driving, therefore, dangerous, and that the streets driven over were constantly used by automobiles, was held not subject to a demurrer alleging that no facts were stated which showed that plaintiff's intoxication was a proximate cause of the injury.

II. Injury due to condition of car.

It will be observed that in the reported case (O'SHEA v. LAVOY, ante, 1008) it was decided that an owner of an automobile is not liable to his father-in-law, riding with him as an invited guest, for an injury sustained when the machine turned over because of a defective spring breaking, although the car was a secondhand one, and the spring had been repaired with old parts, the court holding that the situation was analogous to a case of one invited to dine; that the legal relation was that of licensor and licensee; that in such cases the guest accepts the premises as he finds them, subject only to the limitation that the licensor must not set a trap or be guilty of active negligence; and that the broken spring in question did not constitute a trap. The court discusses cases dealing with the question of liability of an owner of an automobile for damages resulting to an invited guest by reason of the negligent management of the car, and points out that the apparent conflict may be accounted for on the ground that in some states different degrees of care are recognized, while in others there is but one degree of care; it refrains, however, from deciding the degree of negligence in the management of the car which will render the owner of an automobile liable for damages to an invited guest.

J. T. W.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA EX REL. S. P. SMITH

v.

COUNTY COURT OF KANAWHA COUNTY et al.

West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals — March 31, 1916.

(78 W. Va. 168, 88 S. E. 662.)

Political parties — rules — enforcement by courts.

1. In the absence of a statute conferring the jurisdiction, courts will not undertake to settle and determine substantial controversies between rival political committees, or factions of such a committee, the right in which is dependent upon party rules, usages, and customs, or grant relief to either of such committees or factions, as the representative of the party, in those cases in which the party is entitled to relief, but will refuse the relief asked until the controversy is settled and determined by some supervising board, committee, or other tribunal of the party.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1035.]

Mandamus — what will support.

2. Clear legal right of the relator in mandamus to have performance of the act he seeks to coerce performance of, and plain duty to perform it on the part of the respondent, are essential to the award of the writ.

[See 18 R. C. L. 128; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 787.]

Evidence — judicial notice — rules of political parties.

3. Courts judicially know political parties have rules and regulations for their government and tribunals for the prescription, interpretation, and administration thereof, and that the rights of members and inferior or subordinate bodies of such organizations are determinable by such rules and regulations within the parties and by their tribunals.

[See 9 R. C. L. 1069; 15 R. C. L. 1092, 1126.]

Courts — recognition of rules of societies.

4. In the absence of fraud or violation of positive law, courts will recognize and vindicate rights accorded by the decisions of such tribunals, in those cases in which a statute makes it their duty to recognize and enforce them.

Political parties — factions — recognition.

5. Neither of two factions of a political committee, dividing on substantial controversies governed by party usages, customs, and rules, can be recognized by the courts as having prima facie right.

[See 9 R. C. L. 1068.]

— remonstrance by faction.

6. A remonstrance or protest by one faction of a political committee made to an officer or court acting in a ministerial capacity, against performance of an act demanded on behalf of the party by another faction claiming to represent it, and based upon allegations of fact raising questions as to the right of such factions to represent the party, determinable by its supervising committees and governing bodies, justifies the refusal of the officer or court to perform the act demanded.

PETITION by relator for a writ of mandamus to compel respondents to appoint certain persons whose names he had certified for appointment to the position of registrars of voters of Kanawha county. Writ refused.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Avis & Donnally, for petitioner:

In the absence of any statute giving them jurisdiction, the courts have no power to interfere with the judgments of the committees and tribunals of established political parties, in matters involving party government and discipline.

Marcum v. Ballot Comrs. 42 W. Va. 263, 86 L.R.A. 296, 26 S. E. 281; Kump v. McDonald, 64 W. Va. 325, 61 S. E. 908; Boggess v. Buxton, 67 W. Va. 679, 69 S. E. 367, 21 Ann. Cas. 289; Moody v. Trimble, 109 Ky. 139, 50 L.R.A. 810, 58 S. W. 504; Davis v. Hambrick, 109 Ky. 276, 51 L.R.A. 671, 58 S. W. 779; Phelps v. Piper, 48 Neb. 724, 33 L.R.A. 53, 67 N. W. 755; Kearns v. Holley, 188 Pa. 116, 42 L.R.A. 235, 68 Am. St. Rep. 852, 41 Atl. 273.

Members of political committees are not public officers.

Usilton v. Bramble, 117 Md. 10, 82 Atl. 661, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 743; Atty. Gen. v. Drohan, 169 Mass. 534, 61 Am. St. Rep. 301, 48 N. E. 279.

Messrs. McClintic, Mathews, & Campbell also for petitioner.

Messrs. Frank Lively and W. E. R. Byrne for respondents.

Poffenbarger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator, chairman of the Republican county executive committee of Kanawha county, seeks a peremptory writ of mandamus commanding the county court of said county to appoint, as registrars of voters therein, certain persons whose names he had certified to that body for appointment to said positions, upon averment of his right to have them appointed under the provisions of § 98a-1 of chapter 3 of the Code (§ 121), as amended by chapter 28 of the Acts of 1915. From the return of the alternative writ, it appears that his presentation of the list of persons designated for appointment was met by a protest against their appointment, on the ground of alleged irregularity and invalidity of their selection. One member of the court was willing to appoint them, another declined, and the third was absent from the court and the state, on account of illness.

The grounds of the protest were:

(1) That S. P. Smith, the relator, was not, and never had been, chairman of said committee; and (2) that the persons whose names were presented by him had not been by it selected or designated for appointment. These denials of right were based upon several claims or contentions. As elected by the Republican voters of the county in a primary election held June 4, 1912, the committee consisted of ten members, one from each magisterial district. On some date in the year 1914, one of them, W. F. Shirkey, elected for Malden district, resigned, and the remaining members elected John H. Hawes to fill the vacancy. The relator was not one of the ten. On April 4, 1914, a resolution was adopted by the committee, electing him a member thereof from the county at large, and making him its chairman with the right to vote in case of a tie. Since that date, he has acted as chairman, but the return denies authority in the committee to enlarge its membership. On March 4, 1916, he, and five members whose titles to the positions they claim are admitted, met pursuant to a notice of a meeting of the committee, and, on the assumption of a vacancy in the position to which S. A. Fogarty had been chosen for Elk district, elected W. S. McAfee to that position and thereafter recognized him as a member. Claiming, then, to have six of the ten original members and seven of the eleven members composing the committee, as they contend, they adopted a resolution purporting to confer upon Chairman Smith power to name, on behalf of the committee, persons for appointment as registrars. Fogarty, still claiming his membership, and four others, did not attend the meeting. They denied that Fogarty's place was vacant, that Smith was a member, and that a quorum was present when McAfee was admitted and the resolution adopted, Fogarty's change of residence to a point in another state is the ground of denial of his membership. McAfee was elected to his place on the assumption that his change of residence had ipso facto vacated it. On the other hand it is claimed he is residing out of the state only temporarily; that temporary absence was not cause for his removal; and that, if it were, it did not of itself create a vacancy, so as to reduce the membership of the committee to nine, of which five might have been a quorum. On the issues of fact entering into the controversy considerable evidence was submitted, and numerous political precedents were invoked in support of the regularity and validity of the committee procedure relied upon by the relator. For both him and the respondent, it is claimed § 27 of chapter 26 of the Acts of 1915 vests jurisdiction in the courts to review the acts of all political committees.

Clear legal right in the relator to have the act he seeks to coerce performed, and plain duty to perform it on the part of the respondent, are indispensable bases of an application for the writ of mandamus. Doubt as to his right or the duty of the officer is fatal to him. Hutton v. Holt, 52 W. Va. 672, 44 S. E. 164; Payne v. Staunton, 55 W. Va. 202, 46 S. E. 927, 2 Ann. Cas. 74; Hall v. Staunton, 55 W. Va. 684, 47 S. E. 265; Marcum v. Ballot Comrs. 42 W. Va. 263, 273, 36 L.R.A. 296, 26 S. E. 281.

The right to the relief sought here depends upon the solution of the numerous questions raised by the protest. Seven members out of eleven, a quorum with one to spare, composed the meeting at which the resolution was adopted purporting to give the chairman authority to name the registrars, if the elected committee had power to enlarge their number by election of a member at large, and Fogarty's place had become vacant and had been properly filled. But, if the committee had no power to add to its membership, there could have been only ten members in all; and, if Fogarty had not vacated his place, less than a quorum constituted the meeting at which the resolution was passed. Whether Smith, though a member, having right to vote only in case of a tie, could be counted to make a quorum, and whether Fogarty's change of residence disqualified him, or, disqualifying him, ipso facto vacated his place, are questions. All of these are determinable by rules, regulations, and precedents of the political party of which the committee is a tribunal, and they are made, interpreted, and applied by the party committees and conventions. They are not recognized or treated as constituting any part of the public law administered by the courts, unless made so by statute. Courts judicially know political parties, like other voluntary associations, have rules and regulations for their government and tribunals for the prescription, interpretation, and administration thereof, and that the rights of members and inferior or subordinate bodies of such organizations are determinable by the rules and regulations within the parties and through their tribunals. When political rights are so settled and determined, the courts recognize them and vindicate them. Boggess v. Buxton, 67 W. Va. 679, 69 S. E. 367, 21 Ann. Cas. 289; Republican Executive Committee v. County Ct. 68 W. Va. 113, 69 S. E. 522; Kump v. McDonald, 64 W. Va. 323, 325, 61 S. E. 909.

But if an inferior committee is divided into opposing factions, and the demand of one of them upon a public officer or tribunal for the performance of a statutory duty toward the party such faction professes to represent meets with

Evidence—judicial notice—rules of political parties.

Courts—recognition of rules of societies.

Mandamus—what will support.

resistance by way of a protest or remonstrance based upon facts raising issues determinable by party usages and customs, the right between them must be regarded as uncertain and undetermined. The remonstrance brings to the surface an issue for the determination of which

~~Political parties~~
~~—rules—enforce—~~ ~~ment by courts.~~

public law known to the courts makes no provision. Of course, party usages and customs are susceptible of proof; but courts cannot interpret and apply them without invasion of the province of the party tribunals. Political parties, like fraternal and religious societies and corporations of all kinds, administer, as well as make, their rules and regulations, within the limitations prescribed by law. To assume jurisdiction or exercise power within this sphere of social influence and dominion would be a judicial invasion of right, and an unnecessary one. The right of a voluntary association to interpret and administer its own rules and regulations is as sacred as is the right to make them, and there is no presumption against just and correct action or conduct on the part of its supervising or appellate authorities and tribunals. On the contrary, the presumption is in favor of it. In connecting himself with the organization, a member subjects himself as fully and completely to the power of administration, within legal limits, as to the power of legislation or prescription. To say courts can make rules and regulations for such associations would be absurd and ridiculous. To say they may interpret and apply them, in view of the powers reserved to, and exercised by, the governing bodies of the association, would be as plainly subversive of contractual right.

Nor is it the province or function of courts to do unnecessary things. They afford remedies only to those who are otherwise remediless. They afford redress to the injured, not on considerations of mere convenience, but on the ground of necessity. Therefore, a member of a society of any kind, and particularly of a voluntary, unincorporated one, has no right to judicial redress or a judicial hearing of a grievance, until he shall have exhausted the remedies afforded him by the society itself. Deveny v. Hart Coal Co. 63 W. Va. 650, 60 S. E. 789; Boyce v. Montauk Gas Coal Co. 37 W. Va. 73, 16 S. E. 501.

"Where the society makes provision for the settlement of controversies between it and its members, or between its members, concerning its government, its dissolution, or its property, courts will refuse to take cognizance of such controversies until those who have grievances have, in the first instance, resorted to and exhausted the remedies provided by the society; and it is not necessary, in such a case, that the language of such provisions shall make it imperative on the members to exhaust these remedies, but it is sufficient that the society has afforded a means for a settlement within the society itself. The mere provision of such a means abridges the right to appeal to the courts, until the prescribed means have been pursued. This rule also prevails in matters of discipline, in the expulsion and suspension of members, and arises from the fact that in such cases the controversy springs from the contract of membership, and is a matter of internal regulation. With such matters courts are loath to deal and will take jurisdiction only when compelled to do so. But it has been held that, where a member appears in the relation of a creditor of the society, he is not bound to present his claim to the tribunals of the society unless such provisions stipulate expressly that he must first submit his claim to the tribunals of the society, before seeking to enforce it in the courts of the land." Niblack, Ben. Soc. & Acci. Ins. p. 215, § 111.

In Boggess v. Buxton, and Republican Executive Committee v. County Ct., cited, this principle was applied to political organizations; and in Marcum v. Ballot Comrs. 42 W. Va. 263, 36 L.R.A. 296, 26 S. E. 281, the court declined to recognize either of two contesting candidates as having been regularly nominated, and based the decision partly on that ground, Judge Brannon saying: "Two clashing conventions may be so circumstanced as to warrant the conclusion that neither is authorized to speak for the party. We hold that neither of these conventions was so authorized. The law is that the writ of mandamus 'will not lie unless the relator shows a clear legal right to have the thing done which he asks for. If the right be doubtful, the writ will be refused.' "

In view of the contentions of the opposing parties, based upon party usage, custom, rules, and regulations, and general parliamentary law, the court declined to say either had prima facie right. Like conclusions are recorded in other well-considered cases. Stephenson v. Election Comrs. 118 Mich. 396, 42 L.R.A. 214, 74 Am. St. Rep. 402, 76 N. W. 914; Shields v. Jacob, 88 Mich. 164, 13 L.R.A. 760, 50 N. W. 105; People ex rel. Eaton v. District Ct. 18 Colo. 26, 31 Pac. 339; Phelps v. Piper, 48 Neb. 724, 33 L.R.A. 53, 67 N. W. 755; State ex rel. Gillis v. Johnson, 18 Mont. 556, 46 Pac. 440. In the later decisions of this court, here referred to, and those of several other jurisdictions, the analogy subsisting between political organizations and other voluntary associations has been recognized; and, that having been done, the rights of contending factions respecting remedies in the courts depend upon the principles upon which judicial relief relating to such associations and rights therein is granted. State ex rel. Hatch v. Smart, 24 Mont. 413, 62 Pac. 591; State ex rel. Gilchrist v. Weston, 27 Mont. 185, 70 Pac. 519, 1134; State ex rel. Buttz v. Liudahl, 11 N. D. 320, 91 N. W. 950; Moody v. Trimble, 109 Ky. 139, 50 L.R.A. 810, 58 S. W. 504.

As has been observed, there can be no well-grounded distinction between the prevailing and the losing faction respecting the application for judicial relief. To recognize the former and entertain it, over the objection of the latter, would necessarily ^{—factions—} ~~recognition.~~ imply judicial adoption of the procedure and conclusion upon which the advantage obtained rests. To do that either brushes aside and ignores the contentions underlying the remonstrance, as being immaterial, or compels the court to take cognizance of the disputes and determine them, under a system of rules, regulations, and party law the interpretation and application of which properly belong to the party tribunals.

Of course, there are limitations upon the powers of the governing bodies of voluntary associations. When property rights of members are involved, the courts will lend assistance for their protection, but, ordinarily, not until the available remedies within the organization have been exhausted. Fraud vitiates everything, and becomes a ground of relief against almost every sort of transaction. Relief from oppressive and unreasonable action will be given. Mere frivolous, unsubstantial, and unmeritorious grounds of resistance would constitute no obstacle to judicial relief.

The statute invoked by the relator does not govern the rights involved here, or empower the courts to determine them. Section 3 of the act provides that "the various executive committees and officers thereof, now in existence, shall exercise the powers and possess the duties herein prescribed until their successors are chosen in accordance with this act."

It prescribes no rule or standard by which the courts can determine who constitute such committees—the very question on which this controversy hinges. When members of committees become elective under the statute prescribing qualifications, there will be such a standard. Eligibility will then depend upon conditions legally prescribed. Now it depends largely upon party usages and customs, and they are judicially known not to be uniform in any sense. Precedents set by a state committee as to its own organization, membership, or procedure may not obtain in a county or other inferior committee. The practice in one county often differs widely from that in another. What was party law a few years ago may not be now. No legal rule nor any settled party practice enables any court to say whether an elected county committee may increase its membership; whether a member added, made chairman, and given a casting vote, may be counted to make a quorum; whether a member must reside in the district for which he was elected, or in the county or state; or whether his absence, temporary or permanent, in the sense of domicil, vacates his office or is ground for removal. When these memberships become statutory, as they will under the act, all such questions can be determined by the statute.

Section 27 of the act provides as follows: "The state executive committee of each party may make such rules for the government of such party, not inconsistent with law, as may be deemed expedient; and it may also revoke, or alter, or amend, in any manner not inconsistent with law, any present or future rules of such party; and all acts of such state or other committees may be reviewable by the courts."

Having provided for statutory committees for the state and all subdivisions thereof, and made the state committee the supreme legislative tribunal of the party, within legal limitations, the legislature has now conferred upon the courts jurisdiction to test the validity of the acts of committees, by the law and the rules provided by the state committee "for the government of such party." But this power does not extend to the ascertainment and determination of the constitution or composition of the old committees temporarily continued in power and authority. How far the jurisdiction of the courts will extend under the statute it is not necessary now to inquire, but it does not reach this question. It is power only to review the acts of committees; not to say who constitute or compose them, under general party law, operative until displaced by the statute.

Upon these principles and conclusions, the peremptory writ of mandamus prayed for is refused.

ANNOTATION.

Determination of controversies within political party.

- I. Scope and introduction, 1035.
- II. Rules in general:
 - a. In absence of controlling legislation or clear legal right, 1036.
 - b. Where statutory provision or clear legal right is involved, 1041.
- III. Necessity for and conclusiveness of decision by party or other special tribunal, 1046.
- IV. Party regularity as affecting the decisions in the courts, 1058.

I. Scope and introduction.

Under our form of party government it is clear that certain questions are of a political nature, which the courts, in the absence of statute, should not undertake to decide, but should leave for the determination of the proper party tribunals. On the other hand, under some circumstances, it may be necessary for the courts to assume jurisdiction to determine factional disputes within a party. This may be true in order to render effective our system of nominations and elections. Legal, as distinguished from political, rights, however, must be involved in order for the courts to entertain jurisdiction. And the question may be a very difficult one in any particular case, as to whether such rights are involved. This question has been, in recent years, somewhat simplified by the enactment of laws governing nominations and elections.

And of course the courts have jurisdiction to determine whether these laws have been violated, even though the contesting parties are rival factions within a political party. There remain, however, various questions, such as the regularity of party organization, party policies and discipline, or the composition of committees, which the courts will not determine, but will leave for settlement to the party itself through its duly constituted authorities.

The present annotation deals only with the question as to when, or under what circumstances, the courts will assume jurisdiction of matters arising out of controversies between factions of a political party, and purports, in general, to include only cases which discuss or pass upon this question. Cases, therefore, which pass upon particular questions on the merits, without any discussion of the jurisdiction of the court, are not included. As representing classes of cases not included, see State ex rel. Yates v. Crittenden (1901) 164 Mo. 237, 64 S. W. 162, involving the right of a state central committee of a party to set aside nominations of a county convention; Cummings v. Bailey (1907) 53 Misc. 142, 104 N. Y. Supp. 283, affirmed in (1907) 120 App. Div. 892, 105 N. Y. Supp. 1112; and People ex rel. Coffey v. Democratic General Committee (1900) 164 N. Y. 335, 51 L.R.A. 674, 58 N. E. 124, involving the question of the power of political committees to expel members. See also Shields v. Jacob (1891) 88 Mich. 164, 13 L.R.A. 760, 50 N. W. 105, where the court granted a writ of mandamus to compel election commissioners to print a certain ticket on the official ballot, holding that such commissioners could not determine, in preparing the ballots, the regularity of either of the tickets nominated by the separate divisions of a split convention, but must print thereon the names of both sets of candidates, and give for each set the party name as certified by the committee presenting it, without addition or distinctive designation.

Cases are not generally included which merely construe or apply primary election or other laws. It is intended to include such cases only in so far as they discuss the jurisdiction of the courts over political questions or factional controversies, or serve to show the relation of this class of cases to the general subject.

The annotation deals only with the question as to the power of the courts generally, with respect to the subject-matter under discussion, and not as to the propriety of the particular form of action or proceeding. It excludes, for instance, such questions as that presented in Atty. Gen. v. Drohan (1897) 169 Mass. 534, 61 Am. St. Rep. 301, 48 N. E. 279, as to whether membership in a committee of a political party is a public office so that the title thereto can be tried in quo warranto proceedings.

There are many cases to the effect that equity will not protect or enforce merely political rights. Cases to this effect are not included herein, for the reason that they proceed on grounds distinctive to courts of equity as distinguished from courts of law. Thus, such cases as Kearns v. Howley (1898) 188 Pa. 116, 42 L.R.A. 235, 68 Am. St. Rep. 852, 41 Atl. 273, denying an injunction against the adding of names to a political committee, or the striking of names therefrom, where no property rights existed, are excluded.

In this annotation it is not feasible to cover concrete sets of facts, and furnish an answer as to what should be the remedy under particular circumstances. The answer to such an inquiry depends largely upon statutory provisions in the various states. And it would be confusing, and lead away from the main purpose of the annotation, to attempt to solve questions based on special sets of facts. The circumstances are largely indicated, however, in setting out the cases, so that the value of the case on the particular subject-matter is, in general, shown.

II. Rules in general.

a. In absence of controlling legislation or clear legal right.

The courts have been reluctant to assume jurisdiction of questions of a political nature. The rule appears to be that in factional controversies within a political party, where there is no controlling statute or clear legal right involved, the court will not assume jurisdiction, but will leave the matter for determination by the proper tribunals of the party itself, or by the electors at the polls. Supporting this proposition are the following authorities (see also III. infra):

Arkansas. — Ferguson v. Montgomery (1921) 148 Ark. 83, 229 S. W. 80.

Colorado. — People ex rel. Eaton v. District Ct. (1892) 18 Colo. 26, 31 Pac. 339; People ex rel. Hodges v. McGaffey (1896) 23 Colo. 156, 46 Pac. 930. See also Colorado cases controlled by statute, under II. b, infra.

Idaho.—Walling v. Lansdon (1908) 15 Idaho, 282, 97 Pac. 396.

Kansas.—Sims v. Daniels (1896) 57 Kan. 552, 85 L.R.A. 146, 46 Pac. 952; Allen v. Burrow (1904) 69 Kan. 817, 77 Pac. 555, 2 Ann. Cas. 539. See also State ex rel. Dawson v. Branine (1912) 87 Kan. 795, 125 Pac. 343.

Kentucky. — Davis v. Hambrick (1900) 109 Ky. 276, 51 L.R.A. 671, 58 S. W. 779.

Louisiana. — State ex rel. Burke v. Foster (1904) 111 La. 939, 36 So. 32; Roussel v. Dornier (1911) 129 La. 930, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 557, 57 So. 272.

Michigan. — Stephenson v. Election Comrs. (1898) 118 Mich. 396, 42 L.R.A. 214, 74 Am. St. Rep. 402, 76 N. W. 914; Potter v. Deuel (1907) 149 Mich. 393, 112 N. W. 1071.

Montana. — State ex rel. Gillis v. Johnson (1896) 18 Mont. 556, 46 Pac. 440.

Nebraska.—Phelps v. Piper (1896) 48 Neb. 724, 33 L.R.A. 53, 67 N. W. 755; State ex rel. Dahlman v. Piper (1896) 50 Neb. 25, 69 N. W. 378. See also State ex rel. Sturdevant v. Allen (1895) 43 Neb. 651, 62 N. W. 35.

New Hampshire. — Atty. Gen. v. Barry (1907) 74 N. H. 353, 68 Atl. 192.

New York. — Re Fairchild (1897) 151 N. Y. 359, 45 N. E. 943; People ex rel. Simpson v. Police Comrs. (1894) 10 Misc. 98, 31 N. Y. Supp. 112.

North Dakota.—State ex rel. Fosser

v. Lavik (1900) 9 N. D. 461, 83 N. W. 914.

Ohio.—See Link v. Karb (1914) 89 Ohio St. 326, 104 N. E. 632, and State ex rel. Gongwer v. Graves (1914) 90 Ohio St. 311, 107 N. E. 1018.

Pennsylvania.—Re Beck (1898) 7 Pa. Dist. R. 629.

South Dakota. — Morrow v. Wipf (1908) 22 S. D. 146, 115 N. W. 1121.

West Virginia.—Bogges v. Buxton (1910) 67 W. Va. 679, 69 S. E. 367, 21 Ann. Cas. 289; STATE EX REL. SMITH v. KANAWHA COUNTY (reported herewith) ante, 1030. See also Kump v. McDonald (1908) 64 W. Va. 325, 61 S. E. 908.

In the absence of a statute conferring jurisdiction, courts will not undertake to settle and determine substantial controversies between rival political committees, or factions of such a committee, the right in which is dependent upon party rules, usages, and customs, or grant relief to either of such committees or factions as the representative of the party, in those cases in which the party is entitled to relief, but will refuse the relief asked until the controversy is settled and determined by some supervising board, committee, or other tribunal of the party. STATE EX REL. SMITH v. KANAWHA COUNTY (reported herewith) ante, 1030. After the decision in this case, the state executive committee of the party determined the questions involved in favor of the contention of the relator in that action, basing its decision on the customs and usages of the party. Thereafter the relator renewed his application to the county court to appoint the registrars recommended by him, and the court refused to do so. It was held on these facts, in State ex rel. Smith v. County Ct. (1916) 78 W. Va. 259, 88 S. E. 793, that the relator had a clear legal right which could be enforced by mandamus.

And in Ferguson v. Montgomery (Ark.) supra, the court said: "Except to the extent that jurisdiction is conferred by statute, or that the subject has been regulated by statute, the courts have no power to interfere with the judgments of the constituted authorities of established political parties in matters involving party government and discipline, or to determine disputes within a political party as to the regularity of the election of its executive officers."

Party differences, it was said in People ex rel. Simpson v. Police Comrs. (N. Y.) supra, like family or religious disputes, should be settled within the organization, or by its dominating authority. And in this case, where a nomination was made by a convention regularly called, and the organization of the party had not repudiated this nomination, or ordered a new election, or in any authoritative manner recognized the nomination of another for the same office by a convention subsequently assembled by the deposed secretary of the first convention, it was held that the first nominee was entitled to a place on the ballot, and that mandamus should be issued to compel the printing of his name thereon.

Courts will not undertake to control the internal affairs of a political party, unless the same encroach upon, violate, or contravene the law. Walling v. Lansdon (Idaho) supra. The court said: "We are not inclined to inquire, as between two contending political factions of a party, whether or not the leaders of either faction combined and conspired together for the purpose of securing control of the political organization, except in so far as the acts of such parties, and the legality of the result accomplished by them, may be governed by the laws of the state. . . . As a rule, policies adopted by political parties are the result of the combined efforts and judgment of a few of the leaders of such political organization, and whatever evils may result from such combinations must be corrected within the party itself, as the courts will not undertake to regulate or control the internal affairs of a political organization. When, however, in carrying out the purposes of such combination, or controlling the affairs of a political party, the actors therein encroach upon, violate, or contravene the laws of the state, then and at such time the courts will, in a proper proceeding, arrest such action, and enforce the laws of the state."

"It is much more proper," said the court in Re Fairchild (N. Y.) supra, "that questions which relate to the regularity of conventions, to the nomination of candidates, and the constitution of committees should be determined by the regularly constituted party authorities, than to have every question relating to a caucus, convention, or nomination determined by the courts, and thus, in effect, compel them to make party nominations and regulate the details of party procedure, instead of having them controlled by party authorities."

In the absence of statutory provisions on the subject, where there is a dispute as to who are the regularly elected members of the local political committee, the question must be decided by some tribunal within the party. Atty. Gen. v. Barry (1907) 74 N. H. 353, 68 Atl. 192.

So, in Bogges v. Buxton (1910) 67 W. Va. 679, 69 S. E. 367, 21 Ann. Cas. 289, it was said that, in the absence of statute, courts do not exercise jurisdiction to interfere with or control matters purely political, pertaining to the management and proceedings of a political party.

And the court laid down the rule in State ex rel. Gongwer v. Graves (1914) 90 Ohio St. 311, 107 N. E. 1018, that "elections belong to the political branch of the government, and not to the judicial, and are not per se the subjects of judicial cognizance, but are matters for political regulation."

And in Link v. Karb (1914) 89 Ohio St. 326, 104 N. E. 632, it is said: "All the authorities seem to be in accord upon the proposition that elections belong to the political branch of the government, and are beyond the control of the judicial power, and that courts have no inherent power to try contested elections, and have never exercised such power, except where it has been conferred by express enactment or necessary implication." This case, however, and others cited therein relating to election contests, belong to a class not strictly within the scope of the annotation, which deals with cases involving factional party contests, rather than with those involving the rights of individuals.

In State ex rel. Gillis v. Johnson (1896) 18 Mont. 556, 46 Pac. 440, where two factions of a party had filed separate county tickets under different designations, the court held that, as no confusion would result from the presence of both upon the ballot, it would not interfere, but would leave the contention for the electors to decide. The correctness of the decision in this case was questioned, however, in State ex rel. Lannen v. Arms (1900) 24 Mont. 447, 63 Pac. 401,

In Stephenson v. Election Comrs. (1898) 118 Mich. 396, 42 L.R.A. 214, 74 Am. St. Rep. 402, 76 N. W. 914, where, in a congressional convention which was regularly called, a disagreement arose as to contesting delegations, which resulted in a division and the nomination of two tickets, it was held that the court would not undertake to determine which was the legally constituted convention, but that both tickets were entitled to a place on the official ballot, and mandamus was awarded to accomplish this purpose. The court said: "It is a right of the voter to repudiate wrong and corruption and fraud, if they exist, and to prevent, or unearth and defeat, corruption, and he should not be hampered by technical rules. If in this case this convention was unable to conclude its business in harmony, and the delegates divided and made two nominations, they should not be denied the privilege of going to the polls with both. Each nominee is here contending that he represents the only pure republicanism of the district, and is the lawful nominee of the true party. The electors must decide between them. In such case we know of no way of determining which of these names ought, of right, to go upon the Republican ticket. If it were left to the voters, there would doubtless be an honest difference of opinion upon the merits of the question. The same may be true of the boards. They may not know what they should do, and we cannot tell them, further than to say that, under the admitted facts and the precedents, both are entitled to places upon the ballot." And it was further said: "Among the dangers that courts should guard against is the unwarranted assumption of power under the false impression that they, and they only, can right all of the wrongs which arise from the conduct of public affairs. They have only such powers and authority as the Constitution and the laws confer upon them. We have seen that several courts have held that not until the intention of the legislature is clearly manifested will they undertake to control political action."

The general doctrine that the courts will proceed, in determining political questions, only so far as the statute allows, and that, in the absence of any statute giving them jurisdiction, the courts have no power to interfere with the judgments of committees and tribunals of established parties, in matters involving party government and discipline, is approved in Kump v. McDonald (1908) 64 W. Va. 325, 61 S. E. 908, but the facts of this case do not bring it within the class covered by the annotation.

It was said in Re Beck (1898) 7 Pa. Dist. R. 629, that disputes in political bodies are rarely entertained by the courts, if proper machinery for adjustment among themselves may be provided by these bodies in their fundamental law; that, as the functions of courts do not embrace the determination of political questions, and only rarely, and then by force of statute, reach political procedure and qualification, it is a wise rule that withholds judicial action save upon the mandate of a statute strictly construed and because of the impracticability of other remedial provisions.

In holding that it was not the province of the secretary of state, or of the courts, to determine which of two rival state conventions of the same party was entitled to recognition as the regular convention, but that the names of the candidates nominated by each convention should be certified to the several county clerks, the court in Phelps v. Piper (1896) 48 Neb. 724, 33 L.R.A. 53, 67 N. W. 755, said: "Political parties are voluntary associations for political purposes. They establish their own rules; they are governed by their own usage. Voters may form them, reorganize them, and dissolve them at their will. The voters ultimately must determine every such question. The voters constituting a party are, indeed, the only body which can finally determine between contending factions or contending organizations. The question is one essentially political, and not judicial, in its character. It would be alike dangerous to the freedom of elections, the liberty of voters, and to the dignity and respect which should be entertained for judicial tribunals, for the courts to undertake in any case to investigate either the government, usages, or doctrines of political parties, and to exclude from the official ballots the names of candidates placed in nomination by an organization which a portion, or perhaps a large majority, of the voters professing allegiance to the particular party, believes to be the representative of its political doctrines and its party government. We doubt, even, whether the legislature has power to confer upon the courts any such authority. It is certain, however, that the legislature has not undertaken to confer it." To a similar effect is the decision in State ex rel. Dahlman v. Piper (1896) 50 Neb. 25, 69 N. W. 378.

And it was said in Phillips v. Gallagher (1898) 73 Minn. 528, 42 L.R.A. 222, 76 N. W. 285, that the questions with which a party convention deals are essentially political, and it would be a menace to the right of the members of a political party to select their own party nominees, and to the respect which should be entertained for judicial tribunals, for the courts to review and reverse the proceedings of a political convention, in the absence of fraud or oppression on its part, or on the part of its officers.

The decision of disputes as to party nominations rests with the party, in the absence of statutory regulations to the contrary, and the jurisdiction of courts in such matters is purely statutory. State ex rel. Burke v. Foster (1904) 111 La. 939, 86 So. 32.

Judicial tribunals cannot pass upon the correctness of parliamentary rulings or tactics adopted in a political convention, such questions being purely political. State ex rel. Fosser v. Lavik (1900) 9 N. D. 461, 83 N. W. 914.

In Sims v. Daniels (1896) 57 Kan. 552, 35 L.R.A. 146, 46 Pac. 952, it was held that no power was vested, either in the special board provided by the Australian Ballot Law, or in the courts, to pass on the merits of the claims of rival factions of a political party; but that, where both hold conventions and nominate candidates, both must be recognized and given a place on the official ballot.

And it was said in Allen v. Burrow (1904) 69 Kan. 812, 77 Pac. 555, 2 Ann. Cas. 539, that where two conventions are held, each claiming to be the authorized exponent of the same political party, the courts, from an unwillingness to undertake the settlement of purely political controversies, have generally required the nominees of each to be printed on the official ballot, where that was permitted by statute.

Sims v. Daniels (Kan.) supra, was overruled in Miller v. Clark (1900) 62 Kan. 278, 62 Pac. 664, in so far as it decided that the special tribunal provided by statute to determine such controversies as that in question could not make a final decision which would be conclusive upon the courts. See III. infra.

In several of the earlier Colorado decisions the view was taken that the courts would not decide controversies between factions of a party, where each faction, claiming to represent the party, made nominations, but that the matter must be determined by the party itself, under the penalty of having the tickets nominated by all of the factions placed on the official ballot, in case the party failed to adjust the differences.

Thus, in People ex rel. Eaton v. District Ct. (1892) 18 Colo. 26, 31 Pac. 839, the court, in holding that mandamus would lie to compel the secretary of state, who had decided in favor of a certificate of nomination issued by one of two factions of a political convention, to certify also the certificate of nomination of the other factions, each certificate being in apparent conformity with the law, said that under the circumstances neither the secretary of state nor the courts were called upon to decide which of the two rival conventions was entitled to act for the party in the state; that until some tribunal was, by statute, clothed with such power, the matter should be left for adjustment elsewhere. The above decision by the Colorado court is approved and followed in People ex rel. Hodges v. McGaffey (1896) 23 Colo. 156, 46 Pac. 980.

And in People ex rel. Lowry v. District Ct. (1903) 32 Colo. 15, 74 Pac. 896, the court said that prior to 1897, under the Australian Ballot Act, the courts of that state were not clothed with power to determine which of two rival conventions or party organizations was entitled to act for a political party. For decisions in this state, controlled by legislation, see II. b, infra.

In this connection, it should be observed that the substantive question of law, as to whether two sets of nominees, each claiming to represent the same party, can be printed upon the ballot, is beyond the scope of the annotation.

Because of laches in failing to apply for an injunction to restrain the placing of names on the official ballot, the court in State ex rel. Sligh v. Reek (1896) 18 Mont. 561, 46 Pac. 442, and in State ex rel. Stevens v. Reek (1896) 18 Mont. 562, 46 Pac. 1117, among possibly other cases of the kind, declined to assume jurisdiction to determine a contention between rival conventions, each of which claimed to be the only regular convention of the party and nominated candidates for the same county officers.

b. Where statutory provision or clear legal right is involved.

For other phases of the question where express statutory provisions were involved, see III. infra.

20 A.L.R.—66.

As before stated, the annotation does not purport to cover cases dealing merely with questions as to the construction or effect of primary election laws, or other statutory provisions. Cases of this class are included only in so far as they discuss the question under consideration, of the jurisdiction of the courts as affected by the fact that the controversy is one within a political party, or as they may appear to be of value for illustrative purposes.

Where the matter in dispute is controlled by legislation, and the question is whether there has been a violation of a statute, or where otherwise a clear legal right is shown, controversies within a political party are subject to judicial hearing and determination. On this proposition attention is called to the following cases:

Idaho.—Williams v. Lewis (1898) 6 Idaho, 184, 54 Pac. 619; Walling v. Lansdon (1908) 15 Idaho, 282, 97 Pac. 396.

Indiana.—State ex rel. Garn v. Election Comrs. (1906) 167 Ind. 276, 78 N. E. 1016.

Kentucky.—Com. v. Combs (1905) 120 Ky. 368, 86 S. W. 697; Neal v. Young (1903) 25 Ky. L. Rep. 183, 75 S. W. 1082.

Louisiana.—State ex rel. Trainor v. St. Paul (1903) 111 La. 713, 35 So. 838.

Michigan.—Baker v. Election Comrs. (1896) 110 Mich. 635, 68 N. W. 752.

Montana.—State ex rel. Scharnikow v. Hogan (1900) 24 Mont. 383, 62 Pac. 583; State ex rel. Hatch v. Smart (1900) 24 Mont. 413, 62 Pac. 591; State ex rel. Kennedy v. Martin (1900) 24 Mont. 403, 62 Pac. 588. See also State ex rel. Riley v. Weston (1904) 31 Mont. 218, 78 Pac. 487.

New York.—Re Woodworth (1891) 16 N. Y. Supp. 147; People ex rel. McCarren v. Dooling (1908) 128 App. Div. 1, 112 N. Y. Supp. 71, affirmed without opinion in (1908) 193 N. Y. 604, 86 N. E. 1180. See also People ex rel. Coffey v. Democratic General Committee (1900) 164 N. Y. 335, 51 L.R.A. 674, 58 N. E. 124, and Cummings v. Bailey (1907) 53 Misc. 142, 104 N. Y. Supp. 283, affirmed without opinion in (1907) 120 App. Div. 892, 105 N. Y. Supp. 1112, infra.

North Dakota.—State ex rel. Wolfe v. Falley (1900) 9 N. D. 450, 83 N. W. 860; State ex rel. Fossler v. Lavik (1900) 9 N. D. 461, 83 N. W. 914; State ex rel. Granvold v. Porter (1902) 11 N. D. 309, 91 N. W. 944.

Pennsylvania.—See Robb's Second Nomination (1899) 7 Pa. Dist. R. 620, 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 433, and Douglass's Nomination (1900) 9 Pa. Dist. R. 187.

South Carolina.—Hyde v. Logan (1919) 113 S. C. 64, 101 S. E. 41. See also Ex parte Sanders (1898) 53 S. C. 478, 31 S. E. 290.

South Dakota.—State ex rel. Howells v. Metcalf (1904) 18 S. D. 393, 67 L.R.A. 331, 100 N. W. 923.

West Virginia.—Franklin v. County Ct. (1920) 86 W. Va. 479, 103 S. E. 330.

Wisconsin.—State ex rel. Cook v. Houser (1904) 122 Wis. 534, 100 N. W. 964.

It was said in State ex rel. Howells v. Metcalf (S. D.) supra: "Whenever the legislature in its wisdom sees fit to regulate nominations and the printing of ballots by statutory enactment, the duty of interpreting such enactments devolves upon the courts, and they should not attempt to escape responsibility, or avoid disagreeable consequences, by assuming that no judicial questions are involved. The auditor's duties and the candidate's rights respecting the preparation of ballots having been defined by statute in this state, the performance of such duties and the protection of such rights no longer present merely political questions, but must be dealt with as are other legal duties and other legal rights." The above is quoted with approval in State ex rel. Cook v. Houser (Wis.) supra.

Where the legislature of a state has regulated the method and manner of holding primary elections, the selection of delegates, and the conduct and duty of conventions, the court will go beyond the inquiry as to the acts of the party authorities with reference to such matters, and inquire whether or not the legal rights of the citizens participating in such matters have been infringed upon or denied by such party authorities or conventions. Walling v. Lansdon (Idaho) supra.

And in Walling v. Lansdon (Idaho) supra, where the primary election law provided the method of electing delegates to a state convention, the court held that delegates could not be legally elected in any other manner, and determined which of two conventions, each claiming to represent the party, was composed of the legally elected delegates and entitled to have its nominees certified by the secretary of state. It is said in the syllabus by the court: "In determining factional disputes in a political organization, and the legality of party primaries and conventions, the courts will go as far as the law goes, and protect all legal rights conferred by law upon all persons participating therein. . . . Where the legislature of the state has regulated the method and manner of holding primary elections, the selection of delegates, and the conduct and duty of conventions, the courts will not be governed or controlled by the action or decision of the party authorities in such matters, but will determine and protect the legal rights of the citizens participating therein. . . . Party conventions, committees, or the party authority cannot decide or determine a matter which is regulated by law, and thereby abrogate the law or oust the courts of jurisdiction to hear and determine such matter. . . . A party state committee or a party state convention is not superior to the laws of this state, and neither can make rules and regulations in violation of the law, or confer rights or privileges upon persons not elected according to law, or deny rights or privileges to persons elected according to law. . . . A party state committee or a party state convention has no power or authority to seat, or recognize as members of such convention, delegates not elected to such conventions according to the law, or deny the right to sit or participate therein to delegates elected according to the law."

In Williams v. Lewis (1898) 6 Idaho, 184, 54 Pac. 619, the court passed upon the question as to which convention of a political party, where contention had arisen within the party and each of two conventions had nominated candidates under the claim that it represented the party, was entitled to have its nominees certified by the secretary of state as the nominees of the party. The court decided in favor of the convention called by the regular state central committee, and issued a writ of mandamus to compel the secretary of state to certify the nominations made by this convention. It was said: "Many of the questions presented by the record relate to the government of political parties, and are to be controlled by such a party, either through meetings of the people composing the party, through conventions composed of delegates selected by the party, or through committees selected by such meetings or conventions, in the absence of statutory provisions relating thereto; and not by rules adopted by courts. This court feels unauthorized to prescribe the rules to be followed by the committees of the different political parties in the state, regulating the conduct of such committees in calling state nominating conventions; and we must assuredly feel unauthorized to say whether such committees shall be presided over by a chairman selected from the committee or not, or to say whether the secretary of such committee has authority to call a meeting of such committee or not. . . . This controversy is over two tickets, each of which claims to represent the same political party. It does not require much consideration, or the exercise of anything other than common sense, to reach the inevitable conclusion that a political party cannot exist without organization. It is a matter of general knowledge that all political parties have their organizations, usually, as in this state, headed by a state central committee, selected by the preceding state convention of the party. As between the two tickets in controversy here, one of them represents the organization of the People's Party, and the other does not. It is our duty to determine from the record before us which one of the tickets in controversy was nominated by a convention called by the state central committee of the People's Party for the state of Idaho." The court took the view that the minority who rebelled against the action of the state central committee and held a separate convention must be regarded as bolters from the regular party convention, and that, while they had a right to nominate a ticket, they should select some name which would distinguish it from that of the party in question.

In State ex rel. Scharnikow v. Hogan (1900) 24 Mont. 383, 62 Pac. 583, it was said that the question did not properly arise as to what limits the courts should go in holding that party disputes must be settled in the judicatories of the parties, as the question involved was as to the force and meaning of the election law, and involved an inquiry as to whether the requirements of the law had been complied with so as to render the nomination in question valid.

And in State ex rel. Hatch v. Smart (1900) 24 Mont. 413, 62 Pac. 591, the court said there was presented a contention between rival factions within a political party, each asserting itself to be entitled to the use of the word "Democratic," and to have its candidates placed in the Democratic column upon the official ballot under the nominees of the state convention of that party; that under the statute of that state, as interpreted by the court, there could be but one nominee of the party for each office; and that the necessity arose, therefore, of determining which set of nominations was valid.

In Neal v. Young (1903) 25 Ky. L. Rep. 183, 75 S. W. 1082, although the court stated that, if the controversy were one merely as to which local committee represented the party, it would be a purely political question of which the courts would not take jurisdiction, it granted an injunction to restrain the state central committee of the party from interfering with the primary election, as legal rights under the primary election law were involved, and the case was not one involving merely political questions beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

Where a parish committee of a party, without authority, assumed to appoint commissioners for conducting an election of a state central committeeman, to act with the state commissioners provided for such elections by the state committee, it was held that a candidate for election on the state central committee had the right to an injunction to restrain the appointment of the additional commissioners, and that he was without any practical remedy except a resort to the courts. State ex rel. Trainor v. St. Paul (1908) 111 La. 713, 35 So. 888.

In State ex rel. Granvold v. Porter (1902) 11 N. D. 309, 91 N. W. 944, the court said that where two or more certificates are filed with the secretary of state, both or all purporting to represent the same political party and containing the names of different nominees for the same office, the power of the court may be invoked for the purpose of determining which, if any, of the persons so certified are the rightful nominees. See this case, also, under IV. infra, as to the extent of the court's inquiry in such a case.

And in State ex rel. Wolfe v. Falley (1900) 9 N. D. 450, 83 N. W. 860, it was held that where a judicial district central committee of a political party had called a convention for the purpose of nominating a district judge, and the convention divided, each convention making a nomination which was properly filed, and each candidate claiming to be the regular nominee, the court would, upon proper application, determine which was the regular party nominee. It was said that under the statute which gave the certifying officer no judicial powers, and required party nominations to be filed with the secretary of state, and which contemplated that no nominations should be filed with him except those made by political parties, it became absolutely necessary that the courts should pass upon the regularity of such nominations; that otherwise the door for fraud and deception would be wide open, with no power anywhere to close it.

The doctrine that courts can determine whether or not an assembly is a political convention, organized as the law requires, is supported by State ex rel. Fosser v. Lavik (1900) 9 N. D. 461, 83 N. W. 914.

Where violation or disregard of party rules was alleged, it was held in Robb's Second Nomination (1899) 7 Pa. Dist. R. 620, 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 433, on objection to nomination certificates, that the court had jurisdiction to hear the facts and determine the question, under a statute providing that any convention of delegates held under the rules of a political party might make nominations, and that any objection filed to a nomination certificate should be decided by the courts. And in this case the court held that a certificate of nomination was invalid, where it was made by a convention the majority of whose members did not, under the party rules, have even a prima facie right to sit in the convention, and there were not enough members with a prima facie title to organize a legal convention.

And in Savage's Nomination (1895) 8 Pa. Dist. R. 705, the court, on objections to a certificate of nomination, held that the nomination was invalid because the body making it was not constituted according to the established custom of the party which had previously governed such nominations, this custom, the court saying, being equivalent to a formal rule of the party.

So, in Doyle's Nomination (1899) 7 Pa. Dist. R. 635, among possibly other cases of the kind, the court, on objections to a nomination certificate, assumed jurisdiction to decide the question as to which of two rival city executive committees was the legal representative of a certain political party within a city, without discussing the question of the power of the court over such controversies.

That the court had jurisdiction, on objections to a certificate of nomination, to determine whether proceedings of a ward committee, acting under the party rules on a contested election, were fair and free from fraud, was held in Douglass's Nomination (1900) 9 Pa. Dist. R. 187. It was said merely that the members of the party, having appointed the committee to determine a contest in which they all had an interest, had a right to an honest exercise of its powers by the committee, and in this right the court could protect them.

In Brown's Nomination (1897) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 663, the court took the view that delegates in a political convention whose seats were not contested should have first attempted to contest in the convention the rights of other delegates whose seats were contested, and that, if the rules of the party forbade the convention to consider these contests, redress might be had in the courts.

Among other cases holding nominations made by a convention conducted in defiance of the party rules invalid is Boger's Nomination (1897) 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 230.

There are a number of other cases decided by the Pennsylvania courts on objections to certificates of nomination, which merely decide the rights of the parties in the particular case, and are not, apparently, of any considerable value so far as the general question under consideration is concerned. Illustrative of this class are: Sanner's Nomination (1900) 9 Pa. Dist. R. 638, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 43; Reitzel's Nomination (1901) 9 Pa. Dist. R. 645; DeWitt's Nomination (1901) 9 Pa. Dist. R. 648, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 385; Gerberich's Nomination (1901) 9 Pa. Dist. R. 659, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 250.

The district court was held, in People ex rel. McGaffey v. District Ct. (1896) 23 Colo. 150, 46 Pac. 681, to have jurisdiction to hear and determine which of two rival conventions was entitled to act for a political party, under the amendment of 1894 of the Australian Ballot Act, giving to the court certain powers in controversies "between any officials charged with any duty or function under this act, and any candidate, or the officers or representatives of any political party, or persons who have made nominations."

And after the amendment in 1897 of the Australian Ballot Law, the Colorado court, in Spencer v. Maloney

(1900) 23 Colo. 38, 62 Pac. 850, assumed jurisdiction to determine a factional dispute within a party, where each of two factions in a county claimed to represent the party and to have made nominations on its behalf. This amendment provided that the officer with whom the original certificate of nominations was filed should pass upon the validity of all objections, whether of form or substance. The court said: "A practical construction has been by us given to this section, authorizing the filing officer in the first instance, and the courts upon review, to determine the regularity of party conventions and the claims of rival factions of the same political party to have their nominees placed on the official ballot. This was done in the following, among other, cases: Leighton v. Bates (1897) 24 Colo. 303, 50 Pac. 856, 858; Liggett v. Bates (1897) 24 Colo. 314, 50 Pac. 860; Whipple v. Owen (1897) 24 Colo. 319, 50 Pac. 861; McCoach v. Whipple (1897) 24 Colo. 379, 51 Pac. 164; Whipple v. Broad (1898) 25 Colo. 407, 55 Pac. 172; Whipple v. Wheeler (1898) 25 Colo. 421, 55 Pac. 188. It is true that consent of parties does not confer jurisdiction of the subject-matter; neither will it necessarily invoke the discretion which this court has, under the statute, to review judgments of the inferior courts in election cases; but it should be said that in none of these later cases was the power of the court mooted, nor was our attention called to these former decisions. Neither party relied upon the doctrine of the earlier cases, but both urged the court to settle their disputes. The practice has thus grown up of entertaining such applications. To such an extent has it been encouraged that it may almost be said that political parties have rightly rested upon the belief that courts would determine such matters, and, except for extraordinary reasons, we ought not now to depart from what seems to be considered the established practice, though, in my judgment, it should never have been adopted." See Colorado cases under

II. a. supra, as to earlier rule in that state.

But under a subsequently enacted statute, it was held in People ex rel. Lowry v. District Ct. (1903) 32 Colo. 15, 74 Pac. 896, that the state central committee of a party, or the state convention, was the sole tribunal to determine controversies between factions of the party in a county, and that the court did not have concurrent jurisdiction in the premises. This statute, enacted in 1901, provided that the state central committee of any political party in the state should have full power to pass upon and determine all controversies concerning the regularity of the organization of the party within a district, county, or city, and concerning the right to the use of the party name, and might make such rules governing the method of passing upon and determining such controversies as it might deem best, and that all such determinations by the committee should be final, with certain exceptions relating to the powers of a state convention. In this connection, see III. infra. It was held, also, that the courts could not assume jurisdiction of such controversies between political factions in a county on the ground that the state committee had never met to determine the controversy and that until such meeting was held, and the proper action was taken, the courts had jurisdiction. The court said that where a state central committee existed, even though it might not have passed upon factional disputes of subordinate divisions of the party, the provisions of the statute could not be ignored, and a resort to the courts sanctioned, in case of internal disputes arising between members of the party, but that it was the duty of the faction, or factions, desiring the determination of the dispute, to call upon the state committee to act.

III. Necessity for and conclusiveness of decision by party or other special tribunal.

Over questions of party policies or organization, or the conduct or proceedings of conventions, the courts, in the absence of express statute, have no jurisdiction; and where questions relating thereto have been submitted to and determined by the proper party tribunal, according to the rules and customs of the party, the courts will give effect to, and not attempt to review, such decision, but, in the absence of fraud, will regard it as conclusive. Supporting this doctrine are the following cases:

United States.—See Re Appointment of Supers. of Election (1881) 20 Blatchf. 13, 9 Fed. 14, infra.

Colorado.—Whipple v. Broad (1898) 25 Colo. 407, 55 Pac. 172. See also People ex rel. Lowry v. District Ct. (1903) 32 Colo. 15, 74 Pac. 896, cited infra (sustaining statutory provision).

Kentucky.—Moody v. Trimble (1900) 109 Ky. 189, 50 L.R.A. 810, 58 S. W. 504; Davis v. Hambrick (1900) 109 Ky. 276, 51 L.R.A. 671, 58 S. W. 799; Cain v. Page (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 977, 42 S. W. 336.

Louisiana.—Roussel v. Dornier (1911) 129 La. 930, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 557, 57 So. 272.

Michigan.—Stephenson v. Election Comrs. (1898) 118 Mich. 396, 42 L.R.A. 214, 74 Am. St. Rep. 402, 76 N. W. 914; Potter v. Deuel (1907) 149 Mich. 393, 112 N. W. 1071. See also Jennings v. Election Comrs. (1904) 137 Mich. 720, 100 N. W. 995.

Minnesota.—See Phillips v. Gallagher (1898) 73 Minn. 528, 42 L.R.A. 222, 76 N. W. 285, infra.

Montana.—State ex rel. Gilchrist v. Weston (1902) 27 Mont. 185, 70 Pac. 519, 1134.

Nebraska.—State ex rel. Nebraska Republican State Central Committee v. Wait (1912) 92 Neb. 313, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 282, 138 N. W. 159.

New Hampshire.—Atty. Gen. v. Barry (1907) 74 N. H. 353, 68 Atl. 192.

New York.—Re Fairchild (1897) 151 N. Y. 359, 45 N. E. 943; Re Pollard (1893) 25 N. Y. Supp. 385; Re Redmond (1893) 5 Misc. 369, 25 N. Y. Supp. 881.

North Dakota.—State ex rel. Fossor v. Lavik (1900) 9 N. D. 461, 83 N. W. 914; State ex rel. Granvold v. Porter (1902) 11 N. D. 309, 91 N. W. 944; State ex rel. Buttz v. Liudahl (1902) 11 N. D. 320, 91 N. W. 950; State ex

rel. Mitchell v. Larson (1904) 13 N. D. 420, 101 N. W. 315.

Ohio.—Re Grear (1899) 9 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 299, 6 Ohio N. P. 312.

Pennsylvania.—Donahue's Nomination (1891) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 5, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 198; Ker's Nomination (1891) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 14, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 200; Com. ex rel. Mansfield (1896) 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 428; Magee's Nomination (1897) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 654, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 225.

South Carolina.—Raines v. Stone (1919) 112 S. C. 147, 99 S. E. 353.

Washington.—See State ex rel. Cann v. Moore (1900) 23 Wash. 276, 62 Pac. 769, infra.

West Virginia.—Marcum v. Ballot Comrs. (1896) 42 W. Va. 263, 36 L.R.A. 296, 26 S. E. 281; Bogges v. Buxton (1910) 67 W. Va. 679, 69 S. E. 367, 21 Ann. Cas. 289; Republican Executive Committee v. County Ct. (1910) 68 W. Va. 113, 69 S. E. 522; State ex rel. Smith v. County Ct. (1916) 78 W. Va. 259, 88 S. E. 793. See State ex rel. Testerman v. Lambert (1919) 83 W. Va. 143, 98 S. E. 73, infra (recognizing rule).

The action of a political convention concerning a matter of party policy is not reviewable by the courts. Magee's Nomination (1897) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 654, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 225. The court held in this case that, at least in the absence of a rule to the contrary, a nominating convention of one party was at liberty to choose a candidate of a different political faith.

In the absence of controlling legislation, the composition of a political committee according to the custom and usage of the party, with the sanction of the conventions of the party, will not be disturbed by the courts. Potter v. Deuel (1907) 149 Mich. 393, 112 N. W. 1071.

And it was held in Davis v. Hambrick (1900) 109 Ky. 276, 51 L.R.A. 671, 58 S. W. 779, that the decision of the state central committee of a political party, which by the rules of the party is invested with full control of the management of its affairs, in a contest as to which of two bodies of men constitutes the executive committee of a county, is conclusive upon the courts, since the question is a political one, and the courts have no power to question the regularity of the proceedings, or the justice of the decision. The court said: "The legislature has not provided any means for determining controversies of this character, and it may be seriously doubted whether it has the power to confer such authority upon the courts. Political parties are voluntary associations for political purposes. They are governed by their own usages, and establish their own rules. Members of such parties may form them, reorganize them, and dissolve them at their will. The voters constituting such party are, indeed, the only body who can finally determine between contending factions or contending organizations. The question is one essentially political, and not judicial, in its character. It would be alike dangerous to the freedom and liberty of the voters, and to the dignity and respect which should be entertained for judicial tribunals, for the courts to undertake in any case to investigate either the government, usages, rules, or doctrines of a political party, or to determine, between conflicting claimants, rights growing out of its government. . . . The action of the state central committee must be treated as the final determination of all the rights of the parties growing out of this litigation, and the courts have no power to question the regularity of their proceedings or the justice of their conclusions."

It is said in the syllabus by the court in Roussel v. Dornier (1911) 129 La. 930, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 557, 57 So. 272, that, "in the absence of any statute giving them jurisdiction, the courts have no power to interfere with the judgments of the committees and tribunals of established political parties, in matters of party government and discipline. The same rule applies to primary election laws."

As before indicated, the annotation does not deal with the questions of the construction and effect generally of primary election laws. See, in this connection, Heiskell v. Ledgerwood (1921) 144 Tenn. 666, 234 S. W. 1001, holding that the decision of the state primary election board of the party was conclusive in a contest between candidates for membership of the state executive committee, the primary election law making no provision for an appeal, and the position of committeeman not being a public, but a political or party, office.

In State ex rel. Buttz v. Liudahl (1902) 11 N. D. 320, 91 N. W. 950, it was held that after a contest on the merits, after notice and a full and fair hearing before the state central committee, and a decision of such committee that certain delegates from a county convention should be seated in the convention, and that the opposing delegates should not be seated, followed by the adoption by the state convention of the decision and report of such committee, the courts will not interfere with the action of the convention, but it will be deemed conclusive even as against those persons nominated in a rival county convention for county officers. To similar effect is State ex rel. Mitchell v. Larson (1904) 13 N. D. 420, 101 N. W. 315.

The court said in State ex rel. Buttz v. Liudahl (N. D.) supra, that the powers of state conventions as the highest party organization are so well known that courts will take judicial recognition thereof.

The decision of the state authorities of the party through the state central committee and the state convention as to the right of a committee in a particular district to represent the party was held conclusive upon the courts, in Caine v. Page (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 977, 42 S. W. 336. In this case a statute provided that, "in all cases, of a tie vote or contest, the committee or governing authority of the political party holding such primary election shall have the power to hear and determine such contests, and decide who shall be entitled to the nomination." In this instance the county committee had determined in favor of a certain candidate as the nominee at the primary election; but his opponent sought to compel a reconsideration on the ground that the committee was not properly constituted, it being alleged that a certain person had participated in the decision of the contest who was not a member of the committee. It was successfully set up as a defense to the action that, whether or not there was any irregularity in the selection or appointment of this person as a committeeman, he had been recognized as such by the party and its regular committeemen in that county, as well as by the state central committee, and that his authority had been recognized and approved by subsequent state conventions of the party. The court held that the action of the state convention was a conclusive recognition of the particular committee as a governing authority of the party in the district in question, beyond which action and recognition the courts could not go, and said that, "when counsel questions the authority of the state convention in party organization, it is as if the Mohammedan should doubt the Koran, or a Christian the Book of books."

And in Moody v. Trimble (1900) 109 Ky. 139, 50 L.R.A. 810, 58 S. W. 504, it was held that the decision of a dispute as to which of two persons was the regular party nominee for Congress, when made by the governing authority of the party within the state, such as a state central committee, under authority conferred upon it by the state convention, is conclusive upon the courts. After referring to the fact that each candidate claimed to be the nominee of the convention the court said: "A settlement of this dispute might possibly be had in the courts, when the correctness of the various rulings of the presiding officers of the meeting would have to be inquired into, as well, possibly, as the regularity of the credentials of the various delegates. But, while we do not now decide that this cannot be done, it is certain that such questions are political, rather than judicial, in their character, and therefore the court will entertain jurisdiction to settle them, if at all, only in the event the governing authorities of the political parties have failed to do so. The settlement of such questions, in the nature of things, should be left to party authority; and therefore we will not scan too closely party rules which undertake, however imperfectly, to confer authority on its various committees to manage party affairs to the best interests of the organization, or deny such authority even if it be conferred in terms somewhat general."

In State ex rel. Smith v. County Ct. (1916) 78 W. Va. 259, 88 S. E. 793, it was held that the determination by the state executive committee of a party of the right of a county executive committee to elect as its chairman, and a member thereof, a person outside of its own previously elected members, and of the regularity of its action in declaring vacant the seat of a member who had moved to another state, and filling the same, based upon the usages and customs of the party, and violative of no statute, was not reviewable by the courts.

And it was held in Donahue's Nomination (1891) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 5, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 198, that where a city executive committee had recognized as legal a certain ward committee, as it had authority to do under the party rules, a nomination made by a convention organized and held under the authority of such ward committee was valid, rather than a nomination made by a convention held under the authority of a ward committee which the city executive committee had refused to recognize as regular and legal.

The same principle was applied in Ker's Nomination (1891) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 14, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 200, holding that recognition by the city executive committee legalized the ward executive committee.

In Boggess v. Buxton (1910) 67 W. Va. 679, 69 S. E. 367, 21 Ann. Cas. 289, it was held that when the state and congressional committees, and a congressional convention and a state senatorial convention, of a political party, had had the claims of two contesting county executive committees to represent the party before them for decision, and had decided that one of them was and the other was not, the true and legitimate county executive committee, the courts would not review such decision, but would hold it conclusive in matters before the courts involving the question as to which was the lawful county executive committee. The court, however, expressly called attention to the fact that it did not decide as to the power of the courts, in the absence of a decision by the political authorities.

The decision in Boggess v. Buxton (W. Va.) supra, was approved and followed in Republican Executive Committee v. County Ct. (1910) 68 W. Va. 113, 69 S. E. 522. And in this case, where there were two executive committees in a county, each claiming to be the regular and lawful county committee of the party, and the question of regularity had been submitted to, and heard and determined by, the state central committee of the party, after due notice served on the contesting committee, it was held that the decision of the state committee would be treated as conclusive in a judicial proceeding, whether or not the contesting committee appeared and submitted the merits of its claim to the judgment of the state committee.

In State ex rel. Cann v. Moore (1900) 23 Wash. 276, 62 Pac. 769, the court said that it should require a clear and explicit expression of legislative intention to that effect, to justify the conclusion that it was the intention of the law to deprive a political convention of the recognized parliamentary right of control over its own proceedings, its officers, and its nominees; that the judicial branch of the government should not attempt to supervise political actions, and matters peculiarly within the control of political conventions; and that, unless a convention acts arbitrarily, oppressively, or fraudulently, its final determination as to candidates should be followed by the courts. The decision is of a class not strictly within the scope of the annotation, involving the right of a candidate who, through a mistake, was declared a nominee by the chairman of the convention. It was held that the action of the convention, which had acquiesced in the nomination and adjourned, was conclusive, no fraud being shown.

The rule was laid down in Re Fairchild (1897) 151 N. Y. 359, 45 N. E. 943, that in cases where questions of procedure in conventions or the regularity of committees are involved, which are not regulated by law, but by party usages and customs, the officer called upon to determine such questions should follow the decision of the regularly constituted authorities of the party, and that courts, in reviewing the determination of such officers, should not interfere with such determination. In this case the action of the state committee and state convention in determining the question of regularity of an assembly district convention, where two district conventions, each claiming to represent the party, had been held, was held conclusive. The decision was under a statute providing that any questions arising with reference to the validity of any certificate of nominations should be determined, in the first instance, by the officer with whom the certificate of nomination was filed, and that the supreme court, or any justice thereof, within the judicial district, or any county judge within his county, should have summary jurisdiction to review the determination of such officer and make such order as justice might require.

In Re Fairchild (N. Y.) supra, the court stated that the decisions of the supreme court in that state were conflicting, one class holding that the determinations of party conventions or party authorities had no weight whatever, while the other class was to the effect that, in determining questions as to the regularity of conventions, officers and courts should rely upon the action and determination of the regularly constituted party authorities upon the question, where there had been such a determination. The court said the latter view effectuated the obvious intent and purpose of the statute.

Several New York cases may, perhaps, be regarded as overruled by the above decision. Thus, in Re Broat (1894) 6 Misc. 445, 27 N. Y. Supp. 176, where two county committees, each claiming to represent the same political party, had each called a convention, which in turn had made different nominations, the court held that the decision of the state committee of the party on the question of the regularity of the organization was not conclusive. It was said that, in proceedings of this character, the decisions of party conventions, committees, or caucuses, are not binding and have no weight with the court; and that the actions of all party caucuses, conventions, and committees have been, by legislation, subjected to the supervision and control of the courts.

And in Re Heacock (1896) 18 Misc. 311, 41 N. Y. Supp. 161, under a statute providing that the courts should make such order in the premises as justice might require, it was held that, in determining the regularity of nominations, the court was not bound by the decisions of party conventions. It was said that while the decision of the supreme political authority of the party might be conclusive, as a general rule, as to which of two well-defined organizations of the same party was the regular organization, the rule did not hold good when determining the regularity of nominations claimed to be made under the auspices of the same party organization, as in this case.

In a dispute as to what political organization should be recognized by the court in appointing supervisors of election, under a statute requiring the supervisors to be of different political parties, where there were two organizations claiming to represent the same party, the court, in Re Appointment of Supers. of Election (1881) 20 Blatchf. 13, 9 Fed. 14, approved the rule that that organization should be recognized by the court, which was recognized by the last state convention of the party, but held that this rule was subject to modification by a change of circumstances, such as had occurred in this case.

It is said in the syllabus by the court in State ex rel. Nebraska Republican State Central Committee v. Wait (1912) 92 Neb. 313, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 282, 138 N. W. 159: "Under the statutes of Nebraska, the national convention of a political party, or, when the convention is not in session, its national central committee, is the supreme governing body of such party as to national affairs, and has full authority to decide which of rival conventions or committees in the state is the regular and duly authorized convention or committee of such party."

The decision of a political convention as to the qualifications of its own members has been held conclusive upon the courts. Stephenson v. Election Comrs. (1898) 118 Mich. 396, 42 L.R.A. 214, 74 Am. St. Rep. 402, 76 N. W. 914.

And in State ex rel. Granvold v. Porter (1902) 11 N. D. 309, 91 N. W. 944, the court laid down the rule that a political convention is the judge of the qualifications of its members, and its determination of contests between claimants for seats therein is conclusive.

So, in Re Grear (1899) 9 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 299, 6 Ohio N. P. 312, the court said it is beyond question that a political convention is ordinarily the sole judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members; that, being a voluntary association, it must necessarily follow that no one has a right to participate therein against the rules and regulations, and contrary to the wishes, of the association itself.

And it was held in State ex rel. Fosser v. Lavik (1900) 9 N. D. 461, 83 N. W. 914, that a political convention is the exclusive judge of the credentials and qualifications of persons claiming to be delegates thereto; and that a minority of the delegates, as thus determined by the convention, cannot, by withdrawing therefrom and joining themselves to the persons whose credentials have been rejected by the convention, constitute a legal county convention. The last proposition is supported, also, by State ex rel. Granvold v. Porter (N. D.) supra.

The court, also, in Marcum v. Ballot Comrs. (1896) 42 W. Va. 263, 36 L.R.A. 296, 26 S. E. 281, laid down the rule that, "in passing on the right of nominees for public office to appear on election ballots, this court recognizes the right of the convention making them to judge of the election, qualification, and returns of its own members, and will not go back of its action to inquire as to the right or title of delegates admitted by it as members."

It was said in Phillips v. Gallagher (1898) 73 Minn. 528, 42 L.R.A. 222, 76 N. W. 285, that a party convention is a deliberative body, and unless it acts arbitrarily, oppressively, or fraudulently, its final determination as to candidates, or any other question of which it has jurisdiction, will be followed by the courts. The question involved in this case was the right of a convention to declare a ballot irregular, and to order another ballot, and it does not appear that a factional controversy, as that term is used in the annotation, was involved.

But while ordinarily a political convention may be the judge of the qualifications of its members, without power in the courts to review its decision, this rule has been held true only in a qualified sense, and not only to apply where a majority of those who participated in the convention had not even, under the party rules, a prima facie right to seats in the convention. Robb's Second Nomination (1899) 7 Pa. Dist. R. 620, 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 433. The court held that when authority to make a nomination was legally challenged by objections filed to a certificate of nominations, and violation or disregard of the party rules was alleged, it had jurisdiction under statutory provisions to hear and determine the question.

If a county delegation is admitted to a state convention without contest, there has been, of course, no determination of the question as to the regularity of such delegation. Thus, where two county conventions were held, each claiming to represent the party, and two sets of delegates were sent to different state conventions, each of which state conventions claimed to be the regular one, it was held that the facts that the delegates were admitted to one of these state conventions without contest, and that this state convention was afterwards declared by the courts to be the legal one, did not settle the question as to which delegation was chosen by the regular convention of the party for the county; in other words, the recognition by the legal state convention of the delegation from one of the county conventions did not conclusively determine the question as to which of the county conventions was regular, where no contest was presented to the state convention. Twombly v. Smith (1898) 25 Colo. 425, 55 Pac. 254.

It was said in Twombly v. Smith (Colo.) supra, that, when the regularity of the proceedings of rival conventions making nominations is called in question, the courts should determine that question without respect to the action of any other convention of the same party which included territory greater than the district in which such nominations were made; that to hold otherwise would, in effect, result in delegating to conventions the power to make nominations for public officers in a given district not authorized under the call so to do, to the exclusion of the convention of the party for that district, called for that particular purpose.

And the decision of a county convention of a political party as to the qualifications of its members has been held not conclusive where manifestly unfair methods were used and delegates were seated who under no circumstances could make any just claim to an election. Re Woodworth (1891) 16 N. Y. Supp. 147. The statute defined conventions, or primary meetings, through which nominations might be made. And in this case, where the county committee adopted methods which resulted in the seating of delegates, without a hearing, who clearly had no right to a place in the convention, and a part of the regularly elected delegates withdrew and held a separate convention and nominated candidates, the court held that the latter convention, which was composed of the larger number of the duly and clearly elected delegates, constituted "an assemblage of voters or delegates representing" the party, within the meaning of the statute, and that it should grant the application to compel the printing of the names of nominees of that convention, as the regular nominees of the party, on the ballot. The court said: "But it is insisted that a political convention is a law unto itself, and that whatever methods it adopts for its own government are conclusive, and cannot be made the subject of judicial inquiry. To a certain extent this contention may be, and doubtless is, true. . . . But, where the duty is cast upon courts and judges of determining the regularity and fairness of political methods, those methods must be subjected to the same tests as would those of any other body of men whose good faith is questioned, and no court or judge would be justified in sustaining them, when found to be inconsistent with that degree of sound morals which must characterize an ordinary affair of business, even though they be recognized and approved by senatorial and state conventions of the same political organizations. The trend of public opinion, as well as of legislation, at the present time, appears to be in favor of a radical reform in our political methods, and it is the plain duty of all good citizens, and especially those clothed with judicial authority, to encourage such a sentiment with all the force they can command. The order asked for is granted." An appeal was dismissed in (1892) 64 Hun, 522, 19 N. Y. Supp. 525, on the ground that the matter was not appealable, and only an abstract question was at that time involved; but the court also approved the decision of the lower court on the merits. See, in this connection, Allen v. Burrows (1904) 69 Kan. 812, 77 Pac. 555, 2 Ann. Cas. 539, infra.

However, the doctrine of Re Woodworth (N. Y.) supra, as to the jurisdiction of the courts to determine the regularity of rival factions, each claiming to represent the party, was modified in Re Pollard (1893) 25 N. Y. Supp. 385, so that it should apply only where the matter had not been, in good faith, adjudicated by a higher party tribunal. From the last opinion, it appears that, after the decision in the Woodworth Case, the other faction had been recognized by the state and district conventions of the party as entitled to represent it in the particular county; and the court held that, in view of these decisions by the party itself, it would not adhere to its decision as to the regularity of the opposing faction, even though it was of the opinion that that faction had shown at the first hearing its title to regularity. The court said: "I still think, as already stated, that the title to regularity of the Patterson faction was pretty clearly established upon the original hearing, and that it would, in view of the provision of the statute which authorizes this proceeding, have been no more than courteous for the party conventions to have adopted the decision of the general term, which was deliberately made after a careful and impartial hearing, but there is no way in which they can be compelled to do so; and consequently it seems to me that the only rule for courts and judges to adopt, in this and all other similar contests, is that they will interfere only in cases where there has been no adjudication of the question of regularity by some division of the party which is conceded to be superior, in point of authority, to the one in which the contention arose, provided, of course, that the question of good faith in the making of such adjudication is not involved. The adoption of a different rule will inevitably tend to bring party organizations and the courts into unseemly conflicts over questions which are peculiarly within the cognizance of the former tribunals—a result which most certainly ought, if possible, to be avoided."

And in Re Redmond (1893) 5 Misc. 369, 25 N. Y. Supp. 381, where the question of the regularity of a county convention of a party had been passed upon by the state convention of the party, it was held that the action of the state convention must be regarded as conclusive. The court said that a state convention, like the state legislature, is the sole judge of the election of its own members; that when it has passed judgment upon conflicting claims, where questions of regularity only are concerned, its determination should be accepted as final; that such determination might be unjust and in direct violation of the equities of any given case, and in theory it might be right and proper to disregard such an adjudication and to insist that no party division could exercise supervisory control over any smaller division; but that if such a theory were put into practice it would be subversive of party discipline and reduce political parties to mere associations of independent and irresponsible mobs.

Where the question is as to the violation of statutory provisions in the selection of delegates, the decision of a party tribunal, it appears, is not conclusive, but the matter is one for the determination of the courts. Thus, in State ex rel. Scharnikow v. Hogan (1900) 24 Mont. 383, 62 Pac. 583, where it was contended that the action of a state convention in seating certain delegates was final as to which faction of the party represented it in a particular county, the court said that the question did not properly arise as to the limit to which courts should go in holding that party disputes should be settled by the party itself; that the question was as to the force and meaning of a part of the election law, and involved an inquiry as to whether the requirements of the law had been complied with, so as to render the nomination valid; and that to permit a political convention to determine such a question would be to say, that political parties possessed judicial power, and might oust the courts of jurisdiction in matters falling within their cognizance. This case was interpreted in State ex rel. Gilchrist v. Weston (1902) 27 Mont. 185, 70 Pac. 519, 1184, as holding that no action by a state convention could render valid a nomination for the office of district judge, where the convention assuming to make it did not properly represent the electors of the district. The case, it was said, turned upon the question of fact whether the delegates who sat in the district convention had been regularly chosen by the electors of the district to make the nomination; and, it being made to appear that such was not the case, this fact was held determinative of the right of the candidate to have his name appear upon the ballot, although the state convention had assumed to declare that the delegates were the regularly accredited delegates of the county composing the district. The decision, the court stated, rests upon the theory that the people in the political subdivisions of the state have the right to nominate candidates for local officers through representative conventions composed of electors of their own choosing, or in mass meetings, held after due notice, as well as to elect officers from among candidates so nominated; and that no action on the part of the state conventions may dispense with a substantial observance of this fundamental principle.

And it was held in State ex rel. Kennedy v. Martin (1900) 24 Mont. 403, 62 Pac. 588, that, while a political convention must be allowed to decide such questions as that of the qualification of its own members, it must not, in the settlement of such controversies, disregard legislative enactment, with the enforcement of which the courts alone have to do.

And in State ex rel. Kennedy v. Martin (Mont.) supra (as construed in State ex rel. Gilchrist v. Weston (Mont.) supra), it was held that where a ticket had been nominated by a representative county convention, regularly called for that purpose by the local party authorities prior to the meeting of the state convention, the state convention, though the delegates chosen by the county convention refused to sit in it, but joined in an independent movement, had no power to authorize loyal members of the party residing in the county to take charge of party affairs therein, and to nominate a ticket to be printed upon the official ballot under the party's designation, to the exclusion of the ticket already nominated. This decision, it was said, rests upon the principle that when the candidates of a party have been once regularly nominated by a representative convention of the party, and their certificates of nomination filed with the proper officer, the right of such candidates to have their names appear upon the official ballot becomes fixed by law, and is not subject to control by a state convention.

Also, in State ex rel. Hatch v. Smart (1900) 24 Mont. 413, 62 Pac. 591, the court held that, while a state convention of a political party had final authority within its legitimate field, its jurisdiction, under the statute, was not unlimited, and it was without jurisdiction to set aside nominations of a county convention held under a call by the regularly constituted authority of the party, the members of the party in each county having the right to control their own local affairs.

"In each of these cases," said the court in the Weston Case (Mont.) supra, referring to the above decisions in that state, "this court felt impelled, in view of the provisions of the election laws and the Constitution, to investigate the facts, and to determine therefrom whether the candidates whose rights were in issue had been nominated by representative conventions, called by authority, and conducted in accordance with party usages."

But it was held in State ex rel. Gilchrist v. Weston (Mont.) supra, that the decision of the state committee and state convention of the party as to which of two rival factions was entitled to represent the party within a county was conclusive, where such decision was rendered before the nomination of candidates by either of the factions. The court said, however, that, had one or both of the rival county conventions nominated candidates for local officers before the meeting of the state convention, a different question would have been presented, and the court would, perhaps, have been required, under its earlier decisions, to hold tenable the position taken by the defendants that the action of the state convention was without significance. The court recognized the necessity for exclusive party control of the organization, and held that the courts would not interfere until, by the exercise of power on the part of a local organization, rights of private individuals had become involved.

A political party has the right to determine who shall compose its executive committee, how its members shall be chosen, what powers it shall exercise, and how vacancies in the committee shall be filled; and the courts will not interfere where there is no violation of law or of the rules of the party, or arbitrary or capricious action. Raines v. Stone (1919) 112 S. C. 147, 99 S. E. 353.

While approving the cases to the effect that, when a dispute arises in a political party which has a tribunal of its own to which an appeal can be made, this must be done, and the decision of such tribunal is final, the court in State ex rel. Testerman v. Lambert (1919) 83 W. Va. 143, 98 S. E. 73, held that in case of a disputed succession in the official personnel of a political party, where there is no higher authority within the party to which the controversy can be submitted for determination, the court will decide which of the two claimants is entitled to nominate election officers, on application for mandamus to compel the appointment of such officers on the recommendation of party officials.

Where the party rules provided a tribunal for settling contests of delegates, it was held in Hutchins's Nomination (1898) 8 Pa. Dist. R. 109, that a contestant must first resort to this tribunal before seeking relief in the courts.

And which of two or more bodies of voters, each claiming to be the convention contemplated by the Code, was the true one, it was held, in McDonald v. Hinton (1896) 114 Cal. 484, 35 L.R.A. 152, 46 Pac. 870, must be determined, in the first instance at least, by the registrar to whom certificates of nomination are presented for filing; and the mere fact that a certificate was in due form was held not in itself conclusive as to his duty to file it. The court did not decide whether it might determine which of the two conventions represented the party, holding merely that a decision, in the first instance at least, must rest with the registrar, the proceeding for a mandamus to compel the registrar to place the petitioner's name on the ballot being based on the theory that he was bound to file the certificate merely because it was in due and regular form.

Where the question as to who are the regularly elected members of a local committee of a political party has been determined by the proper tribunal within the party, the court will make such a decree as is necessary to enforce the rights of the regularly constituted committee. Atty. Gen. v. Barry (1907) 74 N. H. 353, 68 Atl. 192.

And it was held in Atty. Gen. v. Barry (N. H.) supra, that the state committee and the state convention of the party were its regularly constituted tribunals to determine who constituted the local executive committee in a city ward, and, the relators having been recognized as such committee, their rights would be enforced in the courts.

In several cases the decision has turned directly on express statutory provisions.

In Packer's Nomination (1896) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 601, the court ruled against the contention that a conference of delegates of necessity had the power to determine the qualifications of its own members, and that such determination was conclusive, and could not be made the subject of judicial review; stating that the Ballot Law of 1893 intended to commit all controversies concerning nominations, substantial as well as formal, to the court of the proper county. The court cited, as in accord with this ruling, Critchfield's Nomination (1895) 3 Pa. Dist. R. 761.

But see Com. ex rel. Mansfield (1896) 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 428, in which the court said that the actions of party tribunals were as final and conclusive on the subject of nominations as they were before the passage of the Primary Law of 1893; that the court only dealt with the candidate's right to have a place on the official ballot; and that, in order to ascertain that right, it must know (1) whether the alleged nomination originated with an organization that had the legal right to make and certify such nominations; (2) whether that organization had acted under the rules prescribed for its government and the result of the action had been certified according to the facts; and (3) whether the certificate was sufficient in contents and form.

Where the legislature, in authorizing an official ballot and granting to party nominees the right to have their names placed thereon under the party designation, subjected that right, in case of a controversy between two or more sets of nominees, each claiming the same party designation, to the decision of a party tribunal created under the statute to determine such controversies, no provision being made for a judicial review of its decisions, it was held that necessarily the decision of the tribunal so provided for was exclusive, and unimpeachable except for jurisdictional defects. State ex rel. Cook v. Houser (1904) 122 Wis. 534, 100 N. W. 964.

And it was held, also, in State ex rel. Cook v. Houser (Wis.) supra, that since the exclusive jurisdiction to determine factional disputes had been conferred by statute upon a special tribunal the decision of the national convention of the party as to which of two sets of delegates from the state, each claiming the right to represent the party in such convention, was entitled to recognition, was not of any significance as a guide to the secretary of state or the tribunal authorized by statute to determine such disputes. In this case, where two conventions had nominated state officers, each convention claiming to represent the party, and the national convention thereafter decided in favor of one of the factions, the court, in holding that this decision or recognition by the national convention was without effect as regarded the state nominations, said that as soon as the nominations were made by the two conventions, and duly certified, the rights of the nominees to places upon the official ballot under the party designation became vested in them as representatives of their respective organizations, subject to the decision of the special statutory tribunal as to which of the conventions was regular, and such right could not, therefore, be in any way affected by the determination of any other tribunal.

Although not involving a factional dispute within the party, as those terms are here used, attention is called also to Beasley v. Adams (1904) 118 Ky. 695, 82 S. W. 249, holding that the decision of the party contest committee provided by statute was final, under a section of the primary election law providing that, in case of a contest, the committee or governing authority of the political party holding the primary should have "power to hear and determine such contest, and decide who shall be entitled to the nomination." The court said this language precluded the idea that there should be an appeal, that the entire matter was referred to the governing authority of the party for its decision, and that this was eminently proper, as the question was purely political.

And in Com. v. Combs (1905) 120 Ky. 368, 86 S. W. 697, the court said that a party or primary election had, since the enactments of the present statutes on the subject, ceased to be solely a matter of party concern, but was one of which the law took cognizance; and that, if there was a contest or dispute over a party nomination, the governing authorities of the party were given exclusive jurisdiction to determine it.

A statute providing that the state central committee of any political party in the state should have full power to pass upon and determine all controversies concerning the regularity of the party organization within the counties, cities, congressional districts, etc., in the state, and making determinations of the committee final, was held in People ex rel. Lowry v. District Ct. (1903) 32 Colo. 15, 74 Pac. 896, not unconstitutional, in so far as it withdrew the determination of such question from the district court, as in violation of a constitutional provision giving such courts original jurisdiction of all causes at law and in equity. The contention was that in view of this constitutional provision the legislature could not divest the district courts of any of their jurisdiction and confer a portion of it upon some other tribunal. The court said: "The fallacy of the argument consists in the assumption that a political controversy like that now before us is a case cognizable at law or in equity. It is not of that character. It is purely political—one peculiarly within the province of political parties to determine for themselves. In the absence of a statute conferring such power upon the courts, they do not possess it as an incident to, or embraced within, the jurisdiction to determine all 'causes at law or in equity.'" This conclusion, it was held, was further evident from a constitutional provision giving the legislature authority to pass laws to secure the purity of elections, and to guard against abuses of the elective franchise, the court saying that the statute, if it needed any constitutional support, might safely rest upon this provision.

And it was held in State ex rel. Burke v. Foster (1904) 111 La. 939, 36 So. 32, that a provision of the Constitution vesting in district courts original jurisdiction in all cases where "civil or political rights" were involved had no application to a dispute as to a party nomination; but that the question was within the jurisdiction of the board of contest created by statute, the decision of which, the statute provided, should be final.

That the court had power to review the action of a political convention in seating delegates was held in Re Lazarus (1910) 140 App. Div. 406, 125 N. Y. Supp. 414, where the statute provided for review of any action or neglect with regard to any right given to, or duty prescribed for, any political convention, although a statute also gave to such convention the right to decide all questions as to delegates thereto.

Under the provision of the Australian Ballot Law which created a special tribunal, consisting of certain state officers, with power to inquire into the regularity of nomination papers filed with the secretary of state and to consider other questions arising in relation thereto upon notice, and provided that the decision by a majority of said officers should be final, it was held in Miller v. Clark (1900) 62 Kan. 278, 62 Pac. 664, that after a hearing before this tribunal, and a finding by it that one of two candidates was regularly nominated by a convention which divided into two parts, each naming a candidate, the tribunal's decision would not be disturbed by the court, in the absence of bad faith or arbitrary conduct showing wrongful acts amounting to fraud on the part of said officers.

While the last case was approved and followed in Allen v. Burrow (1904) 69 Kan. 812, 77 Pac. 555, 2 Ann. Cas. 539, it was there held that the courts would assume jurisdiction where fraud was shown on the part of the special statutory tribunal. In the syllabus by the court, it is said: "A dispute as to which of two persons is the regular nominee of a political party for a public office can ordinarily be settled only by the special tribunal to which the statute commits the determination of such questions; but, if it is established that a majority of the members of such tribunal have entered into a corrupt agreement with one of the parties to give him the decision regardless of the merits of the case, the courts will take jurisdiction of the controversy, and decide it in a proceeding in mandamus to compel the certifying of the proper name for printing on the official ballot." See, in this connection, Re Woodworth (1891) 16 N. Y. Supp. 147, supra.

In Chapman v. Miller (1894) 52 Ohio St. 166, 39 N. E. 24, where rival conventions had each nominated candidates for county officers, it was held that, upon submission to the state supervisor of elections of objections to the certificates of nomination, his decision was final. It appears, however, that the statute expressly provided that the decision of the state supervisor should be final. And it was held that this necessarily excluded jurisdiction of the courts to interfere with the decision on its merits, although they might compel performance of the legal duty thus established by granting mandamus. Among possibly other cases giving effect to the express provision of the statute making the decision of certain officers, upon objections to nomination certificates, final, so as to exclude judicial interference, are Randall v. State (1901) 64 Ohio St. 57, 59 N. E. 742; State ex rel. Hildebrandt v. Stewart (1904) 71 Ohio St. 55, 72 N. E. 307; and State ex rel. Buel v. Joyce (1912) 87 Ohio St. 126, 100 N. E. 325.

In Hyde v. Logan (1919) 113 S. C. 64, 101 S. E. 41, it was held that the court had jurisdiction to review the action of a city executive committee of a political party in ascertaining and declaring the result of a primary election for mayor and alderman. It was contended that the matters in controversy were only political in their nature, and should therefore be left to the decision of those in whom the party in convention vested the power to decide them. The court said this was a misconception of the issues, which were not of a political nature at all, but rather of a legal nature, to wit, whether the result of the election was ascertained and declared in the manner prescribed by law. It was said that the courts of that state had always exercised jurisdiction to review the decision of those appointed by law to hold and ascertain the result of all elections held pursuant to law, and that ever since party primaries had been regulated by statute, a like jurisdiction had been exercised with regard to them.

See also Ex parte Sanders (1898) 53 S. C. 478, 31 S. E. 290, where, the result of a primary election being contested, it was held that the decision of the contest by the state executive committee of the party was of a judicial, or quasi judicial, nature, and reviewable by the courts.

IV. Party regularity as affecting the decisions in the courts.

Although the phase of the present subject indicated by the above subtitle is involved more or less in many of the cases previously cited in the annotation, particularly those under III. supra, and the other parts of the annotation should be consulted in this connection, it seems desirable to group cases more directly to the effect that, in determining the rights of candidates or nominees where there are factional controversies within a party, the court, assuming that it has jurisdiction, will extend its inquiry only so far as is necessary to determine which faction or convention was "regular," under the party rules and customs.

The rule was laid down in Addle v. Davenport (1900) 7 Idaho, 282, 62 Pac. 681, that "in a contest between tickets nominated by rival county conventions as to which ticket or convention is entitled to the party name, both conventions claiming to represent the same political party, the court will not inquire into the matter further than to determine which of such conventions was controlled by the party organization, and such convention is entitled to the sole use of the party name, and to have its ticket placed upon the official ballot." The court held in this case that the ticket nominated by one of the factions should be placed upon the official ballot, for the reason that, from the stipulated facts, it appeared that this faction had the party organization.

In determining which set of candidates nominated by two rival county conventions was entitled to represent the party on the ballot, the court in Spencer v. Maloney (1900) 28 Colo. 38, 62 Pac. 850, held that the fundamental question was which of the two conventions was the regular one. The court said: "This is controlling, for we have held that that one of two or more rival nominating conventions which, according to the usages of the party and fair dealing, is the regular one, is entitled to have its nominees, to the exclusion of the lists of the rival faction, appear upon the official ballot. And if neither convention is in all respects regular, then the inquiry is, which more nearly approaches regularity, or which was organized and conducted more in consonance with the principles of honesty and good faith which should govern men in the ordinary business relations."

It is said in Walling v. Lansdon (1908) 15 Idaho, 282, 97 Pac. 396: "The courts generally, in the absence of a statute regulating such matters, have inclined to the holding that a judicial inquiry as to the legality of party conventions and primaries, and the rights of persons to participate therein, would not extend beyond the inquiry of which contending party or faction had behind it the political organization to which it belonged. In other words, when the party organization recognizes the right of persons or delegates to a seat in a convention, or to participate in the deliberations of a convention, the courts would not make any further inquiry, except to ascertain what that decision was.

. . . These cases announce the general doctrine that, in the absence of legislation upon matters in relation to the conduct of conventions, primary elections, and the actions of committees with reference thereto, the court will not extend its inquiry, in determining the legality of contesting factions, beyond the ascertainment of which faction is indorsed, recognized, and approved, by the paramount authority within the party limits." See also Williams v. Lewis (1898) 6 Idaho, 184, 54 Pac. 619, supra, II. b, which approves the same principle.

The Indiana election law expressly provided that, in case of a division in any party and a claim by two or more factions to the same party name, title, or device, the board of election commissioners should give preference of name to that convention which was held at the time and place designated in the call of the regularly constituted party authorities. State ex rel. Garn v. Election Comrs. (1906) 167 Ind. 276, 78 N. E. 1016. And the court in this case passed upon the question as to which of two sets of candidates nominated by different conventions, each claiming to represent the party, was entitled to a place on the official ballot, but declined to issue mandamus, because of defects in the pleadings.

The court said: "We need not seek to determine whether the decision of the state committee as to who constitute the local authorities is sufficiently potent in any case to place a claim of regularity on the plane of legal right. What we do decide is that a call for a local convention which is issued by the county central committee, which has been selected and organized pursuant to the call of the state central committee and is acting pursuant to its rules, is the 'call of the regularly constituted party authorities.' . . . A court is not the forum for the determination of questions of a political character, but, as between a dissenting local organization and the representatives of the general body in the locality, the courts, recognizing the fact that those who thus separate themselves are dissenters, deny to them the rights which belong to the regular membership. It is with a party as with a church, the courts will not attempt to settle those questions of right and duty, arising in the organization, which are so complex that individual opinion must for each man be the final arbiter, but, as respects rights of property or whatever is so analogous thereto as to be cognizable by the courts, the rule is, even in the case of an adhering minority, that it is those who adhere and submit themselves to the regular order of the general organization, and not the seceding majority, who are to be recognized as the representatives of the general organization in the locality."

In Whipple v. Broad (1898) 25 Colo. 407, 55 Pac. 172, where it was said that the contest was one for supremacy between two rival factions of a party over a question of party policy the determination of which had been properly submitted to a convention of delegates of that party, the court, in affirming a judgment of the district court, sustained the nominations made by a convention composed of the majority of the uncontested delegates who were regularly elected and had responded to the call, as against nominations made by another faction of the party in whose favor the secretary of state had decided. The court took the view that, in the absence of fraud, that convention is the party convention which is properly summoned, called to order, and attended by a majority of the legally elected delegates; that with the wisdom of the policy adopted by such a convention the courts have nothing to do, and have no control, even though the action complained of is, in the opinion of the court, unwise and destructive of the party organization. The court said, however, that if it could be shown that a sufficient number of delegates were guilty of fraud, or that their votes were secured by bribery or other improper means, or that members of a rival party improperly obtained seats in the convention and controlled its action, so that the work of the convention would not be that of the majority of the party delegates, the court would be at liberty to go behind the action of the convention.

The contention of the losing faction in Whipple v. Broad (Colo.) supra, was that it was entitled to the use of the party name and emblem because of its adherence to the basic principles of the party, while, as it charged, the other faction had no longer the right to use the party name and emblem, because it had departed from such principles.

Where there had been no adjudication by the state party authorities of the question as to which of two rival county conventions represented the party, the court in Twombly v. Smith (1898) 25 Colo. 425, 55 Pac. 254, decided the question in favor of that convention which had been called pursuant to the action of the county central committee, after it had removed its chairman, although the other convention was held pursuant to a call by him issued before his removal, since the committee had power to rescind or revoke its previous action in regard to matters which had not been consummated.

In State ex rel. Howells v. Metcalf (1904) 18 S. D. 393, 67 L.R.A. 331, 100 N. W. 923, where two conventions, each claiming to represent the party in a county, had nominated different sets of candidates, the court held that that faction of the convention which assembled at the place designated by the chairman and a majority of the county committee, organized, and proceeded to nominate candidates, must be regarded as the regular representative of the party, in the absence of anything justifying delegates in refusing to attend at the place selected.

It is said in the syllabus by the court in State ex rel. Granvold v. Porter (1902) 11 N. D. 309, 91 N. W. 944, that, "in determining which of two sets of nominees of a split political convention are entitled to have their names placed upon the official ballot as the party nominees, the inquiry of the court should be limited to ascertaining which of the conventions from which the nominating certificates emanate is the regular one, and should not extend to an examination of political methods and tactics further than is necessary to ascertain the identity of the regular party convention."

And in State ex rel. Fosser v. Lavik (1900) 9 N. D. 461, 83 N. W. 914, where the two factions of a county political convention each nominated a list of county officers, claiming to be the convention representing the party, the court, on application for mandamus to compel the filing of nomination certificates by one of the factions, said it was clear that the one duty of the court was to determine which faction, if either, constituted the de facto convention of the party.

In State ex rel. Granvold v. Porter (N. D.) supra, the court held that the voluntary withdrawal of delegates from a political convention which has been regularly organized does not deprive those who remain of the power to act, or destroy the identity of the convention; that in such assemblages the presence of a majority of those entitled to participate is not necessary to constitute a quorum, and those not present are presumed to assent to the action taken by the majority of those who are present and vote.

In State ex rel. Riley v. Weston (1904) 31 Mont. 218, 78 Pac. 487, the court, on petition for mandamus to compel the placing of names of nominees on the ballot, where there were two conventions each claiming to represent the party in a county, undertook to determine only which was the regularly constituted and organized convention of the party.

Relative to the duty of the court to apply and follow party rules or customs in considering objections to nominations, it was said in Re Wilkes-Barre Twp. Nominations (1895) 7 Kulp. (Pa.) 529: "Where nominations are made at a caucus called and held under the rules of the party, the validity of the nominations cannot be questioned upon the ground that some of the electors refused to be bound by its action and held another caucus. In a dispute between the nominees of such caucuses the rules of the party must be taken as the law governing the matter, and the court will be bound to adjudge the certificates filed by the officers of the former caucus valid, and that filed by the latter invalid. But where usage is set up as authority for declaring the action of one caucus valid, and that of the other invalid, the fact that a considerable number of the electors have not acquiesced in it, taken in connection with the fact that it has not been uniformly followed, but has varied in different years, prevents its recognition as equivalent to an established rule of the party."

Party usage, in the absence of any guiding statute, it was held in Spelling v. Brown (1898) 122 Cal. 277, 55 Pac. 126, should guide the secretary of state in determining which of two certificates of nomination was issued by the regular party convention.

As enforcing the right to a nomination made by the regularly called convention of the party, see also People ex rel. Simpson v. Police Comrs. (1894) 10 Misc. 98, 31 N. Y. Supp. 112, supra, II. a. R. E. H.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

MOLLIE ASH.

Mississippi Supreme Judicial Court (Division B) — March 27, 1922.

(— Miss. —, 91 So. 31.)

Railroad — duty to trespasser — mist on windows of engine.

A railroad company owes no duty to a trespasser on its track, except not to wilfully or wantonly injure him after discovering his presence there, and where a trespasser who was walking on the track during a severe storm was killed by a passenger train, and the engineer and fireman testified that on account of the torrential rain which was being driven against the windows of the cab, and the accumulation of mist and water on the glass of these windows, their view was entirely obstructed, and it was impossible to see a person on the track, and that for that reason they could not and did not see the deceased on the track, and where all the facts and circumstances of the killing are in evidence, and there is nothing in the evidence to contradict or discredit the testimony of the engineer and fireman, the jury should be peremptorily instructed to find for the defendant.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1064.]

Headnote by COOK, J.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Panola County in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of her husband. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. May, Sanders, & McLaurin, for appellant:

At the time the deceased was killed he was a trespasser, and the only duty that defendant owed to him was not wilfully or wantonly to injure him, if, and when, his position of peril was discovered.

Hubbard v. Southern R. Co. 120 Miss. 835, 83 So. 247; Fuller v. Illinois C. R. Co. 100 Miss. 705, 56 So. 783; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Daniell, 108 Miss. 358, 66 So. 730; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Smith, 111 Miss. 471, 71 So. 752; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. Harrison, 105 Miss. 18, 61 So. 655.

Mr. J. F. Dean, for appellee:

Henry Ash, deceased, was a licensee. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Dillon, 111 Miss. 520, 71 So. 809.

But if, as the engineer and fireman both testified, they were maintaining a lookout, then they owed plaintiff's husband the duty not wilfully or negligently to injure him, after his position of peril was discovered.

Harrison v. Southern R. Co. 93 Miss. 40, 46 So. 408; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. Harrison, 105 Miss. 18, 61 So. 655; Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Hawkins, 82 Miss. 211, 34 So. 323; Jamison v. Illinois C. R. Co. 63 Miss. 33; Fuller v. Illinois C. R. Co. 100 Miss. 705, 56 So. 783; Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Boone, 120 Miss. 632, 82 So. 335; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Daniell, 108 Miss. 358, 66 So. 730.

The fact that the engineer in charge of his train was running from 30 to 35 miles an hour, in wanton and in reckless disregard of the life of anyone who might be on the track, entitled plaintiff to a verdict.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cole, 113 Miss. 896, 74 So. 766.

Cook, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee, Mollie Ash, for herself and children, instituted this suit against the Illinois Central Railroad Company, seeking to recover damages for the negligent killing of her husband, Henry Ash, and, from a judgment in her favor, for the sum of $2,309.09, this appeal was prosecuted.

The pertinent facts as disclosed by the record are as follows: Henry Ash, sixty-five years of age, was instantly killed by a north-bound passenger train of appellant, at a point about 1½ miles south of Sardis, Mississippi, at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, while a very severe wind, hail, and rain storm was raging. The deceased, his wife, Mollie Ash, his daughter, Gertrude Ash, and his daughter's two children, were working in a field adjacent to the railroad track when signs of an approaching storm caused them to leave the field and start for their home, about a half mile north of where they were working, and in going to their home they chose the railroad track, which was the shortest and best route. While the storm of wind, hail, and rain was at its worst stage, these parties were traveling north along the railroad track and facing the storm; Gertrude Ash and her children being in front, Mollie Ash some distance behind Gertrude, and the deceased a number of yards further to the rear. The deceased was walking in the middle of the track, with his head down and his hat pulled down over his ears and eyes, and at this juncture the north-bound passenger train ran over him, killing him instantly.

The plaintiff's testimony was to the effect that no alarm was sounded and no effort made to stop the train, which ran about a half mile before stopping. Mollie Ash testified that, on account of the noise of the storm, she did not hear the train approaching, and that by accident she looked back and discovered the train, but too late to warn deceased of his peril, and she described the location and position of the deceased at the time he was struck. The deceased was not at or near a crossing when he was struck, and, while there was testimony that pedestrians made frequent use of the railroad at this point as a walkway, the proof was to the effect that the railroad was used in about the same way and to the same extent as people are accustomed to use a railroad track, where it is the most convenient and best route available.

The engineer and fireman testified that at the time the deceased was struck a very severe storm was raging, the rain falling in torrents, and the wind blowing it in sheets; that on account of the rain being driven against the cab windows, and the accumulation of water on this glass, coupled with the steam rising from the locomotive, caused by the rain descending on it, they were unable to see the pilot of the locomotive or the track ahead, and were unable to see a man on the track; that they did not see the deceased on the track, and did not know the train had struck anything until they were signaled by the conductor to stop and back up. As to the severity of the storm and the obstruction of the view through the windows of the train by the wind and rain, and the accumulation of water on the glass, they were corroborated by several passengers on the train, some of whom described the rain as almost a cloud-burst, and the wind as having attained almost cyclonic velocity. A passenger who was standing at the rear door of the train and looking south discovered that a man had been run over, and he gave the notice of that fact to the conductor, and the train was stopped after it had proceeded about a half mile, and it was then backed up to the point of the accident and the body of the deceased and members of his family carried into Sardinia. Some of the witnesses for the plaintiff testified that situated as they were, out in the rain and in an open space, they could see some distance through the storm and rain, and there was also some testimony which tended to show that, while the train was being backed up to the point of the injury, a person looking back south could see some distance down the track.

At the close of all the evidence the appellant requested the court to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant, and the refusal of the court to grant this instruction is assigned as error.

It is clear from the testimony in this record that the deceased was a trespasser on the railroad track at the time he met his death, and, this being true, the defendant owed him no duty except not to wilfully or wantonly injure him after discovering his presence on the track. Counsel for appellee does not dispute this principle, which is established in this state by an unbroken line of decisions; but the contention is made that the testimony for appellee creates a conflict in the evidence, from which the jury was warranted in reaching the conclusion that if the engineer and fireman were at their post of duty, as they say they were, they could have seen, and in fact did see, the deceased, in time to have warned him of his peril and avoided striking him.

We do not agree with this contention. Both the engineer and fireman testified that on account of the driving rain, and the accumulation of mist and water on the glass of the windows through which they were endeavoring to look, they could not see the track ahead, could not see as far as the front of the locomotive, and did not see the deceased. The appellee offered the testimony of certain witnesses to the effect that situated as they were in an open space, with an unobstructed view, they were able to see an object several hundred feet; but this was not in contradiction of the evidence of the trainmen that, situated as they were, they were unable to see, and did not see, the deceased, and, in the absence of any evidence in contradiction thereof, we are unable to say that the statement of the facts as given by the engineer and fireman is unreasonable, and we do not think there is any evidence which would warrant a jury in reaching the conclusion that their testimony is untrue.

It follows from these views that we have reached the conclusion that the peremptory instruction to find for the defendant should have been granted, and therefore the judgment of the court below is reversed, and judgment entered here for appellant.

Railroad—duty to trespasser—mist on windows of engine.

Suggestion of error overruled.

ANNOTATION.

State of weather as affecting liability for injury to one struck by train or street car.

- I. In general, 1064.
- II. Liability of railroad company:
 - a. Negligence and contributory negligence for jury, 1066.
 - b. Contributory negligence matter of law, 1072.
 - c. Absence of negligence matter of law, 1076.
- III. Liability of street car company:
 - a. Negligence and contributory negligence for jury, 1076.
 - b. Contributory negligence matter of law, 1078.

I. In general.

In determining the liability of a railroad or street car company for injury to one struck by a train or street car, the courts take into consideration primary and manifestly relevant atmospheric conditions, such as fog, or a snow, rain, or dust storm, or heavy clouds obscuring the sun or moon, as well as various collateral meteorological conditions, such as the force and direction of the wind, or phase of the moon, which affect the visibility of the train or street car. See the cases cited throughout this annotation.

Moreover, inferences derived from common experience are unhesitatingly employed. Thus, in Ducharme v. Holyoke Street R. Co. (1909) 203 Mass. 384, 89 N. E. 561, wherein it appeared that the plaintiff was struck from behind by the defendant's electric car while he was driving along the highway, and a judgment in his favor was affirmed, the court said: "It is a matter of common knowledge that weather conditions are variable both in place and time; and it has been said that this is especially true of the climate of New England. . . . Sunshine or moonlight may quickly and repeatedly alternate with thick clouds and rain or snow. . . . And on a moonlight night, when there are clouds in the sky, it often happens that periods of bright moonlight and of complete obscuration by heavy clouds, with resultant darkness, succeed each other at short and frequent intervals. . . . The accident occurred at twenty minutes after 7 o'clock, about three hours after sunset, on a winter's night. The evidence for the plaintiff tended to show that it was a dark and cloudy night; according to the defendant's evidence, it was a bright night. This was a material question upon the main issues in the case. The moon had risen more than four hours before the happening of the accident, and was full two days afterwards."

The precise time of day when the accident occurred, in connection with the season of the year or other circumstances, is generally a very material fact. Thus, in Elgin, J. & E. R. Co. v. Lawlor (1907) 132 Ill. App. 280, wherein a judgment was affirmed in favor of the plaintiff, who was struck by a string of freight cars which were being pushed over a crossing about 6 P. M., September 22, the court said: "Though it was shortly after sunset, the amount of light depended, also, upon other conditions, such as whether it was cloudy, and the number of trees, etc., in that vicinity." This case was affirmed in (1907) 229 Ill. 621, 82 N. E. 407.

It has been held that adverse weather conditions necessitate the exercise of a high degree of care by both the railroad company and the public. As was said in Rote v. Pennsylvania & M. Valley R. Co. (1907) 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 508: "Because the night was dark and foggy the law did not require the plaintiff to remain at home, or oblige the defendant to stop running its cars. It did impose on both the duty of proceeding with more than ordinary care."

Similarly, in Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Fretz (1909) 173 Ind. 519, 90 N. E. 76, it was said: "Even if appellee knew there was a crossing of the railway to be encountered, she was not thereby precluded from traveling upon the highway, and it was not in itself negligence for her to do so, even on a dark and rainy night, or to do so with the side curtains on the buggy. The use of the highway and the crossing by appellee and the railroad was a reciprocal use, with the precedence in crossing with the railroad train, in which certain duties were imposed by statute upon the railroad's servants, and certain duties upon appellee by the commonly recognized law."

But in Ziserman v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. (1913) 241 Pa. 13, 88 Atl. 80, wherein the action was for injuries caused by a collision between a wagon and a trolley car on a "dark, wet, and misty evening," it was held that a charge that the weather conditions required a greater degree of care than usual was properly refused, the court saying that "the duty that rested upon the defendant was the exercise of due care under the circumstances."

A majority of the cases cited throughout this annotation support the doctrine that weather conditions affecting the visibility of a railroad train or street car may have an important bearing in relieving a person injured from the imputation of contributory negligence.

Thus, in Schilawske v. Detroit, J. & C. R. Co. (1919) 206 Mich. 214, 172 N. W. 369, a judgment in favor of one struck by a street car while crossing a street on an exceedingly dark and stormy night was affirmed, the court saying: "It is . . . true that the confusion and bewilderment produced by the darkness and the storm introduce an element of uncertainty into the attempt to arrive at a judgment as to how an ordinarily prudent and careful man would have acted under the very unusual circumstances in which the deceased found himself.

. . . He was beset with new and unusual perils. There was a driving wind, with sleet and snow. The pavement was coated with ice. His range of vision in either direction was limited. If he ought to have had in mind the possibility of a car without a headlight suddenly looming out of the darkness, bearing down on him at a speed of 30 or 40 miles an hour, from which direction ought he to have expected it? Or why a street car more than a rapidly approaching automobile, without lights, hurrying in one direction or the other along almost any portion of the width of the pavement? If he had stopped a few feet north of the second track to look carefully to the west, might not that very delay and diverting his attention towards that direction have resulted in a failure to escape an automobile or a street car from the east, which might have caught him as suddenly and without warning as the car which actually did appear from the west? He had no more reason to expect it from the one direction than the other. Or might not even such a slight delay have resulted in his being trapped in the 'devil's strip' between two cars approaching from opposite directions, with equal disregard of their duties towards persons on the highway? Prudence may have suggested to him that the safest course was to make the crossing as rapidly as possible under the circumstances."

So, in Brott v. Auburn & S. Electric R. Co. (1917) 220 N. Y. 92, 115 N. E. 273, 16 N. C. C. A. 758, wherein it appeared that the plaintiff's intestate had been killed while crossing the defendant's tracks in front of an approaching car, for the purpose of becoming a passenger thereon, the court said: "Her possible confusion, arising from the severe wind and driven snow, must be taken into consideration in connection with the fact that she assumed that the car would be stopped before it reached the white post, in determining whether she should be charged with negligence, as a matter of law, in continuing her effort to cross the tracks in front of the approaching car."

In some instances, however, a contrary doctrine has been applied. This doctrine was stated at length in Osborn v. Wabash R. Co. (1914) 179 Mo. App. 245, 166 S. W. 1119, wherein the court said: "But it is said that Osborn faced an unusual and confusing obstruction to the free exercise of his senses of sight and hearing, by reason of the fog. There is no evidence whatever that his hearing was interfered with. No one else had any difficulty in hearing the train. And while it is, perhaps, well known that in a dense fog—so dense that objects only a few feet away are not distinguishable—sounds are distorted and misleading, yet such is not the case where the fog is of that character that objects can be seen 50 yards away. We are also reminded that the deceased was in an inclosed cart, with his ears partly muffled. This, however, cannot serve to relieve deceased of negligence, but rather increased the degree of care required of him under such circumstances. The rule is well stated in 2 White on Personal Injuries on Railroads, § 1083, where it is said that it is the duty of a person intending to cross a railroad track to listen as well as look, and if dust temporarily obscures his view he must stop and wait to get a better view, or listen for a train, and that a like rule obtains in a case where the view is obscured by falling snow, or a fog; and a traveler, who, under such circumstances, drives upon the track without taking the extra precautions demanded by the unusual conditions, cannot recover. A railroad crossing is a warning of danger, and one who crosses it knows he is encountering a danger, and must act with care proportionate to the danger. 3 Elliott on Railroads, § 1165. If he is in an inclosed vehicle with his ears muffled, and a fog is prevailing, these conditions, so far from relieving him of care, should increase the amount of care to be taken. Ordinary care under normal conditions would not be ordinary care under such unusual conditions. For 'no one can be said to exercise ordinary care who voluntarily encounters a danger that he knows is imminent, unless the situation and conditions are such as to enable him to see that he can proceed with safety.' Sanguinette v. Mississippi River & B. T. R. Co. (1906) 196 Mo. 489, 95 S. W. 386. 'The measure of precaution to be observed by a traveler depends often upon the circumstances and surroundings.' Laun v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1909) 216

Mo. 579, 116 S. W. 553. If the fog was so great that he could not see down the track for more than 50 yards, then it was all the more incumbent upon him to listen."

The reason for this latter view was tersely expressed in Sherlock v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. (1912) 24 N. D. 40, 138 N. W. 976, as follows: "The deceased was not excused by the weather from the exercise of ordinary care, even if it was sufficiently thick to render it difficult to observe the train or to hear its approach. The greater the danger the greater the care necessary for him to exercise, and the greater the caution necessary to constitute ordinary care."

In applying the same view in Gage v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1914) 91 Kan. 253, 137 Pac. 938, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 410, the court said: "The range of [plaintiff's] vision was so limited by rain and snow that he could not see a railway locomotive beyond the distance of 300 feet, and he was fully conscious of the limitation. He knew the wet condition of the road and knew how to handle an automobile. He was in a place of safety when he saw the train, had he been in control of his car; but he was driving at such speed that when he applied the brakes the momentum of the car carried it up the slight incline and upon the railway track before it stopped. Ordinary prudence required him to control his car so that he could use his faculty of sight near the track, where it would be of most benefit to him, and so that he could stop before going on the track, if a train should appear within the distance he was able to see."

II. Liability of railroad company.

a. Negligence and contributory negligence for jury.

In each of the following cases of injury caused by a railroad train the visibility of which was affected by the weather conditions prevailing at the time of the accident, it was held that the issues of negligence and contributory negligence were for the jury, and a verdict for the plaintiff, unless otherwise stated, was affirmed.

Bright sun.

Merrill v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1910) 27 S. D. 1, 129 S. W. 468. Accident at crossing about sundown July 7. Bright sun dazzled eyes of plaintiff, who wore glasses, as she looked toward approaching train. The sun's rays reflected on her glasses, obstructing her vision, and she testified that she did not see or hear the engine until it was right upon her, too late to protect herself. The court said: "We do not think plaintiff was required to stop and wait until the sun went down before attempting to cross defendant's tracks, but she was, under such circumstances, required to use all that care and caution which any other ordinarily prudent and cautious person would have done under the same or like circumstances, in an attempt to discover an approaching train at the place in question. It was her plain duty to stop, carefully look, and listen as she approached these tracks. She testified that she did."

Clouded sky.

Beckwith v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1889) 54 Hun, 446, 7 N. Y. Supp. 719, 721, affirmed in (1891) 125 N. Y. 759, 27 N. E. 408. Passenger train with a locomotive headlight. Accident about 10 P. M., February 25. "The night was dark and hazy."

Rowe v. Western Maryland R. Co. (1909) 224 Pa. 405, 73 Atl. 456. Freight cars running wild and at high speed. "The accident happened before sunrise on a damp, cloudy morning, when it was so dark that objects could not be readily distinguished, and there was testimony that the cars made only a low rumbling sound."

Dust storm.

St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. Odum (1894) 52 Ill. App. 519. Engine and caboose. Accident in daytime. "There was much dust upon the highway obscuring the view."

Fog.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Miller (1900) 39 C. C. A. 642, 99 Fed. 529. Accident at crossing about 5 A. M.

"The weather was foggy, and a slight sleet of snow and rain was falling." Plaintiff's view of track was obstructed by a fence, telegraph and telephone poles, and buildings.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Womack (1909) 97 C. C. A. 559, 173 Fed. 752. Plaintiff was on a hand car which collided with a freight train "in the early morning," June 17. The survivors upon the hand car testified that they saw the stack and front of the engine at a distance of 200 yards. The court said: "Now, it is plain that if the train could be seen by those upon the hand car at a distance of 200 yards, the lookout upon the engine ought to have seen the hand car nearly as soon. The only obstacle to a clear vision for a mile or more was a summer morning fog hanging on the river where it was crossed by the railway bridge. There was a conflict of opinion as to the thickness and height of the fog at this bridge, and as to its effect in hiding the approach of the train and hand car from each other. It cannot be said that there was not material evidence from which the jury might have inferred that if the men on the engine had been as watchful for persons or obstructions upon the track as the statute, under the construction of the Tennessee court, required them to be, they might have seen this hand car before they say they saw it."

O'Hara v. Central R. Co. (1910) 106 C. C. A. 177, 183 Fed. 739. Crossing accident. Train seen approaching, but speed and distance miscalculated in dense fog.

Lehtohner v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1911) 110 C. C. A. 129, 188 Fed. 59. Plaintiff's intestate crossing tracks to station platform, about 6:30 A. M., December 21. It was foggy and very dark. The locomotive, which was running without a headlight, sounded no whistle and rang no bell.

Smith v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. (1908) 236 Ill. 369, 86 N. E. 150. Collision between a backing locomotive and a train in the daytime. "There was at the time a heavy fog, so that an object could not be seen more than about 20 feet beyond the tender."

Coulter v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1914) 264 Ill. 414, 106 N. E. 258. Street car conductor killed by train backed over crossing without light or signal. "The night on which the accident occurred was very dark, misty, and foggy."

Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Turner (1904) 33 Ind. App. 264, 69 N. E. 484. Accident about 7:20 A. M., September 16. "The fog was so dense that decedent was unable to see the train. It extended more than one half mile each way from the crossing, and prevented him seeing the train until it was too late to prevent the accident. He could not have seen the train or headlight just before driving on the track by looking in its direction. . . . The engineer testified that he could not see 60 feet ahead of his engine on account of the density of the fog."

Meyer v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1907) 134 Iowa, 722, 112 N. W. 194. Accident about 10 A. M. "There is evidence tending to show that it was very foggy that morning and at the time of the accident. . . . Had it not been for the fog it fairly appears that the train could have been seen."

Brusseau v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1905) 187 Mass. 84, 72 N. E. 348. Train running over a crossing about midnight, no signals being given. "The night was somewhat foggy."

Slattery v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1909) 203 Mass. 453, 133 Am. St. Rep. 311, 89 N. E. 622. Train running over a crossing about 6:42 A. M., December 14. "The accident happened before the sun was up, and there was testimony that on the morning in question 'it was kind of dark and foggy like.'" A directed verdict for the defendant was reversed.

Thompson v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. (1892) 91 Mich. 255, 51 N. W. 995. Locomotive running rapidly without a headlight. Accident about 5 A. M., September 26. "It was dark and foggy." A judgment for the plaintiff was reversed solely for erroneous instructions.

Keim v. Union R. & Transit Co. (1886) 90 Mo. 314, 2 S. W. 427. Accident at crossing, about 4 A. M., September 28. There were several tracks at the crossing. "The morning was dark and foggy. . . . Owing to the misty and foggy character of the morning the headlight would impart but little, if any, information as to the track that the engine was on, or its distance from the crossing, as it only cast a circle of light 15 or 20 feet ahead of it."

State ex rel. Iron Mountain & S. R. Co. v. Reynolds (1920) 286 Mo. 204, 226 S. W. 564. Limited passenger train making up time. Accident at crossing about 6:25 A. M., December 21. "It was dark and there was a fog, which, with the embankments, prevented deceased from seeing the rays of the headlight." Signals were not given.

Covell v. Wabash R. Co. (1899) 82 Mo. App. 180. A backing train of freight cars, about 5 A. M., March 19. "Because of the darkness and smoky, foggy condition of the atmosphere, the plaintiff could not see and detect the moving of the cars at a distance sufficient to escape collision with a train running at speed, and without light and other warning, as was this one."

Hickey v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1896) 8 App. Div. 123, 40 N. Y. Supp. 484. Train at crossing about 1 o'clock in the morning. "It was very dark and there was a dense fog."

Noble v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1897) 20 App. Div. 40, 46 N. Y. Supp. 643, affirmed in (1899) 161 N. Y. 620, 55 N. E. 1098. Passenger train, about 6:05 P. M., November 2. "The night of the accident was dark and very foggy."

Pruey v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1899) 41 App. Div. 158, 58 N. Y. Supp. 797, affirmed in (1901) 166 N. Y. 616, 59 N. E. 1129. Backing locomotive with no light on the tender. "The morning was dark, foggy, misty, and, according to some of the witnesses, Cimmerian in its density—a darkness quite common in this latitude on a muggy, foggy morning, at 6 o'clock, in the early part of February." But in the dissenting opinion it was said that a witness testified that, although he was farther than the plaintiff's intestate from the locomotive, he distinctly saw it approaching in the breaking daylight.

Turell v. Erie R. Co. (1900) 49 App.

Div. 94, 63 N. Y. Supp. 402. Hour not stated, but grocery store was open. "The morning was very foggy, but the evidence indicates that sight was unobscured for a distance of at least 200 feet. Nevertheless his [plaintiff's] statement that he did look, but did not see the train, required the submission of the question to the jury as one of fact." A judgment dismissing the complaint was reversed.

Wilcox v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1895) 88 Hun, 263, 34 N. Y. Supp. 744, 12 Am. Neg. Cas. 355. Accident about 6 A. M., June 9. Testimony that "the fog hid the approach of the train."

Doud v. Delaware, S. & S. R. Co. (1902) 203 Pa. 227, 52 Atl. 249. Locomotive backing without a light. "It was a wet, foggy, dark night."

Bard v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (1901) 199 Pa. 94, 48 Atl. 684. Locomotive running rapidly and without a headlight. Accident after 5:30 A. M., November 23. "It was very dark and foggy, and for this reason the plaintiff could see but a very short distance in any direction." A judgment for the defendant was reversed.

Bond v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1907) 218 Pa. 34, 66 Atl. 983, on second appeal in (1909) 224 Pa. 460, 73 Atl. 931. Train drawn by locomotive without a headlight, about 5:30 P. M., January 19. "The corroborated testimony of the plaintiff is that it was dark and foggy," and he testified that if it had been daylight he could have seen the train. A judgment for the plaintiff was reversed solely for erroneous instructions on another point.

Murray v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1913) 242 Pa. 424, 89 Atl. 557. Accident at crossing over four tracks. "Dense fog." Plaintiff, while waiting for passing of train on one track, was struck by train on another, which gave no signals.

Clinger v. Payne (1921) 271 Pa. 88, 113 Atl. 830. Accident at crossing before daybreak. "Heavy fog." Plaintiff drove truck to within 5 feet of track, alighted therefrom, and approached closer, looking and listening. Struck while driving over crossing, by locomotive traveling swiftly because of adverse grade, without headlight, and giving no signals of approach.

Collins v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1912) 150 Wis. 305, 136 N. W. 628. Bridge carpenter injured while at work, by construction train running at high speed, without signals, on foggy day.

Hailstorm.

Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Devore (1902) 52 C. C. A. 77, 114 Fed. 155, writ of certiorari denied in (1903) 190 U. S. 561, 47 L. ed. 1184, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 855. Passenger train. Accident about 7:20 P. M., November 22. "The evening was very dark and cloudy. 'It was storming some—a sort of hail, sleeting.'" The wind was blowing hard. A judgment for the plaintiff was reversed for errors in instructions. But a judgment for the plaintiff on a new trial was affirmed in Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Devore (1903) 58 C. C. A. 543, 122 Fed. 791.

Rainstorm.

Pennsylvania Co. v. Keane (1891) 41 Ill. App. 317. Dummy train. Accident about 6:20, "on a dark and rainy morning in July," "the rain falling so fast that it was about equal to a fog." "Blinding rain."

Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moss (1900) 89 Ill. App. 1. Accident at crossing about 3:20 P. M., February 3. Rain and sleet. Plaintiff carried umbrella, obstructing view.

Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Fretz (1909) 173 Ind. 519, 90 N. E. 76. Accident at crossing about 10 P. M., April 14. "A dark and rainy night." Plaintiff ignorant of crossing; train coasting at high speed with steam shut off.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ueltschi (1906) 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1136, 97 S. W. 14. Accident about noon. "There was a storm, and a heavy rain was falling, accompanied by thunder and lightning, and a strong wind was driving the rain in sheets, so that, as one witness testified, you could hardly see. It was a blinding rainstorm."

Palmer v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1909) 142 Mo. App. 633, 121 S. W. 1087. Accident at crossing about midnight. "The night was wild and very dark. It was raining hard, and a strong wind was blowing from the north, which drove the rain into the faces of the occupants of the buggy." No one on the train saw or heard the collision. "The engineer said the night was so dark he could not see farther than the front of his engine." Witnesses for the defendant said there were green lights on the sides of the engine, and a headlight consisting of a coal-oil lamp set back in a lantern. "They also say a glare was cast every few seconds when the fireman opened the fire box of the engine to put in fuel. The degree of brilliancy of this glare, and whether or not it was thrown at a time when plaintiff could have seen it if he had been looking, are left indefinite. Neither is there testimony as to how brilliant the green lights were on the sides of the engine, or how far they could be seen through the thick weather of that night. It looks like plaintiff could only have seen the one on the south side as he drove northward; and, considering the state of the weather, we cannot say as a matter of law he was bound to see this lamp, or, indeed, any of the alleged lights about the locomotive, had he been attentive. Moreover, the jury fairly might infer there was no headlight burning, and might find there was no glare from the fire box of a kind to warn plaintiff as he approached the track. We do not feel authorized to hold otherwise, in view of the engineer's statement that the illumination cast by the headlight failed to reveal to his gaze the buggy and team on the track. If this statement is true, the condition of the atmosphere prevented lamps from shining far. We are much impressed by the testimony of the engineer that he could not see ahead of the locomotive." See also Holland v. Northern P. R. Co. (1909) 55 Wash. 266, 104 Pac. 252.

Smith v. Boston & M. R. Co. (1899) 70 N. H. 53, 85 Am. St. Rep. 596, 47 Atl. 290. Crossing accident. "Cloudy and misty night." View obstructed by snow fence and dwelling house; no signals given by the approaching train.

Willis v. Atlantic & D. R. Co. (1898)

122 N. C. 905, 29 S. E. 941. Licensee on hand car injured by excursion train running at high speed out of schedule time, and without a headlight, "in approaching darkness and in a raging storm."

Morrow v. North Carolina R. Co. (1907) 146 N. C. 14, 59 S. E. 158. Passenger train running rapidly. Accident between 4 and 5 P. M., December 17. "A cloudy day, and drizzling rain upon melting sleet and ice. . . . On account of the thawing of the ice, and heavy atmosphere, a fog was rising." Smoke from another train mingled with the fog and settled over the track. The plaintiff gave those reasons for his failure to detect the train until it was within 6 feet of him.

Unger v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (1907) 217 Pa. 106, 66 Atl. 235. A work train moving backwards. "It was dark, foggy, and raining," and at night. There was no light at the crossing, and the only light on the rear of the train was a lantern on the platform of the last car. "It cannot be said with certainty that if he (plaintiff) looked he saw the train, or that, if he saw it, he observed in the darkness and storm that it was backing to the crossing, since the natural inference from the position of the engine would be that it would move in the opposite direction."

Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Holmes (1909) 109 Va. 407, 64 S. E. 46. Locomotive backing without a light. Accident between 7 and 8 P. M., September 28. "It was a dark, drizzly, or misty night, with the spot badly lighted."

Snowstorm.

Erie R. Co. v. Weinstein (1909) 92 C. C. A. 189, 166 Fed. 271. "There was evidence that there was such a snowstorm blowing in the face of one looking in the direction from which the train approached as to greatly obscure the view, and also evidence as to the speed of the train which might, in connection with the snowstorm, lead to an inference that the train was not in sight when he [plaintiff] started to cross."

Hines v. Betts (1920) 146 Ark. 555,

226 S. W. 165. Pedestrian struck by passenger train running at high speed without signals, at public crossing. Accident at about 5:45 P. M., February 8. "There was a strong wind blowing and a heavy snow falling."

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Foster (1898) 74 Ill. App. 387. Passenger train. Accident December 16, about 6:30 P. M. "The night was very dark and stormy." "It was snowing." Headlight on locomotive.

Harper v. Barnard (1896) 99 Iowa, 159, 68 N. W. 599. Accident at crossing about 10 A. M., October 29. "All the witnesses agree that it was rather a dark, cloudy morning, and that snow and rain were falling." The plaintiff's view of approaching train was obstructed by snow-covered trees and bushes.

Frederickson v. Iowa C. R. Co. (1912) 156 Iowa, 26, 135 N. W. 12, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 224. Crossing accident. Passenger train. "Wind was high," and "at times the air was so full of drifting snow that a person could not see far."

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Morgan (1890) 43 Kan. 1, 22 Pac. 995, 11 Am. Neg. Cas. 538. Locomotive backing rapidly. Accident about noon. "It was snowing very hard, and the wind was blowing a gale."

Campbell v. Northern P. R. Co. (1913) 122 Minn. 102, 141 N. W. 855. Accident at crossing on November 11, about half an hour after sundown. Train drifting, headlight dimly lit, and no signals given. "It was quite dusk or dark, cloudy, snowing, and the wind blowing from the northwest."

Tischman v. Erie R. Co. (1911) 81 N. J. L. 268, 81 Atl. 114, affirmed on opinion below in (1912) 83 N. J. L. 793, 85 Atl. 1135. Accident on double-track grade crossing at 6:30 P. M., January 16. "Dark and stormy." "Snowing very heavily." Plaintiff stopped and looked, but did not see train because of storm.

Smith v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (1902) 170 N. Y. 394, 63 N. E. 338, 11 Am. Neg. Rep. 322. Passenger train about midnight. "The weather was intensely cold, and a strong wind was blowing . . . which filled the air with particles of snow and sleet. . . . The condition of the atmosphere was, however, not such as continuously to obstruct the vision; for the plaintiff's witnesses agree that there were lulls in the storm, and in those intervals a clear enough view might be had of distant objects." A judgment for the plaintiff was reversed for erroneous instructions on another point. The question of contributory negligence was held to be for the jury. See also the discussion of the facts in the same case in the court below. (1901) 61 App. Div. 46, 69 N. Y. Supp. 1112.

Coulter v. Great Northern R. Co. (1896) 5 N. D. 568, 67 N. W. 1046, wherein a directed verdict for the defendant was reversed. "This was a crossing case, and the facts disclosed that plaintiff, at about dusk in the evening, drove a team and wagon over a public crossing, and was struck and injured by a passenger train. The proof showed that a heavy snowstorm was raging at the time, which probably obstructed plaintiff's view of the approaching train. . . . The headlight on the engine was lighted, and there was no obstruction to plaintiff's view, aside from the snowstorm." The foregoing quotation, stating the facts in the case above cited, is taken from the opinion of the court in Pendroy v. Great Northern R. Co. (1908) 17 N. D. 433, 117 N. W. 531, 534; but those facts are not all mentioned in the earlier case.

Kuntz v. New York C. & St. L. R. Co. (1903) 206 Pa. 162, 55 Atl. 915. Locomotive at crossing, about 6 A. M., early in February. "This was before daylight, and a snowstorm of unusual force and severity was prevailing. . . . The headlight of the engine was to some extent obscured by the snow that clung to the glass, and by snow in the surrounding atmosphere. At the place where the men stopped, an engine could be seen in daylight, under ordinary circumstances, when 1,500 feet away. . . . The storm prevented his seeing more than 50 or 100 feet. Whether under the circumstances he exercised proper care was for the jury."

Kasarda v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (1908) 222 Pa. 146, 70 Atl. 943. Passenger train. Accident "at an early hour, before it was yet day." "What obscured the situation were the darkness of the morning and the wind and snow that prevailed." "A very stormy morning."

Valin v. Milwaukee & N. R. Co. (1892) 82 Wis. 1, 33 Am. St. Rep. 17, 51 N. W. 1084. Locomotive with tender and snow pilot. Accident about noon, March 4. "A cold, windy, blustering day." "It was snowing some, and the snow was drifting, the wind blowing, one witness said, 'from the northeast.'" View obstructed by pile of logs and stumps.

Shaver v. Davis (1921) — Wis. —, 185 N. W. 227. Accident at crossing shortly before noon, February 23. "The wind was blowing and the snow drifting." The plaintiff was busily occupied in driving a heavy truck through snow drifts; train was coasting down grade with steam shut off.

Gray v. Wabash R. Co. (1916) 35 Ont. L. Rep. 510, 20 Can. Ry. Cas. 391, 28 D. L. R. 244. Accident at crossing. "The appellants were driving in a buggy with the cover up; the train that caused their injury was almost directly behind them; and both were approaching the awkward crossing, where the accident happened, in a snowstorm."

Wind storm.

Kerr v. Bush (1918) 198 Mo. App. 607, 200 S. W. 672. Train running over crossing without headlight or signals being given. "The night was very dark, stormy, and surly." "A rather strong March wind was blowing."

McCaffrey v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1911) 201 N. Y. 115, 94 N. E. 624. Relief engine. Plaintiff crossing track to take train. "Engine was backing up on the track noiselessly, without a light that would attract his notice in the wind and storm that were prevailing at the time." "It cannot properly be held that he was guilty of negligence as a matter of law."

Law v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1902) 29 Tex. Civ. App. 134, 67 S. W. 1025. Accident about 11 A. M., December 25. Plaintiff struck by train while walking along track with brim of hat pulled down low, to protect his face from cold and severe wind blowing from the north with unusual force and violence. Sound of approaching train deadened by roar of wind.

b. Contributory negligence matter of law.

In each of the following cases of injury caused by a railroad train the visibility of which was affected by weather conditions it was held that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Clouded sky.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Andrews (1904) 64 C. C. A. 399, 130 Fed. 65. A judgment for the plaintiff was reversed by a majority of the court. But Thayer, J., dissenting, said (at p. 75) that on a dark lowering day a cloud of smoke falling on a railroad track would naturally render an approaching train invisible for a few moments to one standing on or close to the track in a straight line with the smoke and the train, although it might be visible to persons standing elsewhere. A petition for a writ of certiorari was denied in (1904) 195 U. S. 628, 49 L. ed. 351, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787.

Oleson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1896) 143 Ind. 405, 32 L.R.A. 149, 42 N. E. 736. Train running over a crossing. "The day was somewhat dark and overcast, atmosphere heavy, and the clouds obscured the sun."

Dust storm.

Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Austin (1911) 141 Ky. 722, 133 S. W. 780. Accident at crossing. Blinding dust storm. "Whirlwind of dust." Plaintiff with head bent down went on track without stopping or looking.

Keele v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1910) 151 Mo. App. 864, 131 S. W. 730. Accident at crossing about 6:30 P. M., May 7. "A strong, gusty wind was blowing from the west or southwest, [and] the air near the crossing was filled with sand and dust."

Plaintiff's intestate, a girl of fifteen, approaching track holding rim of her hat down to shield her face, did not look towards train. In the same case, on a later appeal, it was held in (1914) 258 Mo. 62, 167 S. W. 433, that defendant's demurrer to the evidence should have been sustained.

Holland v. Northern P. R. Co. (1909) 55 Wash. 266, 104 Pac. 252. Train at crossing, about noon. The wind was blowing a gale in the direction of the train, and raising such dense clouds of dust that the plaintiff was sometimes unable to see the horse she was driving. She failed to recover, because the defendant's negligence was not proved. Her counsel conceded that, as she could not see the train, it was evident that the defendant's servants on the locomotive could not see her horse and vehicle.

Haetsch v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1894) 87 Wis. 304, 58 N. W. 393. Train running over a crossing. Accident occurred about 7:45 P. M., October 31. "The night was dark and windy, and there was much dust flying in the air about the highway. The wind was blowing in the direction the train was running. . . . But the headlight of the engine was high above the train, and the darkness added intensity to the light. The wind and dust would have much more easily obscured the view of an approaching train in the daytime than they would or could an approaching headlight in the nighttime. The headlight was intended to be seen at night from a long distance, as a warning to travelers, and to light up the track, and discover obstructions in advance of the train, and it answers well its purpose. It is inconceivable that the dust in the air raised by the wind from a highway would cut off, or much obscure, a distant view of that headlight. Mere dust in the air, raised by the wind, was never so dense as that." Fog.

Tomlinson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1904) 67 C. C. A. 218, 134 Fed. 233. Passenger train with locomotive headlight. Accident about 6 P. M., November 29. "It was very dark," a fog or mist seemed to be rising from the ground, but "no witness testified that there was sufficient mist to have obscured a view of the headlight, nor did the evidence warrant even a probability of the existence of such a condition."

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Munger (1909) 94 C. C. A. 176, 168 Fed. 690. Freight train. Accident in daytime. "The fog was unusually heavy that morning, but so that an engine could be discerned a distance variously estimated from about 50 to 200 feet. . . . Decedent, however dense and thick the fog may have been, was guilty of culpable negligence."

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Dylinski (1896) 67 Ill. App. 114. Train. Accident on a foggy morning, September 26. Servant on hand car struck by following train must have known that the latter would be somewhat obscured.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Thomson (1906) 128 Ill. App. 594. Fast mail train. Accident between 7:30 and 8 A. M., September 8. Dense fog together with smoke from another locomotive. Railroad section man walking on track should have known that approaching train or its headlight would be obscured.

Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Houghland (1908) 44 Ind. App. 73, 85 N. E. 369, 88 N. E. 623. Accident about 8:10 A. M., January 20. "A dense fog obscured the deceased's view of the approaching engine and caboose," but he heard the locomotive signal and could have heard the train. "But for the fog the deceased could have plainly seen the engine."

Starry v. Dubuque & S. W. R. Co. (1879) 51 Iowa, 419, 1 N. W. 605. Accident about 6 P. M., October 26. "It was foggy, dark, and misting." The train consisted of two flat cars pushed by an engine, and several other cars in the rear; train traveling very slowly, and carrying headlight. Plaintiff's intestate stepped on track despite warning of signalman on train.

Osborn v. Wabash R. Co. (1914) 179 Mo. App. 245, 166 S. W. 1118. Accident occurred about 1 P. M., on January 20. "The day . . . was cloudy and misty, and a fog prevailed."

Plaintiff's intestate, a rural mail carrier, in an inclosed wagon, drove on crossing with ears muffled, and without stopping or looking.

Hauser v. Central R. Co. (1892) 147 Pa. 440, 23 Atl. 766. The plaintiff was hurt while attempting to cross a railroad track immediately in front of an approaching train. "She did not succeed even in getting on the track, because the physical presence of the locomotive, directly in front of her, was an impassable obstacle to her progress across the track." The accident occurred at night, the headlight was burning, and there was some evidence that it was foggy. "It would be impossible to conceive of a fog so dense that so large an object as a locomotive could not be seen at the instant before contact with it."

Rainstorm.

Gage v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1914) 91 Kan. 253, 137 Pac. 938, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 410. Accident at crossing. "Rain and snow." Vision of plaintiff, driving an automobile, limited to 300 feet.

Farmer v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1914) 217 Mass. 158, 104 N. E. 492. Accident at crossing. "The night was dark and rainy." Plaintiff drove automobile with wind shield up and side curtains down, on track at high speed.

Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. (1887) 64 Mich. 93, 8 Am. St. Rep. 804, 31 N. W. 147. Locomotive pushing string of freight cars. Accident at crossing between 6 and 7 P. M., October 30. "It was quite dark. A rainstorm was approaching, with considerable wind from the southwest." There was evidence that the plaintiff neither looked nor listened for the approaching train. The court said: "We have the case of the deceased approaching the railroad crossing upon a dark and stormy night, without any other warning of danger than that afforded by the track itself, the existence of which he knew, and that it was used almost daily in passing engines and cars over it. Had he taken the ordinary precaution, upon approaching a railroad crossing, of looking or listening in order to ascertain if the train was approaching before stepping upon the track, it is evident from the testimony of the witnesses who witnessed the catastrophe that he would have seen or heard it. The testimony precludes the fact, or any inference to be drawn from the facts, that the deceased exercised any or the remotest degree of caution on that occasion."

Kwiatkowski v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1888) 70 Mich. 549, 38 N. W. 463. Accident at crossing. "The deceased left home in the evening with an umbrella, it being dark and rainy." The train carried a "blazing headlight which lighted the track for at least a block," and there was evidence that it was making considerable noise. "It . . . seems, under all the testimony, that he (plaintiff) must have put up his umbrella, and rushed heedlessly and thoughtlessly upon the track, without looking to right or left."

Tolman v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. (1885) 98 N. Y. 198, 50 Am. Rep. 649. Crossing accident. The night was dark and misty, but it appeared by plaintiff's own witnesses that the headlight of the train could have been seen in time to prevent the accident, had plaintiff been looking.

Heaney v. Long Island R. Co. (1889) 112 N. Y. 122, 19 N. E. 422. Accident about 6 o'clock on a May morning which was "cloudy and rainy or drizzly," causing smoke from a passing locomotive to settle on the track and temporarily to obscure a view of the approaching train. No negligence of the defendant was shown, and it was held that the plaintiff should have awaited the disappearance of the smoke.

Spila v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1911) 147 App. Div. 666, 132 N. Y. Supp. 151, rehearing granted in (1912) 148 App. Div. 923, 132 N. Y. Supp. 1147, and judgment affirmed on reargument in (1912) 149 App. Div. 961, 134 N. Y. Supp. 1147. Plaintiff riding bicycle over crossing at "5 P. M., on a cloudy and rainy June day." View obscured by smoke from locomotive of another train.

Blight v. Camden & A. R. Co. (1891) 143 Pa. 10, 21 Atl. 995. Accident at crossing about 5 P. M., August 5. Plaintiff's intestate, with companion, crossing tracks at public crossing. "It was raining violently at the time of the accident, and both the men had umbrellas." "The clouds were heavy and dark, and the rain fell in torrents." It was contended that plaintiff and his companion looked and listened before stepping on tracks. The court said: "Whether the umbrellas and the rain really interfered with their vision and caused the survivor to say he did not see the train, it is an absolute certainty that they attempted to cross the track immediately in front of an approaching locomotive, and the fatal result necessarily and instantly followed. The undisputed facts, fully shown by the plaintiff's testimony, bring the case directly within the ruling of several of our decisions."

Snowstorm.

Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cobleigh (1897) 24 C. C. A. 342, 51 U. S. App. 15, 78 Fed. 784. Train running over crossing. "The accident took place on a November day, about noon, when there was a snowstorm." The plaintiff said that the bluster of snow came directly in his face and blinded his view of the train, but "the testimony of other witnesses who were in the vicinity of the crossing at the time tended to show that the snowstorm was not such as to obscure appreciably seeing the train a long distance away as it approached."

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Donaldson (1907) 85 C. C. A. 185, 157 Fed. 821. Passenger train, lighted, and with locomotive headlight. Accident about 5:30 P. M., December 4. "There was a little snow on the ground, which was being occasionally raised by a northwest wind. The course of the wind was across the track, and, if deceased had looked in the direction of the train, it would not have been in his face."

Rowe v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1909) 144 Iowa, 378, 122 N. W. 929. The plaintiff left the defendant's freight train while it was waiting for a passenger train to arrive and pass, and went into the defendant's depot.

About the time the latter train was due, or a little later, in daylight, he started toward the freight train and had walked two or three steps when he was struck by the locomotive of the passenger train. He was without defect of sight or hearing. He testified that "there was quite a blizzard, a good deal of snow in the air, and the wind was blowing very strong so it would whip a person around." Other witnesses for him emphasized the character of the storm, while witnesses for the defense contended that it was not severe and did not obstruct a ready view of the train. The jury returned a special finding that the plaintiff "could have seen the train if he had looked, or could have heard the train if he had listened."

Butterfield v. Western R. Corp. (1865) 10 Allen (Mass.) 532, 87 Am. Dec. 678. Plaintiff struck by train while walking across tracks at public crossing, without looking for train. "He states his reasons for neglecting to look. It was a stormy night, raining, blowing hard from the northwest, and snowing some. He had his hand up, holding his hat on his head, and this prevented him from seeing the train. The traveling on the highway was very bad; considerable snow had fallen some time before, and its surface was frozen; the road had been plowed out to the crossing, and the crust had slipped back into the path. The ice did not fall over, but slid right back. He could not tell which furrow he walked in; sometimes one, and sometimes the other. He was listening for the cars; his attention was called to the subject, and he expected to hear the bell or the whistle, but there was no bell sounded or whistle blown. From this statement it is to be inferred that he had occasion to use his eyes pretty constantly for the guidance of his own footsteps as he walked, and that he was under the necessity of obstructing his sight for the purpose of preserving his hat from being blown away. Yet, as he had the control of his own movements, and could stop or check his speed at pleasure, it was in his power to look up frequently, and he might easily have seen the train. The noise of the wind and storm, and the breaking of the snow crust as he walked, must have made it more difficult than usual to hear the noise of the train, and furnished no excuse for trusting exclusively to his sense of hearing. We must assume it to be true that neither the bell nor whistle was sounded, and that the defendants violated their duty in this respect. A traveler has a right to expect that they will perform this duty, and has some right to expect that he will hear the noise. But this expectation does not excuse him from exercising reasonable care to ascertain by sight as well as hearing whether there is a train coming immediately upon him as he attempts to cross the track."

Schwartz v. Mineral Range R. Co. (1908) 153 Mich. 40, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1253, 116 N. W. 540. Train late. Accident in middle of day. "All the circumstances required great care" on plaintiff's part; "the snow was being drifted and whirled through the air by the high wind, and tended, with the snow fence [7½ feet high], to obscure the view of a train approaching."

Brickell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1890) 120 N. Y. 290, 17 Am. St. Rep. 648, 24 N. E. 449. Accident in the forenoon. The plaintiff should have looked or listened for the train, especially because, as was said of this case in McCaffrey v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1891) 62 Hun, 618, 16 N. Y. Supp. 495, 497, "the snow tended to obscure the vision."

Wilber v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1897) 17 App. Div. 623, 45 N. Y. Supp. 761. Train at crossing, about 1 P. M. "Assuming that the atmosphere was filled with blowing snow, so as to obscure the plaintiff's vision, it was then the more incumbent upon him to approach the crossing with a care and caution commensurate with the dangers of the place, which would be increased . . . by the blowing snow."

Bremiller v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. (1895) 90 Hun, 226, 35 N. Y. Supp. 561. Accident in middle of forenoon, February 27. "The morning was stormy," but "neither the plaintiff nor any other witness testified that the snow was falling so fast as to prevent her from seeing the train."

Sherlock v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. (1912) 24 N. D. 40, 138 N. W. 976. Accident at crossing, December 14. "The day was cold with considerable wind from the northwest and some snow blowing, and perhaps falling, but the amount of the snow and storm was not sufficient to prevent a fairly clear view of the track." The plaintiff drove on track with back turned toward approaching train and coat collar turned up over ears.

c. Absence of negligence matter of law.

Rainstorm.

In the reported case (ILLINOIS C. R. Co. v. ASH, ante, 1061, it appears that the plaintiff's intestate was struck and killed by one of the defendant's passenger trains, while trespassing on the track during a very heavy rainstorm, and the engineer and fireman testified, without being contradicted, that on account of such rainstorm their view was obstructed and it was impossible for them to see the plaintiff's intestate on the track. It is held that a peremptory instruction for the defendant was warranted by the evidence.

III. Liability of street car company.

a. Negligence and contributory negligence for jury.

In each of the following cases of accidents by collision with street cars, the visibility of which was affected by weather conditions, a judgment for the plaintiff was affirmed, or a judgment for the defendant, by nonsuit or otherwise, was reversed, the questions of negligence and contributory negligence being held to be for the jury.

Storm.

Norfolk & P. Traction Co. v. Rephan (1911) 110 C. C. A. 254, 188 Fed. 276. Plaintiff attempting to cross street. "It was in the nighttime and during a rainstorm." Motorman failed to keep a proper lookout and gave no signals.

Grogan v. Boston Elev. R. Co.

(1907) 194 Mass. 448, 80 N. E. 485. The plaintiff was driving across the defendant's track. "It was a wet and stormy day with the wind blowing hard, and . . . the car was going 'at a breakneck speed.'"

Bady v. Detroit United R. Co. (1914) 180 Mich. 380, 147 N. W. 450. "It is gathered from the testimony of the plaintiff and his witnesses that the night in question was a dark and stormy one, that the car was being operated at a high rate of speed, without a headlight, and that no warning was given as it approached the intersection of the avenues. It further appeared that there was no street light at the intersection. Under this state of facts, we do not think it should be said, as a matter of law, that plaintiff was not in the exercise of ordinary care in attempting to go across the track. That question was one of fact to be determined in view of all the circumstances by the jury. In determining the question, it was proper for the jury to consider to what extent the storm and darkness might have prevented him from discovering the car in season to avoid it, and it was likewise proper for them to consider to what extent the failure to have a headlight in the usual position on the car might have misled him, and also to consider whether his lack of appreciation of the danger he was in was due in any manner to the failure of defendant to do the usual thing and sound the gong as the car approached the intersection."

Schilawske v. Detroit, J. & C. R. Co. (1919) 206 Mich. 214, 172 N. W. 369. Plaintiff's intestate, an aged man, struck while attempting to cross street. "It was a stormy night, with rain, snow, and sleet, and a high wind blowing . . . from the east." "Before the accident occurred the street lights had gone out." Car without headlight and traveling at the rate of 30 or 40 miles an hour. Sound of approach deadened because of ice on the rails.

Boyer v. St. Paul City R. Co. (1893) 54 Minn. 127, 55 N. W. 825. Accident "early in the evening," June 11. "Severe storm of wind and rain." "Storm and darkness."

Engelman v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1908) 133 Mo. App. 514, 113 S. W. 700. The plaintiff was driving on defendant's track when struck by car approaching from behind. The night was dark, and it was snowing, raining, and sleeting. "According to all the evidence, the motorman could not have seen plaintiff's wagon on the track a greater distance than 25 feet. And it is also equally apparent that if plaintiff had been looking at the time for an approaching car she could have seen it a greater distance on account of the headlight. But it is evident that she could not have seen it for so great a distance as it might have been seen on an ordinarily dark night, by reason of the storm of rain and snow prevailing at the time. It was, in our opinion, a question for the jury to say, considering the conditions and the rate of speed at which the car was going, whether plaintiff exercised that degree of care required of her in looking for its approach."

Brott v. Auburn & S. Electric R. Co. (1917) 220 N. Y. 92, 115 N. E. 273, 16 N. C. C. A. 758. Accident at way station crossing about 10 A. M., March 6. "The day was cold, and there was snow on the ground and in the air, and the wind was blowing a gale." The plaintiff's intestate was struck while crossing in front of one of defendant's cars while it was at a distance of 300 feet, for the purpose of becoming a passenger thereon. The car was running from 25 to 30 miles an hour, and its speed was not reduced until collision was imminent.

Schwarzbaum v. Third Ave R. Co. (1900) 54 App. Div. 164, 66 N. Y. Supp. 367. "The accident happened at about 10 o'clock on a very dark February night. Heavy rain was falling."

Fog or mist.

Indianapolis Street R. Co. v. Slifer (1905) 35 Ind. App. 700, 74 N. E. 19. Accident at 11 P. M., July 5. The car was lighted inside, but had no light in front. "It was a dark, foggy night."

Waring v. Dubuque Electric Co. (1921) — Iowa, —, 185 N. W. 130.

Plaintiff injured while driving automobile across tracks at street intersection. "It was a 'dark, cloudy, foggy, drizzly night.'" The fog described by witnesses to be of various degrees, from "slight" to "very dense." Side curtains on automobile down and wind shield closed. Headlight on car was dim, and, owing to fog and darkness, plaintiff could not see car. No signals given.

See to the same effect, Waring v. Dubuque Electric Co. (1922) — Iowa, —, 186 N. W. 42, a companion case growing out of the same state of facts.

Whitman v. Louisville R. Co. (1909) 134 Ky. 6, 119 S. W. 165. Accident about 6 A. M., November 22. "According to the proof for the plaintiff it was a dark, foggy morning, and not light. According to the proof for the defendant there was sufficient light to justify the putting out of the headlight on the car." A judgment for the defendant was reversed on account of erroneous instructions.

Cutler v. Grand Rapids, G. H. & M. R. Co. (1907) 147 Mich. 615, 111 N. W. 191. Accident about 7 A. M., November 3. Head-on collision between electric cars, wherein plaintiff, a motorman on one of them, was injured. "There was . . . a dense fog which seriously interfered with the view of the motorman." Defendant's car displayed no light and gave no signal.

Campbell v. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co. (1903) 175 Mo. 161, 75 S. W. 86. Accident shortly after 6 P. M., November 3. The car was lighted inside, but had no headlight. "It was a dark, foggy night." "This was not a passenger car, whose familiar appearance would be at once recognized by one used to seeing street cars, . . . but it was a construction car, whose outlines at night were not so easily seen, or, if seen, recognized for what it was."

Koster v. Coney Island & B. R. Co. (1914) 165 App. Div. 224, 151 N. Y. Supp. 56. Collision between trolley car and delivery wagon at street crossing, between 3 and 4 A. M., July 18. "It was wet and misty, and the rails were slippery," causing car wheels to skid when brake was applied.

Rote v. Pennsylvania & M. Valley R. Co. (1907) 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 508. Plaintiff was injured while driving a horse and buggy on defendant's tracks. "The night was dark and a heavy fog was hanging over that portion of the city so that it was impossible to see for any distance." Car approached without warning.

Memphis Street R. Co. v. Carroll (1919) 141 Tenn. 265, 209 S. W. 640. Accident at street crossing, shortly after 6 A. M., January 5. "The morning was dark, cool, and misty." Car without headlight speeding over down grade. (This case was reversed because of the failure of the trial court to submit the question of contributory negligence to the jury.)

b. Contributory negligence matter of law.

In each of the following cases of accident by collision with street cars the visibility of which was affected by weather conditions, the plaintiff was held to be guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, and a directed verdict for the defendant, or a judgment of nonsuit, was affirmed:

Storm.

Davis v. Detroit United R. Co. (1910) 162 Mich. 240, 127 N. W. 323. "The accident happened in daylight, on a stormy day, with snow, sleet, and rain at intervals. Plaintiff was holding her umbrella close to her to protect herself from the sleet, and towards the west. As plaintiff, going north on Farrar street, stepped off the curb onto Gratiot avenue, a car passed going east. 'When she stopped within a few feet of the track, she looked out from behind her umbrella westward to see if another car were coming. The sleet struck her in the eyes, interfering with her sight; but she thought she could see well enough to make sure there was no car coming. Observing none, and hearing no warning from any, she started on to cross the first pair of tracks, turning to look eastward for a west-bound car that might be coming upon the second pair of tracks. She had taken more than two steps, and was just upon the first track, when she saw the fender of an east-bound car in front of her. She tried to dodge back, but before she could do so was struck by the corner of the vestibule and thrown to the pavement.' . . . If plaintiff could not see because of the sudden gust blowing the sleet in her eyes, she should have awaited the cessation of the gust, and it was negligence on her part to proceed to cross, relying upon such a view."

Memphis Street R. Co. v. Roe (1907) 118 Tenn. 601, 102 S. W. 343. The plaintiff was driving "after dark" when a street car struck and overturned his wagon. "Clouds of dust intensified the darkness of the night in obscuring objects a short distance away. . . . The vision of the defendant in error was seriously affected by these conditions, but not more so than that of the motorman in charge of the car."

Fog or mist.

Barry v. Boston Elev. R. Co. (1907) 194 Mass. 265, 80 N. E. 225. Head-on collision between electric cars. The plaintiff, the motorman on one of them, should have waited before running his car on that track. Accident about 7 A. M., October 30. "It does not appear how light it was, but it does appear that the lights were lighted. . . . The day was so foggy that he could see ahead three or four car lengths only."

Beirne v. Lawrence & M. Street R. Co. (1908) 197 Mass. 173, 83 N. E. 359. "The car here in question was lighted by thirteen incandescent lights inside the car and one on the dashboard. The accident happened in the morning, while it was still dark, and although it was 'misty and cloudy' it was not the case of a fog which interfered with seeing objects, as, for example, was the case in Barry v. Boston Elev. R. Co. (Mass.) supra. Plaintiff must have looked carelessly."

Savage v. Nassau Electric R. Co. (1899) 42 App. Div. 241, 59 N. Y. Supp. 225, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 619, affirmed in (1901) 168 N. Y. 680, 61 N. E. 1134. Collision between electric cars, the plaintiff being a motorman on one of them. Accident between 5 and 6 A. M., May 14. "The weather was so densely foggy that a car could not be seen at a distance of more than 15 or 20 feet." A judgment of nonsuit was affirmed because the plaintiff was running on the wrong track and too rapidly in the fog.

Johnson v. Third Ave. R. Co. (1902) 69 App. Div. 247, 74 N. Y. Supp. 599. Plaintiff endeavoring to cross street. "It was a rainy, foggy night." No evidence that plaintiff looked before stepping on track. L. F. C.

JOSEPH C. CORDREY, Respt.,

v.

STEAMSHIP "BEE."

BEE STEAMSHIP COMPANY, Appt.

Oregon Supreme Court (Dept. No. 2)—October 4, 1921.

(— Or. —, 201 Pac. 202.)

Conflict of laws — power of state to enforce lien against foreign vessel.

1. A state may enforce a lien against a foreign vessel which inflicts an injury upon one of its citizens within its territorial limits by a tort not within the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1095.]

Admiralty — jurisdiction conferred by state statute.

2. A state statute cannot confer jurisdiction on admiralty courts except for matters maritime in their nature.

[See 1 R. C. L. 408; 1 R. C. L. Supp. 133.]

— jurisdiction over torts — injury to one on land.

3. Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit for damages inflicted upon a longshoreman at work upon a wharf, by the breaking of a sling by which the cargo was being unloaded from a vessel.

[See 1 R. C. L. 417; 1 R. C. L. Supp. 140.]

Constitutional law — due process — seizure of vessel as notice.

4. A provision for seizure of a vessel to answer in damages for injury inflicted upon a citizen of the state where the injury occurs is sufficient notice to the owner of the vessel of the pendency of the proceeding to constitute due process of law.

Commerce — interference — seizure of foreign vessel.

5. Subjecting a vessel of a foreign state to seizure, to satisfy a claim for personal injury to a citizen of a state which it visits, does not unconstitutionally interfere with interstate commerce.

Lien — foreclosure — method.

6. The statutory provision for foreclosure of liens by suits is exclusive and must be followed.

— personal judgment — action at law.

7. There is no authority to proceed as in an action at law to foreclose a lien and render a personal judgment against the owner of the property, where the statute provides for foreclosure by suit in equity, and authorizes a personal judgment only where there is a personal obligation for payment of the debt.

(Bean, J., dissents in part.)

APPEAL by claimant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County (Kavanaugh, J.) in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding brought to establish and enforce a lien on the defendant vessel for an injury sustained by him while assisting in unloading the vessel. Reversed.

Statement by Burnett, Ch. J.:

While on the dock at which the steamship Bee was berthed in Portland in this state and was discharging her cargo of cement, the plaintiff, a stevedore, was hurt by a sling load of cement which fell on the truck he was operating, so that it threw him on the dock and injured him. The home port of the ship was in the state of California, and it was owned by a corporation of Appeal — error in form of action.

8. It is reversible error to take a verdict which shall be binding upon the judge as to the facts in an action which, under the statute, must be tried as a suit in equity.

Trial — amendment — before submission.

9. An amendment of a complaint to claim damages which, if claimed originally, would have permitted the removal of the cause to the Federal court, made just before the jury retires, is too late under a statute permitting amendments at any time before the cause is submitted.

Pleading — discrepancy between language and figures — which controls.

10. The language controls the figures where there is a discrepancy in the claim of damages in a complaint between the original words and figures used.

Evidence — defect in implement — owner's knowledge.

11. The jury may consider the fact that an implement which broke to the injury of one engaged in unloading a vessel was furnished by the owner of the vessel, upon the question of the owner's knowledge of the defect.

Shipping — injury by vessel — defective tackle.

12. An injury to one assisting in unloading a vessel by a defect in the ship's tackle is a tort committed by the ship itself within the meaning of a statute giving a lien upon vessels which commit injury.

that state. The plaintiff had judgment in personam against the owner of the vessel, from which that owner appeals. The further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. McCamant, Bronaugh, & Thompson and McCutchen, Willard, Mannon, & Greene, for appellant.

When equity takes jurisdiction for the foreclosure of a lien, it will decide the whole controversy and decree accordingly.

Shultz v. Shively, 72 Or. 450, 143 Pac. 1115.

A re-enactment of a former statute is to be read as a part of the earlier act, and not of the new one, if the latter is in conflict with another act, passed after the former, but before the latter.

Small v. Lutz, 41 Or. 570, 67 Pac. 421, 69 Pac. 225; Renshaw v. Lane County Ct. 49 Or. 526, 89 Pac. 147; State v. McGinnis, 56 Or. 163, 108 Pac. 132; Bayless v. Douglass County, 57 Or. 301, 111 Pac. 384.

State statutes cannot authorize proceedings in rem according to the course in admiralty.

Southern P. Co. v. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205, 61 L. ed. 1086, L.R.A.1918C, 451, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 900, 14 N. C. C. A. 597; The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 411, 18 L. ed. 397; The Glide, 167 U. S. 606, 42 L. ed. 296, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 930.

The defendant vessel, being owned in San Francisco, is a foreign vessel for the purposes of this case.

The Chusan, 2 Story, 455, Fed. Cas. No. 2,717; The Roanoke, 189 U. S. 185, 47 L. ed. 770, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491.

It is not competent for the state of Oregon to impose a lien enforceable in the state courts by proceedings in rem on a foreign vessel engaged in interstate commerce, under such circumstances as would not authorize a lien under the general maritime law.

The Roanoke, 189 U. S. 185, 194, 47 L. ed. 770, 772, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491; The Robert v. Parsons (Perry v. Haines) 191 U. S. 17, 48 L. ed. 73, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8; Southern P. Co. v. Jensen, supra; The New Brunswick, 64 C. C. A. 325, 129 Fed. 893; The Golden Rod, 80 C. C. A. 246, 151 Fed. 6; The Cimbria, 156 Fed. 378; The Rockaway, 156 Fed. 692; American Trust Co. v. W. & A. Fletcher Co. 97 C. C. A. 477, 173 Fed. 471; The Athina, 230 Fed. 1017; Corsica Transit Co. v. W. S. Moore Grain Co. 165 C. C. A. 283, 253 Fed. 689.

When a vessel is completed, and is engaged in foreign or interstate commerce, she is not subject to seizure under proceedings in rem in the state courts, except possibly in her home port.

The Minnie R. Childs, 10 Ben. 553, Fed. Cas. No. 9,640; The Chusan, 2 Story, 455, Fed. Cas. No. 2,717; Warren v. Kelley, 80 Me. 512, 15 Atl. 49; Weston v. Morse, 40 Wis. 455.

A state statute is invalid if it works material prejudice to the characteristic features of the general maritime law, or interferes with the proper harmony and uniformity of that law in its international and interstate relations.

Southern P. Co. v. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205, 61 L. ed. 1086, L.R.A.1918C, 541, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 900, 14 N. C. C. A. 596; Chelentis v. Luckenbach S. S. Co. 247 U. S. 372, 62 L. ed. 1171, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 501, 19 N. C. C. A. 309; Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, 253 U. S. 149, 64 L. ed. 834, 11 A.L.R. 1145, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438, 20 N. C. C. A. 635.

Section 7504 is applicable, in any event, only to cases where the injury is done by a vessel negligently navigated. It does not purport to apply to every case where the negligence of the owner is the proximate cause of the injury.

The Osceola, 189 U. S. 158, 47 L. ed. 760, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 483; The Onoko, 47 C. C. A. 111, 107 Fed. 984; Tropical Fruit S. S. Co. v. Towle, 138 C. C. A. 293, 222 Fed. 867; The Theta, 7 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 480, L. R. [1894] Prob. 280; 24 R. C. L. 1202.

In the absence of evidence that claimant knew or ought to have known that the sling which broke was defective, plaintiff has failed to make out a case of negligence.

Duntley v. Inman, P. & Co. 42 Or. 334, 59 L.R.A. 785, 70 Pac. 529; Finn v. Oregon Water Power & R. Co. 51 Or. 66, 93 Pac. 690; Gynther v. Brown & McCabe, 67 Or. 310, 134 Pac. 1186; Buchanan v. Lewis A. Hicks Co. 66 Or. 503, 133 Pac. 780, 134 Pac. 1191.

In any event claimant was entitled to an instruction that the mere breaking of the sling did not charge the defendant vessel with responsibility for plaintiff's injuries.

Kincaid v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 22 Or. 35, 29 Pac. 3; Duntley v. Inman P. & Co. 42 Or. 334, 59 L.R.A. 785, 70 Pac. 529; Finn v. Oregon Water Power & R. Co. 51 Or. 66, 93 Pac. 690; Buchanan v. Lewis A. Hicks Co. 66 Or. 503, 133 Pac. 780, 134 Pac. 1191; Gynther v. Brown & McCabe, 67 Or. 310, 134 Pac. 1186; Sappenfield v. Main Street & Agri. Park R. Co. 91 Cal. 48, 27 Pac. 590, 13 Am. Neg. Cas. 387; Brownfield v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 107 Iowa, 254, 77 N. W. 1038, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 331.

The complaint is based on the relation of master and servant alleged to subsist between defendant and plaintiff. This is an essential allegation, and plaintiff can recover, if at all, only by establishing the fact so alleged.

New Albany Forge & Rolling Mill v. Cooper, 131 Ind. 363, 30 N. E. 294; Indiana Iron Co. v. Cray, 19 Ind. App. 565, 48 N. E. 803; Humpton v. Unterkircher, 97 Iowa, 509, 66 N. W. 776, 14 Am. Neg. Cas. 595; Reier v. Detroit Steel & Spring Works, 109 Mich. 244, 67 N. W. 120.

When damages are predicated on future suffering or permanent disability, it is incumbent on plaintiff to establish the reasonable certainty of such suffering or disability. In the absence of evidence sustaining plaintiff's contention that such suffering or disability is reasonably certain, the jury should be charged that no damages can be awarded on those grounds.

Strohm v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 96 N. Y. 305; Tozer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 105 N. Y. 617, 11 N. E. 369; Briggs v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 177 N. Y. 59, 101 Am. St. Rep. 718, 69 N. E. 223, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 396; Brininstool v. Michigan United R. Co. 157 Mich. 172, 121 N. W. 728; Collins v. Janesville, 99 Wis. 464, 75 N. W. 88; Groundwater v. Washington, 92 Wis. 56, 65 N. W. 871; Raymond v. Keseberg, 91 Wis. 195, 64 N. W. 861; Block v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. 89 Wis. 371, 27 L.R.A. 365, 46 Am. St. Rep. 849, 61 N. W. 1101; Hardy v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. 89 Wis. 187, 61 N. W. 771, 7 Am. Neg. Cas. 283; Gifford v. Washington Water Power Co. 85 Wash. 341, 148 Pac. 11; Rugenstein v. Ottenheimer, 70 Or. 600, 140 Pac. 747, 78 Or. 371, 152 Pac. 215, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 953; Albright v. Keats Auto Co. 85 Or. 134, 166 Pac. 758; Spain v. Oregon-Washington R. & Nav. Co. 78 Or. 355, 153 Pac. 470, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 1104.

Where there is a discrepancy between the language and the figures in a contract, the former will be followed and the latter disregarded.

13 C. J. 537; Payne v. Clark, 19 Mo. 152, 59 Am. Dec. 333; Central Nat. Bank v. Pipkin, 66 Mo. App. 592; Romine v. Haag, — Mo. —, 178 S. W. 147; United Surety Co. v. Summers, 110 Md. 95, 72 Atl. 775.

A proceeding in which the process runs against property is in rem.

22 Cyc. 1102; Cunningham v. Shanklin, 60 Cal. 118; Gorham Co. v. United Engineering & Contracting Co. 202

N. Y. 342, 95 N. E. 805; Holcomb v. Kelly, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1048; Doughty v. Doughty, 27 N. J. Eq. 315; Joyner v. Joyner, 131 Ga. 217, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 647, 127 Am. St. Rep. 220, 62 S. E. 182; Cross v. Armstrong, 44 Ohio St. 613, 10 N. E. 160; Kean v. Rogers, — Iowa, —, 118 N. W. 515.

The proceeding authorized by §§ 10,281–10,296 is a proceeding in rem.

Keating v. Spink, 3 Ohio St. 105, 62 Am. Dec. 235; Hill v. Henry, 66 N. J. Eq. 150, 57 Atl. 554; Pacific Coast S. S. Co. v. Bancroft-Whitney Co. 36 C. C. A. 135, 94 Fed. 180; The L. B. X. 88 Fed. 290; Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316, 33 L. ed. 918, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557; The Robert W. Parsons, 191 U. S. 17, 48 L. ed. 73, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8.

These sections provide an admiralty and not a common-law remedy.

The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 555, 18 L. ed. 451; The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624, 19 L. ed. 266; The Willapa, 25 Or. 71, 34 Pac. 689.

The exclusiveness of the jurisdiction is applicable both to remedy and to subject-matter. The state courts cannot apply an admiralty remedy.

Benedict, Admiralty, 4th ed. § 128; Keating v. Spink, 62 Am. Dec. 241, note; The Minnie R. Childs, 10 Ben. 553, Fed. Cas. No. 9,640; The Chusan, 2 Story, 455, Fed. Cas. No. 2,717; Warren v. Kelley, 80 Me. 512, 15 Atl. 49; Weston v. Morse, 40 Wis. 455.

Messrs. William P. Lord and A. I. Moulton for respondent.

Burnett, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We deduce from the bill of exceptions substantially this state of facts: The vessel in question had arrived in Portland with a cargo of cement consigned to local parties. The consignee, or someone operating for him on the land, telephoned to the longshoremen's union for a number of stevedores to assist in unloading the cargo. Several men, including the plaintiff, were sent by the union to the dock. On arriving there, someone acting as mate of the vessel directed the plaintiff, with others, to remain on the dock for service there, while the rest were taken into the hold of the vessel. The plaintiff took an ordinary hand truck and was engaged in receiving from the sling of the vessel truck loads of cement. The ship's tackle, by means of pulleys and ropes, took a number of sacks of cement in a sling from the hold of the vessel, hoisted it up, and swung it out over the dock, lowering it upon the trucks. While the plaintiff was waiting to receive a load in this manner, the sling broke before the load reached the dock, and the sacks of cement falling upon the truck threw the plaintiff over upon his back, by which he suffered the injuries complained of.

Section 10,281, Or. Laws, provides that "every boat or vessel used in navigating the water of this state or constructed in this state shall be liable and subject to a lien . . . for damages or injuries done to persons or property, by such boat or vessel. . . ."

After providing for the priority of liens, the statute, in § 10,283, declares that "any person having a demand as aforesaid, instead of proceeding for the recovery thereof against the master, owner, agent, or consignee of the boat or vessel, may, at his option, commence an action against such boat or vessel by name."

We find this in § 10,284: "Any person wishing to commence an action against a boat or vessel shall file his complaint against such boat or vessel by name with the clerk of the circuit court of the county in which such boat or vessel may lie or be. The complaint shall set forth the plaintiff's demand in all its particulars, and on whose account the same accrued, and shall be verified by the plaintiff or some credible person for him."

Section 10,285 states: "Whenever such complaint shall be filed, the clerk shall issue a warrant thereon, commanding the sheriff to seize the boat or vessel mentioned in the complaint, with her tackle, apparel, and furniture, and retain the same until discharged from such custody by due course of law."

Section 10,286 is as follows: "Upon the return of any warrant issued as prescribed in the last section, proceeding shall be had in the circuit court against the boat or vessel seized, in the same manner as if the action had been commenced against the person on whose account the demand accrued."

In § 10,287 it is said: "The master, owner, agent, or consignee of the boat or vessel may appear on behalf of such boat or vessel and answer the complaint."

Section 10,288 provides that "if in any action commenced under the provisions of this chapter the master, owner, agent, or consignee shall not appear and answer the complaint, the plaintiff may proceed to take judgment in the same manner and under the same restrictions as in a civil action against a natural person; if an issue of fact be joined, the same proceeding shall be had as in other actions."

There are other sections which provide for filing an undertaking, or making a deposit in lieu thereof, for the discharge of the boat. The judgment prescribed in § 10,291 is to the effect that, if judgment be rendered against the boat or vessel, the court shall make an order directed to the sheriff, commanding him to sell the same for the satisfaction of the judgment.

The owner of the vessel, the Bee Steamship Company, appeared as claimant, traversed most of the complaint, denied the jurisdiction of the court over the controversy or over the steamship, and averred that the accident happened on account of the negligence of the plaintiff himself; that he assumed the risks of the employment, of which the liability to the injury complained of was one; that at the time of the accident, and for a long time prior thereto, the steamship had been engaged in interstate commerce, and was discharging a cargo which had been transported on the vessel from the state of California to the state of Oregon when the accident occurred. It is also said as a further affirmative defense that the plaintiff was employed by the Oregon Portland Cement Company, an Oregon corporation which was in actual possession of the dock upon which the cargo was being stored; and that the injury of the plaintiff was sustained while he was working for the Oregon Portland Cement Company, with the conclusion that the accident was to be governed only by what is known as the Industrial Accident Law.

That portion of the answer averring contributory negligence is denied. The answer which sets up assumption of risk is traversed as to the allegations of the foreign status of the claimant and its ownership of the Bee, as well as to the averments that the plaintiff was an experienced man and informed of all the incidents of the work and of the risks and dangers attached thereto. Otherwise, the new matter in the answer is not denied.

The principal effort of the claimant and owner of the vessel is to establish its contention that the state courts have no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the litigation. It maintains that only the Federal courts of admiralty have any authority over the grievance complained of. It is true that under § 2 of article 3 of the United States Constitution it is said that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, . . . to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction."

Federal legislation in pursuance of this provides that the district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, where the matter in controversy exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum and value of $3,000, and arises under the laws or Constitution of the United States, and treaties which are made or shall be made under their authority, or is between citizens of different states, and in all civil causes of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it. Section 24 of the Judicial Code of the United States. A later amendment enacted October 6, 1917, by Congress, adds to the saving clause as follows: ". . . And to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any state." U. S. Comp. Stat. § 991 (3) Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 401.

In this branch of the case, therefore, the crucial question is whether the grievance complained of is of admiralty cognizance, or whether it belongs to the state courts. In Philadelphia W. & B. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, H. de G. S. B. Co. 23 How. 209, 16 L. ed. 433, it is said: "The jurisdiction of courts of admiralty, in matters of contract, depends upon the nature and character of the contract, but in torts it depends entirely on locality."

It is taught in The J. E. Rumbell, 148 U. S. 1, 37 L. ed. 345, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498, that the Federal maritime jurisdiction is exclusive; that state legislation cannot bring within admiralty jurisdiction a subject not maritime in its nature, "but when a right, maritime in its nature, and to be enforced by process in the nature of admiralty process, has been given by the statute of a state, the admiralty courts of the United States have jurisdiction, and exclusive jurisdiction, to enforce that right according to their own rules of procedure." We learn from The Willapa, 25 Or. 71, 74, 34 Pac. 689, that state laws cannot confer admiralty jurisdiction upon the state courts so as to enable them to proceed in rem for the enforcement of liens created by such laws, for it is exclusively conferred upon the district courts of the United States. The case of The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 411, 18 L. ed. 397, was founded on a breach of a maritime contract, and the court held that the statute of the state of California, almost precisely in terms like our own, authorizing an action against the steamer by name, established a proceeding in the nature and with all the incidents of a suit in admiralty. It was decided there that this was without the scope of state legislative power. In The Chusan, 2 Story, 455, Fed. Cas. No. 2,717, and The Roanoke, 189 U. S. 185, 194, 47 L. ed. 770, 772, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491, both cited in the defendant's brief, the question involved was that of furnishing materials for repairs of a vessel lying in a foreign port. This, of course, under the authorities, carries a lien, according to the general maritime law, in favor of the parties furnishing the materials.

In all of the cases cited by the defendant in support of its contention that the state has no authority to impress a lien upon the defendant's steamship, there appears the element either of maritime tort or maritime contract. For instance, in Southern P. Co. v. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205, 61 L. ed. 1086, L.R.A.1918C, 451, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 900, 14 N. C. C. A. 596, the cause of action was for an injury aboard the ship. In The Rockaway (D. C.) 156 Fed. 692, it was held that a state statute may create a lien on a domestic vessel for repairs at the home port, and that this would be enforceable in admiralty, because the nature of the contract was maritime. The same reason applies in American Co. v. W. & A. Fletcher Co. 97 C. C. A. 477, 173 Fed. 471, to the effect that supplies and repairs to foreign vessels are lienable by the general maritime law, while the same services rendered to a domestic vessel are made lienable only by state statutes; but, because of their maritime nature, when such liens are given they are enforceable only in the admiralty courts. In The Athinai (D. C.) 230 Fed. 1017, it is said that it is beyond the power of any state to create a lien enforceable in the admiralty by process in rem against a foreign ship, claims against foreign vessels being within the exclusive jurisdiction of admiralty. The point of that case is that state courts can neither increase nor diminish the jurisdiction of admiralty. To say that the state courts cannot create a lien enforceable in the courts of admiralty is but another way of declaring that the state can neither enlarge nor restrict the authority of the admiralty courts. The reason for the opinion in that case is thus stated: "Any such legislation, creative of a lien enforceable in admiralty, and upon shipping, must rest upon the making or implication of a contract maritime in its nature, or on the commission of a maritime tort."

It is enunciated in Corsica Transit Co. v. W. S. Moore Grain Co. 165 C. C. A. 283, 253 Fed. 689, as follows: "To sustain a state statute giving a lien on a vessel, the cause of the action must be maritime in nature, and a breach of an executory contract for the charter of a vessel is not maritime in nature, and therefore cannot be enforced in a proceeding in rem in an admiralty court."

So, also, in The Minnie R. Childs, 10 Ben. 553, Fed. Cas. No. 9,640, a lien for supplies to domestic ships created by state law is maritime, and hence cognizable in admiralty. We find in Warren v. Kelley, 80 Me. 512, 15 Atl. 49, that the statute of a state may create a lien on a domestic vessel based on maritime service, but the jurisdiction to foreclose it belongs to the United States courts. Likewise, Weston v. Morse, 40 Wis. 455, teaches us that a case for sailors' wages and supplies furnished to a domestic vessel, made lienable by a state statute, is enforceable only in admiralty, for the basic reason that they are for incidents maritime in their nature. In Chelentis v. Luckenbach Co. 247 U. S. 372, 62 L. ed. 1171, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 501, 19 N. C. C. A. 309, a sailor aboard ship on the high seas, while at work on the deck, was caught by a wave which came aboard and threw him against the vessel, breaking his leg. He sued the owners of the vessel for common-law damages, but the court held that under the maritime law, the case being one of maritime tort, the liability of the boat or its owners could not be extended beyond the measure allowed by the maritime jurisdiction. In Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, 253 U. S. 149, 64 L. ed. 834, 11 A.L.R. 1145, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438, 20 N. C. C. A. 635, Stewart was doing maritime work on a barge for the Knickerbocker Ice Company while the barge lay in navigable waters. While so engaged he fell into the Hudson river and was drowned. It was there held that the clause saving to claimants the rights and remedies under the state Workmen's Compensation Act was an attempt by Congress to delegate its legislative power to states, and that, on the other hand, the state could neither add to nor take from admiralty jurisdiction. Thus we find, without variation, that the sine qua non of admiralty jurisdiction is that the contract involved must be maritime in its nature, dependent upon the nature of the contract, or that the tort in question must be a maritime tort, dependent upon the locality where the injury was received.

Bearing in mind, therefore, that the injury received by the plaintiff, and upon which this proceeding is based, happened to him while he was on the land, and that for all that appears in the record he never was aboard the steamship Bee, we find the rule to be thus: "Suits for injuries to a person sustained on land, although originating or caused by a vessel, are not cognizable in admiralty." 1 C. J. 1286.

In Ryley v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (D. C.) 173 Fed. 839, the decedent was injured on a barge navigating the Delaware river, but died ashore. It was held that admiralty had no jurisdiction, because the injury was not fully consummated in navigable water. The Albion (D. C.) 123 Fed. 189, was a case where the libellant walked off the dock at night, under the impression that a gangplank was there. But it had been removed, and hence he fell. It was held that admiralty jurisdiction extends only to torts committed on navigable waters. We find in Price v. The Belle of the Coast (D. C.) 66 Fed. 62, that the libellant was helping to carry a heavy barrel of oil off the vessel, and fell into a hole after leaving the ship, and it was there decided that because the injury was received ashore admiralty had no jurisdiction. In The Mary Garrett (D. C.) 63 Fed. 1009, the libellant, a seaman employed on the ship, was hurt on the dock while discharging freight, making the instance, according to the decision, not within admiralty jurisdiction. A seaman who deserted the ship claimed damages for arrest on land, and it was said in the opinion in Bain v. Sandusky Transp. Co. (D. C.) 60 Fed. 912, that "jurisdiction over torts, in admiralty, is clearly limited to maritime torts, . . . and the tort must be committed on the water, and not on land."

A similar instance is treated in The H. S. Pickands, 42 Fed. 239. Access to the steamer was gained by a ladder about 12 feet in length, leading from the wharf to the bulwarks of the vessel, the foot of which ladder had been secured by a cleat on the dock which prevented its slipping. The libellant was employed in doing some work in repairing the boiler of the vessel. Having occasion to leave the ship, he went to the ladder; but in the meantime it had been moved away from the cleat, leaving the foot of the ladder insecure. While he was on the ladder in the act of leaving the vessel, the ladder slipped and he fell to the wharf, receiving an injury; and it is said in the opinion that, to give admiralty jurisdiction, the injury must have been consummated, and the damage received, upon the water. "The mere fact that the wrongful act was done upon a ship is insufficient." The Mary Stewart (D. C.) 5 Hughes, 312, 10 Fed. 137, is a case almost precisely like the one in hand. There, the libellant was on the dock in the employ of the stevedore who was loading the ship with cotton bales by aid of the ship's tackle. Owing to the breaking of the ship's rope, a bale being hoisted aboard fell on the libellant on the dock, and injured him. The rule was thus laid down: "Not only the wrong must originate on water, but the damage . . . must also happen on water."

The deduction is that a state statute cannot confer jurisdiction on admiralty courts except for matters

Admiralty—
jurisdiction conferred by state statute.

maritime in their nature. Another similar case is that of Keator v. Rock

Plaster Mfg. Co. (D. C.) 256 Fed. 574, where a vessel was unloading rock from its hold. The bucket containing a load of rock spilled its contents on a workman standing on the dock, and it was decided that the matter was not of maritime cognizance. See also Smalls v. Atlantic Coast Shipping Co. (D. C.) 261 Fed. 928. In Billings v. Breinig, 45 Mich. 65, 7 N. W. 722, a ferryman was ashore in the act of lowering his ferry cable to permit the passage of a vessel, when a ship navigating the stream struck the cable so that it killed the ferryman, and it was determined that this did not furnish a chose in action for admiralty jurisdiction. One of the early cases is that of The Plymouth (Hough v. Western Transp. Co.) 3 Wall. 20, 18 L. ed. 125. By the negligence of its crew aboard the vessel while moored to the dock, the ship took fire, which spread to and consumed some warehouses and their contents, located on the dock; and it was held that this was not within admiralty jurisdiction. The same doctrine is taught in Ex parte Phenix Ins. Co. 118 U. S. 610, 30 L. ed. 274, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25. These precedents are conclusive over torts—injury to one on land.

—jurisdiction

that the mishap involved in the present controversy is not maritime in its nature, and is beyond the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. There is, therefore, no ground for saying that the admiralty courts have anything to do with the grievance here in question.

The investigation consequently takes this form: Can the state provide a remedy for a tort happening within its jurisdiction, and apply a lien against foreign property involved in the commission

Conflict of laws —power of state to enforce lien against foreign vessel.

of that tort? In The Robert W. Parsons (Perry v. Haines) 191 U. S. 17, 48 L. ed. 73, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8, a case cited for the defendant, we find this language: "It is equally well established that for causes of action not cognizable in admiralty, either in rem or in personam, the states may not only grant liens, but may provide remedies for their enforcement."

In Missouri v. Lewis (Bowman v. Lewis) 101 U. S. 22, 31, 25 L. ed. 989, it is said: "There is nothing in the Constitution to prevent any state from adopting any system of laws or judicature it sees fit, for all or any part of its territory."

We learn from Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 651, 29 L. ed. 250, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148, 1153, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 218: "That commonwealth [Pennsylvania] has the right to establish the forms of pleadings and process to be observed in her own courts, in both civil and criminal cases, subject only to those provisions of the Constitution of the United States involving the protection of life, liberty, and property in all the states of the Union."

Again, in Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 393, 40 L. ed. 467, 469, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344, 345, it is said: "The 14th Amendment in no way undertakes to control the power of a state to determine by what process legal rights may be asserted or legal obligations may be enforced, provided the method of procedure adopted for these purposes gives reasonable notice and affords fair opportunity to be heard before the issues are decided."

In Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172, 175, 44 L. ed. 119, 120, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77, 78, we find this language: "The state has full control over the procedure in its courts, both in civil and criminal cases, subject only to the qualification that such procedure must not work a denial of fundamental rights, or conflict with specific and applicable provisions of the Federal Constitution. . . . The state is not tied down by any provisions of the Federal Constitution to the practice and procedure which existed at the common law. Subject to the limitations heretofore named, it may avail itself of the wisdom gathered by the experience of the century to make such changes as may be necessary."

See also League v. Texas, 184 U. S. 156, 46 L. ed. 478, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475.

Recalling the terms of the statute under consideration, we note that there is no provision explicitly requiring service of summons or notice of the pendency of the proceeding upon the owner of the vessel against which the process has been issued. Upon filing a statement of the plaintiff's claim, the clerk, a ministerial officer, issues a warrant empowering the sheriff, so to speak, to arrest the vessel. Indeed, it is provided that "the master, owner, agent, or consignee of the boat or vessel may appear on behalf of such boat or vessel and answer the complaint."

True enough, they have the privilege of answering, but on what compulsion must they? Is this due process of law? Does the owner have his day in court by virtue of the statute? The question is not without difficulty, but there is abundant authority in the precedents for saying that the seizure of one's property is notice to him of an invasion of his rights, calling upon him to defend. We are not concerned about the amount of notice, for that is for the legislature to determine. The question is whether or not it has ordained notice. In Keating v. Spink, 3 Ohio St. 105, 62 Am. Dec. 214, the court had under consideration a statute almost in the same terms as our own, and, speaking by Mr. Justice Ranney, it said:

"This statute, then, as stated by the court in The Huron v. Simmons, 11 Ohio, 461, 'treats the boat as a person, and makes it responsible, in its own name, for all debts contracted for its use, and for all injuries committed against persons or property on board, by her officers or crew.' The liability is upon the craft, the proceeding is against the craft, and the judgment operates alone upon the craft. Its seizure is indispensable to the jurisdiction of the court, and its continued custody, unless released upon bond and security, indispensably necessary to the further proceedings, after final judgment.

"The proceeding, therefore, is strictly and technically in rem; it is pursued without reference to the owner, to enforce a liability which the thing itself has incurred, and the thing itself is condemned to make reparation. Possession is the essential element upon which the jurisdiction of the court depends; and as this possession is deemed that of the sovereignty under whose authority the court sits, if any question can be regarded as settled by the unanimous opinion of courts and jurists, it is this—that 'the law regards the seizure of the thing as constructive notice to the whole world.' Hollingsworth v. Barbour, 4 Pet. 475, 7 L. ed. 926. Other means for giving notice may be provided at the discretion of the sovereign power, upon the observance of which the jurisdiction may, or may not, depend; but where they are not prescribed, the power of the court over the thing, when taken into the custody of the law, is perfect and complete, and the final disposition of it binding upon the world. As the subject of liability and seizure described in this statute, are so uniformly attended by the owner or master representing all interests, the legislature has regarded the seizure and taking the thing into custody as effectual notice to those interested of the pendency of the proceedings, and has, therefore, provided for no other."

In The Mary, 9 Cranch, 126, 144, 3 L. ed. 678, 684, Chief Justice Marshall delivered the opinion, and, among other things, said: "It is a principle of natural justice, of universal obligation, that before the rights of an individual be bound by a judicial sentence, he shall have notice, either actual or implied, of the proceedings against him. Where these proceedings are against the person, notice is served personally, or by publication; where they are in rem, notice is served upon the thing itself. This is necessarily notice to all those who have any interest in the thing, and is reasonable because it is necessary, and because it is the part of common prudence for all those who have any interest in it, to guard that interest by persons who are in a situation to protect it. Every person, therefore, who could assert any title to the Mary, has constructive notice of her seizure, and may fairly be considered as a party to the libel."

In the celebrated case of Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 727, 24 L. ed. 565, 570, the court said: "The law assumes that property is always in the possession of its owner, in person or by agent; and it proceeds upon the theory that its seizure will inform him, not only that it is taken into the custody of the court, but that he must look to any proceedings as authorized by law upon such seizure for its condemnation and sale. Such service may also be sufficient in cases where the object of the action is to reach and dispose of property in the state, or of some interest therein, by enforcing a contract or a lien respecting the same, or to partition it among different owners, or, when the public is a party, to condemn and appropriate it for a public purpose. In other words, such service may answer in all actions which are substantially proceedings in rem. But where the entire object of the action is to determine the personal rights and obligations of the defendants,—that is, where the suit is merely in personam,—constructive service in this form upon a nonresident is ineffectual for any purpose."

The Ann (D. C.) 5 Hughes, 292, 8 Fed. 923, was a case dependent upon the seizure of a vessel. The court there said: "It is true that there was no notice, by service or publication of notice, to the owner or holders of maritime or other liens, that the vessel was being proceeded against; but a proceeding in rem forms an exception to the general rule of notice, particularly when based upon actual manucaption of the thing which is the instrument of the wrong, and in such cases the seizure has been held to be constructive notice to everyone having any interest in the thing seized."

The reason for the sufficiency of notice arising from the mere seizure of the property may be found, in part, at least, in the presumption "that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns." Or. Laws, § 799, subd. 4. In the case of a sea-going vessel especially, which is constantly in charge of a master or other representative of the owner, or of the owner himself, the mere taking is such an invasion of property rights as to notify the owner, as a practical matter, that he must defend. While a foreign vessel is in the state and its owners are without the jurisdiction, and likely unknown, it is clearly in the power of the state, by virtue of its authority over property within its boundaries to devise a process to subject the offending vessel itself to the payment of damages for a tort committed with it as an instrument. Of course, as taught in the excerpt from Pennoyer v. Neff, supra, the remedy is limited to the res itself, and cannot result in a judgment in personam. We arrive at the conclusion, therefore, that, having authority over the property within its jurisdiction, and the matter not being cognizable in the Federal courts of admiralty, the state has authority to formulate a process whereby the offending property itself may be proceeded against, seized, and subjected to the redress of the wrong committed. Seizure itself is notice, the quantity of which is for the legislative power to determine. The

Globe, 2 Blatchf. 427, Fed. Cas. No. 5,483; Bradstreet v. Neptune Ins. Co. 3

Sumn. 609, Fed. Cas. No. 1,793; Leigh v. Green, 193 U. S. 79, 48 L. ed. 623, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 30 L. ed. 372, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165; Bierne v. The Triumph, 2 Ala. 738; Ridley v. Ridley, 24 Miss. 648; Stewart v. Board of Police, 25 Miss. 479; Calhoun v. Ware, 34 Miss. 146; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Clements, 35 Miss. 17; Kwilecki v. Holman, 258 Mo. 624, 167 S. W. 989; Beech v. Abbott, 6 Vt. 586; Luther v. Fowler, 1 Grant, Cas. 176.

It is fallacious to assume, as the claimant does, that the statute upon which this litigation is based is unconstitutional in that it attempts to usurp a Federal function in the regulation of interstate commerce; at least, so far as it may be applied to foreign ships. It is not reasonable to say that a vessel of a sister state may come within the boundaries of this state and injure the persons or property of our citizens, and that they are without redress for a non-maritime tort merely because such ship is carrying goods hither from another state. The interstate commerce legislation does not countenance or authorize the commission of land torts by any vessel, whether domestic or foreign. Hence, our statute, giving a remedy for such grievances, does not infringe upon that Federal function.

Thus far we have a chose in action not included in admiralty cognizance, for which the state has fashioned a proceeding in rem, notice of which depends upon the seizure of the offending thing, the vessel. What, then, of the method of trial? We note that the statute provides only for a lien and for a sale of the property seized. The original statute was enacted in territorial days, in 1853. Statutes of Oregon 1853, p. 152. This enactment was amended in 1876 (Laws 1876, p. 9) only in respect to the authority for contracting debts against the vessel. The original law made the vessel liable for debts contracted by the master, owner, agent, or consignee. The Amendment of 1876 limited that clause to "debts due to persons by virtue of a contract, expressed or implied, with the owners of a boat or vessel, or with the agents, contractors, or subcontractors of such owner, or any of them, or with any person having them employed to construct, repair, or launch such boat or vessel." In all other respects the law has remained the same to this day. That amendment in no wise changes the original procedure. The Code of Civil Procedure was adopted by the legislative assembly of this state in October, 1862, and took effect on the 1st day of June next following. Treating of the foreclosure of liens upon real or personal property, the statute, as now embodied in § 422, Or. Laws, reads thus: "A lien upon real or personal property, other than that of a judgment or decree, whether created by mortgage or otherwise, shall be foreclosed, and the property adjudged to be sold to satisfy the debt secured thereby by a suit. In such suit, in addition to the decree of foreclosure and sale, if it appear that a promissory note or other personal obligation for the payment of the debt has been given by the mortgagor or other lien debtor, or by any other person as principal or otherwise, the court shall also decree a recovery of the amount of such debt against such person or persons, as the case may be, as in the case of an ordinary decree for the recovery of money."

It has been held uniformly by this court that the remedy in equity devised by this section is exclusive and must be followed.

Thompson v. Mar- Lien-fore-shall, 21 Or. 171, closure-method.
27 Pac. 957; McNeff v. Southern

P. Co. 61 Or. 22, 120 Pac. 6; Caro v. Wollenberg, 68 Or. 420, 136 Pac. 866. The later enactment embodied in § 422, Or. Laws, supercedes the former where they are in conflict.

When this cause came on for trial, the claimant, appearing for the ship, objected to the same being tried as an action at law, and demanded that it be tried as a suit in equity, but this was denied, and the cause proceeded as an action at law, resulting in a personal judgment against the claimant. Under § 422, supra, it is only where a promissory note or other personal obligation for the payment of a debt has been given that the court in a foreclosure suit can render a personal decree. Where this feature is absent, the only thing that can be done is to foreclose the lien, which includes a sale of the property. The court was in error in proceeding as in an action at law and in rendering a personal judgment. The jury was not called upon to enlighten the conscience of the chancellor. It was impaneled and to it was committed exclusively the decision of the questions of fact involved. We have not had the benefit of the personal estimate of the trial judge concerning the credibility of witnesses, or as to the true state of facts in the case. The cause was tried in the circuit court as one where the judge was bound by the verdict of the jury at all hazards, whether in accord with his judgment of a question of fact, or not. The case must be reversed on this ground, at least.

—personal judgment—
—action at law.

Another matter which claims our attention is here noted: According to the bill of exceptions, at the time the judge charged the jury at the conclusion of the trial, the fourth paragraph of the complaint read as follows: "That by reason of the injuries received by plaintiff on account of the negligence of the said steamship as aforesaid the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of 7,500

(~~$2,800~~) twenty-eight hundred dollars, and will necessarily incur an expense of ninety-nine ($99) dollars in endeavoring to cure himself from said injury."

In other words, as the complaint was typewritten originally in the part involved, the plaintiff was "damaged in the sum of ($2,800) twenty-eight hundred dollars," and the change consisted, whenever or however made, in drawing a pen through the figures "2,800," and writing over them "7,500." According to the bill of exceptions, the claimant contended that, because there was a discrepancy between the writing and the figures in the fourth paragraph, the complaint was to be treated as alleging damages in the sum of $2,899 only. But after the testimony had been taken and the cause argued to the jury, and the court had instructed the jury, just before the jury retired, the plaintiff asked permission to amend the complaint to conform the written portion of the paragraph to the figures, and the amendment was allowed by the court over the objection of the claimant. The jury retired and returned with a verdict in the sum of $3,600, in favor of the plaintiff.

Section 102, Or. Laws, establishes this rule: "The court may, at any time before trial, in furtherance of justice, and upon such terms as may be proper, allow any pleading or proceeding to be amended by adding the name of a party, or other allegation material to the cause; and in like manner and for like reasons it may, at any time before the cause is submitted, allow such pleading or proceeding to be amended, by striking out the name of any party, or by correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or a mistake in any other respect, or when the amendment does not substantially change the cause of action or defense, by conforming the pleading or proceeding to the facts proved."

This function is to be exercised at any time before the cause is submitted. Here, the parties had done all that they could do.

Trial—amendment—before submission.

The case was submitted, to all intents and purposes. The time for the application of this section had passed. It was too late to enlarge the demand of the complaint. Bearing in mind that the vessel was a foreign craft owned in and sailing from San Francisco, that the claimant was of citizenship diverse from that of the plaintiff, and that under the Federal statute the courts of the United States have original jurisdiction where the matter in controversy exceeds the value of three thousand dollars and arises between citizens of different states, the allowance of the amendment would give sanction, in effect, to a practice whereby a defendant could be haled into court to answer a claim not of sufficient amount to give the Federal court jurisdiction, and would be cut off from his right to remove the cause to that court until he had answered and submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the state court, when his right of removal would be lost. The amendment would then cast him in damages to a much greater amount than the limit of state jurisdiction. The amendment ought not to have been allowed. Whenever or however the alteration was made, the legal effect of the complaint is a claim for damages in the sum of $2,899, and should have been so construed by the court. In other words, the language controls the figures. 13 C. J. 537; United Surety Co. v. Summers, 110 Md. 95, 72 Atl. 775; Romine v. Haag, — Mo. —, 178 S. W. 147; Central Nat. Bank v. Pipkin, 66 Mo. App. 592; Payne v. Clark, 19 Mo. 152, 59 Am. Dec. 333. It is not a case within § 719, Or. Laws, reading thus: "When an instrument consists partly of written words and partly of a printed form, and the two are inconsistent, the former controls the latter."

Pleading—discrepancy between language and figures—which controls.

The present is a case of written language controlling mere figures. The complaint, therefore, was one for $2,800 general damages and $99 special damages. The application to amend came too late and should not have been allowed in any event, under the circumstances relating to Federal jurisdiction and the right to remove the cause to the United States courts.

It is urged against the validity of the judgment that "in the absence of evidence that the claimant knew, or ought to have known, that the sling which broke was defective, plaintiff has failed to make out a case of negligence."

The bill of exceptions discloses that the sling which broke was furnished from aboard the vessel. This circumstance is one which the jury has a right to consider on the question of claimant's knowledge of its defect. It is also contended that this was not a tort committed by the vessel, and that, in the language of The Osceola, 189 U. S. 158, 47 L. ed. 760, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 483, the ship must be "the offending thing."

Evidence—defect in implement—owner's knowledge.

In that case it was held that an accident on board a ship was not inflicted by the vessel. And in The Onoko, 47 C. C. A. 111, 107 Fed. 984, cited by the claimant on this point, it was held that the statute of Louisiana, practically like that of this state, gave a cause of action in personam, and not in rem. In Tropical Fruit S. S. Co. v. Towle, 138 C. C. A. 293, 222 Fed. 867, it was held that a seaworthy ship was not liable in damages for injury to a sailor aboard. The general admiralty rule relating to the employment of sailors was applied in that proceeding, to the effect that where the ship is seaworthy, and the seaman is injured aboard the vessel, all he can claim is wages and proper treatment while he is being cured of his injury. His right to general damages beyond that depends upon the ship's not being seaworthy, or, in other words, not being a suitable place in which to work. In The Theta, 7 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 480, a captain in going to his own ship had to cross another lying between his vessel and the dock. He fell through a hatchway on the other ship, and it was held not to be an injury by that ship aboard of which he was hurt. In the instant contention we have a ship performing a usual function of a vessel, that of discharging its cargo, in the process of which, by defect of its tackle,

Shipping—injury by vessel —defective tackle.

the plaintiff was injured. This is clearly a tort committed by the ship itself. The plaintiff was entitled to a foreclosure of the lien, limited to a sale of the vessel, and not including a personal judgment. The claimant's rights were infringed by the rendition of a judgment larger than the demand of the complaint when properly construed as a matter of law. The claimant was entitled to the judgment of the trial court sitting as a chancellor and passing directly upon the effect and value of the evidence.

For these reasons the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

Johns and Brown, JJ., concur.

Bean, J., dissenting in part:

I heartily concur in the able opinion of Chief Justice Burnett on what might be termed the main question in the case, to the effect that the statute upon which this litigation is based is not unconstitutional, and does not infringe upon the Federal law. I am unable to give my assent to the proposition that the action is cognizable only as a suit in equity for the foreclosure of a lien. I am constrained to mention this for the reason that for more than thirty years it has been the unquestioned practice in causes arising under §§ 10,281 et seq., Or. Laws, in so far as I am able to ascertain, to try the cause as an action at law. The Victorian, 24 Or. 121, 41 Am. St. Rep. 838, 32 Pac. 1040; The Victorian

No. 2, 26 Or. 194, 46 Am. St. Rep. 616, 41 Pac. 1103. When those causes were tried, the distinction between an action at law and a suit in equity was at least as broad as it is to-day. Eminent counsel appeared for the parties in those cases. We note on the record the names of Messrs. Bronaugh, McArthur, Fenton, and Bronaugh, Jr.; Messrs. Cox, Cotton, Teal, and Minor; and Messrs. Williams, Wood, and Linthicum. See also Benbow v. The James Johns, 56 Or. 554, 108 Pac. 634.

The Oregon statute was construed in The Bee (D. C.) 216 Fed. 709, by Judge Bean, who was for a long time a member of this court. It is there stated: "The remedy provided by the state law for enforcing the lien given by the statute is an action against the boat or vessel by name, rather than in personam against the owner (Lord's Or. Laws, § 7506), but after the seizure of the vessel and the return of the warrant the proceedings are to be had against the vessel in the same manner as if the action had been commenced against the person on whose account the damages accrued (§ 7509). And if an issue of fact be joined the same proceedings shall be had as in other actions (§ 7511). This being so, it would seem to follow that the trial should be governed and the liability of the parties determined by the same rule as if the action were in personam against the owner. . . ."

This language indicates that it is also understood by the Federal courts in Oregon that a proceeding under the statute in question is an action at law.

As indicated by § 10,281, Or. Laws, which declares: "Every boat or vessel used in navigating the water of this state or constructed in this state shall be liable and subject to a lien: . . . for damages or injuries done to persons or property, by such boat or vessel . . ."—it would seem to the writer that, strictly speaking, while the boat is subject to a lien, there is no definite or fixed amount of the lien until judgment therefor is rendered, so that when the lien is finally perfected it is merged in a judgment, and is not required to be foreclosed within the meaning of § 422, Or. Laws. It does not appear that in the enactment of the latter section it was the intention of the lawmakers to change the mode of procedure under the Boat Lien Law. The law provides for a special proceeding, but it is denominated by the statute as an "action." The case at bar does not come within the ordinary list of causes of equitable cognizance. It was appropriately tried as a law action. It would be a very radical change for this court to try a damage case for personal injuries de novo.

It is presumed that the legislature does not intend to make unnecessary changes in the pre-existing body of law. The construction of a statute will, therefore, be such as to avoid any change in the prior laws beyond what is necessary to effect the specific purpose of the act in question. Black, Interp. of Laws, p. 110, § 52; Manuel v. Manuel, 13 Ohio St. 458; Bear v. Bear, 33 Pa. 525; Thompson v. Mylne, 4 La. Ann. 206; Childers v. Johnson, 6 La. Ann. 634. We quote from Maxwell, Interp. 2d ed. 96: "One of these presumptions is that the legislature does not intend to make any change in the law beyond what it explicitly declares, either in express terms or by unmistakable implication, or, in other words, beyond the immediate scope and object of the statute. In all general matters beyond, the law remains undisturbed. It is in the last degree improbable that the legislature would overthrow fundamental principles, infringe rights, or depart from the general system of law, without expressing its intention with irresistible clearness; and to give any such effect to general words, simply because, in their widest and perhaps natural sense, they have that meaning, would be to give them a meaning in which they are not really used."

If it be granted that the cause is a suit in equity, I see no reason why it should not be tried de novo in this court.

As to the amendment of the complaint, as I understand the record, the complaint was first typewritten, alleging damages in the sum of "$2,800) twenty-eight hundred dollars, and will necessarily incur an expense of ninety-nine ($99) dollars in endeavoring to cure himself from said injury." Afterwards a pen was drawn through the figures "2,800" and "7,500" written over the same. At the time of the submission of the cause to the jury, after the instructions had been given by the court, in order to make the allegation of damages clear, plaintiff was permitted to correct the complaint to conform the written portion of the paragraph to the figures. The so-called amendment was a mere correction of an apparent clerical error, and in no way affected the issues. This was over the objection of claimant.

Section 102, Or. Laws, provides that the court may at any time, in the furtherance of justice and upon such terms as may be proper before the cause is submitted, allow any pleading or proceeding to be amended "by striking out the name of any party, or by correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or a mistake in any other respect, or when the amendment does not substantially change the cause of action or defense, by conforming the pleading or proceeding to the facts proved."

An application to amend a pleading at the trial is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and the ruling of the court in such a matter should not be disturbed, except in the case of an abuse of discretion. Brown v. Feldwert, 46 Or. 363, 80 Pac. 414; Wallace v. Baisley, 22 Or. 572, 30 Pac. 432; Garrison v. Goodale, 23 Or. 307, 31 Pac. 709; Filkins v. Portland Lumber Co. 71 Or. 249, 142 Pac. 578; Heywood Bros. & W. Co. v. Doernbecher, 48 Or. 359, 86 Pac. 357, 87 Pac. 530; Ridings v. Marion County, 50 Or.

30, 91 Pac. 22; Beard v. Royal Neighbors, 60 Or. 41, 118 Pac. 171.

The trial court is in a better position than is the appellate court to decide in regard to whether or not the circumstances warrant the allowance of an amendment of a pleading in order that the ends of justice may be met. There had been no application for the removal of the cause to the Federal court. I do not think there was any abuse of discretion in allowing the amendment.

The service of process upon the Bee Steamship Company, a corporation, the owner of the vessel, being only a constructive service, the owner appeared for the boat and answered the complaint, and asked for judgment in its favor for costs and disbursements. It made a general appearance in the case, and is bound by the judgment. Where an undertaking is given for the discharge of a boat, under the provisions of § 10,289, in a proceeding of this kind, as was done in the present case, the manner of rendering and executing judgment is directed by § 10,292, Or. Laws, which reads thus: "If an undertaking with surety shall have been given according to § 10,289, and judgment shall have been rendered in favor of the plaintiff, a judgment shall also be rendered upon the undertaking, and execution shall be issued for the amount of judgment and costs in favor of the plaintiff, against the principal and security in such undertaking."

Judgment was rendered against claimant and its surety, and the requirements of the latter section were followed in this case. There was no error in so doing.

The judgment of the circuit court should be affirmed.

Motion for rehearing in banc denied January 3, 1922.

ANNOTATION.

Power of the state to create and enforce liens on ships for a nonmaritime tort.

This annotation does not embrace the question as to what is and what is not a maritime tort.

The creation and enforcement of a lien for a nonmaritime tort against a foreign vessel engaged in interstate commerce, under a state statute which embraces all vessels, whether domestic or foreign, and whether engaged in intrastate or interstate commerce, does not offend against the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. Martin v. West (1911) 222 U. S. 191, 56 L. ed. 159, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 592, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 42, affirming 51 Wash. 85, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 324, 97 Pac. 1102, and holding that a collision between a vessel and a supporting pier of a bridge over a navigable waterway of the United States, caused by the negligent management of the vessel, and resulting in the collapse of a span of the bridge, and its fall into the stream, is a nonmaritime tort. The Washington statute in question provided: "All steamers, vessels, and boats, their tackle, apparel, and furniture, are liable. . . . (6) For injuries committed by them to persons or property within this state, or while transporting such persons or property to or from this state. Demands for these several causes constitute liens upon all steamers, vessels, and boats, and their tackle, apparel, and furniture, and have priority in their order herein enumerated, and have preference over all other demands." The state court said in its opinion, inter alia: "Such liens created by state statutes are enforceable in the state courts when the subject-matter is not within the jurisdiction of admiralty. The rule to be deduced from these cases, so far as they are pertinent to the one under consideration, is this: That, wherever any lien is given by a state statute for a cause of action cognizable in admiralty, either in rem or in personam, proceedings in rem to enforce such liens are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the admiralty courts. But the converse of this proposition is equally true that, if a lien upon a vessel be created for a claim over which a court of admiralty has no jurisdiction in any form, such lien may be enforced in the courts of the state.' Knapp S. & Co. Co. v. McCaffrey (1900) 177 U. S. 638, 44 L. ed. 921, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824. The state court, therefore, has jurisdiction in the case at bar to enforce a lien for the damage done."

(But it should be noted that the limitation of a shipowner's liability for maritime torts not the result of his own fault, provided by U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 4283-4285, Comp. Stat. §§ 8021-8023, 6 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. pp. 336, 360, 363, was extended to nonmaritime torts by the provisions of the Act of June 26, 1884 (23 Stat. at L. 57, chap. 121, Comp. Stat. § 8028, 6 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 368), § 18, limiting the individual liability of a shipowner for "any or all debts and liabilities," except wages and liabilities incurred prior to such enactment, to his share in the vessel, and the aggregate liabilities of all the owners of a vessel on account of the same to the value of the vessel and freight pending. Richardson v. Harmon (1911) 222 U. S. 96, 56 L. ed. 110, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27. The court said and held: "If thus the owner's liability for a tort permitted or incurred through the master or crew, although nonmaritime because due to a collision between the ship and a structure upon land, be one in respect to which his liability is limited, and he applies for the benefit of such limitation to the proper district court of the United States, 'all proceedings,' by the express terms of § 4285, Revised Statutes, 'against the owner, shall cease.' The procedure in any such case is prescribed by the 54th and 55th rules in admiralty, where it is said that the court shall, 'on application of the said owner or owners, make an order to restrain the further prosecution of all and any suit or suits against said owner or owners in respect of any such claim or claims.'")

It has been held in several cases that an action in rem may be brought in a state court under a state statute against a vessel for a nonmaritime tort. The Bee (1914) 216 Fed. 709; Chicago v. The Queen City (1885) 17 Ill. App. 203; The City of Erie v. Canfield (1873) 27 Mich. 479; People's Ice Co. v. The Excelsior (1880) 43 Mich. 336, 5 N. W. 398; John Spry Lumber Co. v. The C. H. Green (1889) 76 Mich. 320, 43 N. W. 576; The Tempest v. Lucas County (1897) 7 Ohio C. D. 137; CORDREY v. THE BEE (reported herewith) ante, 1079.

Where a stevedore on land, loading a California ship, is injured in Oregon by negligence of the mate on the ship, the tort is nonmaritime and is governed by the law of the state where the injury occurs. The Bee (Fed.) supra.

In Chicago v. The Queen City (1885) 17 Ill. App. 203, supra, it was held that the owner of a bridge and approaches may bring an action against a vessel in an Illinois court under the Illinois "Attachment of Water Craft Act" of 1874, for injury done to the bridge and its approaches by the vessel, as this is not a marine tort. It was also held that a vessel owned in Buffalo was within the act which provided that "every sail vessel, steamboat, steam dredge, barge, lighter, and other water craft of above 5 tons' burden, used or intended to be used in navigating the waters or canals of this state, or used in trade or commerce between ports and places within this state, or having their home port in this state, shall be subjected to a lien thereon, which lien shall extend to the tackle, etc., for all damages for injuries done to persons or property by such water craft," etc.

In The Tempest v. Lucas County (1897) 7 Ohio C. D. 137, supra, the court sustained an action by the board against the steamboat for injury to a bridge, under the Ohio statute providing that "any steamboat or other water craft, of 20 tons' burden and upward navigating the waters within or bordering upon this state, shall be liable, and such liability shall be a lien thereon . . . for injuries done to persons or property by such craft."

In The City of Erie v. Canfield (1873) 27 Mich. 479, supra, it was held under the Michigan statute that an action would lie in the state court against a brig which had run into and broken a boom of saw logs in a navigable river, on the ground that this was not a maritime tort.

This case was followed in People's Ice Co. v. The Excelsior (1880) 43 Mich. 336, 5 N. W. 398, supra, where the court stated that the complaint set up a cause of action clearly within the Michigan Boat and Vessel Law, where the cause of action set up in the complaint was the destruction of ice formed on the premises of the complainant within its boom on Belle Isle, and the damage was done by running the vessel rapidly up and down the Detroit river close to the boom, so that the swell thereby created broke up the ice field. See also on further appeal in (1880) 44 Mich. 229, 38 Am. Rep. 246, 6 N. W. 636.

So, where a boom broken by the vessel was fastened to piles, it was held that the state court had jurisdiction, the court saying: "It cannot be questioned that these piles were real estate, and that the injury to them, if wrongfully done, would constitute a trespass upon real property. The proof is conclusive that the part of the boom consisting of the piles to which the chain was attached was wrenched from its position, one pile pulled entirely out, and the other over, and in consequence the boom became broken and the logs escaped, being carried down the river by the force of the current." John Spry Lumber Co. v. The C. H. Green (1889) 76 Mich. 320, 43 N. W. 576, supra.

It will be seen that the reported case (CORDREY v. THE BEE, ante, 1079), while holding that a state has power to create by statute a lien upon a foreign vessel for a nonmaritime tort committed within its borders, holds, also, that under the Oregon statutes the lien is to be foreclosed in equity as an exclusive remedy, even though (as we are informed in the dissenting opinion) an undertaking had been given for the discharge of the boat.

This restricted view of the nature of the remedy is not in accord with the view expressed in The Bee (1914) 216 Fed. 709, supra, where the court, sitting as a court of common law, made the statement quoted in the dissenting opinion in the reported case (CORDREY v. THE BEE).

An action in personam may be brought in a state court against the owner of a vessel for a nonmaritime tort, under a state statute, although such statute gives a lien on the vessel. Johnson v. Chicago & P. Elevator Co. (1886) 119 U. S. 388, 30 L. ed. 447, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 254.

In an action in personam brought in a state court against the owner of a tugboat, wherein his right, title, and interest in the tugboat was attached, it was held that the injury done by the jib boom of a schooner striking against an elevator situated on the bank of the Chicago river, through the negligent towing of such schooner, constitutes a wrong the remedy for which is wholly at common law, and may be pursued in a state court according to the provisions of a state statute; although such statute gives a lien on the vessel. Johnson v. Chicago & P. Elevator Co. (U. S.) supra, see also Rose's Notes to this case.

In State ex rel. Raymond v. Voorhies (1887) 39 La. Ann. 499, 4 Am. St. Rep. 274, 2 So. 37, an action for a penalty for failure to take a pilot, it was held that a state court can entertain jurisdiction of a suit in personam against the master and owners of a vessel, coupled with a sequestration, to enforce a money claim secured by lien, by a state statute and not created by the maritime law.

In this connection reference may be made to Gindele v. Corrigan (1889) 129 Ill. 582, 16 Am. St. Rep. 292, 22 N. E. 516, where in "a proceeding by attachment," under the Illinois Water Craft Act, in a case of collision between domestic vessels in an inland canal, it was said and held: "The state may, by statute, authorize the attachment of the property of the debtor or tort-feasor, as a security for the satisfaction of the judgment to be recovered, and in such case the proceeding is in personam, and not in rem. The object of the attachment in such case is to secure a lien upon the property seized for the payment of the judgment, and not for the condemnation of the property attached. . . . It is manifest that appellants have voluntarily submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the state court; and it is clear that, after having done so by filing the bond provided by the statute for the release of the vessel, the proceeding was no longer in rem, but necessarily in personam, and no other than a personal judgment could have been rendered. This being so, the proceedings here have no similitude to an admiralty proceeding in rem."

The state reports contain a number of cases of proceedings under various state "water craft" acts, in some of which it does not appear whether the tort complained of was or was not a maritime tort under the modern rules, and in others, where the tort seems unmistakably maritime under those rules. By way of illustration of cases of the first class, reference may be made to Otis v. Thorn (1850) 18 Ala. 395; The Farmer v. McGraw (1855)

26 Ala. 189, 62 Am. Dec. 718; Loy v. The F. X. Aubury (1862) 23 Ill. 412, 81 Am. Dec. 292; The Blue Ridge v. The Time (1845) 9 Mo. 650; Holloway v. The Western Belle (1847) 11 Mo. 147; Finch v. Brown (1835) 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 601. By way of illustration of cases of the second class, reference may be made to The Norway v. Jensen (1869) 52 Ill. 373; Howes v. The Red Chief (1860) 15 La. Ann. 321; Pousargues v. The Natchez (1860) 15 La. Ann. 80 (compare Young v. The Princess Royal (1870) 22 La. Ann. 388, 2 Am. Rep. 731); Swearingen v. The Lynx (1850) 13 Mo. 519; The Clipper v. Logan (1849) 18 Ohio, 394 (compare The Ohio v. Stunt (1856) 10 Ohio St. 583; The Ocean v. Marshall (1860) 11 Ohio St. 379); McRoberts v. The Henry Clay (1863) 17 Wis. 102.

As to Lusk v. Davis (1866) 27 Ind. 334, decided under the Indiana Water craft Act, it may be noted that this statute was held void (under The Hine v. Trevor (1867) 4 Wall. (U. S.) 555, 18 L. ed. 451), in Ballard v. Wiltshire (1867) 28 Ind. 341.

Phillips v. Portage Transit Co. (1908) 137 Wis. 189, 118 N. W. 539, is not sufficiently reported on the facts to be of value on the subject.

B. B. B.

GRACE P. FRENCH

v.

W. BRUCE PIRNIE.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court — March 2, 1922.

(— Mass. —, 134 N. E. 353.)

Landlord and tenant — unavoidable casualty — freezing of heating system.

The freezing in the attic, of a pipe leading to the expansion tank of a hot-water heating system, which causes the heater to burst, is not an unavoidable casualty within the meaning of provisions in a lease requiring lessee to deliver up the property in as good order as when it was received, "unavoidable casualty" excepted, and relieving him from liability for rent in case the property is injured by such casualty.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1101.]

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Suffolk County (Morton, J.), made during the trial of an action brought to recover rent due under a written lease, and to recover damages for injury to the leased premises, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, which resulted in a verdict for plaintiff. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Byron W. Reed, for defendant:

The general rule is that a lease is to be construed according to the intention of the parties thereto, and that such intention is to be gathered from the whole instrument, rather than from a single clause thereof.

Shaw v. Appleton, 161 Mass. 313, 37 N. E. 372; Cummings v. Hackett, 98 Mass. 51.

Inasmuch as the doctrine appears to be that a covenant to turn the leased premises over to the landlord in good repair requires the tenant to rebuild in case of fire or other unavoidable casualty, even though there is no fault on the tenant's part, the words "fire or other unavoidable casualty excepted" are inserted in the lease for the tenant's protection; and if the injuries herein were caused by "other unavoidable casualty," within the meaning of the lease, the lessee is not bound to repair them, and, further, is entitled to an abatement of the rent until the premises are put by the lessor into tenantable condition, or the lease is canceled by the lessor.

Ball v. Wyeth, 8 Allen, 275; 39 Cyc. 666; Callaway v. Spurgeon, 63 Ill. App. 573; Welles v. Castles, 3 Gray, 325; Phillips v. Sun Dyeing, Bleaching & Calendering Co. 10/R. I. 458.

Mr. Joseph G. Bryer, for plaintiff:

The defendant did not contend that the damages complained of were the result of reasonable use and wear, or of fire; and he is therefore left in a position where, if he is either to prevail in his declaration in set-off, or to defend the claim which the plaintiff made in her declaration with reference to the expense of repairs, he must show that the situation at the premises in question was the result of unavoidable casualties.

Welles v. Castles, 3 Gray, 325.

Crosby, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff seeks to recover rent due, under the terms of a written lease from her to the defendant, and damages for injury to the leased premises caused by the defendant's alleged carelessness and neglect in allowing the hot-water heater to become frozen and burst, and as a result of which water ran over the walls and ceilings. The defendant filed a declaration in set-off, alleging that the premises became uninhabitable owing to the bursting of the heater; that he made repairs upon it and also made other necessary repairs after he had notified the plaintiff to put the premises in proper condition for use and occupation, in accordance with the terms of the lease; and that the plaintiff refused to make such repairs.

The defendant testified "that the heater was not frozen, but that a small pipe in the attic, leading to the expansion tank, was frozen, owing to the extreme cold, in spite of the fact that the house was normally warm, and that the water rose in the pipes as the heater, which he had just stoked, grew hotter, until it reached the frozen pipe, when the heater burst from pressure. He further testified that the plaintiff came to the house, and that he explained the accident to her, and requested her to repair the heater, and that she refused to do so, giving as reason that the accident was due to his negligence in not keeping a sufficient fire in the heater."

The lease contained the usual covenants that the lessee would "quit and deliver up the premises to the lessor, her attorney, peaceably and quietly, at the end of the term, in as good order and condition, reasonable use and wearing thereof, fire and other unavoidable casualties, excepted, as the same now are, or may be put into by the lessor," and "that in case the premises, or any part thereof during said term, be destroyed or damaged by fire or other unavoidable casualty so that the same shall be thereby rendered unfit for use and habitation . . . the rent . . . reserved, or a just and proportional part thereof . . . shall be suspended or abated until the said premises shall have been put in proper condition for use and habitation by the said lessor."

The presiding judge stated "that although the freezing of the pipe in the attic and the subsequent bursting of the heater were not, in his opinion, due to any negligence on the part of the defendant, that the freezing of the pipes in the attic was not 'other unavoidable casualty' within the meaning of the lease; that, under the lease, the defendant was bound to foresee and prevent the accident by wrapping the pipe or heating the attic; and that therefore no proportion of the rent could be abated."

Thereafter he submitted to the jury the question whether there had been a waiver of the lease by the plaintiff, and instructed them that the unpaid rent was due without any abatement because of repairs made by the defendant, and directed a verdict for the plaintiff on the defendant's declaration in set-off; to which instructions and direction the defendant accepted.

By the terms of the lease the defendant was bound to deliver up the premises in as good order and condition, reasonable use and wearing thereof, fire and other unavoidable casualties, excepted, at the end of the term, as they were in when the tenancy began, or were put into by the lessor. There was no contention that the damages complained of were the result of reasonable use and wear; and as they were not caused by fire, the question remains whether the freezing of the pipe, followed by the bursting of the heater, was "unavoidable casualties" within the meaning of that phrase in the lease. We are of opinion that the occurrence was not of that extraordinary and unusual character which was beyond human control, and that it stands differently than damage to the premises caused by lightning, flood, cyclone, earthquake, or other agencies that no human power can control or prevent.

Landlord and tenant—unavoidable casualty—freezing of heating system.

Welles v. Castles, 3 Gray, 323, was an action to recover rent reserved in a written lease of a shop. The lease contained covenants substantially identical with those above quoted. The lessee, who occupied the premises during the entire term, contended that he was relieved from the payment of rent because, during the term, the landlord had neglected to repair adjoining tenements, thereby causing injury to the leased premises. In that case, in defining the words "unavoidable casualty," it was said at page 325: "This phrase is in very common use in leases in this country, and has, as we suppose, a well-settled and understood meaning. It does not signify a mere want of repair, arising from lapse of time or improper use of the premises, or from trespasses or nuisances occasioned by the acts of the tenant or of third persons. Neither does it include any injuries which may happen by reason of the common and ordinary use and occupation of the estate leased, or of adjoining premises. The term has a much more restricted meaning, and comprehends only damage or destruction arising from supervening and uncontrollable force or accident. By a strict definition, as applied to the subject-matter, it signifies events or accidents which human prudence, foresight, and sagacity cannot prevent. . . . Looking at the connection in which they stand, and applying to them the maxim of construction, 'noscitur a sociis,' they clearly signify occurrences of an unusual and extraordinary character. The language of the proviso is, 'in case the premises or any part thereof shall during said term be destroyed or damaged by fire or other unavoidable casualty;' that is, by causes like fire, such as lightning, earthquakes, and wind, which usually result without any direct agency of the tenant, and which are ordinarily beyond human control."

The freezing of pipes in this climate in the winter time is not an occurrence of an unusual, unexpected, or extraordinary character; it happens frequently in extremely cold weather; it cannot be said to be beyond human control. The language above quoted is decisive of the question presented in the case at bar, and makes it plain that the instruction to the jury that the unpaid rent was due without any abatement because of repairs made by the defendant was correct. It follows that the defendant was not entitled to recover on the declaration in set-off.

Exception overruled.

ANNOTATION.

What is unavoidable or inevitable casualty or accident within provision of lease.

- I. In general, 1101.
- II. Application of rules:
 - a. Unavoidable casualty, 1102.
 - b. Unavoidable accident, 1102.
 - c. Inevitable casualty, 1103.
 - d. Inevitable accident, 1104.

I. In general.

Broadly speaking, it may be said that, as a general rule, terms such as "unavoidable casualty," "inevitable casualty," "unavoidable accident," and "inevitable accident," when used in a lease, do not refer to common and ordinary happenings which are within human foresight and control, but rather signify occurrences of an unusual, unexpected, or extraordinary character, which usually occur without any direct participation by the landlord or tenant. This conclusion is deducible from the following decisions:

United States. — Hodgson v. Dexter (1802) 1 Cranch, C. C. 109, Fed. Cas. No. 6,565, affirmed in (1803) 1 Cranch, 345, 2 L. ed. 130.

Illinois. — John Morris Co. v. Southworth (1894) 154 Ill. 118, 39 N. E. 1099, reversing (1893) 50 Ill. App. 429.

Iowa. — Healey v. Tyler (1911) 150 Iowa, 169, 129 N. W. 802; Woodbury Co. v. William Tackaberry Co. (1914) 166 Iowa, 642, 148 N. W. 639.

Kentucky. — See Hill v. Wilson (1894) 15 Ky. L. Rep. 814.

Massachusetts. — Bigelow v. Collamore (1849) 5 Cush. 226; Welles v. Castles (1855) 3 Gray, 323, set out and quoted in the reported case (FRENCH v. PIRNIE, ante, 1098);

Kramer v. Cook (1856) 7 Gray, 550; FRENCH v. PIRNIE (reported herewith) ante, 1098.

Minnesota. — See Rustad v. Lampert (1921) — Minn. —, 183 N. W. 843.

Pennsylvania. — See Kelly v. Duffy (1887) 8 Sadler, 214, 11 Atl. 244.

Rhode Island. — Compare Phillips v. Sun Dyeing, Bleaching, & Calendering Co. (1873) 10 R. I. 458, which is set out infra.

Texas. — Howeth v. Anderson (1860) 25 Tex. 557, 78 Am. Dec. 538; Tays v. Ecker (1894) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 188, 24 S. W. 954.

England. — Saner v. Bilton (1878) L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 815, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 267, 38 L. T. N. S. 281, 26 Week. Rep. 394; Manchester Bonded Warehouse Co. v. Carr (1880) L. R. 5 C. P. Div. 507, 49 L. J. C. P. N. S. 809, 43 L. T. N. S. 476, 29 Week. Rep. 354, 45 J. P. 7.

In some cases it has been held that a casualty or accident may be inevitable or unavoidable without happening by the act of God or being caused by the public enemy. Hodgson v. Dexter (Fed.); John Morris Co. v. Southworth (Ill.); and Phillips v. Sun Dyeing, Bleaching, & Calendering Co. (R. I.) supra.

And it seems unquestioned that occurrences of an unusual and extraordinary character, and which are not within human control, such as lightning, earthquakes, unprecedented floods, winds, etc., constitute inevitable or unavoidable casualties or accidents. See Healey v. Tyler and Woodbury v. William Tackaberry Co. (Iowa.), and Hill v. Wilson (Ky.) supra; Welles v. Castles (1855) 3 Gray (Mass.) 323; Tays v. Ecker (Tex.) supra. See also Turner v. Townsend (1894) 42 Neb. 376, 60 N. W. 587.

II. Application of rules.

a. Unavoidable casualty.

In Woodbury Co. v. William Tackaberry Co. (1914) 166 Iowa, 642, 148 N. W. 639, it was said that it could not well be questioned but that the depositing of mud and debris in the basement of the leased premises by an "unprecedented flood" was the result of "unavoidable casualty," as used in a provision of the lease fixing the rights of the parties in respect of repairs and tenantable conditions.

And in Phillips v. Sun Dyeing, Bleaching, & Calendering Co. (1873) 10 R. L. 458, it was held that the words "unavoidable casualty" in a provision in a lease for abatement of rental were to be interpreted, not according to their strict and philological signification, which might defeat the intention of the parties, but rather in conformity with their popular, everyday acceptance. It was accordingly held that there was in the explosion of a boiler such a degree of unexpectedness, as of something unforeseen and not contemplated in the making of the contract, that it was proper to regard such explosion as an unavoidable casualty; and that this was so although it was alleged that the explosion was not a casualty, but an occurrence in the natural course of things, due to the age of the boiler.

But in Bigelow v. Collamore (1849) 5 Cush. (Mass.) 226, it was held that a stipulation in a lease suspending the payment of rent if the premises were destroyed or damaged by fire or other unavoidable casualty did not cover the breaking down of a mill wheel from general decay.

And the reported case (FRENCH v. PIRNIE, ante, 1098) is authority for the proposition that damages caused by the bursting of the hot water heater in the leased premises, as the result of the freezing of the pipe leading to the expansion tank, were not the result of "unavoidable casualty" within the meaning of a provision relating to surrender of the premises and abatement of rent, since the freezing of the pipe in question in such a climate as that of Massachusetts was not an occurrence of an unusual, unexpected, or extraordinary character, so as to bring the case within the general definition of the term "unavoidable casualty," as generally used in leases.

And the construction of the phrase "unavoidable casualty" which was adopted in the preceding case was applied in Tays v. Ecker (1894) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 188, 24 S. W. 954, where the building which was the subject of the lease was condemned by the city authorities as unsafe and untenable, it having been held that such condemnation did not constitute an "unavoidable casualty" within a provision suspending rent, and that the tenant continued liable for the rent for the balance of the term.

And in Welles v. Castles (1855) 3 Gray (Mass.) 323, quoted in the reported case (FRENCH v. PIRNIE), it was held that injury to leased premises resulting from the neglect of the landlord to keep adjoining premises in repair did not entitle the lessee to an abatement of rent for injuries from "unavoidable casualty."

And in Kramer v. Cook (1856) 7 Gray (Mass.) 550, where the wall of premises leased with covenants to restore in good order, "unavoidable casualties" excepted, fell because of the lessor's failure to support the same after notice by the adjoining owner that he intended to build on his premises, pursuant to which he made excavations which undermined the partition wall, it was said that "the falling of the wall, by reason of not being properly shored up, would not seem to be an unavoidable casualty."

b. Unavoidable accident.

It was said obiter in Turner v.

Townsend (1894) 42 Neb. 376, 60 N. W. 587, that perhaps a tenant, at the expiration of his lease, would not be compelled to restore or pay for the restoration of a window which had been blown out by a storm, as it might be that a storm would be considered an inevitable accident within the meaning of the tenant's covenant to yield up the premises at the expiration of the term in as good condition as when received, loss by fire or other "unavoidable accidents" excepted.

And an accidental fire which, without fault or negligence on the part of the lessee, destroyed the leased premises, was regarded in Howeth v. Anderson (1860) 25 Tex. 557, 78 Am. Dec. 538, as an "unavoidable accident" within the meaning of a provision requiring the lessee to redeliver in good condition, unavoidable accidents excepted.

c. Inevitable casualty.

A fire which, against the will and without the negligence or other default of the tenant, destroyed the leased premises, was held in Hodgson v. Dexter (1802) 1 Cranch, C. C. 109, Fed. Cas. No. 6,565, affirmed without decision upon this point in (1803) 1 Cranch (U. S.) 345, 2 L. ed. 130, to be an "inevitable casualty" as to the tenant, within the meaning of a provision in the lease requiring him to deliver up the premises in repair, excepting, etc. The court said: "The question arising is, whether the facts stated in the plea bring the defendant's case within the exception of inevitable casualties. It is admitted that a casualty may be inevitable without happening by the act of God, or by the public enemies of the country. In the present case the expression seems to me to mean only such casualties as are inevitable by the defendant, and not such as might not be avoided by the united efforts of the whole society. . . . Where there has been no negligence or default, there the greatest degree of care and diligence has been used. When, therefore, the plea avers that the house was burned without the negligence or default of the defendant, it is tantamount to saying that it was burned notwithstanding the greatest degree of care and diligence on his part. The question then occurs, whether a casualty which happens notwithstanding the use of the greatest degree of care and diligence on the part of the defendant to prevent it is not, as to him, an inevitable casualty. It is necessary for us to inquire what degree of negligence is sufficient to charge the defendant, because the plea denies all negligence whatever. If issue had been joined on the plea, it might have become a question what degree of negligence the plaintiff must prove in order to maintain the issue on his part. The term 'negligence' cannot be appropriated exclusively to the omission of any given degree of care and diligence. Its degrees are infinitely variable, from the omission of the greatest possible care, to the very boundary of fraud. I have no hesitation, therefore, in saying that an accident which happens without the slightest degree of negligence or default of the defendant is, as to him, an inevitable casualty.

. . . . By common acceptance, unavoidable accident means a casualty which happens when all the means which common prudence suggests have been used to prevent it. . . . When we consider the subject of this contract, that it was the lease of a house for eight months only, we can hardly suppose that the lessee would take pains to insert a clause to guard himself from accidents which might arise from the unusual casualties of earthquakes, tempests, lightning, or public enemies, and entirely overlook the common accident of fire, or that he meant to make himself or the United States insurer against fire. It is not usual for lessees for short terms to become the insurers of the premises against accidental fire, and I shall not presume a contract of that kind, unless it was in very express terms."

So it has been said that the explosion of a boiler, due to a latent defect, is, as to a lessee who is without negligence, an inevitable casualty within a provision relating to termination of the lease where the premises are rendered untenable by fire or other casualty. John Morris Co. v. Southworth (1894) 154 Ill. 118, 39 N. E. 1099, reversing (1893) 50 Ill. App. 429.

d. Inevitable accident.

In Healey v. Tyler (1911) 150 Iowa, 169, 129 N. W. 802, it was said that an "exceptional flood caused by a freshet in a stream" was an "inevitable accident" within the delivery-up provision of a lease.

And in Davis v. George (1892) 67 N. H. 393, 39 Atl. 979, it seems to have been assumed that the destruction of the leased premises by fire apparently caused by defective construction of the chimneys and flues was by "inevitable accident" within a provision of the lease dealing with delivery up of the premises at the end of the term. And Kelly v. Duffy (1887) 8 Sadler (Pa.) 214, 11 Atl. 244, goes on the theory that, in an action brought after the termination of the lease, on the covenant to surrender premises at the expiration of the term in as good order and condition as they were in at any time during the term, ordinary decay and inevitable casualty only excepted, where the premises were destroyed by fire, lessee is not liable if he made every practicable effort which, under the circumstances, ought to have been made, to save the building; and that whether he did so or not is a question for the jury.

But in Saner v. Bilton (1878) L. R. 7 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 815, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 267, 38 L. T. N. S. 281, 26 Week. Rep. 394, the phrase "inevitable accident," in a clause in a lease providing that in case the property at any time during the term shall "be destroyed or damaged by fire, flood, storm, tempest, or other inevitable accident," the rent shall cease, was held not to apply to anything arising from the acts or defaults of either of the contracting parties, and hence that the lessee continued liable for rent, although, through the defective construction of the building, he was deprived of the possession for a considerable period while repairs were being made. The court said: "It is to be observed that the words 'inevitable accident' are coupled with the word 'other,' which seems to show to some extent that they are to be construed by the rule of ejusdem generis; that is, the inevitable accident pointed at is one of a kind similar to 'flood, fire, storm, or tempest,' referred to in the earlier words. In my opinion, the injury sustained by the building was not an inevitable accident within the meaning of those words. I think that the words do not apply to anything arising from the acts or defaults of either of the contracting parties. Those acts and defaults were made the subject of express covenant. I think the words do not apply to things existing at the time of the contract, or to the natural results of things existing, which were known or might have been known to the contracting parties; and further than that, it is obvious from the very words that they do not apply to a thing which is evitable or avoidable. It is to be an 'inevitable accident;' but here the accident, according to the defendant's own case, might have been avoided if the building had been properly constructed, and consequently it was not an 'inevitable accident.' It is said that 'inevitable accident' includes that which was not evitable by the acts of the defendant. I do not think that is the real meaning. The clause is, I think, intended to apply to matters outside the existing state of things, and outside the acts and defaults of the contracting parties. That being so, I determine that the defendant is not entitled to any abatement of rent in respect of the occupation of the warehouse by the plaintiff for the execution of the repairs." And in Manchester Bonded Warehouse Co. v. Carr (1880) L. R. 5 C. P. Div. (Eng.) 507, 49 L. J. C. P. N. S. 809, 43 L. T. N. S. 476, 29 Week. Rep. 354, 45 J. P. 7, where the lessees of a building covenanted to deliver it up at the end of the term with the inside in good and tenantable repair, damage by fire, storm, or tempest, or "other inevitable accident," excepted, the court adopted the rule of Saner v. Bilton (Eng.) supra, that "inevitable accident" meant some accident ejusdem generis, and did not extend to use of the property by the tenant; and, applying the rule, held that where the building was destroyed by the overloading of the floors, the tenant was liable for the cost of putting the "inside" of the building in good and tenantable repair.

And in Peck v. Scoville Mfg. Co. (1892) 43 Ill. App. 360, where a tenant covenanted to yield up the premises in as good condition as when entered upon, "loss by fire or inevitable accident" excepted, it was held that the tenant was liable for the expense of replacing a window broken by a stone accidentally kicked by a passing team on the ground; that such an injury to the premises was not an inevitable accident, since the window might have been protected by a blind or wire netting. The court said: "A window broken by a stone accidentally kicked by a passing team is not broken by inevitable accident. The kicking of the stone, so far as appellee (the tenant) is concerned, may have been inevitable, but not the breaking of the window; that might have been protected by a blind or wire netting."

In Rustad v. Lampert (1921) — Minn. —, 183 N. W. 843, it was held that where the boiler to the heating plant on leased premises was cracked when the premises were delivered up, proof of such fact made it incumbent on the tenant, in order to relieve himself from liability under a provision requiring delivery up in a certain state of repair, inevitable accident excepted, to prove that the damage was the result of "inevitable accident." The court found that the cracking was caused by negligence and careless handling by the tenant, so as to render him liable under the lease.

G. J. C.

G. E. COOPER et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

R. E. ROLLINS et al.

Georgia Supreme Court—February 14, 1922.

(152 Ga. 588, 110 S. E. 726.)

Constitutional law — regulation of barbers' trade.

1. The act of the legislature "regulating the occupation of barbers," approved August 17, 1914 (Acts 1914, p. 75), as amended by the Act of 1920 (Acts 1920, p. 109), is not unconstitutional, (a) because it violates the provision of our state Constitution (art. 1, § 4, ¶ 1) which provides that "laws of a general nature shall have uniform operation throughout the state," or (b) because it violates the equal protection clauses of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States and of the Constitution of this state.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1111.]

— when act declared unconstitutional.

2. This court will not declare an act of the legislature unconstitutional unless the conflict between the act and the Constitution is clear and palpable.

[See 6 R. C. L. 98-100; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 25, 26.]

— regulation of trades — police power.

3. What trades or occupations shall be regulated, and the nature and extent of the regulations to be applied, are questions for the legislature to determine, and fall within the proper exercise of the police power.

Headnotes 1-3 by HINES, J.

20 A.L.R.—70.

er of the state; and, unless the regulations are so unreasonable and extravagant that the property or personal rights of the citizen are unnecessarily and arbitrarily interfered with, without due process of law, they do not extend beyond the power of the state to pass.

[See 6 R. C. L. 217, 482.]

— who may attack constitutionality of statutes.

4. Residents of a state cannot attack the constitutionality of a statute on the ground that it discriminates against nonresidents.

[See 6 R. C. L. 89-91; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 21.]

— reasonableness of classification.

5. A statute requiring the examination and licensing of barbers only in towns having a population in excess of 5,000 inhabitants is not void for unreasonableness of classification.

[See 6 R. C. L. 388; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 107.]

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County (Pendleton, J.) to review a judgment in favor of defendants in a suit brought to test the constitutionality of an act regulating the occupation of barbers. Affirmed.

Statement by Hines, J.:

Plaintiffs filed their equitable petition on their behalf and on behalf of all other persons similarly situated, seeking to have the "Barber Act" and its administration declared to be unconstitutional. The plaintiffs are residents of Georgia. The suit is brought against R. E. Rollins, L. E. Cooper, and W. H. Bedgood, as members of the State Board of Barber Examiners. Bedgood was stricken as a defendant, and B. E. Archer was substituted in his place as a member of said board. Plaintiffs alleged that the act (Laws 1914, p. 75) as amended (Laws 1920, p. 109), creating this board, is unconstitutional: (a) Because it discriminates between barbers and those engaged in other kinds of manual labor; (b) because it does not operate uniformly throughout the state, but is applicable only to barbers in cities and towns in excess of 5,000 inhabitants; (c) because it violates article 1, § 4, of the Constitution of this state, and the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that § 9 of the original act exempts from its provisions barbers engaged within the state at the date of such act, and who had been practising such occupation for a period of three years prior to its approval; (d) because it violates the same provisions of the state and Federal Constitutions, for the reason that it permits barbers who had been engaged in their trade for the period of three years prior to the approval of this act to continue their occupation by making an affidavit of these facts and paying the sum of $2, while a person who had learned to practise such occupation without the state is required to pay the sum of $5 and to submit to an examination before said board; (e) because the classification of towns and cities into those having populations in excess of 5,000 inhabitants and those having less population, and making said act applicable to those of the former population, and not to those of the latter, is arbitrary and unreasonable.

It was agreed between the plaintiffs and the defendants in the court below that the only question involved was the constitutionality of this law upon the several grounds set forth in the petition.

Messrs. Roy Lewis, J. L. Anderson, and John T. Pearson for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. James A. Miller and Bond Almand, for defendants in error:

The Barber Law of 1914 is a general law because it operates throughout the state on the class dealt with; its operation being uniform in that it affects all alike who come within the scope of its operation, and is not contrary to art. 1, § 4, ¶ 1, of the state Constitution, or to the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Starnes v. Mutual Loan & Bkg. Co. 102 Ga. 597, 29 S. E. 452; Crovatt v. Mason, 101 Ga. 246, 28 S. E. 891; Sasser v. Martin, 101 Ga. 447, 29 S. E. 278; Stewart v. Anderson, 140 Ga. 31, 78 S. E. 457; Bone v. State, 86 Ga. 108, 12 S. E. 205.

Nor does the law violate the equal protection clauses of the state or Federal Constitutions, in that the law affects all alike and similarly situated that come within the scope of its operation.

Stewart v. Anderson, 140 Ga. 31, 78 S. E. 457; McGinnis v. Ragsdale, 116 Ga. 245, 42 S. E. 492; Keokee Consol. Coke Co. v. Taylor, 234 U. S. 224, 53 L. ed. 1288, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 856; Clark v. Reynolds, 136 Ga. 817, 72 S. E. 254; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Grainger v. Douglas Park Jockey Club, 78 C. C. A. 199, 148 Fed. 513, 8 Ann. Cas. 997; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Miller v. Wilson, 236 U. S. 378, 59 L. ed. 628, L.R.A.1915F, 829, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 342; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 780; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 49 L. ed. 643, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358; Williams v. Arkansas, 217 U. S. 77, 54 L. ed. 673, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493, 3 Ann. Cas. 865; Bosley v. McLaughlin, 236 U. S. 385, 59 L. ed. 632, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345; Armour & Co. v. Augusta, 134 Ga. 178, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 676, 67 S. E. 417; State v. Shapiro, 131 Md. 168, 101 Atl. 703, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 196; Kentucky R. Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, 29 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57; Rosenthal v. New York, 226 U. S. 260, 57 L. ed. 212, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 71; 6 R. C. L. §§ 392, 393; 12 C. J. 1161; Watson v. Maryland, 218 U. S. 173, 54 L. ed. 987, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231.

In administering the law, the board has administered it equally, judiciously, and with due regard to the rights and property of the plaintiffs, there being no evidence of an arbitrary use of power that would warrant a holding that the law was unconstitutional.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Home Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 227 U. S. 278, 57 L. ed. 510, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 312.

Legislative regulation of the trade or occupation of a barber is a proper and legitimate use of the police power in the interest of the health and welfare of the public.

Com. v. Ward, 136 Ky. 146, 123 S. W. 673; Moler v. Whisman, 243 Mo. 571, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 629, 147 S. W. 985, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 392; State v. Sharpless, 31 Wash. 191, 96 Am. St. Rep. 893, 71 Pac. 737; State v. Armeno, 29 R. I. 431, 72 Atl. 216; Ex parte Lucas, 160 Mo. 218, 61 S. W. 218; State v. Walker, 48 Wash. 8, 92 Pac. 775, 15 Ann. Cas. 257; State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 466, 117 Pac. 1101, 2 N. C. C. A. 828, 3 N. C. C. A. 599; State v. Zeno, 79 Minn. 80, 48 L.R.A. 88, 79 Am. St. Rep. 422, 90 S. W. 748; State v. Briggs, 45 Or. 366, 77 Pac. 750, 78 Pac. 361, 2 Ann. Cas. 424; Jackson v. State, 55 Tex. Crim. Rep. 557, 117 S. W. 818; 12 C. J. pp. 924, 1273; Cosgrove v. Augusta, 103 Ga. 835, 42 L.R.A. 711, 68 Am. St. Rep. 149, 31 S. E. 445; New Mexico ex rel. McLean v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 203 U. S. 38, 51 L. ed. 78, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; 6 R. C. L. p. 199; Klafter v. State Examiners, 259 Ill. 15, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 532, 102 N. E. 193, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1221; People v. Griswold, 213 N. Y. 92, L.R.A. 1915D, 538, 106 N. E. 929; Com. v. Zimmerman, 221 Mass. 184, 108 N. E. 893, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 858; Keller v. State, 122 Md. 677, 90 Atl. 603.

Hines, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. Every presumption will be made in favor of the constitutionality of an act of the legislature. Allison v. Thomas, 44 Ga. 649. Before an act of the legislature will be declared unconstitutional, the conflict between the act and the fundamental law must be clear and palpable. Wellborn v. Estes, 70 Ga. 390. A state statute will not be set aside by the courts in a doubtful case. Macon & W. R. Co. v. Davis, 13 Ga. 68, 83. These elementary principles do not require any elucidation. They have become firmly embedded in the constitutional law of the state, and should not be departed from.

2. It is urged that this act is unconstitutional because it discriminates between persons engaged in the trade of barbering and persons engaged in other trades involving manual labor. This involves the question whether the legislature has the power to require the members of one trade or occupation to be examined and licensed, without requiring the members of all other trades or occupations to be so examined and licensed. Is it a denial of the equal protection of the law to require those who are engaged in the pursuit of one trade to be examined and licensed, while the legislature does not require those engaged in other occupations to be so examined and licensed? At this time the question does not admit of debate. The courts are generally agreed that it is competent for the legislature to prohibit persons from practising the calling of a barber without first having obtained a license or certificate of registration. State v. Sharpless, 31 Wash. 191, 96 Am. St. Rep. 893, 71 Pac. 737; State v. Walker, 48 Wash. 8, 92 Pac. 775, 15 Ann. Cas. 257; State v. Zeno, 79 Minn. 80, 48 L.R.A. 88, 79 Am. St. Rep. 422, 81 N. W. 748; State v. Armeno, 29 R. I. 431, 72 Atl. 216; Ex parte Lucas, 160 Mo. 218, 61 S. W. 218; State v. Briggs, 45 Or. 366, 77 Pac. 750, 78 Pac. 361, 2 Ann. Cas. 424. The power of the legislature to regulate this trade and to require barbers to be examined and licensed is derived from the police power of the state. This power enables the legislature to make all needful rules and regulations for the health, safety, and welfare of the people of the state. The health of the citizens, as affected by diseases spread from barber shops conducted by unclean and incompetent barbers, is justification for such laws. 12 C. J. 924, § 432.

Constitutional law—when act declared unconstitutional.

The regulation of the occupation of barbers, and leaving other occupations of like kind unregulated, is not a denial of the equal protection of laws, within the meaning of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. What such regulation shall be, and to what particular trade or business such regulation shall apply, are questions ^{—regulation of trades—police power.} for the state to determine, and their determination comes within the proper exercise of the police power of the state; and, unless the regulations are so unreasonable and extravagant in their nature and purpose that the property or personal rights of the citizens are unnecessarily, and, in the main, arbitrarily, interfered with or destroyed, and without due process of law, they are not beyond the power of the state to pass. Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 44 L. ed. 725, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 633; Williams v. Arkansas, 217 U. S. 79, 88, 54 L. ed. 673, 677, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 865.

3. It was insisted by counsel for the plaintiffs in error that this statute violates article 1, § 4, ¶ 1, of the Constitution of this state (Civ. Code, § 6391), which declares that "laws of a general nature shall have uniform operation throughout the state." The act (§ 1) declares that "it shall be unlawful for any person to follow the occupation of barbering in cities or towns in excess of five thousand inhabitants unless he will have first obtained a certificate of registration as provided in this act."

It is insisted that this classification of the cities and towns of the state into those having populations in excess of 5,000 inhabitants and into those having less than such number of inhabitants, and making this act applicable only to barbers following their occupations in cities or towns having populations in excess of 5,000 inhabitants, violates this provision of the state Constitution. In this we do not agree with the learned counsel for the plaintiffs in error. The Constitution of Georgia recognizes certain territorial jurisdictions, such as the state, its counties, cities, and militia districts. Whatever laws apply to all or any one of these territorial jurisdictions as a class cannot be called special laws, but are general statutes, having uniform operation throughout the state. Starnes v. Mutual Loan & Bkg. Co. 102 Ga. 597, 29 S. E. 452. The act involved in the case last cited was one fixing the venue of justices' courts in cities having a population of more than 5,000 inhabitants.

Our state Constitution only requires a law to have uniform operation, and that means that it shall apply to all persons, matters, or things which it is intended to affect. If it operates alike on all who come within the scope of its provisions, constitutional uniformity is secured. Uniformity does not mean universality. This constitutional provision is complied with when the law operates uniformly upon all persons who are brought within the relations and circumstances provided by it. Crovatt v. Mason, 101 Ga. 246, 28 S. E. 891. This act operates upon all barbers in towns and cities throughout the state having populations in excess of 5,000 inhabitants, and is therefore uniform in its operation.

4. It is next insisted that this act violates both the state and the Federal Constitutions, because it denies to the barbers of the state the equal protection of the laws. It is asserted that § 9 of the original act exempts from its provisions barbers engaged within the state at the date of the approval of the act, and who had been practising their trade for a period of three years prior to its approval, and permits such barbers to continue their occupations by making an affidavit of these facts and paying the sum of $2, while persons who had learned to practise such occupation without the state are required to pay the sum of $5 and to submit to an examination before said board. It is insisted that this discrimination denies to the barbers who do not come within this exemption the equal protection of the laws, and conflicts with the due process clauses of the state and Federal Constitutions. Before a law can be declared violative of these constitutional provisions because it omits certain classes, the court must be able to say that there is no fair reason for not requiring its extension to others whom the act leaves untouched. The selection of the exempted classes is within the legislative power, subject only to the restriction that it be not arbitrary or oppressive, and apply equally to all persons similarly situated. This act is not unconstitutional because its provisions do not apply to those who were engaged as barbers in this state at the date of its approval, and who had been so engaged in this state for three years prior thereto. Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; Watson v. Maryland, 218 U. S. 173, 54 L. ed. 987, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644. "Such exception proceeds upon the theory that those who have acceptably followed the profession in the community for a period of years may be assumed to have the qualifications which others are required to manifest as the result of an examination before a board of medical experts." Watson v. Maryland, 218 U. S. 173, 177, 54 L. ed. 987, 989, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 646.

—regulation of barbers'
trade.

The plaintiffs are residents of Georgia; and it does not lie in their mouths to attack the constitutionality of this statute on the ground that it discriminates against nonresident barbers. Only those whose rights are directly affected can properly question the constitutionality of a state statute.

—who may attack constitutionality of statutes.

Eliopolo v. Stubbs, 143 Ga. 602 (3), 85 S. E. 853; New York ex rel. Hatch v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 161, 51 L. ed. 415, 422, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 188, 9 Ann. Cas. 736; Williams v. Walsh, 222 U. S. 415, 56 L. ed. 253, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 137; Collins v. Texas, 223 U. S. 288, 295, 56 L. ed. 439, 443, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 286; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Cade, 233 U. S. 642, 58 L. ed. 1135, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 678; Hendrick v.

Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140.

5. It is next insisted that this act is unconstitutional because of the classification of the towns and cities therein provided. It is contended that such classification has no reasonable relation to the subject-matter of the statute, and is arbitrary and capricious. The purpose of the act is "to insure the proper sanitary conditions in barber shops, and to prevent the spreading of disease in the state of Georgia." Is the application of this law to barbers in towns or cities having populations in excess of 5,000 inhabitants without some reasonable relation to its subject-matter? Is such classification unnatural, arbitrary, and capricious? The legislature may make classifications for the purpose of legislation. It may classify cities. The classification must have some reasonable relation to the subject-matter of the statute. There must be a legitimate ground for differentiation. Arbitrary or capricious discriminations are not permissible under the Constitution. Stewart v. Anderson, 140 Ga. 31, 33, 78 S. E. 457. A state statute which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its application, is not a denial of the equal protection of the laws, within the meaning of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and of the similar provision in our state Constitution, if, within the sphere of its operation, it affects all persons similarly situated. Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357. So, a statute making it unlawful for mine owners, employing ten or more miners underground, and paying therefor by the ton mined, not to screen the coal before it is weighed, was held valid, and it was not an unreasonable classification to divide coal mines into those where less than ten miners were employed and those where more than that number were employed. McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 546, 53 L. ed. 315, 319, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206. There is more reason for dividing towns and cities into those having 5,000 or more inhabitants and those having less than that number than there is in dividing mines into those working ten miners or more and those working less. So, a classification in a state statute prohibiting drumming or soliciting on trains for business for certain named establishments was held by the Supreme Court of the United States to be a reasonable classification, and was upheld. Williams v. Arkansas, 217 U. S. 79, 54 L. ed. 673, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 865.

The spread of disease by insanitary barbers or barber shops will affect more people in large towns or cities than in small ones. The character of barbers and barber shops is more generally known in villages than in large towns, and villagers can more easily protect themselves against insanitary barbers. Knowledge of the personal and professional habits of barbers and of the condition of barber shops is more easily acquired in small towns than in large cities. The business of the barber may be everybody's business in the hamlet or small town. This may not be so in large towns. In small towns everybody knows the barber, his shop, and his personal and professional habits of cleanliness. The relation between barbers in small centers of population and their customers is closer and more intimate than in populous cities. This relation is friendlier in the small town than in the big one. If the barber in a small town has a communicable disease, knowledge of this fact spreads rapidly in a village. Knowledge of such fact travels more slowly in a city. If a customer catches a contagious disease from a village barber, this becomes common knowledge at once of all the villagers. This is not so in Atlanta, Augusta, Macon, or Savannah.

For these reasons customers of barbers in large towns need greater protection than those of barbers in small ones. Other reasons can be given to justify this classification, but we deem the above sufficient. So we reach the conclusion that this classification has a reasonable relation to the subject-matter of this statute, and that the statute is not unconstitutional for any of the reasons assigned.

We do not deal with any questions raised by the petition in this case except the constitutionality of this act, as that was the only question decided by the judge below by the agreement of the parties.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ANNOTATION.

Constitutionality of statute regulating barbers.

- I. Scope of note, 1111.
- II. Regulative statutes in general:
 - a. Nature and source of power to regulate, 1111.
 - b. Delegation of power, 1112.
 - c. Basis for classification, 1112.
 - d. Validity of specific requirements, 1113.
- III. Sunday-closing statute:
 - a. Validity of special statute:
 1. Majority view, 1114.
 2. Minority view, 1115.
 - b. Validity of general statute as applied to barber, 1117.

I. Scope of note.

With the exception hereafter stated, there are reviewed in this annotation the decisions on the constitutionality of a statute which regulates barbers. Decisions on the validity of a Sunday-closing statute as applied to barbers are included, except one class of decisions which has been previously considered in this series. See the annotation to State v. Murray, 8 A.L.R. 566, discussing, inter alia, the validity of a statute which imposes a more severe penalty on a barber for a violation of a Sunday-closing law than is imposed on persons engaged in other occupations.

II. Regulative statutes in general.

a. Nature and source of power to regulate.

It is competent for the legislature to prohibit persons from practising the calling of a barber without first having obtained a license or certificate of registration. State v. Zeno (1900) 79 Minn. 80, 48 L.R.A. 88, 79 Am. St. Rep. 422, 81 N. W. 748; State v. Armeno (1909) 29 R. I. 431, 72 Atl. 216.

Registration, etc., may be required by the legislature by virtue of the police power. State v. Armeno (R. I.) supra; State v. Sharpless (1903) 31 Wash. 191, 96 Am. St. Rep. 893, 71 Pac. 737; State v. Walker (1907) 48 Wash. 8, 92 Pac. 775, 15 Ann. Cas. 257.

It is the health of the citizens, as affected by the diseases spread from barber shops conducted by unclean and incompetent barbers, that justifies license laws. State v. Zeno (Minn.) supra.

So, in State v. Walker (Wash.) supra, it was held that it is competent for the legislature, by virtue of the police power, to prohibit persons from practising the calling of a barber without first having obtained a license or certificate of registration, the health of citizens, as affected by the diseases spread from barber shops conducted by unclean and incompetent barbers, justifying the exercise of such power. But the provisions of the Washington statute for the regulation of barbers have been held to be valid only in so far as they promote the public health and safety. Timmons v. Morris (1921) 271 Fed. 721. See infra, II. d.

The power of the legislature to impose a license fee on barbers is, in at least one jurisdiction, derived from a constitutional provision. Louisville

v. Schnell (1908) 131 Ky. 104, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 637, 114 S. W. 742.

b. Delegation of power.

The legislature may delegate the power of regulation of barbers to municipalities (Louisville v. Schnell (1908) 131 Ky. 104, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 637, 114 S. W. 742; Hanzal v. San Antonio (1920) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 221 S. W. 237), or to boards of health (La Porta v. Board of Health (1904) 71 N. J. L. 89, 59 Atl. 115).

A statute authorizing a board of examiners to prescribe the qualifications required of barbers in order to obtain a license is not unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power. State v. Briggs (1904) 45 Or. 366, 77 Pac. 750, 78 Pac. 361, 2 Ann. Cas. 424.

Nor it is a valid objection to a statute requiring registration that it is a delegation of legislative power to provide that the law shall apply to a given town only on a vote of its town council, or that the application of the law in a town shall be left to a vote of the town council, and not to the vote of the electors. State v. Armeno (1909) 29 R. I. 431, 72 Atl. 216.

c. Basis for classification.

It is competent for the legislature to classify barbers according to the population of the communities within which they conduct their business, and, as classified, to prescribe different regulations governing their occupation. State v. Sharpless (1903) 31 Wash. 191, 96 Am. St. Rep. 893, 71 Pac. 737.

An act regulating barbers in cities and towns of the state having a population in excess of 5,000 inhabitants is held in the reported case (COOPER v. ROLLINS, ante, 1105) not to violate a section of the Georgia Constitution requiring that laws of a general nature shall have uniform application throughout the state. The court upholds the reasonableness of the classification and its relation to the subject-matter of the statute on the ground that the habits of barbers in villages are better known to the public than are those of barbers in large towns or cities. The same result has been reached under similar constitutional provisions of other states. Com. v. Ward (1909) 136 Ky. 146, 123 S. W. 673; Ex parte Lucas (1901) 160 Mo. 218, 61 S. W. 218.

A statute requiring a person who has not previously engaged in the occupation of a barber to pass an examination in order to be entitled to pursue that occupation, but imposing no such requirement on a person previously engaged in the occupation, does not make an unreasonable or arbitrary classification, in violation of the due process or equal protection clauses of the Federal Constitution. People v. Logan (1918) 284 Ill. 83, 119 N. E. 913; Criswell v. State (1915) 126 Md. 103, 94 Atl. 549.

Similarly, in the reported case (COOPER v. ROLLINS) it is held not to be a denial of the equal protection of the laws, or a deprivation of liberty or property without due process of law, forbidden by the state and Federal Constitutions, for a state legislature to permit barbers who have been for three years engaged in their occupation in the state to continue their occupation on making an affidavit of this qualification and paying a fee of $2, and to require those who have been engaged in the occupation outside the state to pay a fee of $5 and submit to an examination. Substantially to the same effect is Com. v. Ward (Ky.) supra.

Where the legislature has conferred on a municipality authority to exact from persons engaged in various trades, including barbers, license fees between certain minimum and maximum rates, the city may grade barber shops on any reasonable basis. Within this rule an ordinance requiring each barber shop to pay a license fee of $5 per year, and $2 additional for each barber chair where more than two chairs are used, is not an unreasonable classification, but is authorized by the statute. Nor is the tax in such a case a property tax. The tax is not on the chairs, but on the occupation. "The chairs referred to are barber chairs, used by barbers in plying their trade. They are named not as a species of taxation, but as a basis of classification. The tax is upon the vocation, not on the means of exercising it." Louisville v. Schnell (1908) 131 Ky. 104, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 637, 114 S. W. 742.

Similarly, an ordinance providing for the licensing of barber shops is not invalid because a higher proportional charge is made against shops with a small number of chairs than against those with a large number, since the inspection of a small shop will cost more proportionally than the inspection of a large one. Hanzal v. San Antonio (1920) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 221 S. W. 237.

In the reported case (COOPER v. ROLLINS) it is held not to be a denial of the equal protection of the laws for the legislature to require barbers to be examined and licensed without requiring those engaged in other occupations to be examined and licensed. The court explains that the health of citizens may be affected by diseases spread by unclean or incompetent barbers, and that, therefore, a statute regulating barbers only does not make such an unreasonable classification as to violate the constitutional provision forbidding a state to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

d. Validity of specific requirements.

Under a charter authorizing a city to license and regulate all trades, professions, and occupations, an ordinance has been held to be valid which provides for the regulation and inspection of barber shops and all of their equipment and appliances, and the periodical physical examination of every person who may engage in the occupation of a barber, in order to ascertain if he is free from infections, contagious, or communicable diseases. Hanzal v. San Antonio (1920) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 221 S. W. 237.

Where a board of health has been given ample authority to prevent the spreading of contagious diseases, the board may, on the principle that powers conferred for the preservation of the public health should receive a liberal interpretation, prescribe rules to be observed in barber shops to prevent contagious skin diseases, and may fix a license fee. In such a case a license fee of $2 is reasonable, especially where it appears that the fees collected will not meet the expense of enforcing the regulation. La Porta v. Board of Health (1904) 71 N. J. L. 88, 58 Atl. 115.

A statute requiring that an applicant for a certificate to engage in the occupation of a barber shall spend three years as an apprentice, or shall study for that period in a barber school; has been held not to impose an unreasonable restriction on the right to engage in the occupation. People v. Logan (1918) 284 Ill. 32, 119 N. E. 913. In that case the court said: "It is argued that the requirement of three years' service as an apprentice or study in a barber school has no direct relation to the public health or safety, but is rather intended to restrict and discourage the public from engaging in this occupation. The intention is to restrict the public from engaging in this occupation to the extent that only those may do so who have learned the trade, know how to prepare, use, and care for the tools, know what sanitary precautions must be taken to avoid the risk of spreading disease, and are acquainted with the sanitary regulations which the board of examiners is authorized by § 11 to adopt. Three years seem a long time to require for learning the trade of a barber, but we cannot say that it is so unreasonably long as to constitute an unreasonable restriction upon the right to engage in the trade."

Likewise a statutory requirement that a student in a school for barbers shall complete a two-year course in order to be entitled to a barber's license has been held not to be invalid. Moler v. Whisman (1912) 243 Mo. 571, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 629, 147 S. W. 985, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 392.

In Timmons v. Morris (1921) 271 Fed. 721, it was held that if a statute authorized a board of examiners to reject an application for a barber's license on the ground that the applicant lacked proficiency in matters not affecting the public health or safety, it was, to that extent, a deprivation of liberty without due process of law, in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

On a similar ground, in Moler v. Whisman (Mo.) supra, the court stated that, under the Missouri Constitution, a section of a statute was invalid which prohibited a student or apprentice or his instructor in a school for barbers, from making any charge for the services of the student or apprentice. The court said: "If students of the barbers' trade be compelled to labor two years without pay, and without their instructors receiving any remuneration for their services (as required by § 1187, supra), it is difficult to see why they would not thereby be deprived of the gains of their own industry, as prohibited by our organic law. . . . The practice of boys or young men apprenticing themselves to skilful mechanics, artisans, or professional men in order to qualify themselves for useful trades and professions is almost as old as civilization itself; but the barbers' law is the first regulation which has ever come to our knowledge that prohibits both the apprentice and his master from receiving any remuneration whatever for services of the apprentice, thereby compelling the apprentice to waste two years of his time while qualifying for a public barber. It is true, as announced in Ex parte Lucas (1901) 160 Mo. 218, 61 S. W. 218, that the barber trade, because of its intimate relation to the public health, is a proper subject of legislative control, under the general police power of the state; but it does not follow that the legislature may impose arbitrary or capricious exactions upon the students of that occupation, which have no relation to the public health. The legislature, having recognized the legitimacy of this profession, cannot destroy it under the guise of 'regulation.' The learned attorney for defendants has not assigned any reason or called our attention to any fact even remotely indicating that the public health will be promoted, protected, or safeguarded by requiring students of the barber's trade to work for two years without compensation."

III. Sunday-closing statute.

a. Validity of special statute.

1. Majority view.

Special laws prohibiting barbering on Sunday have been sustained by the courts in a majority of the cases.

Colorado. — McClelland v. Denver (1906) 36 Colo. 486, 86 Pac. 126, 10 Ann. Cas. 1014.

Michigan. — People v. Bellet (1894) 99 Mich. 151, 22 L.R.A. 696, 41 Am. St. Rep. 589, 57 N. W. 1094.

New York. — People v. Havnor (1896) 149 N. Y. 195, 31 L.R.A. 689, 52 Am. St. Rep. 707, 43 N. E. 541, affirming (1896) 1 App. Div. 459, 37 N. Y. Supp. 314.

Ohio. — Stanfeal v. State (1908) 78 Ohio St. 24, 84 N. E. 419, 14 Ann. Cas. 138.

Oregon. — Ex parte Northrup (1902) 41 Or. 489, 69 Pac. 445.

Tennessee. — Breyer v. State (1899) 102 Tenn. 103, 50 S. W. 769. Compare Ragio v. State (1888) 86 Tenn. 272, 6 S. W. 401, holding that a statute declaring it to be a misdemeanor for barbers to engage in their regular business or to keep open bathrooms on Sunday was invalid because it embraced two distinct subjects.

Washington. — State v. Bergfeldt (1905) 41 Wash. 234, 83 Pac. 177, 6 Ann. Cas. 979 (writ of error dismissed in (1908) 210 U. S. 438, 52 L. ed. 1138, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 764), overruling Tacoma v. Krech (1896) 15 Wash. 296, 34 L.R.A. 68, 46 Pac. 255.

In McClelland v. Denver (1906) 36 Colo. 486, 86 Pac. 126, 10 Ann. Cas. 1014, the court sustained such a law against constitutional objections, and held also that it was not invalid because it fixed the period of closing from 12 o'clock Saturday night until 5 o'clock Monday morning.

In People v. Bellet (1894) 99 Mich. 151, 22 L.R.A. 696, 41 Am. St. Rep. 589, 57 N. W. 1094, it was urged that such an act was invalid as conflicting with the provision of the state Constitution that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and also as conflicting with the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." The court said: "We think the statute under consideration is within the police power of the state, and not in conflict with any express provision of the Constitution, and that it does not conflict with the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States."

In People v. Havnor (1896) 149 N. Y. 195, 81 L.R.A. 689, 52 Am. St. Rep. 707, 43 N. E. 541, affirming (1896) 1 App. Div. 459, 37 N. Y. Supp. 314, the court upheld the validity of a statute prohibiting barbering on Sunday, except during a portion of the day, in the city of New York and the village of Saratoga Springs. The law was sustained against the objections that it worked a deprivation of liberty and property without due process of law and that it violated the 14th Amendment by denying equal protection of the laws. The court, per Vann, J., held that where the real object of the statute must appear, upon inspection, to have a reasonable connection with the welfare of the public, the exercise of the police power by the legislature is well established as not in conflict with the Constitution, and that when thus exercised, even if the effect is to interfere to some extent with the use of property, or the prosecution of a lawful pursuit, it is not regarded as an appropriation of property or an encroachment on liberty, because the preservation of order and the promotion of the general welfare, so essential to organized society, of necessity, involve some sacrifice of natural rights. On the other point the court said: "The learned counsel for the defendant, however, criticizes the act in question as class legislation, and claims that it is invalid under the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, because it denies to barbers who do not reside in New York or Saratoga the equal protection of the laws. That Amendment does not relate to territorial arrangements made for different portions of a state, nor to legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its operation, but, within the sphere of its operation, affects alike all persons similarly situated. It was not designed to interfere with the exercise of the police power by the state for the protection of health or the preservation of morals. The statute treats all barbers alike within the same localities, for none can work on Sunday outside of New York and Saratoga, but all may work in those places until a certain hour. All are, therefore, treated alike under like circumstances and conditions, both in the privileges conferred and in the liabilities imposed." Justices Gray and Bartlett wrote long dissenting opinions, which were concurred in by Justice Haight. A writ of error to the United States Supreme Court, sued out to review the decision, was dismissed. See (1898) 170 U. S. 408, 42 L. ed. 1087, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 631.

In Ex parte Northrup (1902) 41 Or. 489, 69 Pac. 445, the court held that a law making it a misdemeanor to carry on the business of barbering on Sunday was not "special legislation" because there was no general Sunday law in that state, and that such special law did not deprive a barber of liberty or property without due process of law, or invade the constitutional guaranty of equality of rights.

2. Minority view.

According to some courts, statutes providing that barbers shall not engage in their business on Sunday are invalid. In Ex parte Jentzsch (1896) 112 Cal. 468, 32 L.R.A. 664, 44 Pac. 803, a prosecution was brought under a statute providing as follows: "Every person who as proprietor, manager, lessee, employee, or agent keeps open or conducts, or causes to be kept open or conducted, any barber shop, bathhouse and barber shop, barber shop of a bathing establishment or hairdressing establishment, or any place for shaving or hairdressing used and conducted in connection with any other place of business or resort, or who engages at work or labor as a barber in any such shop or establishment on Sunday, or on a legal holiday, after the hour of 12 o'clock M. of said day, is guilty of a misdemeanor." It was urged that the statute was unconstitutional because it infringed the inalienable rights guaranteed by the Constitution, and because it was within the prohibition against special legislation. The enactment was sought to be upheld on the ground that it was a police regulation in that it protected labor from the oppression of capital. The court said: "It is not easy to see where or how this law protects labor from the unjust exactions of capital. A man's constitutional liberty means more than his personal freedom. It means, with many other rights, his right freely to labor, and to own the fruits of his toil. It is a curious law for the protection of labor which punishes the laborer for working. Yet that is precisely what this law does. The laboring barber, engaged in a most respectable, useful, and cleanly pursuit, is singled out from the thousands of his fellows in other employments, and told that, willy-nilly, he shall not work upon holidays and Sundays after 12 o'clock noon. His wishes, tastes, or necessities are not consulted. If he labors, he is a criminal. Such protection to labor, carried a little farther, would send him from the jail to the poorhouse. . . . No reason has been or can be shown why the followers of one useful and unobjectionable employment should be debarred from the right to labor upon certain days, and others in like classes of employment be not so debarred. If it be constitutional to single out one such class and deny its members the right to labor on one day in the week, it would be constitutional to prohibit them from following their vocation upon six days of the week. When any one such class is singled out and put under the criminal ban of a law such as this, the law not only is special, unjust, and unreasonable in its operation, but it works an invasion of individual liberty,—the liberty of free labor which it pretends to protect." To the same effect see State v. Granneman (1896) 132 Mo. 326, 33 S. W. 784.

In Armstrong v. State (1907) 170 Ind. 188, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 646, 84 N. E. 3, it was said: "The business of barbering is cleanly in itself, and ordinarily conducted in a quiet and orderly way, and the suspension of such work on Sunday cannot be said to promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society in general, in any manner or to any degree other and different from the cessation of work in other ordinary vocations of life. It must follow, therefore, that this act is special legislation, is violative of the Constitution, and void."

It has been held, moreover, that such a statute deprives barbers of their property without due process of law, and unjustly discriminates against them, in violation of the state and Federal Constitutions. Eden v. People (1896) 161 Ill. 296, 32 L.R.A. 659, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365, 43 N. E. 1108, cited with approval in Bailey v. People (1901) 190 Ill. 36, 54 L.R.A. 838, 83 Am. St. Rep. 116, 60 N. E. 98. On this point the court said in Eden v. People: "The statute, as has been seen, declares 'that it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to keep open any barber shop, or carry on the business of shaving, hair cutting, or tonsorial work, on Sunday.' That act is plain, and its meaning is obvious. The owner of a place where is carried on the barber business is prohibited from doing any business whatever one day in the week. He may have in his employ a dozen men, and yet during one day in seven he is deprived of their labor and also deprived of his own labor. The income derived from his place, and his own labor and the labor of his employees, is his property, but the legislature has by the act taken that property from him. The journeyman barber who works by the day or the week, or for a share of the amount he may receive from customers for his services, is by the law denied the right of laboring one day in the week. He may rely solely upon his labor for the support of himself and family; his labor may be the only property that he possesses; and yet this law takes that property away from him." The court further held that the act could not be defended as a proper exercise of the police power, saying: "It will not and cannot be claimed that the law in question was passed as a sanitary measure, or that it has any relation whatever to the health of society. As has been heretofore seen, as a general rule a police regulation has reference to the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society. How, it may be asked, is the health, comfort, safety, or welfare of society to be injuriously affected by keeping open a barber shop on Sunday? It is a matter of common observation that the barber business, as carried on in this state, is both quiet and orderly. Indeed, it is shown by the evidence incorporated in the record that the barber business, as conducted, is quiet and orderly,—much more so than many other departments of business. In view of the nature of the business, and the manner in which it is carried on, it is difficult to perceive how the rights of any person can be affected, or how the comfort or welfare of society can be disturbed." See to the same effect, with respect to an ordinance prohibiting the keeping open of a barber shop on Sunday, Marengo v. Rowland (1914) 263 Ill. 531, 105 N. E. 285, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 198.

b. Validity of general statute as applied to barber.

Laws relating to the observance of Sunday by all classes of labor are valid as a legitimate exercise of the police power of the states, and such laws prohibit barbers from plying their trade on Sunday. Petit v. Minnesota (1900) 177 U. S. 164, 44 L. ed.

716, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 666; State v. Frederick (1885) 45 Ark. 348, 55 Am. Rep. 555, explained by Quarles v. State (1891) 55 Ark. 11, 14 L.R.A. 192, 17 S. W. 269; State v. Linsig (1916) 178 Iowa, 484, 159 N. W. 995; State v. Nesbit (1898) 8 Kan. App. 104, 54 Pac. 326; State v. Petit (1898) 74 Minn. 376, 77 N. W. 225, affirmed in (1900) 177 U. S. 164, 44 L. ed. 716, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 666; State v. Sopher (1903) 25 Utah, 318, 60 L.R.A. 468, 95 Am. St. Rep. 845, 71 Pac. 482.

The Minnesota Statute of 1894 provides as follows: "All labor on Sunday is prohibited, excepting the works of necessity or charity. In works of necessity or charity is included whatever is needful during the day for good order, health, or comfort of the community: Provided, however, that keeping open a barber shop on Sunday for the purpose of cutting hair and shaving beards shall not be deemed a work of necessity or charity." That act has been held not to be unconstitutional as "class legislation," because the proviso makes a distinction between barbers and other classes of laborers, in that it declares that keeping barber shops open is not a work of necessity or charity as a matter of law, whereas whether the performance of all other kinds of labor is excepted from the statute is to be determined as a question of fact. Petit v. Minnesota (1900) 177 U. S. 164, 44 L. ed. 716, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 666, affirming (1898) 74 Minn. 376, 77 N. W. 225. In arriving at its decision in that case the state court said: "Courts will take judicial notice of the fact that, in view of the custom to keep barber shops open in the evening as well as in the day, the employees in them work more, and during later, hours than those engaged in most other occupations, and that this is especially true on Saturday afternoons and evenings; also that, owing to the habit of so many men to postpone getting shaved until Sunday, if such shops were to be permitted to be kept open on Sunday, the employees would ordinarily be deprived of rest during half of that day. In view of all these facts, we cannot say that the legislature has exceeded the limits of its legislative police power in declaring that, as a matter of law, keeping barber shops open on Sunday is not a work of necessity or charity, while as to all other kinds of labor they have left that question to be determined as one of fact. It will be noted that what the law forbids is not a man's shaving himself, or even getting someone else to shave him, but the keeping open a barber shop for that purpose on Sunday. The object of the law was not to interfere with those who wish to be shaved on Sunday, or primarily to protect the proprietors of barber shops, but mainly to protect the employees in them, by insuring them a day of rest." The foregoing decision, it seems, does not conflict with the views of courts holding that the ordinary work of a barber is not a work of necessity or charity within the exception of the general Sunday laws. See Armstrong v. State (1907) 170 Ind. 188, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 646, 84 N. E. 3. W. S. R.

EMPLOYERS' INDEMNITY CORPORATION, Plff. in Err.,
v.
MYRTLE GRANT.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit — March 15, 1921.

(271 Fed. 136.)

Insurance — accident — shooting of insured.

1. The death of a railroad conductor from a gunshot wound inflicted by a passenger whom he was trying to induce to vacate a toilet when the train was entering a station may be found to be accidental, within the meaning of an insurance policy, if, at the time, he did not know that the passenger was armed, and did not and had no reason to anticipate, in the light of all the circumstances, that he would be shot in pressing his demand.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1123.]

Appeal — ruling on motion for directed verdict — view of evidence.

2. Upon review of a denial of the motion to direct a verdict for defendant, the evidence must be viewed in the aspect most favorably tending to support the verdict.

Trial — question for jury — death by shooting as accident.

3. The jury must determine whether or not the death of the holder of an accident insurance policy by being shot by another was an accident, where the evidence is conflicting as to whether or not his own wrongful conduct produced his death, or he voluntarily and intentionally committed acts from which he foresaw, or should have foreseen, that death or injury might result.

Appeal — refusal to direct verdict — absence of error.

4. It is not error to refuse to direct a verdict for defendant in an action on an accident insurance policy if it is plain that the court could not have said, as matter of law, that the death was not accidental.

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan (Tuttle, Dist. J.) to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on an accident insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Argued before Knappen and Donahue, Circuit Judges, and Westenhaver, District Judge.

Messrs. Sibley, Armstrong, McNair, & Mead, for plaintiff in error:

Grant's death was not caused by accidental means, and plaintiff cannot recover.

Fidelity & C. Co. v. Carroll (Fidelity & C. Co. v. Stacey) 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 657, 74 C. C. A. 409, 143 Fed. 271, 6 Ann. Cas. 955, reversing 137 Fed. 1012; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Spitz, L.R.A. 1918C, 1191, 159 C. C. A. 119, 246 Fed. 817; Hutton v. States Acci. Ins. Co. 267 Ill. 267, L.R.A. 1915E, 127, 108 N. E. 296, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 577; Meister v. General Acci. Corp. 92 Or. 96, 4 A.L.R. 718, 179 Pac. 913; Taliaferro v. Travelers' Protective Asso. 25 C. C. A. 494, 49 U. S. App. 275, 80 Fed. 368; Clay v. State Ins. Co. 174 N. C. 642, L.R.A. 1918B, 508, 94 S. E. 289; Price v. Occidental L. Ins. Co. 169 Cal. 800, 147 Pac. 1176; Prudential Casualty Co. v. Curry, 10 Ala. App. 642, 65 So. 852.

Messrs. Lodge & Brown, for defendant in error:

Grant's death was accidental.

Phelan v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 38 Mo. App. 640; Collins v. Fidelity & C. Co. 63 Mo. App. 253; Lovelace v. Travelers' Protective Asso. 126 Mo. 104, 30 L.R.A. 209, 47 Am. St. Rep. 638, 28 S. W. 877; Furbush v. Maryland Casualty Co. 131 Mich. 234, 100 Am. St. Rep. 605, 91 N. W. 135; Hutchcraft v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 87 Ky. 300, 12 Am. St. Rep. 484, 8 S. W. 570; Jones v. United States Acci. Asso. 92 Iowa, 652, 61 N. W. 485; Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 913, 32 N. W. 812; Robinson v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. 68 Fed. 825, affirmed in 20 C. C. A. 262, 36 U. S. App. 690, 74 Fed. 10; Western Commercial Travelers' Asso. v. Smith, 40 L.R.A. 653, 29 C. C. A. 223, 56 U. S. App. 393, 85 Fed. 401; United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 755; Railway Mail Asso. v. Moseley, 127 C. C. A. 427, 211 Fed. 1; Union Casualty & S. Co. v. Harroll, 98 Tenn. 591, 60 Am. St. Rep. 873, 40 S. W. 1080; Supreme Council, O. C. F. v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 298, 3 N. E. 818; Stephens v. Railway Officials & E. Asso. 75 Miss. 84, 21 So. 710; Campbell v. Fidelity & C. Co. 109 Ky. 661, 60 S. W. 492; Blackstone v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 74 Mich. 592, 3 L.R.A. 486, 42 N. W. 156; DeGogorza v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 235; Estabrook v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 54 Me. 224, 89 Am. Dec. 743; Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527, 30 L. ed. 740, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 685, affirming 27 Fed. 40; Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 89 Cal. 170, 23 Am. St. Rep. 455, 26 Pac. 762; Railway Officials & E. Acci. Asso. v. Drummond, 56 Neb. 235, 76 N. W. 562; Butero v. Travelers' Acci. Ins. Co. 96 Wis. 536, 65 Am. St. Rep. 61, 71 N. W. 811; American Acci. Co. v. Carson, 99 Ky. 441, 34 L.R.A. 301, 59 Am. St. Rep. 473, 36 S. W. 169; Button v. American Mut. Acci. Asso. 92 Wis. 83, 53 Am. St. Rep. 900, 65 N. W. 861; Clay v. State Ins. Co. 174 N. C. 642, L.R.A. 1918B, 508, 94 S. E. 289; Cooke, Ins. § 50, p. 81.

The policy must be construed most strongly against the insurer.

Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 100 Ill. 644; Healey v. Mutual Acci. Asso. 133 Ill. 556, 9 L.R.A. 371, 23 Am. St. Rep. 637, 25 N. E. 52; Manufacturers' Acci. Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 22 L.R.A. 620, 7 C. C. A. 581, 16 U. S. App. 290, 58 Fed. 956; North American Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212; Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 913, 32 N. W. 812; Equitable Acci. Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 90 Ala. 201, 13 L.R.A. 267, 9 So. 869; Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527, 30 L. ed. 740, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 685; Darrow v. Family Fund Soc. 116 N. Y. 537, 6 L.R.A. 495, 15 Am. St. Rep. 430, 22 N. E. 1093; Union Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Frohard, 134 Ill. 228, 10 L.R.A. 383, 23 Am. St. Rep. 664, 25 N. E. 642; Travelers' Preferred Acci. Asso. v. Kelsey, 46 Ill. App. 371; Jones v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. 92 Iowa, 652, 61 N. W. 485; Star Acci. Co. v. Sibley, 57 Ill. App. 315.

Grant was insured against this very injury.

Wilson v. Northwestern Mut. Acci. Asso. 53 Minn. 470, 55 N. W. 626; Berliner v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 121 Cal. 458, 41 L.R.A. 467, 66 Am. St. Rep. 49, 53 Pac. 918; Union Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Frohard, 134 Ill. 228, 10 L.R.A. 383, 23 Am. St. Rep. 664, 25 N. E. 642; Star Acci. Co. v. Sibley, 57 Ill. App. 315; Travelers' Preferred Acci. Asso. v. Kelsey, 46 Ill. App. 371; National Acci. Soc. v. Taylor, 42 Ill. App. 97; Holiday v. American Mut. Acci. Asso. 103 Iowa, 178, 64 Am. St. Rep. 170, 72 N. W. 448; Hess v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acci. Asso. 112 Mich. 196, 40 L.R.A. 444, 70

N. W. 460; Willey Casualty Co. v. Sheppard, 61 Kan. 351, 47 L.R.A. 650, 59 Pac. 651; Kentucky Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Franklin, 102 Ky. 512, 43 S. W. 709; Stone v. United States Casualty Co. 34 N. J. L. 371; Hall v. American Masonic Acci. Asso. 86 Wis. 518, 57 N. W. 366; Johnson v. London Guarantee & Acci. Co. 115 Mich. 86, 40 L.R.A. 440, 69 Am. St. Rep. 549, 72 N. W. 1115; Eaton v. Atlas Acci. Ins. Co. 89 Me. 570, 36 Atl. 1048; North American Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212.

Westenhaver, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is based on a policy of accident insurance issued October 31, 1917, to Alexander Grant, by occupation a passenger conductor on the Wabash Railroad, whereby the plaintiff in error insured Grant "against loss resulting directly and independently of all other causes, from bodily injuries effected solely through external, violent, and accidental means." The insured having met his death while the policy was in force, Myrtle Grant, the beneficiary, brought this action and recovered judgment for the full amount of the policy. This error proceeding is prosecuted by the insurer to reverse that judgment. The main ground relied on for reversal is that the insured's death was not accidental within the true meaning of the policy. This question was raised by a motion for a directed verdict and by numerous requests to charge, and is preserved by several of the assignments of error. The disposition of it requires a brief statement of the evidence.

The insured, while on duty as a passenger conductor, was on June 12, 1918, shot and killed by a colored passenger, James Morgan, at Montpelier, Ohio, a junction and terminal point of the Wabash Railroad. A few minutes before reaching Montpelier, Morgan, who had boarded the train at Chicago with a ticket entitling him to travel to Adrian, Michigan, had entered the toilet room and had locked the door on the inside. The conductor's duty, as evidenced by bulletins and rules offerred in evidence, required him, while this train was lying at Montpelier, to see that the toilet room was closed, locked, and kept out of use. What happened thereafter depends on the testimony of three witnesses—Albert H. Doyle, an express messenger, Frank Anderson, a colored news agent, and James Morgan, the man who did the killing, and whose deposition was taken after he had been tried, found guilty of first degree murder, and sentenced to be electrocuted. This evidence, viewing it, as is our duty, in that aspect tending most favorably to support the verdict, tends to show these facts:

The conductor, shortly after the train came to a stop, tried the toilet room door, and finding it occupied and locked on the inside, requested, directed, and finally ordered, Morgan to unlock the door and come out. Morgan answered some three or four times that he could not do so, notwithstanding the conductor repeatedly instructed him that all he had to do was to shove back the bolt and open the door. This conversation was exchanged in an ordinary manner and without any threats of violence or display of anger on either side. Morgan, for some unknown reason, was evidently unwilling to comply with the conductor's order and vacate the toilet, and the conductor evidently interpreted his conduct and replies as a refusal so to do. At some time in the course of this controversy, if such it be, the conductor had stood on the arm and back of the car seat next to the toilet room and had looked in over its glass top. What the conductor saw he related to no one. Morgan, however, says that he was then buttoning up his "pants," and that his revolver was in a small hand bag which he had with him. Anderson, the news agent, saw Grant try the door, but does not relate, even if he heard, the remarks then exchanged. At some time, probably after Grant had left, Anderson also got on the arms of the car seat and looked in, at which time he says Morgan was standing on the toilet seat in such an unusual position and attitude that he quickly jumped down. He saw, however, no revolver in Morgan's possession. Grant left, and there is some discrepancy as to the space of time which elapsed before his return. He went to the express car, got a loaded revolver, and returned, followed by Doyle, the express messenger. In answer to some remarks, Grant said: "Well, I want to scare him out." Upon returning, he got up again on the arms of the car seat, holding by his left hand to an air valve at the side of the car, and, holding the revolver with his right hand clasped around the cylinder, displaying both ends of it, he tapped lightly on the glass top of the toilet, saying, "Come out of here." At approximately the same time, and as soon as his head appeared above the wooden side of the toilet room, a pistol shot sounded, and Grant fell dead to the floor. This shot was fired by Morgan. The bullet entered Grant's forehead just above and slightly to one side of the base of the nose.

Appeal—ruling on motion for directed verdict—view of evidence.

A jury would be warranted in finding that the tapping, order or request, and the appearance of Grant's head above the wooden side of the toilet room, were substantially simultaneous with the firing of the shot, and that Grant had no knowledge that Morgan was armed, or, except as may be inferred from this statement of the evidence, was intending violence. All the testimony tends to show that Grant was in good humor and unexcited, and was not discourteous or violent, or threatening in speech or manner. Morgan's testimony and counsel's inferences, so far as they conflict, if at all, with the foregoing statement of the evidence, must in this proceeding be disregarded.

The trial judge submitted to the jury the issue as to whether Grant's death was due to accidental means. In doing so, he charged the jury in substance that they should approach this question from the standpoint of Grant at the time and under the circumstances as they appeared to him; that his death was not accidental, or covered by the policy, if Grant anticipated, or, under the circumstances, should have anticipated, the fact that Morgan might act in the way he did; and that the burden of proof was upon the beneficiary to show that Grant's death was caused by an agency which, independently of all other causes, constituted an accident; but that, on the other hand, if Grant did not anticipate, or have reason to anticipate, in the light of all the circumstances, that he would get shot, then his death was accidental, and the beneficiary might recover.

In submitting to the jury upon this evidence the issue as to whether Grant's death was accidental, and in thus charging, we perceive no error against the insurer. Policies of accident insurance, indemnifying against death from external, violent, and accidental means, either with or without restrictive or defining language as to what is or is not accidental means, have often been considered by the courts. The law is well settled as to what are or are not accidental means within the meaning of a policy thus phrased; indeed, we discover no inconsistency or conflict in the cases, either in the statement of the law or in the application of the law to the facts of the different cases. And because of this settled state of the law, and the absence of any conflict in the cases, we do not deem it necessary to review the cases or to restate the general principles as to what is or is not accidental within the language of an accident insurance policy. It will be sufficient to refer to a few of the leading cases. See United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 755; Western Commercial Travelers' Asso. v. Smith (C. C. A. 8th C.) 40 L.R.A. 653, 29 C. C. A. 223, 56 U. S. App. 393, 85 Fed. 401;

Insurance—accident—shooting of insured.

Hutchcraft v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 87 Ky. 300, 12 Am. St. Rep. 484, 8 S. W. 570.

In some cases, however, the insured met his death as the result of an intentional and designed killing by some third person; and if such killing was not the direct result of misconduct of the deceased, or was unforeseen, and not reasonably to be anticipated by him, then his death is held to be the result of external, violent, and accidental, means. For cases so holding, see the following: Robinson v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. (C. C.) 68 Fed. 825, affirmed on another ground in 20 C. C. A. 262, 36 U. S. App. 690, 74 Fed. 10; Railway Mail Asso. v. Moseley (C. C. A. 6th C.) 127 C. C. A. 427, 211 Fed. 1; Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 913, 32 N. W. 812; Furbush v. Maryland Casualty Co. 131 Mich. 234, 100 Am. St. Rep. 605, 91 N. W. 135, on second appeal, 133 Mich. 483, 95 N. W. 551; Hutchcraft v. Travelers' Ins. Co. supra; Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 89 Cal. 170, 23 Am. St. Rep. 455, 26 Pac. 762; Accident Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256, 25 Am. St. Rep. 685, 16 S. W. 723; Ripley v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 2 Bigelow, Ins. Rep. 738, Fed. Cas. No. 11,854; Lovelace v. Travelers' Protective Asso. 126 Mo. 104, 30 L.R.A. 209, 47 Am. St. Rep. 638, 28 S. W. 877. Of these cases, the one last cited may be taken as typical. Lovelace, the insured, attempted to eject a man, who was drunken and boisterous, from the office of a hotel. In doing so, and in overcoming resistance, he used no other means than his hands, and while engaged in the effort the other drew a pistol and shot him, causing death. A recovery on the ground that the death was accidental was sustained, because Lovelace neither used nor attempted to use other than natural, physical means to eject by force, and while so doing did not know, or have reason to believe, that the other person was armed.

There is another group of cases, on which the plaintiff in error mainly relies, in which the assured was killed by a third person, where recovery is not allowed; but in all these cases the deceased engaged in an encounter under such circumstances that he invited his adversary to mortal combat, and either foresaw or should have foreseen that death or injury might result. See Taliaferro v. Travelers' Protective Asso. (C. C. A. 8th C.) 25 C. C. A. 494, 49 U. S. App. 275, 80 Fed. 368; Hutton v. States Acci. Ins. Co. 267 Ill. 267, L.R.A.1915E, 127, 108 N. E. 296, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 577; Meister v. General Acci. Corp. 92 Or. 96, 4 A.L.R. 718, 179 Pac. 913. Of these cases Taliaferro v. Travelers' Protective Asso. may be taken as typical. The deceased had drawn a revolver and had struck his adversary in the face before the latter drew his revolver and fired, and it was held that the insured's death was not accidental, because he foresaw or should have foreseen that death or injury might probably result from his own conduct. Other cases in which death was due, not to intentional killing, but to other causes alleged to be accidental, are cited and relied on, particularly Fidelity & C. Co. v. Carroll (Fidelity & C. Co. v. Stacy) (C. C. A. 4th C.) 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 657, 74 C. C. A. 409, 143 Fed. 271, 6 Ann. Cas. 955, and Maryland Casualty Co. v. Spitz (C. C. A. 3d C.) L.R.A.1918C, 1191, 159 C. C. A. 119, 246 Fed. 817. No criticism can be made of the law stated therein or the judgments rendered; but they are not in point, and are sufficiently distinguished by reference to United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 755.

Obviously, in applying these legal principles, many cases of intentional and designed killing will arise, in which it will become necessary to determine from conflicting evidence whether the deceased, by his wrongful conduct, produced his death, or voluntarily and intentionally committed acts from which he foresaw, or should have foreseen that death or injury might result. In all such cases the issue must be submitted to a jury under a proper charge. This course was pursued in the following cases: Furbush v. Maryland Casualty Co. 131 Mich. 234, 100 Am. St. Rep. 605, 91 N. W. 135; Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 913, 32 N. W. 812; Railway Mail Asso. v. Moseley (C. C. A. 6th C.) 127 C. C. A. 427, 211 Fed. 1. The same course was followed, when the issue was as to whether the death was accidental, in the following cases: United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 755; Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. v. Patterson (C. C. A. 3d C.) 130 C. C. A. 175, 213 Fed. 597.

In the case at bar it is plain that the court below could not say, as a matter of law, that Grant's death was not accidental, and therefore no error results to the plaintiff in error from the fact that this issue was submitted to a jury under a proper charge.

Appeal—refusal to direct verdict—absence of error.

Three other errors were relied on, namely, admission in evidence of various rules of the railroad and of the statutes of Ohio and Michigan relating to a conductor's duties and powers; permitting an amendment at the close of all the testimony, so as to avoid a technical variance between the declaration and the policy sued on; and misconduct of counsel in argument to the jury. No error is perceived in any of these rulings. The alleged errors are so unsubstantial as not to call for further comment.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed, with costs.

ANNOTATION.

Accident insurance: death or injury intentionally inflicted by another as due to accident or accidental means.

The question whether an injury received by insured while assaulting another is an accident within an accident policy, which is closely related to the question here considered, is covered in the annotation in 4 A.L.R. 723.

For applicability of provisions as to injuries intentionally inflicted where insured is injured because of mistake of identity, see annotation in 8 A.L.R. 322.

As to death or injury resulting from insured's voluntary act as caused by accident or accidental means, see annotation in 14 A.L.R. 788.

For death or injury in battle as due to accident or accidental means, see annotation in 11 A.L.R. 1113.

For death as within provision exempting insurer, or limiting liability in case of "injury" intentionally inflicted, see annotation in 6 A.L.R. 1338.

It is a well-established rule that where insured is intentionally injured by another, and the injury is not the result of misconduct or an assault by the insured, but is unforeseen in so far as he is concerned, the injury is accidental within the meaning of accident policies.

United States.—Ripley v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. (1870) Fed. Cas. No. 11,854, affirmed on other grounds in (1873) 16 Wall. 336, 21 L. ed. 469; Robinson v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. (1895) 68 Fed. 825, affirmed on other grounds in (1896) 20 C. C. A. 262, 36 U. S. App. 690, 74 Fed. 10; Interstate Business Men's Acci. Asso. v. Lester (1919) 168 C. C. A. 309, 257 Fed. 225, writ of certiorari denied in (1919) 250 U. S. 662, 63 L. ed. 1195, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 11; EMPLOYERS' INDEMNITY CORP. v. GRANT (reported herewith) ante, 1118.

Alabama.—Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Dupree (1919) 17 Ala. App. 131, 82 So. 579.

Arkansas.—Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Little (1920) 146 Ark. 70, 225 S. W. 298.

California.—Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (1891) 89 Cal. 170, 23 Am. St. Rep. 452, 26 Pac. 762; Price v. Occidental L. Ins. Co. (1915) 169 Cal. 800, 147 Pac. 1175.

Georgia.—Travelers Ins. Co. v. Wyness (1899) 107 Ga. 584, 84 S. E. 113; Gaynor v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1913) 12 Ga. App. 601, 77 S. E. 1072; Newsome v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1915) 143 Ga. 785, 85 S. E. 1035.

Indiana.—Supreme Council, O. C. F. v. Garrigus (1885) 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 298, 3 N. E. 818; Travelers Protective Asso. v. Fawcett (1913) 56 Ind. App. 111, 104 N. E. 991.

Iowa.—Jones v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. (1894) 92 Iowa, 652, 61 N. W. 485; Allen v. Travelers' Protective Asso. (1913) 163 Iowa, 217, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 600, 143 N. W. 574; Kascoutas v. Federal L. Ins. Co. (1921) — Iowa, —, — A.L.R. —, 185 N. W. 125.

Kentucky.—Hutchcraft v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (1888) 87 Ky. 300, 12 Am. St. Rep. 484, 8 S. W. 570; American Acci. Co. v. Carson (1896) 99 Ky. 441, 34 L.R.A. 301, 59 Am. St. Rep. 473, 36 S. W. 169; Campbell v. Fidelity & C. Co. (1901) 109 Ky. 661, 60 S. W. 492; Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Rustin (1912) 151 Ky. 103, 151 S. W. 366, rehearing denied in (1913) 152 Ky. 42, 153 S. W. 14; Interstate Business Men's Acci. Asso. v. Ford (1914) 161 Ky. 163, 170 S. W. 525.

Michigan.—Furbush v. Maryland Casualty Co. (1902) 131 Mich. 234, 100 Am. St. Rep. 605, 91 N. W. 135.

Mississippi.—Fidelity & C. Co. v. Johnson (1895) 72 Miss. 333, 30 L.R.A. 206, 17 So. 2.

Missouri.—Phelan v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (1889) 38 Mo. App. 640; Collins v. Fidelity & C. Co. (1895) 63 Mo. App. 253.

Nebraska.—Railway Officials & E. Acci. Asso. v. Drummond (1898) 56 Neb. 235, 76 N. W. 562.

Oklahoma.—Union Acci. Co. v. Willis (1915) 44 Okla. 578, L.R.A.1915D, 358, 145 Pac. 812; General Acci. F. & L. Assur. Corp. v. Hymes (1919) 77 Okla. 20, 8 A.L.R. 318, 185 Pac. 1085.

Tennessee.—Accident Ins. Co. v. Bennett (1891) 90 Tenn. 256, 25 Am. St. Rep. 685, 16 S. W. 723.

Utah.—Warner v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. (1893) 8 Utah, 431, 32 Pac. 696.

Virginia.—Standard Acci. Ins. Co. v. Walker (1920) 127 Va. 140, 102 S. E. 585.

Washington.—Buckley v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. (1920) 113 Wash. 13, 192 Pac. 924.

Wisconsin.—Button v. American Mut. Acci. Asso. (1896) 92 Wis. 83, 53 Am. St. Rep. 900, 65 N. W. 861.

It will be observed that in the reported case (EMPLOYERS' INDEMNITY CORP. v. GRANT, ante, 1118) it was held that the death of a railroad conductor from a gunshot wound, inflicted by a passenger whom he was trying to induce to vacate a toilet when the train was entering a station, might be found to be accidental within the meaning of an accident policy if, at the time, he did not know that the passenger was armed, and did not and had no reason to anticipate, in the light of all the circumstances, that he would be shot in pressing his demand.

And in Hutchcraft v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (Ky.) supra, where the death of the insured, who was assassinated by a robber, was held to have resulted from accidental means, although the robber intentionally inflicted the injury, the court said: "Accidents are of two kinds: First, those that befall a person without any human agency, as the killing of a person by lightning; here the elementary properties of lightning and its flash are not caused or controlled by human agency; but the fact that the person was struck by unintentionally placing himself within its range is, as to him, accident. Second, those that are the result of human agency. The latter are divided as follows: First, that which happens to a person by his own agency; as, if he is walking or running, and accidentally falls and hurts himself; here he falls by reason of his agency in walking or running, but he did not intend to fall; he did not foresee that he would fall in time to avoid it; the fall was, therefore, accidental. Second, that which befalls a person by the agency of another person, without the concurrence of the latter's will;

as where one, standing on a scaffold, unintentionally lets a brick fall from his hand, and it strikes a person below; here, the dropping of the brick, as it was not intended by the former and was unforeseen by the latter, is, in the broadest sense, an accident. Third, that which a person intentionally does, whereby another is unintentionally injured; as, where one intentionally fires a gun in the air and accidentally shoots another person; here the act of firing the gun was intentional, but the shooting of the person was unintentional. Therefore, on the part of the person firing the gun, the shooting of the other would be accidental, though not in as broad a sense as in the former case, because some part of his act was intentional; but as to the person shot, it was by purely accidental means. Fourth, so, also, as we think, if one person intentionally injures another, which was not the result of a rencounter, or the misconduct of the latter, but was unforeseen by him; such injury, as to the latter, although intentionally inflicted by the former, would be accidental. When the injury is not the result of the misconduct or the participation of the injured party, but is unforeseen, it is, as to him, accidental, although inflicted intentionally by the other party. It is conceded that in the three instances first named the injury would be by 'accidental means.' And, doubtless, it will not be denied that if a person were to maliciously fire his gun into a crowd of persons for the purpose of general mischief, or were to maliciously wreck a train of cars for the purpose of injuring whoever might be on board, whereby one or more persons were shot or mashed, that the casualty befalling these persons, as far as they were concerned, would fall within the term of 'accidental, means.' In other words, we do not regard it as essential, in order to make out a case of injury by 'accidental means,' so far as the injured party is concerned, that the party injuring him should not have meant to do so; for if the injured party had no agency in bringing the injury on himself, and to him it was unforeseen,—a casualty,—it seems clear that the fact that the deed was wilfully directed against him would not militate against the proposition that, as to him, the injury was brought on by 'accidental means.'"

And the same conclusion has been reached in other cases where the insured was killed by a robber. Ripley v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. (Fed.); Travelers Protective Assn. v. Fawcett (Ind.); Railway Officials & E. Acci. Assn. v. Drummond (Neb.); and Warner v. United States Mut. Acci. Assn. (Utah) supra.

And it has been held that injury was accidental as to the insured, although it was intentional on the part of a burglar, who shot him while they were scuffling together. Allen v. Travelers' Protective Assn. (1913) 163 Iowa, 217, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 690, 143 N. W. 574.

And the injury has been held accidental where the insured was attacked unexpectedly, without provocation, by one who attempted to assassinate him. Phelan v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (1889) 38 Mo. App. 640; Collins v. Fidelity & C. Co. (1895) 63 Mo. App. 258.

And in Kascoutas v. Federal L. Ins. Co. (1921) — Iowa, —, — A.L.R. —, 185 N. W. 125, it was held that death resulting from a murderous assault, for which the insured was in no wise to blame, was within the protection of a policy insuring against injury caused by accidental means.

And in Phoenix Acci. & Sick Ben. Assn. v. Stiver (1908) 42 Ind. App. 636, 84 N. E. 772, the injury was held to have been caused by accidental means where the insured was stabbed by an insane person, while on the public highway, going to his home, the stabbing being without provocation, and wholly unexpected and unforeseen by the insured.

And death by the intentional discharge of a firearm at the insured by an unknown person is accidental. Button v. American Mut. Acci. Assn. (1896) 92 Wis. 83, 53 Am. St. Rep. 900, 65 N. W. 861.

So also is a homicide resulting from bad feeling between the insured and the one who killed him. Standard Acci. Ins. Co. v. Walker (1920) 127 Va. 140, 102 S. E. 585.

And in Gaynor v. Travelers Ins. Co.

(1913) 12 Ga. App. 601, 77 S. E. 1072, it was apparently assumed that the insured's death, which resulted from a shot fired by another while the insured was walking along the street, was caused by accidental means, but recovery was denied in this case on the ground that the death was within the provision excluding liability where injury was intentionally inflicted.

In Supreme Council, O. C. F. v. Garrigus (1885) 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 298, 3 N. E. 818, where it was apparently assumed that the contract was governed by the law of Kentucky, an answer that insured became engaged in an "affray" and a pistol-shot wound was intentionally inflicted, was held demurrable, there being no allegation of a statute in Kentucky similar to that in Indiana, which makes an agreement to fight an element of an "affray," no such element being involved in the common-law definition of an "affray," presumed to obtain in Kentucky.

And in Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Dupree (1919) 17 Ala. App. 131, 82 So. 579, where the insured was in his own office when a person entered, and, without provocation, used abusive language toward him, and made demonstrations with his fists as if to attack him, whereupon the insured arose from his chair and in self-defense struck his assailant, who knocked him down and injured him, it was held that the injury resulted from accidental means, the court holding that, although the insured struck the first blow, this was not such a voluntary act on his part as would preclude a recovery.

And in Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (1891) 89 Cal. 170, 23 Am. St. Rep. 455, 26 Pac. 762, where there was some evidence that the wound from which the insured died was inflicted by another after he had failed in an attempt to blackmail the deceased, it was held that it might be found from such evidence that the injury resulted from accidental means. The court stated that it is impossible to give a precise definition of the word "accidental;" that as every effect has a cause, there is one sense in which nothing is accidental; but said that the authorities seemed to agree that "accident" must be given its popular meaning,—that is, a casualty,—something out of the usual course of events, and which happens suddenly and unexpectedly, and without any design on the part of the person injured.

And in Withers v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1920) 58 Mont. 485, 193 Pac. 566, the evidence was held to make out a prima facie case of death by accidental means where there was testimony that the insured was killed by a shot in the neck, fired from a revolver in the hands of his wife.

And in Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Rustin (1912) 151 Ky. 103, 151 S. W. 366, rehearing denied in (1913) 152 Ky. 42, 153 S. W. 14, where there was evidence, in an action on an accident policy, that the insured was found on his porch, shot in the abdomen, and said that a man had shot him, it was held that a prima facie case of death by accidental means was made.

And in Price v. Accidental L. Ins. Co. (1915) 169 Cal. 800, 147 Pac. 1175, it was held that the fact that the insured was killed by a bullet from a firearm discharged by another person, standing alone, would justify, if not require, the inference that the killing was accidental; but it was held that this inference might be overcome by other evidence, and that if it should appear that the killing was the result of an encounter with deadly weapons, and that the insured had himself invited and brought on the conflict, the fatal result would not be accidental so far as he was concerned. The facts of the case do not appear.

In Union Acci. Co. v. Willis (1912) 44 Okla. 578, L.R.A.1915D, 358, 145 Pac. 812, the injury was held to have resulted from accidental means where the insured died from a fractured skull, caused by a fall on a pavement, when he was struck intentionally by another.

In Wayne v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1921) 220 Ill. App. 493, although the decision was rested on another ground, the view was expressed that the insured's death did not result from "accidental means" where his unexpected death occurred soon after a hypodermic injection of arsenobenzol by a reputable physician who was treating him for an ailment, the court stating that it could not be said that the unexpected death which followed the injection, even if it could be called an accidental death, came within the terms of the policy insuring against loss effected by accidental means.

In Jones v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. (1894) 92 Iowa, 652, 61 N. W. 485, an instruction was held proper that, if the plaintiff, in an action on an accident policy, had shown by the evidence that the insured came to his death as the result of a pistol shot at the hands of another, the law would presume that the shot was accidental, and that it was not inflicted with a murderous intent, and that the burden would be on the defendant to overcome the presumption that death was not caused by accidental means. The court stated that it made no difference, so far as the insurer was concerned, whether or not the other person fired the shot with the intent to kill the insured; that if he had such intent when he fired, and if the insured was not at fault, clearly, as to the latter, the injury resulting from the shot was accidental.

In Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Little (1920) 146 Ark. 70, 225 S. W. 298, where the insured went to his brother-in-law's house shortly after the occupants had retired, and knocked at the bedroom window, or rattled it, and was killed by a shot fired through the windows by his brother-in-law, it was argued that the insured's death was brought about by his own agency, and was the probable, and not the unexpected, result of his conduct; but the court held that the presumption was otherwise; stating that it having been shown that the insured died as a result of accidental means, the presumption was that the death was accidental, and that the burden was upon the insurer to show otherwise. It further was held that the testimony did not show that the killing was not accidental where a witness, who lived a block and a half from the brother-in-law's house, testified that he was sitting on his porch when the shot was fired, and called the brother-in-law on the telephone, and that the latter, in response to a question, stated that he had shot the insured, and that he got to the brother-in-law's house just as the ambulance was leaving, and that the brother-in-law and his wife left for the hospital four or five minutes after he arrived.

In Interstate Business Men's Acci. Asso. v. Lester (1919) 168 C. C. A. 309, 257 Fed. 225, writ of certiorari denied in (1919) 250 U. S. 662, 63 L. ed. 1195, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 11, where a physician, who was a member of the National Guard, was shot while with a detachment on strike duty, and while attending a wounded soldier, the injury was held accidental, the court holding that his merely going into an environment of greatly increased hazard, with conscious knowledge of such hazard, would not cause an injury or death which resulted therefrom not to be accidental within the meaning of an accident policy. J. T. W.

TOWN OF TALLASSEE et al., Appts.,

v.

STATE OF ALABAMA EX REL. T. W. BRUNSON et al.

Alabama Supreme Court—June 9, 1921.

(206 Ala. 169, 89 So. 514.)

Judgment — quo warranto — bar to subsequent proceeding — different relator.

1. A final judgment for defendant on demurrer in a quo warranto proceeding by an individual relator acting for the general public to dissolve an alleged municipal corporation and oust its officers because of defect in description of the territory to be incorporated is a bar to a subsequent proceeding by another relator, acting in the same capacity, to effect an ouster for the same reasons.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1133.]

— on demurrer — finality.

2. A final judgment for defendant, and sustaining demurrers to complaints which plaintiff declines to amend, is tantamount to one upon the merits on final submission.

[See 15 R. C. L. 986; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 515; see also note in 13 A.L.R. 1104.]

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Circuit Court for Elmore County (McMorris, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to dissolve the defendant town as a corporate entity, and to oust the individual defendants from the exercise of the powers of their office. Reversed.

Statement by Gardner, J.:

The following portion of the statement of the case, in quotation, is taken from brief of counsel for appellant, the correctness of which is not questioned by opposing counsel:

"This is an action in the nature of quo warranto by the state on the relation of T. W. Brunson against the town of Tallassee and the individuals acting as its mayor and aldermen, for the purpose of dissolving it as a corporate entity.

"It is alleged in the petition that T. W. Brunson is a citizen of Elmore county, Alabama, resides within the corporate limits of the town of Tallassee, and is over the age of twenty-one years; that D. H. Sayers, Jesse Gulledege, J. M. Herren, M. F. Bruce, G. W. Martin, and H. J. Sullivan have associated themselves together as mayor and councilmen of the town of Tallassee, and as such are levying and collecting taxes, passing ordinances, and exercising all the rights, privileges, and franchises of a municipal corporation without having been duly incorporated; that the invalid and void proceedings of the purported corporation consisting in the fact that there was on the 9th day of December, 1907, filed in the office of the judge of probate of Elmore county, Alabama, a petition, signed by twenty-five persons, purporting to fix the boundaries of the limits of the proposed town of Tallassee, and petitioning to be incorporated under the name of town of Tallassee, but that the only description of the boundaries of the limits of the proposed town set out in said petition is in words and figures as follows: Block Nos. 32, 43, and 44, according to the survey of John M. Gray, 1853; that there is attached to said petition referred to no accurate map or plat showing the boundaries or limits of the proposed municipal corporation; that there does not appear anywhere of record that notice was given by publication or by posting, as required by law, to the effect that an election would be held to determine whether the inhabitants of the described community desired to become incorporated under the name of town of Tallassee; that a plat showing the limits of the proposed town was on file in the office of the judge of probate of Elmore county; that on January 14, 1908, the probate judge of Elmore county certified blocks 42, 43, and 44, according to the survey of John M. Gray of 1853, so incorporated under the name of the town of Tallassee, but that said certificate of incorporation is null and void, and that the alleged town of Tallassee is a nullity for the reasons set forth in the petition.

"Thereupon the defendants filed their plea and answer, setting up the facts as to the incorporation of the town of Tallassee and its history since the incorporation. Plea No. 8 alleges that immediately after the making of the order or decree of the probate judge of Elmore county, declaring the territory described in the petition for incorporating a municipality under the laws of the state of Alabama, the town of Tallassee, through its mayor and aldermen, selected under the law of the state, began to exercise all the privileges and franchises of a municipal corporation, and on the 19th day of March, 1908, the state of Alabama, on the relation of one J. H. Cole, and said J. H. Cole, filed in the circuit court of Elmore county, Alabama, against the town of Tallassee and its then acting mayor and aldermen, an information in the nature of an application for a writ of quo warranto, seeking to oust its said mayor and aldermen from the exercise of the privileges and franchises of a town or municipality, alleging that the order of incorporation was void and invalid for the same reason, or substantially the same reason, as is alleged in the information in this cause for the invalidity of the same, and, said information being submitted to said court on demurrers of the defendants thereto, it was ordered and adjudged by said court by a judgment thereon duly made on the 6th day of April, 1908, and duly entered on the minutes of said court, that the causes alleged therein for the invalidity of said proceedings of incorporating said town were wholly insufficient, and, the plaintiffs declining to plead further, said information was dismissed."

The judgment in the former litigation above referred to in the name of the State of Alabama ex rel. J. H. Cole, and J. H. Cole v. Town of Tallassee et al., is as follows:

"Come the parties by their attorneys, and the relator by leave of the court amends its second ground of objection to said petition filed in the probate court so that said ground shall read as follows:

"Second. For that an accurate plat of the territory proposed to be embraced within said corporate limits is not alleged in said petition to be attached to and made a part of said petition.

"And the respondents renew to said information, as amended, the motion to strike and the demurrers to the same heretofore filed.

"Upon consideration, it is ordered and adjudged by the court that said motion to strike be, and the same is hereby, overruled.

"It is further considered by the court, and it is the judgment of the court, that the demurrer to said information and the several grounds thereof be, and the same are hereby, sustained, and, the relator declining to amend said information, it is considered by the court and it is the judgment of the court that judgment final be entered in favor of the respondent to said information on said demurrers.

"It is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court that the respondents go hence and recover of the relator and the sureties on his bond for the costs in this behalf expended, for which let execution issue. And the said relator and the state of Alabama on the relation of said relator jointly and severally except to said ruling and judgment of the court sustaining said demurrers."

In paragraph 7 the defendant set up that after the incorporation, in 1908, the town immediately, through its officers, duly elected, began to exercise the privileges and franchises of a town until the 1st of January, 1909, when it became dormant, and remained so until the 1st of January, 1910, at which time it was duly revived, and through its officers duly elected again began to exercise the privileges and franchises of a municipality, and has continuously since that time exercised the same, and has continuously since said time levied and collected taxes, adopted ordinances, and other matters which are set forth by way of reasons why the court should not exercise its discretion in granting the relief prayed.

In support of the defenses interposed the records of the proceedings of incorporation were introduced in evidence, and also the record of the proceedings in the cause of State of Alabama ex rel. J. H. Cole and J. H. Cole v. Town of Tallassee et al., showing the information by the plaintiff in the cause for a writ of quo warranto, and attacking the proceedings of the incorporation of the town of Tallassee for the same reasons assigned in the present case, and a judgment in said case, hereinabove set out. It was further shown by the proof that the parties defendant in the cause of State ex rel. Cole v. Town of Tallassee were the town of Tallassee and its then acting mayor and aldermen, and also showed the activities of the town since the time of incorporation.

Upon the final hearing of the cause the court entered a judgment granting the relief prayed, to the effect that the town of Tallassee has no existence as a municipal corporation, and ousting the same from the exercise of such rights and powers, and also a judgment of ouster against the mayor and aldermen, respondents to the cause. From this judgment the appeal is prosecuted.

Messrs. P. B. McKenzie, George F. Smoot, and J. Lee Holloway for appellants.

Messrs. Holley & Milner, for appellees:

To determine the purpose of a plea, reference must be had both to the matter and its general frame and structure.

31 Cyc. 147; Vaughan v. Everts, 40 Vt. 526.

Judgment in favor of defendant in an action of quo warranto by a private relator is no bar to subsequent action to oust an illegal corporation.

State ex rel. Bradford v. Stock, 38 Kan. 184, 16 Pac. 799; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Cincinnati Gaslight & Coke Co. 18 Ohio, 262; Angell & A. Corp. 8th ed. § 764; Wilcox, Mun. Corp. § 503.

In order that the state may be barred or estopped from questioning the validity of a municipal corporation, it must have acquiesced for twenty years or more; and if the acquiescence has been for less than that time, then it must be shown that the municipality has been recognized as such by legislative enactment, or that the property rights of individuals, said rights having been acquired in reliance upon the validity of the municipality, will be impaired.

People ex rel. Slusser v. Gary, 196 Ill. 310, 63 N. E. 749; State ex rel. Young v. Harris, 12 Ann. Cas. 260, and cases cited in note, 102 Minn. 340, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 533, 113 N. W. 887; State v. Tillamock, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 488, and note, 62 Or. 332, 124 Pac. 637; Jameson v. People, 16 Ill. 257, 63 Am. Dec. 304; People ex rel. Misner v. Hanker, 197 Ill. 409, 64 N. E. 253.

Gardner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action in the nature of a quo warranto against the municipality of Tallassee, and the individuals acting as its mayor and aldermen for the purpose of dissolving it as a corporate entity and ousting the individual respondents from the exercise of the powers of their office.

The principal grounds of attack as to the validity of the incorporation proceedings rest upon the insufficiency of the description of the property to be embraced as a part of the municipality in the petition filed before the probate judge. The cases of Foshee v. Kay, 197 Ala. 157, 72 So. 391; State ex rel. Wagon v. Altoona, 200 Ala. 502, 76 So. 444; and State ex rel. Allen v. Phil Campbell, 177 Ala. 204, 58 So. 905, are cited in support of this insistence.

The answer sets up several matters of defense, among them being that of res judicata, as disclosed by paragraph 8, the substance of which appears in the foregoing statement of the case. Another defense most strenuously insisted upon is that which appears in ¶ 7, wherein it is insisted that the state has long acquiesced in the exercise of corporate functions by the municipality, and circumstances disclosing that important public interests have become affected, and that, on account of such considerable delay, sound judicial discretion requires a denial of such relief, and refusal to oust the municipality from the exercise of its franchises. In support of this defense is cited the case of Atty.-Gen. ex rel. Mann v. Metheun, 236

Mass. 564, 129 N. E. 662. We have reached the conclusion, however, that this case may be determined upon the defense first mentioned, that of res judicata, and we will therefore confine ourselves to a discussion and determination of that one question.

It appears from the pleadings and proof that within a year after the incorporation of this municipality a proceeding in the nature of a quo warranto was begun in the name of the state on the relation of J. H. Cole, and J. H. Cole individually, against the town of Tallassee and the individuals holding the positions of mayor and aldermen thereof, seeking the dissolution of the corporate entity upon practically the same grounds as appear in the instant case.

The principal cause set forth in the petition in the cause here under consideration, that of the insufficiency of the description of the area involved, was also one of the grounds on the former attack. Respondents interposed demurrers in the former action, which were sustained. Relators declined to amend the information, and final judgment was entered in favor of the respondents. The ruling of the court thus appears to have been upon the merits, and not upon any mere question of amendable defect in pleadings, or for any such question as misjoinder of parties. Under these circumstances we are of the opinion that the judgment rendered was tantamount to one upon the merits on a final submission.

Judgment—on demurrer—
finality.

This question is discussed in 2 Van Fleet's Former Adjudication, § 309; and the following cases are also in point: Perkins v. Moore, 16 Ala. 17; Howard v. Howard, 26 Ala. 682; Stein v. McGrath, 128 Ala. 175, 30 So. 792; People ex rel. Chilcoat v. Harrison, 253 Ill. 625, 97 N. E. 1092, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 539.

The only remaining question, therefore, is whether or not this judgment may be properly pleaded as res judicata in this action. This question was considered by the court of civil appeals of Texas in the case of McClesky v. State, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 322, 23 S. W. 518, where it was held under similar circumstances that the former judgment was binding and conclusive.

It is to be noted in the first place that the relator in the former litigation, as well as in the instant case, does not seek the assertion or protection of any private right, but merely acts for and on behalf of the public generally.

The question was also discussed by the supreme court of Illinois in People ex rel. Chilcoat v. Harrison, supra, with like result, and there it was pointed out that in such cases, where no private interest is involved, the right sought to be enforced is a public right, wherein the people are regarded as the real party in interest. The case of State ex rel. Smyth v. Kennedy, 60 Neb. 300, 83 N. W. 87, supports a like conclusion, and quotes the following from New Orleans v. Citizens' Bank, 167 U. S. 371, 42 L. ed. 202, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905: "The very essence of judicial power is that when a matter is once ascertained and determined it is forever concluded when it arises again under the same circumstances and conditions between parties or their privies."

The opinion also quotes from authorities to the effect that a judgment in quo warranto is final and conclusive, and that such is also the effect of a judgment in the more modern proceeding in the nature of a quo warranto. The cases of Shumate v. Fauquier County, 84 Va. 574, 5 S. E. 570, and People ex rel. Bryant v. Holladay, 93 Cal. 241, 27 Am. St. Rep. 186, 29 Pac. 54, also support this view.

It is not questioned that the subject-matter of the former litigation was identical with that here involved, and the judgment rendered was by a court having full jurisdiction of the cause. While the nominal parties in the two suits are different, yet the real parties are the same, for the actors in both suits represented the public, and the respondents represented not only the municipality but the inhabitants thereof. This is pointed out very clearly in 1 Freeman on Judgments, § 178, as well as by some of the authorities cited therein.

As contrary to this view counsel for appellees cite State ex rel. Bradford v. Stock, 38 Kan. 184, 16 Pac. 799; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Cincinnati Gaslight & Coke Co. 18 Ohio St. 262; and Lindsay v. Allen, 112 Tenn. 637, 82 S. W. 171. The latter case may well be rested upon the principle that the former litigation there involved was not bona fide, and that, therefore, is not an authority contrary to the conclusion here reached. The case of State ex rel. Bradford v. Stock, supra, may be distinguished, we think, upon the theory the opinion discloses the former litigation was by an individual in the assertion of a private interest, and it was held this was not binding upon the state in the exercise of sovereign power to have determined a question of great governmental importance. In the case of State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Cincinnati Gaslight & Coke Co. supra, the court gives but scant consideration to this question, merely stating its conclusion without any discussion or citation of authority.

We have concluded that upon both principle and the weight of authority the defense of —quo warranto—

bar to subsequent proceeding —different relator.
res judicata should be held to be sustained. It was indicated in State ex

rel. Knox v. Dillard, 196 Ala. 539, 72 So. 56, that a judgment of dismissal under circumstances similar to those here involved, after demurrers had been sustained and petitioner declined to plead further, would be res judicata of the respondent's rightful occupancy of the office in question. But we think the case of Montgomery v. Walker, 154 Ala. 242, 129 Am. St. Rep. 54, 45 So. 586, is here very much in point by way of analogy. That was a case of petition by a taxpayer of the city of Montgomery, seeking writ of mandamus to compel the city of Montgomery to put in force the provisions of a certain act which provided for the establishment of a board of commissioners of police. It appeared that previously another taxpayer (one Thomas) had filed a similar petition seeking the same end, [the city] attacking the constitutionality of the act. Upon appeal in that case it was held the act was unconstitutional; the decision being rested upon a previous ruling of the court in Little v. State, 137 Ala. 659, 35 So. 134. In a later case, however, the Little Case was overruled, but that of the former taxpayer had not been overruled eo nomine. The opinion in the Walker Case points out as a general rule a former adjudication is res judicata only as to parties and their privies; but it was held that the taxpayer represented not only himself, but every other taxpayer on the one side, and that the city of Montgomery represented the great body of people on the other, and that the mere fact that the machinery of the law was set in motion by a different taxpayer did not affect the question, for the issues were the same, and so, likewise, were the interests involved. As said by the court: "It would seem, then, that there should be some limit to such proceedings. If, after the determination of such a question, any other citizen could inaugurate similar proceedings and relitigate the same questions, the matter would never be finally settled until every citizen in the city had haled the city council into court and thus kept them in continual litigation."

It was further held that whether or not the former decision was correct will not be inquired into, the court saying: "For this court to inquire into the question as to whether the former decision was erroneous or not would be to destroy the doctrine of res judicata, which the wisdom of our laws has set up for the protection of the citizens."

However, as said in the case of Ashton v. Rochester, 133 N. Y. 187, 28 Am. St. Rep. 619, 30 N. E. 965: "But the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction will sometimes operate as an estoppel and a former adjudication against persons who are not named in the proceeding and who were not parties to the record by name. It is enough if they were represented in the action or proceeding which resulted in the judgment, or were entitled to be heard. When a judgment is rendered against a county, city, or town in its corporate name, or against a board or officer who represents the municipality, in the absence of fraud or collusion, it will bind the citizens and taxpayers. This is upon the principle that they are represented in the litigation by agencies authorized to speak for them, and to protect their interests."

Upon principle we consider the Walker Case as decisive of the instant case. Only a public question was involved; only the public interest concerned; and if the mere fact of a change in the nominal party is to prevent the application of the rule of res judicata, there could then be no stability of decision upon questions of this character, which would always be open to attack.

We are therefore of the opinion that this defense was well sustained by the proof, and that the court below erred in granting the relief prayed. The judgment will therefore be here reversed and one rendered dismissing the proceeding.

Anderson, Ch. J., and Sayre and Miller, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Judgment in favor of defendant or respondent in an action or proceeding involving a matter of public right or interest as a bar to a subsequent action or proceeding by a different plaintiff or relator.

Judgments in contests to try title to office are excluded from this annotation, as, in general, brought in the assertion of a private interest.

It has been held that "a citizen of a county, acting as relator in a matter affecting only the public right, and applying in the name of the state for a writ of mandamus, will not be regarded as acting in any personal sense whatever, but only as a representative of the public interest, and is concluded with reference to any fact adjudged or admitted, or which might have been adjudged, in a former judicial proceeding in which the same public interest was plaintiff or defendant, and is bound by the facts that are or might have been adjudged in the former proceeding as fully as though he were named as a party thereto." State ex rel. Davis v. Willis (1910) 19 N. D. 209, 124 N. W. 706, where the former proceeding was by the attorney general for a certiorari to test the result of an election to create a new county, he asserting that the election was not in favor of the new county, and the application for the writ was denied.

In El Reno v. Cleveland-Trinidad Paving Co. (1910) 25 Okla. 648, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 650, 107 Pac. 163, it was held that "when a resident taxpayer of an improvement district in a city of the first class brings a suit for himself and all others similarly situated, against the city and certain other defendants, to enjoin the carrying into effect of a contract for paving and guttering said district, upon the ground that said contract was invalid, and a final judgment adverse to said plaintiffs is entered therein and remains unappealed from, there is sufficient identity between the parties filing such suit and a subsequent suit brought by one of the defendants of the former suit against his codefendants, wherein the validity of said contract is involved, to justify the pleading of the decree entered in the first suit as res judicata as to all questions concerning the validity of the contract that are identical in both cases, and that were or could have been tried in the former."

A new county, in a suit against its parent county, obtained the right to certain taxes, and in collecting such taxes it sold the land of N., which was bought by C., who brought an action against N. to quiet title. It was held that N. was bound by the judgment in the suit between the two counties. Cannon v. Nelson (1891) 83 Iowa, 242, 48 N. W. 1033.

In People ex rel. Gibbons v. Clark (1920) 296 Ill. 46, 129 N. E. 583, it was held that where a resident and taxpayer files a bill on behalf of himself and all other taxpayers of the county, against the county, to enjoin the extension of taxes, a decree dismissing the bill bars other taxpayers from raising the same questions again in proceedings by the county to collect the tax.

But in Price v. Gwin (1896) 144 Ind. 105, 43 N. E. 5, it was held that a judgment for the defendants in an action by the board of county commissioners to restrain the sheriff and others from carrying out a contract for the repair of the courthouse was not a bar to an action by a taxpayer for the same relief, as the plaintiff was not a party to the first action.

In State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Cincinnati Gaslight & Coke Co. (1868) 18 Ohio St. 262, referred to in the reported case (TALLASSEE v. STATE, ante, 1127), it was held that a judgment in favor of the defendant, heretofore rendered by the district court of a county, upon an information in the nature of a quo warranto, filed by the prosecuting attorney of that county, upon an individual relation, was not a bar to a subsequent information of a similar character, filed by the attorney general, in behalf of the state, in the exercise of discretion given him by statute.

A judgment in favor of the defendant upon the merits, in a suit or proceeding by an individual plaintiff or relator, acting in the public interest, against a municipality or other public corporation or its legal representatives, relative to a matter of public concern, is a bar to subsequent proceedings by other individual parties or relators, acting in the same capacity, to effect the same result as the first suit or proceeding.

United States.—McIntosh v. Pittsburg (1901) 112 Fed. 705.

Alabama.—Montgomery v. Walker (1908) 154 Ala. 242, 129 Am. St. Rep. 54, 45 So. 586; TALLASSEE v. STATE (reported herewith) ante, 1127.

Connecticut.—Terry v. Waterbury (1869) 35 Conn. 526.

Illinois.—Harmon v. Auditor (1887) 123 Ill. 122, 5 Am. St. Rep. 502, 13 N. E. 161; People ex rel. Chilcoat v. Harrison (1912) 253 Ill. 625, 97 N. E. 1092, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 539; Greenberg v. Chicago (1912) 256 Ill. 213, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 108, 99 N. E. 1039. See also People ex rel. Gibbons v. Clark (1920) 296 Ill. 46, 129 N. E. 583, supra; Dal Pino v. Cook County (1909) 151 Ill. App. 245, affirmed in (1910) 245 Ill. 496, 92 N. E. 291.

Kansas.—Sabin v. Sherman (1882) 28 Kan. 289.

Kentucky. — Home Constr. Co. v. Duncan (1902) 24 Ky. L. Rep. 94, 68 S. W. 15.

Louisiana. — See Taxpayers v. O'Kelly (1897) 49 La. Ann. 1039, 22 So. 311.

North Dakota.—See State ex rel. Davis v. Willis (1910) 19 N. D. 209, 124 N. W. 706, supra.

Oregon.—See the observations of the court in Rose v. Portland (1917) 82 Or. 541, 162 Pac. 498.

South Carolina. — State ex rel. Brown v. Chester & L. N. G. R. Co. (1880) 13 S. C. 290.

Texas.—McClesky v. State (1893) 4 Tex. Civ. App. 322, 23 S. W. 518.

Washington. — Stallcup v. Tacoma (1895) 13 Wash. 141, 52 Am. St. Rep. 25, 42 Pac. 541.

Thus, it has been held that——a judgment for the defendant in a mandamus proceeding by one taxpayer against a municipality, invalidating an act of the legislature, is res judicata in a similar proceeding by another taxpayer, seeking, on behalf of the public generally, the enforcement of the same statute on the ground of its constitutionality, Montgomery v. Walker (Ala.) supra;

—an adverse decision in a suit by a taxpayer on behalf of himself and all other taxpayers who may wish to join in the suit, to enjoin the enforcement of a statute because of its unconstitutionality, bars a second action by another taxpayer on behalf of himself and others who wish to join, attacking the statute because the constitutional requirements were not followed in its passage, although that specific ground of attack was not raised in the former action, Greenberg v. Chicago, (1912) 256 Ill. 213, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 108, 99 N. E. 1039;

—a judgment sustaining the validity of an ordinance to widen a street, rendered in a suit by one property owner, is conclusive as to other property owners or citizens of the municipality, McIntosh v. Pittsburg (1901) 112 Fed. 705;

—a judgment dismissing on demurrer a bill by the state attorney on relation of certain taxpayers, to have declared invalid an ordinance of the city, and for the removal from the streets of obstructions authorized by such ordinance, is conclusive in another proceeding by other taxpayers, seeking the same relief, People ex rel. Chilcoat v. Harrison (1912) 253 Ill. 625, 97 N. E. 1092, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 539;

—a judgment of the court for a town, and against the petitioning citizens asking for a highway, is a bar to a subsequent petition by other citizens having the same general interest in the result of both proceedings, asking for substantially the same highway, although the subsequent petition is based upon a law enacted subsequently to the judgment relied upon; there being, however, no new matter of fact alleged as a ground for the highway, and the statute on which the latter petition is based expressly exempting from its operation suits then pending, Terry v. Waterbury (1869) 35 Conn. 526;

—a petition to enjoin county commissioners from canvassing votes polled at an election is barred by a prior judgment in favor of such commissioners in a suit seeking the same relief, prosecuted by another citizen, Sabin v. Sherman (1882) 28 Kan. 289;

—the judgment in a suit by a taxpayer to enjoin issuance of bonds by a city, adverse to the taxpayer, is conclusive upon all the taxpayers of the city, Harmon v. Auditor (1887) 123 Ill. 122, 5 Am. St. Rep. 502, 13 N. E. 161;

—a judgment dismissing a suit by a taxpayer against the commissioners of a county, to enjoin the issuance of certain bonds, is conclusive upon another suit by other taxpayers, in the name of the state, to have the bonds declared void, State ex rel. Brown v. Chester & L. N. G. R. Co. (1880) 13 S. C. 290;

—a judgment in a suit by taxpayers, sustaining the validity of bonds issued by the municipality, is conclusive in a subsequent suit by other taxpayers to enjoin the paying of interest on the bonds, Stallcup v. Tacoma (1895) 13 Wash. 141, 52 Am. St. Rep. 25, 42 Pac. 541.

It will be seen that it is held in the reported case (TALLASSEE v. STATE, ante, 1127) that a final judgment for defendants on demurrer in a quo warranto proceeding by an individual relator, acting for the general public, to dissolve an alleged town and oust its officers because of defect in description of the territory to be incorporated, is a bar to a subsequent proceeding by other relators, acting in the same capacity, to effect an ouster for the same reason.

In State ex rel. Forgues v. Superior Ct. (1912) 70 Wash. 670, 127 Pac. 313, it was held that a judgment dismissing on demurrer an action by a taxpayer to enjoin the holding of a local option election on the ground that the petition therefor was insufficient is a bar to a similar action by another taxpayer, although he is the holder of a retail liquor license and of an internal revenue license.

In Taxpayers v. O'Kelly (1897) 49 La. Ann. 1039, 22 So. 311, supra, it was held that a suit by taxpayers to enjoin the collection of certain taxes upon the ground that an election authorizing the same was invalid was concluded by a prior adjudication of the validity of the election in a suit to which the officers of the municipality were parties; it is not made clear whether the complainant in the latter suit was a taxpayer or not.

In Harmon v. Auditor (1887) 123 Ill. 122, 5 Am. St. Rep. 502, 13 N. E. 161, supra, the court said: "The present suit was begun by Harmon and others, also taxpayers and property owners of the town, as representatives of the same class for whose benefit the Pickney bill was filed. The complainants in this proceeding were represented by the complainants in the former suit, and are therefore bound by the decree therein entered. The remedy in suits of the character here indicated is in the interest of a class of individuals having common rights that need protection, and, in the pursuit of that remedy, individuals have the right to represent the class to which they belong. This jurisdiction, in some respects, rests on the principles of a proceeding in rem."

In McClesky v. State (1893) 4 Tex. Civ. App. 322, 23 S. W. 518, supra, it was held that a judgment for the defendants on the merits in an action by the state, on the relation of certain citizens, against a town and its officers, to annul its incorporation, is a bar to another suit by the state for the same relief against the town and its officers, on the relation of another citizen. (It should be noted that although the court said, as to the first action, "that the trial in the first suit was upon the merits, and embraced the whole subject-matter of this litigation in the sense of rendering the decree an effective adjudication, as distinguished from a dismissal upon formal grounds, we entertain no doubt," the relators in that action consented to the judgment, the attorney for the state not objecting, and the court costs in that action were ordered taxed against the defendants.)

It was held in Mathers v. Cincinnati (1878) 7 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 496 (see also p. 521), that a pending taxpayer's action against a city, brought, after the refusal of the city solicitor to bring it, to enjoin the city from granting a street car route, is a bar to another taxpayer's action, brought for the same purpose.

In order that a judgment for the defendant in the first suit by citizens or taxpayers may be a bar to a similar suit by other citizens or taxpayers, the prosecution of that suit must have been bona fide, and free from fraud or collusion. Simpson County v. Buckley (1904) 85 Miss. 713, 38 So. 104; Lindsay v. Allen (1904) 112 Tenn. 637, 82 S. W. 171. See also People ex rel. Childress v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1921) 298 Ill. 516, 131 N. E. 624, infra. Compare McClesky v. State (1893) 4 Tex. Civ. App. 322, 23 S. W. 518, set out supra.

Thus, a judgment dismissing a suit brought by a citizen and taxpayer to restrain the removal of a county seat by county officers from one place to another is not a bar to a similar suit by other taxpayers, where it appears that the judgment in the first suit was by consent or compromise, and the first suit was really abandoned. Simpson County v. Buckley (Miss.) supra.

So, a judgment entered in a suit by citizens and taxpayers to enjoin the removal of a county seat, under an agreement with defendants by which the plaintiffs abandoned the suit, is not conclusive upon other taxpayers, and hence is not a bar to a subsequent suit by other taxpayers, involving the same question. Lindsay v. Allen (1904) 112 Tenn. 637, 82 S. W. 171, where the court says: "While it is proper and just that even the rights of the public of and concerning any special matter should be concluded by one fair litigation in which the matters involved were faithfully presented and considered, it should be emphasized that the litigation must be bona fide, fair, and honest from the beginning to the end. Those who assume, as citizens and taxpayers, to stand forth as the champions of public rights, and the conservators of the interests of all other citizens and taxpayers standing in the like case, must discharge their voluntary trust with candor and with such reasonable skill as to enable the court to see that there has been no such gross negligence in the conduct of the cause as would be equivalent to a fraudulent surrender of the rights involved in the controversy, and no such blundering abandonment of acquired advantages as would justly sustain an imputation of fraudulent purpose or gross incompetency on the part of those in charge of the public's case. In short, before the rights of the public are concluded, there must be a reasonable fair presentation of the case to a court of competent jurisdiction, and a consideration and determination of the matter by the court."

The foregoing statement was partly quoted in People ex rel. Childress v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1921) 298 Ill. 516, 131 N. E. 624, in holding that judgment for the complainants in a friendly mandamus proceeding to validate town bonds for roads, brought by certain citizens, asking that the officials issue the bonds, and perfunctorily answered by the commissioner of highways and the town clerk, does not bar other taxpayers from contesting taxes to pay such bonds.

Special statutes.

In Georgia, the statute provides a method for judicial validation of bonds of counties, municipalities, or divisions, making the judgment of validation forever conclusive upon the validity of the bonds against the county, municipality, or division, and providing that "the validity of said bonds shall never be called in question in any court in this state."

Such judgment is conclusive upon a taxpayer or citizen. Rountree v. Rentz (1904) 119 Ga. 885, 47 S. E. 328; Baker v. Cartersville (1906) 127 Ga. 221, 56 S. E. 249; Farmer v. Thomson (1909) 133 Ga. 94, 65 S. E. 180; Holton v. Camilla (1910) 134 Ga. 560, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 116, 68 S. E. 472, 20 Ann. Cas. 199; Thomas v. Blakely (1914) 141 Ga. 488, 81 S. E. 218; Whiddon v. Fletcher (1920) 150 Ga. 39, 102 S. E. 350. See also Lippitt v. Albany (1908) 131 Ga. 629, 63 S. E. 33.

Under a statute providing for contests by citizens as to the result of a local election in regard to the sale of intoxicating liquors, it was held that a judgment against the contestants, and holding that the majority of the legal votes cast at the election was against the sale, was conclusive against a citizen indicted for selling such liquors, although he was not a party to the contest. Locke v. Com. (1902) 113 Ky. 864, 69 S. W. 763.

In Home Constr. Co. v. Duncan (1902) 24 Ky. L. Rep. 94, 68 S. W. 15, it was held that an action by taxpayers, on behalf of themselves and other taxpayers, being a proceeding in rem, provided by law to test the validity of a city ordinance, a judgment determining that the ordinance was valid was binding upon all the city's taxpayers.

It has been held in Ohio that where a city solicitor prosecutes under the Municipal Code an action to final judgment, no taxpayer of the corporation has the right to maintain any action for the same cause, but all become bound by the judgment finally rendered in such case. Cincinnati Union Stock Yards Co. v. Cincinnati (1913) 34 Ohio C. C. 251; Thoms v. Greenwood (1878) 6 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 639.

Miscellaneous.

Where city commissioners of a market place sued the city and its marshal to enjoin them from removing a market house erected in the street under an ordinance, the city was not estopped to deny the validity of the ordinance, although, some years before, the city attorney brought an action against the city to have the ordinance declared void, etc., and made parties defendant many persons, including the commissioners of the said market place, in which action, while other defendants filed an elaborate answer, the city simply made a general denial, and by the judgment the bill was dismissed (Peters v. St. Louis (1910) 226 Mo. 62, 125 S. W. 1134, 21 Ann. Cas. 1069), the court considering that the parties to the present action were not adversary parties in the former action.

The following cases, while beyond the strict scope of this annotation, are of interest in this connection:

Where a citizen brought an action to restrain A and B from selling liquor

In a certain town, and it was adjudicated therein that a majority of the voters had filed a petition under statute, requesting that the bar to prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors in said town be removed, and that therefore such bar was removed, such adjudication was held binding on a stranger, in a suit by another citizen to restrain such stranger from selling intoxicating liquors in said town. McConkie v. Remley (1903) 119 Iowa, 512, 93 N. W. 505.

Where the state, on the relation of the attorney general, had applied for a quo warranto against the governor's appointees, the purpose of the action being to obtain an adjudication upon the validity of the statute under which they had been appointed, and the judgment was of ouster, and held that the statute was unconstitutional, the state, on the relation of the attorney general, may not, by a new application for quo warranto, try the question over again, though some of the respondents and interveners were not parties to the first action. State ex rel. Smyth v. Kennedy (1900) 60 Neb. 300, 83 N. W. 87.

A judgment in an action by the state, on the relation of the mayor of a city, against the county assessor, directing the defendant to extend certain taxes upon the rolls, is no bar to an action against the county by a taxpayer, to strike such taxes off the rolls as against its property, as both parties to the prior action represented interests adverse to the taxpayer. Northern P. R. Co. v. Snohomish County (1918) 101 Wash. 686, 172 Pac. 878.

In Sauls v. Freeman (1888) 24 Fla. 209, 12 Am. St. Rep. 190, 4 So. 525, it was held that a judgment in mandamus, commanding the county commissioners to call an election on the question of changing the location of the county site, is a bar to a bill in equity, instituted by registered voters other than those who were relators in the mandamus, to restrain the commissioners from moving the county records to the place chosen as the county site at such election, the matters alleged in the bill being such as could have been set up by the commissioners in the mandamus proceeding.

B. B. B.

JOHN L. DOWNING

v.

MERCHANTS' NATIONAL BANK OF GREENE, IOWA, Appt.

Iowa Supreme Court — October 18, 1921.

(192 Iowa, 1250, 184 N. W. 722.)

Negligence — duty with respect to entrances to business room.

1. A bank owes the duty to all who come to its banking house on business to exercise reasonable care and prudence to provide a safe and suitable entrance to the banking rooms, and have the approaches thereto so constructed and maintained that customers will not be liable to step into dangerous pitfalls by reason of misleading doors.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1147.]

Trial — negligence as question of law.

2. The courts should declare to the jury as matter of law that one seeking for damages for personal injuries was guilty of contributory negligence, if under the facts disclosed all fair-minded and reasonable men would agree that it was so.

[See 20 R. C. L. 166.]

Negligence — duty of customer to see that entrance door does not open upon steps.

3. The court cannot say, as matter of law, that one about to enter a business building to which the public is invited for the transaction of business is negligent in failing to look to the floor of the vestibule before crossing the threshold of an open door apparently leading into the business room, to see that the door does not open upon a flight of steps.

[See 20 R. C. L. 115; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 1032.]

Trial — question for jury — negligence of one entering bank.

4. The jury must determine whether or not one entering a bank to do business with its officer is negligent in stepping through an open door without looking to see whether or not it led to a flight of steps, where a view through the door exposed the inside of the bank and the officer sought, and what appeared to be the bank counter, although it in fact led to the basement past a railing above and through which the view was obtained.

— negligence of bank toward customer.

5. The jury must determine whether or not a bank is negligent in maintaining a vestibule entrance to its banking room with two doors, one leading into the room and the others to a flight of steps to the basement, but which, when open, gave a view of the interior of the banking room.

— one entering bank on business as licensee.

6. One entering a bank to transact business with it, and also with an employee who is a municipal officer and transacts the municipal business in the bank with the consent of its authorities, is something more than a licensee in regard to the care due him with respect to safety of the premises.

[See 20 R. C. L. 66.]

Appeal — excess of verdict — when set aside.

7. A verdict will not be set aside for excess if it is not so large as to indicate passion and prejudice on the part of the jury.

[See 20 R. C. L. 282.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Butler County (Kelley, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Sager & Sweet and J. G. Mitchell, for appellant:

The record conclusively demonstrates that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, which was the efficient cause of his injury, and by reason of which there can be no recovery.

Devaney v. Omaha & C. B. Street R. Co. 184 Iowa, 1084, 169 N. W. 381; McCormick v. Ottumwa R. & Light Co. 146 Iowa, 119, 124 N. W. 889; Williams v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 139 Iowa, 552, 117 N. W. 956; Brooks v. W. T. Joyce Co. 127 Iowa, 266, 103 N. W. 91, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 78; Milne v. Walker, 59 Iowa, 186, 13 N. W. 101; Hilsenbeck v. Guhring, 131 N. Y. 674, 30 N. E. 580; Buchholtz v. Radcliffe, 129 Iowa, 27, 105 N. W. 336, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 219; Ryerson v. Bathgate, 67 N. J. L. 337, 57 L.R.A. 307, 51 Atl. 708, 11 Am. Neg. Rep. 300; Dreier v. McDermott, 157 Iowa, 726, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 566, 141 N. W. 315; Clark v. Fehlhaber, 106 Va. 803, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 442, 56 S. E. 817; Watson v. Manitou & P. P. R. Co. 41 Colo. 138, 17

L.R.A. (N.S.) 916, 92 Pac. 17; Bremer v. Pleiss, 121 Wis. 61, 98 N. W. 945, 16 Am. Neg. Rep. 275; Sanderson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 167 Iowa, 90, 149 N. W. 188; Burk v. Walsh, 118 Iowa, 397, 92 N. W. 65; Schmidt v. Bauer, 80 Cal. 565, 5 L.R.A. 580, 22 Pac. 256; Campbell v. Abbott, 176 Mass. 246, 57 N. E. 462; Hutchins v. Priestly Exp. Wagon & Sleigh Co. 61 Mich. 252, 28 N. W. 85; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sanderson, 175 Ky. 11, L.R.A. 1917D, 890, 192 S. W. 869; Steger v. Immen, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 246, and note, 157 Mich. 494, 122 N. W. 104; Speck v. Northern P. R. Co. 108 Minn. 435, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 249, 122 N. W. 497, 17 Ann. Cas. 460; Johnson v. Ramberg, 49 Minn. 341, 51 N. W. 1043; Gaffney v. Brown, 150 Mass. 479, 23 N. E. 233; McNaughton v. Illinois C. R. Co. 136 Iowa, 177, 113 N. W. 844; Piper v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 156 N. Y. 224, 41 L.R.A. 724, 66 Am. St. Rep. 559, 50 N. E. 851, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 331; Weller v. Consolidated Gas Co. 198 N. Y. 98, 139 Am. St. Rep. 798, 91 N. E. 286; Rohrbacher v. Gillig, 203 N. Y. 413, 96

N. E. 783; Brugher v. Buchtenkirch, 167 N. Y. 153, 60 N. E. 420; Hertz v. Advertiser Co. 201 Ala. 416, L.R.A. 1918F, 137, 78 So. 794; Stanwood v. Clancey, 106 Me. 72, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1213, 45 Atl. 293; McCarvell v. Sawyer, 173 Mass. 540, 73 Am. St. Rep. 319, 54 N. E. 259.

The record entirely fails to disclose any evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, and there can, therefore, be no liability.

McNaughton v. Illinois C. R. Co. 136 Iowa, 177, 113 N. W. 844; F. W. Woolworth & Co. v. Conboy, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 743, 95 C. C. A. 404, 170 Fed. 934; Hunnewell v. Haskell, 174 Mass. 557, 55 N. E. 320, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 53; Lord v. Sherer Dry Goods Co. 205 Mass. 1, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232, 137 Am. St. Rep. 420, 90 N. E. 1153, 18 Ann. Cas. 41; Hollenbaek v. Clemmer, 66 Wash. 565, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 698, 119 Pac. 1114, 2 N. C. C. A. 530; Brooks v. W. T. Joyce Co. 127 Iowa, 269, 103 N. W. 91, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 78; Milne v. Walker, 59 Iowa, 186, 13 N. W. 101; Buchholtz v. Radcliffe, 129 Iowa, 27, 105 N. W. 336, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 219; Bird v. Hart-Parr Co. 165 Iowa, 542, 146 N. W. 74; Larned v. Vanderlinde, 165 Mich. 464, 131 N. W. 165; Hilsenbeck v. Guhring, 131 N. Y. 674, 30 N. E. 580; Hertz v. Advertiser Co. 201 Ala. 416, L.R.A. 1918F, 137, 78 So. 794.

The plaintiff, upon his own showing, was a mere licensee to whom the defendant owed no duty other than to protect him against wanton and wilful injury, and the record is susceptible of no other inference than that the defendant discharged its full duty toward the plaintiff.

Benson v. Baltimore Traction Co. 77 Md. 535, 20 L.R.A. 714, 39 Am. St. Rep. 436, 26 Atl. 973; Galveston Oil Co. v. Morton, 70 Tex. 400, 8 Am. St. Rep. 611, 7 S. W. 756; Menteer v. Scalzo Fruit Co. 240 Mo. 177, 144 S. W. 833; Peake v. Buell, 90 Wis. 508, 48 Am. St. Rep. 946, 63 N. W. 1053; McDermott v. Sallaway, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 458, note; 29 Cyc. 451; Burner v. Higman & S. Co. 127 Iowa, 580, 103 N. W. 802; Muench v. Heinemann, 119 Wis. 441, 96 N. W. 800, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 221.

The verdict of the jury is excessive and due to passion and prejudice.

Etzkorn v. Oelwein, 142 Iowa, 107, 120 N. W. 636, 19 Ann. Cas. 999; Chapman v. Pfarr, 145 Iowa, 196, 123 N. W. 992.

Messrs. M. Hartness and E. H. McCoy, for appellee:

The plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, and the question of contributory negligence was a question of fact for the jury and not a question of law for the court.

Mathews v. Cedar Rapids, 80 Iowa, 459, 20 Am. St. Rep. 436, 45 N. W. 894; Lichtenberger v. Meriden, 91 Iowa, 45, 58 N. W. 1058; Earl v. Cedar Rapids, 126 Iowa, 361, 106 Am. St. Rep. 361, 102 N. W. 140; Gardner v. Waterloo Cream Separator Co. 134 Iowa, 6, 111 N. W. 316; Overton v. Waterloo, 164 Iowa, 332, 145 N. W. 889; Erickson v. Manson, 180 Iowa, 378, 160 N. W. 276; Brown v. Stevens, 136 Mich. 311, 99 N. W. 12, 16 Am. Neg. Rep. 101; Pelton v. Schmidt, 104 Mich. 345, 53 Am. St. Rep. 462, 62 N. W. 552; Rhodus v. Johnson, 24 Ind. App. 401, 56 N. E. 942; McRickard v. Flint, 114 N. Y. 222, 21 N. E. 153; Hendricken v. Meadows, 154 Mass. 599, 28 N. E. 1054; Hommel v. Badger State Invest. Co. 166 Wis. 235, 165 N. W. 20; Steinke v. Halvorsen, 46 N. D. 10, 178 N. W. 964; Brosnan v. Sweetser, 127 Ind. 1, 26 N. E. 555.

Defendant was negligent in leaving the door leading to the basement open, and in not providing barriers or light to prevent persons from falling down the stairway.

Gardner v. Waterloo Cream Separator Co. 134 Iowa, 6, 111 N. W. 316; Wilsey v. Jewett Bros. & Co. 122 Iowa, 315, 98 N. W. 114; Burner v. Higman & S. Co. 127 Iowa, 580, 103 N. W. 802; Roth v. Buettell Bros. Co. 142 Iowa, 212, 119 N. W. 166; Upp v. Darner, 150 Iowa, 403, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 743, 130 N. W. 409, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 574; Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1, 21 Am. St. Rep. 549, 46 N. W. 21; Clopp v. Mear, 134 Pa. 203, 19 Atl. 504; Rhodus v. Johnson, 24 Ind. App. 401, 56 N. E. 942; Brown v. Stevens, 136 Mich. 311, 99 N. W. 12, 16 Am. Neg. Rep. 101; Pelton v. Schmidt, 104 Mich. 345, 53 Am. St. Rep. 462, 62 N. W. 552; McRickard v. Flint, 114 N. Y. 222, 21 N. E. 153; Hendricken v. Meadows, 154 Mass. 599, 28 N. E. 1054; Brosnan v. Sweetser, 127 Ind. 1, 26 N. E. 555; Hommel v. Badger State Invest. Co. 166 Wis. 235, 165 N. W. 20; Steinke v. Halvorsen, 46 N. D. 10, 178 N. W. 964.

Even if the plaintiff was to concede, which he does not, that the only purpose in going to the bank was to see Carney, the township clerk, the plaintiff would be an invitee under the record and entitled to the same degree of care as if he went to the bank to transact banking business only.

Croft v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 132 Iowa, 687, 108 N. W. 1053, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 534; Connell v. Keokuk Electric R. & P. Co. 131 Iowa, 622, 109 N. W. 177; Whitman v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 171 Iowa, 277, 153 N. W. 1023; Noyes v. Des Moines Club, 178 Iowa, 815, 160 N. W. 215; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Means, 59 Ind. App. 383, 104 N. E. 785, 108 N. E. 375, 5 N. C. C. A. 101; 29 Cyc. 457.

The verdict was not excessive nor the result of passion and prejudice.

Rose v. Ft. Dodge, 180 Iowa, 331, 155 N. W. 170; Whitney v. Sioux City, 172 Iowa, 336, 154 N. W. 497; Long v. Ottumwa R. & Light Co. 162 Iowa, 11, 142 N. W. 1008; Sherwood v. Crescent

Faville, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant is the owner of a bank building in Greene, Iowa. The building faces the south and is located immediately adjacent to a sidewalk. In the front of the building is a vestibule containing two doors. One door on the north side of the vestibule opens into the lobby of the bank. On the east of the vestibule is also a door which opens into a stairway leading to the basement. The exterior of the building showing this vestibule and the doors is shown in the following photograph:

The stairway in question starts immediately from the threshold of the east door. On the inside of the building the stairway is separated from the banking room by a balustrade or railing. This balustrade is the same height as the bank counter and has something of the same general appearance and construction. The base of the bank counter is solid, while the balustrade has an open lowing photograph shows a view of this balustrade, taken through the open doorway leading from the vestibule to the stairway in controversy:

Creamery Co. 130 Minn. 263, 153 N. W. 525; Peery v. Illinois C. R. Co. 128 Minn. 119, 150 N. W. 382.

or latticework base, and the top of the balustrade is narrower than the top of the bank counter. The fol-

In the front of the bank building there are two large plate glass windows, one of which appears in the first photograph. The following is a plat of a portion of the ground floor of the bank showing the situation:

(192 Iowa, 1250, 184 N. W. 722.)

open doorway in the direction of the bank officer, and as soon as he stepped through the doorway, he was precipitated down the stairway.

About 5 o'clock in the afternoon of April 1, 1916, the appellee, desiring to transact some business with an officer of the bank, entered the vestibule of the bank. It was a bright day and the sun was shining. The appellee had been to the bank once or twice before the day in question. At the time he entered the vestibule the evidence tends to show that the door leading into the bank lobby or corridor was closed and the curtain drawn, and that the door on the right or east side of the vestibule, leading to the stairway, was open. This door swung into the vestibule, so that, when opened, it partially, at least, obstructed the door leading into the bank. As the appellee entered the vestibule, he claims, the open doorway was in front of him, and he looked through the opening and across the balustrade, above referred to, and saw the officer of the bank for whom he was looking in the banking room. He testified that he believed the balustrade to have been the bank counter, and believed that he was walking into the bank proper. He immediately proceeded through the and suffered the injuries complained of.

I. It is urged in behalf of the appellant that, under the circumstances surrounding the accident, the appellee was guilty of contributory negligence, and that the court should have so directed the jury and withdrawn the case from its consideration. If all fair-minded and reasonable men would agree, under the facts disclosed, that the appellee was guilty of contributory negligence, then the court should so declare, as a matter of law.

Trial—negligence as question of law.

It is urged that the appellee must be held to be guilty of contributory negligence because of the fact that, under the circumstances disclosed, he passed through the open doorway without looking to see where he was stepping. It must be remembered that this was a building that the public was invited to enter. If the jury believed the appellee's testimony regarding the conditions surrounding him at the time, he believed, and had reason to believe, that he was walking through the open doorway into the bank building to transact business with an officer of the bank, whom he saw, and who was behind what appeared to appellee to be the counter of the bank.

It is strenuously argued that, if he had looked to the floor, he would have seen the open stairway, and that it was his duty so to look, and to observe where he was walking. We are not prepared to hold that,

Negligence—duty of customer to see that entrance door does not open
upon steps.

as a matter of law, a person about to enter a bank, store, or other business building, which the public is invited to enter for the transaction of business, is guilty of negligence in failing to look to the floor of the vestibule or corridor of such a place of business before crossing the threshold of an open door.

As a general rule, it may be stated that the defendant owed a duty to all persons who properly came to the bank on business to exercise reasonable care and prudence to provide a safe and suitable entrance to said bank, and to have the approaches thereto so constructed and maintained that visitors would not be liable to step into dangerous pitfalls by reason of misleading doors. As bearing on this general proposition, see Foren v. Rodick, 90 Me. 276, 38 Atl. 175; Gordon v. Cummings, 152 Mass. 513, 9 L.R.A. 640, 23 Am. St. Rep. 846, 25 N. E. 978; Hayward v. Merrill, 94 Ill. 349, 34 Am. Rep. 229; Camp v. Wood, 76 N. Y. 92, 32 Am. Rep. 282; Gillvon v. Reilly, 50 N. J. L. 26, 11 Atl. 481.

—duty with respect to entrances to business room.

"It is a sound rule of law that it is not contributory negligence not to look out for danger when there is no reason to apprehend any." Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1, 21 Am. St. Rep. 549, 46 N. W. 21.

The cases discussing the question of contributory negligence and negligence, where the facts are similar to those in the case at bar, are somewhat numerous. We cannot review all of them.

In Hayward v. Merrill, 94 Ill. 349, 34 Am. Rep. 229, plaintiff was a guest at a hotel. His room was in the hallway and was numbered "38." It was the corner room. About 2½ feet from it was another room numbered "40." The doors of the two rooms were alike. Gas was burning in the hall, but not very brightly. The plaintiff had recently been a guest at the hotel, and occupied room 38, which was now assigned him. By mistake he opened room No. 40, and fell down an opening, and was injured. It was held that the case was properly for the jury.

In McRickard v. Flint, 114 N. Y. 226, 21 N. E. 153, it appeared that the plaintiff was in defendants' building, where he observed a folding door that was usually kept closed during the day. When he approached the folding door, it was partly open, and he opened it farther and entered. It was between 12 and 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and within the room it was light. If the plaintiff had stopped and looked about him when he entered the door, he could evidently have seen the situation. The court held that the question of contributory negligence of the plaintiff was properly for the jury.

In Clopp v. Mear, 134 Pa. 203, 19 Atl. 504, it appeared that the defendant's store had two entrances, which presented the same appearance when the outside doors were closed. Between these doors was a display window. The northerly entrance was intended for purchasers. When the doors were closed, as they were at the time of the injury, the entrances were externally alike. Plaintiff and her friend, passing the store, saw in the window an article which one of them wished to purchase. Plaintiff opened the southerly door and plunged into a cellar. It was held that the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were properly for the jury.

Rhodus v. Johnson, 24 Ind. App. 401, 56 N. E. 942, is a case where a woman stepped from a hallway through an open door into an elevator shaft. The evidence shows that, when she opened the door, she walked in without paying any attention to what she was stepping into. The court said: "The question to be determined from the evidence is, whether appellee was proceeding as an ordinarily prudent person would have proceeded under the circumstances. The open doorway, if not an invitation to enter, was certainly not a warning of danger. What is due care must depend upon circumstances." The court held that the question of contributory negligence was for the jury.

In Foren v. Rodick, supra, it appeared that a set of offices in a building were occupied by a physician, and a sign bearing the physician's name was affixed to the outside of the building a few feet above the sidewalk, one end being fastened to the casing on the right-hand side of the cellar door, and the other end to the casing on the left-hand side of the main entrance door. The plaintiff, desiring to visit the physician, by mistake, opened the door to the cellar, and fell and was injured. The evidence showed that the double doors of the main entrance were open, revealing a vestibule or lobby; that the store and sidewalk and, to some extent, the landing at the entrance, were lighted by electric lights, and the cellar was well provided with windows. The plaintiff testified that she took no pains to know where she was stepping. The court said: "She was seeking to enter the building by the implied invitation of the defendants. She had a right to expect reasonable safety and convenience in the approaches. She was not required to use extraordinary precaution, but only such ordinary care and caution as persons of reasonable prudence, care, and discretion usually and ordinarily exercise under such circumstances." It was held to be a case for the jury.

In Gordon v. Cummings, 152 Mass. 513, 9 L.R.A. 640, 23 Am. St. Rep. 846, 25 N. E. 978, an elevator well in a building opened directly on the street by a doorway separated by a post 1 foot wide from the entrance to the hallway of the building, which was of about the same construction, and the threshold of which was a continuation of that of the elevator entrance, but not quite of the same width. The entrance to the hallway proper had no door, but the entrance to the elevator could be closed by a door and by hooking a chain across it. Plaintiff, seeking to enter the hallway on a dark evening, stepped into the elevator entrance, which was not closed, and was injured. The plaintiff had passed very many times, and was aware that the two entrances were close to each other. The court held that the case was properly submitted to the jury.

In Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1, 21 Am. St. Rep. 549, 46 N. W. 21, we quote from the syllabus as follows (46 N. W. 21):

"In front of the rear door of their store, and about a foot and a half distant from it, defendants maintained a hatchway opening into the cellar. There was no railing around the hatchway, and such door was freely used for entrance into the store. Plaintiff, who did business in the store, went out to the knowledge of one of defendants' employees, and in his absence the hatchway was opened. The door was left unlocked, and no one stationed at the opening to give notice thereof. Plaintiff returned through such door, and fell through the hatchway. Held, that defendants were negligent.

"Plaintiff was fully acquainted with the location of the hatchway, and knew that it was customary, at the time of day the accident happened, to use it. He did not stop to see whether the trapdoor was open, but it had been customary to keep the door locked when the hatchway was opened. Held, that the question of contributory negligence was for the jury."

Appellant relies upon McNaughton v. Illinois C. R. Co. 136 Iowa, 177, 113 N. W. 844, as being controlling in this case. We do not so regard it. In that case a lady entered the women's waiting-room of a railway station and immediately opened a door supposing it to be the door to the toilet room, stepped through, and fell to the bottom of a stairway. The word "Basement" was painted upon the door, although it was obscured by the people gathered about it. The door to the toilet room was properly designated, but this was somewhat obscured from view by its location. The situation is altogether different from that disclosed in the instant case. We held in the McNaughton Case that it was not negligence, under the circumstances, for the railway company to maintain this closed door, with a knob and catch on it, leading to the basement. We said: "Every precaution had been taken, save that of locking it, against its improper use."

The situation is altogether different from that in the case at bar, where the door in question was so located that, when open, as the evidence tends to show it was when the accident happened, it was the apparent way provided for persons having business with the bank to enter for the transaction of such business. The open door, the presence of the man with whom appellee had business, the appearance of the balustrade, and all the attendant circumstances were such that the jury might have found that appellee was not guilty of negligence in failing to look toward the spot where he was about to step as he passed through the open doorway. As bearing on this question, see Mathews v. Cedar Rapids, 80 Iowa, 459, 20 Am. St. Rep. 436, 45 N. W. 894; Overton v. Waterloo, 164 Iowa, 332, 145 N. W. 889; Erickson v. Manson, 180 Iowa, 378, 160 N. W. 276.

Under all the facts and circumstances disclosed by this record, it was undoubtedly a question for the jury to determine whether or not the appellee was guilty of negligence in stepping through the open doorway under the circumstances disclosed, and it was not error to refuse to direct a verdict on this ground. As bearing somewhat on the general proposition involved, see Gardner v. Waterloo Cream Separator Co. 134 Iowa, 6, 111 N. W. 316.

Neither was it error on the part of the court to refuse to direct the jury to return a verdict in favor of appellant on the ground that the evidence fails to show that it was guilty of negligence. It must be remembered that this building was one to which the public was invited to come for the purpose of transacting business. It certainly was for the jury to say whether the appellant was guilty of negligence in maintaining this building with the two doors in close proximity opening from this vestibule, one of which the public was invited and expected to enter, and the other of which opened directly into a precipitous stairway. It was for the jury to say whether it was negligence to permit the door leading to this stairway to be open under the circumstances disclosed by the record, if the jury found that it was open, and to leave the same without barrier or guard to protect one who might enter the vestibule. The question of appellant's negligence under all of the facts was clearly one for the jury, and the court did not err in not directing a verdict.

II. It is urged that the appellee was a mere licensee. The evidence of the appellee was to the effect that he went to the bank to transact some business with the bank regarding the settlement of a sale; also to see one of the officers of the bank in regard to a township matter. The bank knew that the officer of the bank was also an officer of the township, and did township business at the bank with the consent of its officers. Under these circumstances the appellee was something more than a mere licensee in going upon the premises to conduct this business, even though it was of

Trial-question
for jury—negligence of one entering bank.

—negligence of bank toward customer.

—one entering bank on business
as licensee.

a dual character. The instruction complained of on this subject was proper and meets with our approval.

III. It is strenuously urged that the verdict returned by the jury of $2,750 is excessive, and is the result of passion and prejudice on the part of the jury. The verdict is large for the injury sustained. The appellee's damages are not to be measured by the mere loss of time, but are also for pain and suffering, for which the amount to be awarded is peculiarly within the province of the jury. The plaintiff's injuries were somewhat serious and painful. We cannot say that the amount awarded is so large as to be indicative of passion and prejudice on the part of the jury. Appeal—excess of verdict—when set aside.

We cannot substitute our judgment for that of the jury in a matter of this kind, where the verdict does not appear to be excessive, or to be the result of passion and prejudice. We find no errors urged by the appellant which would justify a reversal of the case.

It therefore follows that the judgment of the District Court must be affirmed.

Evans, Ch. J., and Stevens and Arthur, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ANNOTATION.

Liability for injury to person on business premises in consequence of passing through wrong doorway.

I. Person entering or leaving store, office, or the like:

a. Generally, 1147.

b. Effect of contributory negligence, 1152.

II. Guest in hotel, 1154.

III. Passenger, 1155.

I. Person entering or leaving store, office, or the like.

a. Generally.

Where a store, office building, or similar business establishment to which the public is impliedly invited to resort has a door leading to a cellar, elevator shaft, or other dangerous place, which is left unfastened, and which from its location and appearance may be mistaken for a door which a member of the public on the premises is entitled to use, the proprietor is liable to a person who by mistake passes through that door and is injured. Rhodus v. Johnson (1900) 24 Ind. App. 401, 56 N. E. 942; Foren v. Rodick (1897) 90 Me. 276, 38 Atl. 175; Gordon v. Cummings (1890) 152 Mass. 513, 9 L.R.A. 640, 23 Am. St. Rep. 846, 25 N. E. 978; Camp v. Wood (1879) 76 N. Y. 92, 32 Am. Rep. 282; McRickard v. Flint (1889) 114 N. Y. 226, 21 N. E. 153; Clopp v. Mear (1890) 134 Pa. 203, 19 Atl. 504. And see the reported case (DOWNING v. MERCHANTS' NAT. BANK, ante, 1138).

In Schmidt v. Bauer (1889) 80 Cal. 565, 5 L.R.A. 580, 22 Pac. 256, the court said: "The keeper of a public place of business is bound to keep his premises and the passageways to and from them in safe condition, and to use ordinary care to avoid accident or injury to those properly entering upon his premises on business."

However, a person who has received an injury in consequence of passing through a wrong doorway in a part of the building not designed for the use of unattended customers cannot recover unless he was induced to enter therein by the invitation or allurement of the keeper of the premises. Ibid.; Menteer v. Scalzo Fruit Co. (1912) 240 Mo. 177, 144 S. W. 833.

In Schmidt v. Bauer (Cal.) supra, the evidence showed substantially that the defendant was a keeper of a liquor saloon, and that his private residence was connected therewith, in the same building; that the plaintiff was in the saloon drinking beer; that he asked the defendant the way to the urinal; that the defendant pointed the way; that in the direction indicated by him there was a stairway leading to the urinal in the basement of the building, and on the wall the word "Toilet" was painted in large letters to direct the way; that in the same general direction pointed out by the defendant there was a door leading out on to a porch, back of the defendant's dwelling or family rooms, from which a stairway led down into the back yard; that the plaintiff, instead of taking the stairway leading to the urinal connected with the saloon, passed through the door out on to the porch and down into the back yard, where there was a urinal for the use of the family; that the plaintiff attempted to return to the saloon, but instead of coming through the door through which he had passed out, he opened another door leading into another and private part of the house, where the floor had been taken up for the purpose of making repairs, and, stepping in, was precipitated into a cellar and injured; that the plaintiff did not know the condition of the building which caused his fall, and that he supposed that he was coming back through the door at which he had gone out. It also appeared that the plaintiff both denied and admitted that he knew what the word "Toilet" painted on the wall meant, but testified that he did not see it. Holding the plaintiff to be a bare licensee, and the defendant to be free from any actionable negligence, the court said: "Conceding that the respondent was not wrongfully in the place where the accident occurred, and giving the most liberal construction to his evidence, he was there by the mere license of the appellant, and for that reason the appellant owed him no duty, and he went there subject to all the risks attending his going."

It was alleged in Menteer v. Scalzo Fruit Co. (1912) 240 Mo. 177, 144 S. W. 833, that the plaintiff's intestate met his death as the result of mistaking the door of an elevator shaft, at the bottom of which he was found, for a passageway of some other nature in the defendant's store. There was no evidence that customers were permitted to, or did, visit that part of the building unattended, nor was there any evidence that the intestate had ever been there. Affirming a nonsuit the court said: "A merchant's duty to use ordinary care to keep the premises to which he expressly or impliedly invites customers in such condition as to prevent injury to them . . . arises out of, and is coextensive both as to time and place with, the invitation extended. To create an obligation of this kind the invitation must proceed from the merchant to the customer as an individual, or as one of a class or of the public, and cannot be enlarged by the customer to include parts of the premises to which the invitation does not extend. When an invitee steps clearly beyond the bounds of his invitation, he then becomes a mere licensee, at most, and must take as he finds it the part of the premises he then enters. He may complain of wanton or intentional injury or active negligence, it is said, but not that the place into which he goes for his own purposes, and without invitation, was not made safe in anticipation of his unexpected and undesired presence."

In Clopp v. Mear (1890) 134 Pa. 203, 19 Atl. 504, the court stated the facts and its conclusion as follows: "It appears from the evidence that defendants' store, on the west side of Second, north of Arch street, had two entrances, which presented the same appearance when the outside doors were closed, as was the case on the day that plaintiff was injured. Between these doors or places of entrance was a bulk window, in which articles of chinaware, queen's ware, etc., were displayed. The northerly entrance was intended for purchasers, and when the outside door was open it revealed an inside door, on the side of which was an enameled plate with the word 'Push' painted on it; but, when all the outer doors were closed, as they were on the day plaintiff fell into the hatchway, both entrances were externally alike, as to size, shape, appearance, etc., and equally inviting to anyone, not familiar with the premises, wishing to enter the store. In front of both was a marble slab, forming a step from the sidewalk. Immediately behind the southerly door or entrance, and within a few inches of the doorsill, was a hoistway 8 or 10 feet square. When not in use, a trapdoor flush with the floor covered the opening into the cellar, and those connected with the store used it as a passageway and entrance. When the hoistway was in use, the trapdoor was up—not across the entrance, but at right angles thereto. The front door was usually locked; but, on the day of the accident the hoistway had been used, and the men had gone to another part of the store, leaving it open and the front door unlocked. The plaintiff and her friend, passing the store, saw in the window an article which one of them wished to purchase. Mrs. Clopp opened the southerly door, and, taking the entering step to the store, plunged headlong into the cellar, about 12 feet in depth, and sustained injuries which, as the evidence tends to show, were of a very serious and permanent character. On the evidence, tending to prove the foregoing and other facts, the case was fairly submitted to the jury in a clear and comprehensive charge, in which the law applicable to the case was very fully and distinctly stated. The attention of the jury was specially directed to the questions of negligence and contributory negligence, upon which they were directed to pass in making up their verdict, and they were correctly instructed as to the law applicable thereto. . . . The case hinged solely upon questions of fact, which were carefully submitted to the jury, and which they appear to have disposed of according to the manifest weight of the evidence."

In Rhodus v. Johnson (1900) 24 Ind. App. 401, 56 N. E. 942, it appeared that the plaintiff entered the defendant's saloon to see her brother on business, and while going to a rest room, in which she had previously been, but with the location of which, at the time of the accident, she was unfamiliar, mistook the partly opened door of the elevator for that of the rest room, and fell, sustaining severe injuries. It also appeared that the hall from which the elevator door opened was dimly lighted, sufficient to discern objects therein, but insufficient to shed any light into the elevator pit. The court sustained a recovery, saying that the plaintiff had a right to rely on the defendant's keeping their premises in a reasonably safe condition for those invited to use them, and was not required to look at every place where she stepped.

In the reported case (Downing v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, ante, 1138) a recovery is sustained, it appearing that the plaintiff attempted to enter the defendant's place of business through the front door, but, by mistake, opened and entered a door, in close proximity thereto, leading to the basement into which he fell and was injured.

In Gordon v. Cummings (1890) 152 Mass. 513, 9 L.R.A. 640, 23 Am. St. Rep. 846, 25 N. E. 978, it appeared that the plaintiff, a letter carrier, was injured by falling into an elevator well which communicated directly with the street by an opening provided with a sliding door and a chain to guard it. Separated from the opening by a granite post a foot wide was an open doorway of about the same size and construction, and on the same level from the street, which led to the common entry of the building in the hall of which were mail boxes for the tenants. At the time of the accident the elevator opening was not protected by the chain, and the plaintiff mistook it for the doorway to the hall. The building was occupied by several work shops, but the owner retained control of the hall. In sustaining a recovery against the owner of the building the court said: "He [the plaintiff] had a right to suppose that, when seeking to enter where he had a right to go, he would not be exposed to this danger, and that an entrance by its side, easily to be mistaken for it, would not be left open and uninclosed by any barrier at a time when it was not in use."

The defendant in Camp v. Wood (1879) 76 N. Y. 92, 32 Am. Rep. 282, owned a three-story building, on the third floor of which was a hall rented for dancing. The dance hall was reached by two stairways, one above the other. In front of the foot of the stairway on the second floor a hallway led to a door opening on an awning, in the same manner as the door on the first floor in front of the lower stairway led to the street. It appeared that the plaintiff, in an intoxicated condition, left the dance hall on the third floor, and mistook the door on the second floor for the street door, stepped out on the awning, walked along the side of the house on the awning, a distance of about 40 feet, until he reached the end, fell off, and was injured. It further appeared that the night was dark and there was no guard or rail around the awning; and also that two other persons, on the same evening, who were perfectly sober, mistook this door for the street door, but discovered the situation in time to avoid an injury. A verdict for the plaintiff was affirmed, the court saying: "The plaintiff was rightfully there, upon the invitation of the managers of the entertainment implied from the public character of the assembly, their accepting the entrance fee paid, and his admission to the hall. It is not the case of the owner of premises who gives a bare license or permission to another to enter. The licensee who enters under such a license takes the risk of the ordinary dangers resulting from the faulty construction or arrangement of the premises. In this case, the defendant, by letting the hall for public purposes, held out to the public that the hall was safe, and he was bound to exercise care to provide safe arrangements for the entrance and departure of people who came there upon his invitation. The question whether there was a breach of this duty was, upon the evidence, properly submitted to the jury. The question of the plaintiff's negligence was, we think, a question for the jury also. The fact that he had been drinking, and was, to some extent, affected thereby, was admitted. But the extent of his intoxication, and whether it contributed to his injury, was a matter upon the evidence to be determined by the jury. It was a very important consideration bearing upon the point of contributory negligence, and it is quite probable that the jury did not give a sufficiently favorable construction to the evidence upon this question, in favor of the defendant. But this court does not sit to correct the mistakes of juries in weighing evidence."

It was held in McRickard v. Flint (1889) 114 N. Y. 226, 21 N. E. 153, that the failure of the defendant to comply with a statute requiring elevator wells to be guarded was prima facie evidence of negligence, and that the plaintiff, being in the building on business with one of the occupants, and walking through a door opening into an elevator shaft, by reason of which he fell and was injured, was not guilty of contributory negligence. In that case it appeared that the plaintiff went to the building to see one of the defendants on business, and entered at the easterly door, and, being informed that the defendant was not then there, but might be in the shipping department, which was adjacent and on the west of the building, went out of the westerly door onto the sidewalk, and thence to the place mentioned. Not finding the defendant there he proceeded to return to and into the building in which he first sought the defendant, and seeing a door partly open he entered there, believing it to be the main entrance, and stepped into the shaft. The court said: "If the plaintiff had stopped and looked about when he entered the door, he evidently could have seen the situation. . . . Because he failed to do this it is contended that he was necessarily chargeable with contributory negligence. The plaintiff probably did not stop after he proceeded to enter. . . . It was the duty of the plaintiff to exercise reasonable care, and to take observation of that which was apparent to view as he proceeded. But what is due care and diligence depends upon circumstances. The same precautionary means requisite to relieve a party from the charge of negligence when he approaches known places of danger, or places where danger may be apprehended, may not be required of him when he has no occasion to suppose that danger may be encountered. It cannot be said that the plaintiff upon this occasion was required to apprehend that there might be an exposed elevator pit in the place where he entered. The fact that the door was partly opened enabled him to suppose it was a suitable place of entry. So that the question is whether not seeing it was necessarily negligence on his part. That is not so, unless he was required to stop and take careful observation of the place when he entered upon the threshold and before he proceeded to further enter the room. He says he looked, saw no hole, and one step took him into it. This question of contributory negligence may be considered in view of the influences which ordinarily control human action. That is to some extent governed by appearances, and is not always the consequence of failure to exercise the greatest prudence or to make use of the best judgment. Here the plaintiff in stepping into the room—the first step he took after his entry onto the threshold at a partially open door—received the injury from a cause which he had no apparent reason to expect, and which he failed to see until too late to avoid the calamity. And the fact that the difference in time between his entrance into the room and his fall was only momentary is a circumstance bearing upon his opportunity to see the danger, and probably may have had some consideration upon the question of contributory negligence. The conclusion of the jury that he was free from that imputation was permitted by the evidence."

It appeared in Foren v. Rodick (1897) 90 Me. 276, 38 Atl. 175, that the plaintiff desired to visit a physician whose office was on the second floor of a building. A sign bearing the physician's name was affixed to the outside of the building a few feet above the sidewalk, one end being fastened to the casing on the right-hand side of the cellar door, and the other end to the casing on the left-hand side of the main entrance door. The two doors were 22½ inches apart. Supposing the entrance to the physician's offices to be the door on the left, the plaintiff entered without taking pains to see where she was stepping, and fell into the cellar. Affirming a verdict for the plaintiff, the court said: "Whether the plaintiff was in the exercise of due care and caution is a question involving more difficulty than that of the defendant's negligence. . . . The double doors of the main entrance were open, the street and sidewalk, and, to some extent, the landing at the entrance, were lighted by electric lights, and the cellar was well provided with windows. If she had observed the situation more attentively, and exercised greater caution, she undoubtedly might have discovered, on opening the cellar door, that there was no stairway there leading to the second floor, and that there was a cellarway, without stairs, below. In answer to the question by defendants' counsel, 'Did you take pains to know where you were stepping?' the plaintiff herself says, 'No, sir. If I had, I should not have gone down there.' In other words, if she had not felt satisfied that the door she opened led to the second floor, she would not have opened it; being so satisfied, she did not feel the necessity of further examination. She was confident that she would step onto the landing at the foot of the main stairway. Even if she had been upstairs before, she was not familiar with the premises or the approaches. She was not aware that the doors of the main entrance were usually open. She saw a door having the outward indication of a safe and regular entrance, opening directly from the sidewalk, with the doctor's sign on the casing apparently inviting her to enter. She turned the knob, and the door readily yielded 'about the same as any door.' She says it was dark when she opened the door. There was nothing to suggest a 'yawning abyss.' The existing condition was not instantly manifest, but, suspecting no danger, she naturally stepped over the threshold simultaneously with the inward swing of the door. She was seeking to enter the building by the implied invitation of the defendants. She had a right to expect reasonable safety and convenience in the approaches. She was not required to use extraordinary precaution, but only such ordinary care and caution as persons of reasonable prudence, care, and discretion usually and ordinarily exercise under such circumstances. And while the question is not free from doubt, it is the opinion of the court, after carefully weighing all of the evidence, that there is a preponderance in support of the proposition that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, but may fairly be deemed to have been in the exercise of ordinary care."

b. Effect of contributory negligence.

Where an injury results from the gross carelessness of a person in entering by mistake a strange doorway on business premises, his failure to take proper precautionary measures has been held to be contributory negligence. Greenwell v. Washington Market Co. (1892) 21 D. C. 298; Gaffney v. Brown (1890) 150 Mass. 479, 23 N. E. 233; Hutchins v. Priestly Exp. Wagon & Sleigh Co. (1886) 61 Mich. 252, 28 N. W. 85; Donohue v. Braaf (1907) 122 App. Div. 552, 107 N. Y. Supp. 377. Compare the cases set out in the preceding subdivision, in each of which the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were considered together.

Thus, in Greenwell v. Washington Market Co. (D. C.) supra, it appeared that the plaintiff, while in a public market, made inquiry as to the location of the toilet, and was directed by a person other than an employee or servant of the market to pass out through a door, but was given no direction where to go and no description of the place into which he was to go. It was held that his entering a small opening into a place that was dark, without any examination himself, or further inquiry in regard to the place he was desirous of visiting, which resulted in his falling into an elevator pit, was such gross negligence as to bar a recovery, irrespective of whether he was a licensee or an invitee. The court said: "There was no evidence in the case that there were any water-closets connected with this market, and no evidence that there was any water-closet in the vicinity of this place where the plaintiff fell. He was not directed to go there by any person connected with the defendant, or by any employee or servant of the market house company. It seems to us that the plaintiff was guilty of gross carelessness, according to his own statement, in going into this place where he did. It is an exceedingly unfortunate thing for him, but it would seem to be principally, at least, his own carelessness. He should not have gone or attempted to go into any place there under the circumstances which he states in his evidence. No prudent person would do so. It may be—indeed, for the purpose of passing upon this question, we assume—that the defendant was also guilty of carelessness. In reference to the plaintiff himself, as to whether he was a mere licensee or whether he had a right to go into the market house as a public place, and had a right to presume that the defendant would exercise the proper care as to protecting persons who might go there from falling into places of this character—assuming all that, yet, under the particular circumstances that the plaintiff in his own testimony develops, we think that it shows conclusively that he was guilty of gross negligence, but for which he would not have received this injury; or, at least, that it directly contributed to his receiving the injury. That being true, it is entirely proper that the court should instruct the jury to return a verdict for the defendant, and it is proper that we should sustain the motion to permit a verdict to be entered for the defendant."

So, in Gaffney v. Brown (1890) 150 Mass. 479, 23 N. E. 233, wherein it appeared that the plaintiff, who had entered a public dining room by the usual door, to which she was accustomed, and who had dined at a table farther in the rear of the apartment than that at which she usually took her meals, opened a door in the side of the apartment for the purpose of retiring therefrom, which door was not in any way indicated as a mode of egress, and, without observing whither she was going, or paying any heed to her steps, walked directly over the threshold, and was thus precipitated down a flight of stairs leading to the cellar, to which the doorway directly led, her failure to investigate what lay behind the door was held to be contributory negligence. The court said: "While there was no sign indicating that this door was not to be used, and that no person was to enter or depart thereby, the plaintiff must have been aware that such an apartment would probably have doors leading to closets, or to upper or other apartments, or even to the cellar. She had been in the apartment before, and knew the usual egress therefrom. If she thought it possible that the door which she opened might lead to the hall or entry, and be intended as a mode of egress, it was certainly her duty to look where she was stepping before she advanced across the threshold. She had no right to act unreservedly upon the belief that the door would necessarily be locked unless intended for egress. According to common knowledge and experience, her conduct in this respect was careless."

Similarly, in Hutchins v. Priestly Exp. Wagon & Sleigh Co. (1886) 61 Mich. 252, 28 N. W. 85, wherein it appeared that the plaintiff, in attempting to leave a factory building, stepped down into a bed of shavings, supposing that that was the way out of doors, and was injured by a descending elevator, the court said: "The question is reduced to the simple inquiry whether he was negligent in stepping into the shaft, assuming, as he claims he did, that it was the outside door. He claims to have good sight and hearing. The time when this occurred was in broad daylight, and the outer elevator door was open, so that he saw through it. The space between the doorway into the shaft and the outer one was the full width of the shaft, which was not a small one, being adapted to hoisting such lumber as was handled in the building. The top of the bed of shavings was about a foot below the doorway. When he entered the building, he entered directly by an ordinary door in the wall, and not through any such passage. No man with his wits about him could have mistaken these double doorways, divided by such a space, for an ordinary outside door, or have imagined such a pit to have been the way of exit. Whatever might have been the case in darkness, it could not be difficult to understand it in daylight. Plaintiff saw his horses through the opening, and if he had paid the slightest heed could not have failed to see what was between."

In Donohue v. Braaf (1907) 122 App. Div. 552, 107 N. Y. Supp. 377, the plaintiff's intestate, while being conducted out of a saloon by an employee of the defendant, opened a door other than that shown him by the employee as the exit, and fell down an elevator shaft. It appeared that both doors were plainly visible, and that, as he approached the elevator door and put his hand on it, the employee shouted: "Don't go out that way." The plaintiff's intestate, however, in some way, opened the elevator door, stepped into the elevator shaft, fell to the bottom, and was killed. An examination of this door disclosed that, although there was a hasp so constructed that if the hasp caught the door could be opened only from the inside of the elevator shaft, for some reason the hasp had not caught, and the door could be opened from the outside by pushing it to one side. The court submitted the question as to the defendant's negligence and the freedom of the deceased from contributory negligence to the jury, who found a verdict for the plaintiff. A new trial was ordered, the court saying: "I do not think there was evidence of the defendant's negligence.

The door was not open. There was not such an absence of light that a person walking through this room could not see the situation. There was no invitation by the defendant to open the door and walk into the elevator shaft, and, as the elevator shaft was lighted, as soon as the door had been opened the fact that this was not a means of exit to the street must have been apparent. The defendant could not have anticipated that a person walking through this room would open this elevator door and walk into the elevator shaft, which was lighted and the danger of which was apparent. But, whatever may be said as to the defendant's negligence, it is clear that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence. He approached a door which had the appearance of being the door of an elevator, through which there was a light shining, opened the door with his head turned over his shoulder, so that he could not see where he was going, and stepped into a lighted elevator shaft without looking. The slightest attention to the door before he attempted to open it, or looking after he opened the door, and before he stepped in, would have apprised him of the situation and prevented the accident. Certainly nothing in the situation prevented the deceased from seeing where he was going, or distracted his attention in such a way as to excuse him from looking. If the deceased had shown the slightest care in examining the door he was about to enter, either before or after he had opened it, or had waited until he could have heard the warning of the barkeeper who was following him, the accident would have been avoided. The evidence of the witnesses for the plaintiff and defendant was that there was plenty of light to see the two doors, and certainly, under such circumstances, a person was not justified in opening a door and walking through it without taking the slightest care to see what was on the other side."

II. Guest in hotel.

It appeared in Hayward v. Merrill

(1880) 94 Ill. 349, 34 Am. Rep. 229, that the plaintiff was a guest at a hotel kept by the defendant. Adjoining the room assigned to him was a door, nearly or exactly like his room door, and only 2½ feet distant, that opened into an elevator opening. Gas was burning in the hall, but not very brightly. The rooms on either side of the hall were numbered with white figures about 1 inch in length, and could no doubt be read by the light in the hall by anyone intent on observing them. The plaintiff's room was numbered "38," and the door to the elevator opening was numbered "40." The doors had the same trimmings, and the knobs on them were exactly alike. Both doors had locks and keys, but neither of them seems to have been locked on the night of the accident. The plaintiff, having recently been a guest at the hotel, occupying room "38" which was now again assigned to him, and believing that he could find the room without assistance, discharged the bell boy, and proceeded, as he supposed, to room "38," being the last room on the left side of the hall, but by mistake opened door numbered "40," and, on stepping in to light a match, fell to the basement through the "elevator" opening, sustaining severe injuries. Affirming a recovery by the plaintiff, the court said: "That which caused the injury to plaintiff was a dangerous opening, and, if we accept as proven that which the testimony tends to establish, it was certainly not sufficiently protected. It was known to defendant to be dangerous, for one of the employees of the hotel had fallen there, and been injured in the same way, and the conclusion is fully warranted that the omission to better secure it was gross carelessness. Conceding that plaintiff was guilty of a want of some degree of care, still it was slight in comparison with the negligence of defendant, which we are, on authority from the findings of the lower courts, to believe was gross, in permitting the continued existence of such an opening in his house after it was known to him to be dangerous both to employees and guests. The proprietor of a hotel, to which he invites the public to come that he may make gains thereby, has no right to permit the existence of such an opening as this one was, unless suitably guarded that the slightest mistake on the part of the guest might not prove fatal. Had plaintiff been intent on observing the number on the room door he might have discovered the room he wished to enter, but by the merest accident he opened the next door, and this slight inattention was the cause of his severe injuries. The opening ought to have been better protected than it was, and the omission to do so, under the circumstances proven, may well be attributed to defendant as gross negligence."

In Mauzy v. Kinzel (1886) 19 Ill. App. 571, it appeared that the plaintiff, a guest in the defendant's hotel, while searching in the darkness for the water-closet, found an opening to an elevator not under the defendant's control, and, mistaking it for the door leading to the water-closet, stepped into the opening, and fell down the elevator shaft, receiving severe injuries. It was held, following Hayward v. Merrill (Ill.) supra, that the defendant was liable, the court saying: "It was conceded that the defendant had the use and control of the hall on which the plaintiff's room opened, and from which the short hall on which the elevator shaft was situated led off. Granting that defendant had no control of the elevator shaft, or the small hall leading to it, it was his duty to have maintained a door or barrier at the entrance from the main hall to the small hall which led to the dangerous aperture. To leave the approach from his hall to another which conducted his guest to a pitfall, open and unguarded, was such negligence as would make him liable, in our opinion, and that he had no actual control of the small hall and the shaft itself would not relieve him. When the conditions are permitted to be such, in a hotel, that from slight want of attention, or from the confusion or misapprehension that naturally attends a stranger in feeling his way through a dark hall, one may be led up, without meeting door or barrier, to a well-hole into which a plunge is taken, it may be to death, the hotel keeper cannot escape the charge of negligence on the plea that he had no right to close up the wellhole itself. He might bar or close up the entrance to a small hall, and thus prevent guests of his house, who were unacquainted with the location and the limits of his possession and control in the halls, from entering the passage, to tread which in the darkness was dangerous."

III. Passenger.

Where there is an open doorway leading to a place of danger on a passenger boat, it may be the duty of the carrier to keep it lighted so as to warn a passenger of his danger should he attempt to pass through. Thus, in The Pilot Boy (1885) 23 Fed. 103, 7 Am. Neg. Cas. 649, it appeared that the libellant was a passenger on an excursion boat on which there was an open doorway from which stairs descended to the hold, so located that it was likely to be mistaken for the stairs which ascended to the upper deck. The libellant, believing that the stairs ascended, passed through the doorway leading to the hold and fell. It also appeared that the door was fastened open and the doorway insufficiently lighted. Holding the passenger to be entitled to recover, the court said: "With respect to a boat used for night excursions, and particularly one which has a bar on board, and is intended for more or less merrymaking, the rules of law governing carriers of passengers should not be relaxed, and they should be required to guard against the natural and general ignorance and mistakes of those they invite as passengers. In this case, as the neglect for which I pronounce the steamboat in fault is not one of gross or wilful negligence, the recovery should be strictly confined to a reasonable compensation."

So, a carrier has been held to be liable for an injury resulting from the deceptive similarity of two doorways on its premises which were in close proximity to each other, one of which the person injured was invited to use, and the other of which he entered by mistake. View v. Metropolitan West Side Elev. R. Co. (1911) 166 Ill. App. 154. In that case it appeared that the plaintiff was a passenger on one of the defendant's elevated trains, and undertook to make use of a toilet room maintained by the defendant on the ground floor of a station. The toilet room in question was about 3 feet from the passageway, and between the passageway and the toilet room there was another door opening into a steep stairway leading to the basement. The two doors were entirely similar in appearance, except that the toilet-room door had the word "Men" on it, and a door check or spring near its top, the knobs of the two doors being only about 12 inches apart. The declaration charged, in substance, that by reason of the similarity and the proximity of the door opening into the basement to the door opening into the toilet room, persons desiring to enter the toilet room were liable to enter by mistake the door opening into the basement, and that the defendant was guilty of negligence in permitting the basement door to remain unfastened and unlocked, and that by reason thereof the plaintiff was injured. Affirming a recovery the court said: "This injury occurred on the inside of a passenger station, a place where a person ordinarily has no reason to expect danger, or to anticipate that a very high degree of watchfulness is required on his part to discover and avoid danger. The appearances were that it was a place of rest and refreshment for passengers while waiting for, or retiring from, trains, and without hidden dangers of any character. There was no sign or designation of any kind on the basement door to warn or acquaint the public with the fact that there was a basement there, and the only way to learn such fact was either by opening the basement door, or specially inquiring as to what use was made of the door. It is true that the toilet door had on it in good-sized letters the word 'Men.' This was a sufficient designation for all ordinary persons to understand that behind that door there was a toilet for men; but the two doors being in such close proximity, with the knobs only 10 or 12 inches apart, it was not entirely unreasonable for one looking at the doors so similar in appearance to conclude that they were both doors to the toilet. The very place they occupied and the general appearance would lend weight to this conclusion. The appearance, position, and surroundings of the doors were such also as to make it very probable that persons might by mistake open the wrong door. As appellee had no knowledge of it at all, there is little ground for saying that he ought to have been on the lookout for such a danger, or any danger at all, in that part of the building. . . . The basement door of appellant not being marked in any way, so as to disclose the danger behind it, it was very necessary to keep it locked, or otherwise secured, so that it could not be easily opened by patrons of the place, and we think the jury were warranted, under the evidence, in finding the appellant guilty of negligence in failing to so lock or secure it. The question of the contributory negligence of appellee was also a question of fact for the jury under the evidence, and we do not think that finding is manifestly against the weight of the evidence." The court further distinguished the case at bar from those cases holding to be negligent a plaintiff who fails to ascertain the nature of the passageway beyond the door, saying: "This is one of the instances in which knowledge of where the toilet was did not aid him in apprehending the danger. If he had had no knowledge at all as to what either door led to, he would have been very much less excusable for putting himself hastily through this door. The similarity and position of the doors, and his knowledge that there was a toilet there, and his lack of knowledge of the existence of the basement or any other danger, are the exact apparent reasons why this injury did so occur. Had he been entirely uninformed as to what either door led to, and had the stairway been dark, these facts would furnish strong reasons and incentives for caution and investigation before entering into the door. As is said, in substance, in several cases cited by appellant: "There is no presumption that a person can walk through any door he comes to in a strange house without taking proper precautionary measures." In the case at bar, appellee knew where the toilet was, and had no knowledge or notice of danger at all, actual or constructive, had no occasion to look for a name on the door, knew nothing of the existence of two doors, and, relying on his knowledge, went hastily through the door and fell down the steps. This presents quite a different question to the one in the foregoing cases, in which the injuries were shown to have occurred in apartment houses or hotels, wherein cellars and cellar doors and elevator shafts may be expected to be found."

It has been held, however, that actionable negligence is not shown where it appears that the doorway through which the injured person entered by mistake, and the doorway he intended to enter, were both plainly marked, and the injury resulted from his failure to investigate what lay beyond the door. McNaughton v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1907) 136 Iowa, 177, 113 N. W. 844; Toomey v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. (1857) 3 C. B. N. S. 146, 140 Eng. Reprint, 694, 27 L. J. C. P. N. S. 39, 6 Week. Rep. 44.

It appeared in McNaughton v. Illinois C. R. Co. (Iowa) supra, that a woman entered the waiting room of the defendant and immediately opened a door, supposing it to be the toilet room, stepped through, and fell to the bottom of a stairway. The doorway through which she entered was plainly marked "Basement," although it was obscured by the people gathered about it, and the door leading to the toilet was also plainly marked, although somewhat obscured from view by its location. It was contended that the company was bound to anticipate that persons unfamiliar with the premises, or in a hurry, as they are likely to be in taking a train, might unwittingly enter the basement door, as the plaintiff did, under the erroneous supposition that it was a toilet room or the exit to some other apartment, and therefore that, in the exercise of due care, the door should have been kept locked. Affirming the direction of a verdict for the defendant, the court said: "In the maintenance of its station, ordinary care only was exacted of defendant. . . . And as the public is invited to the premises, this requires that they be kept free from traps and pitfalls such as are likely to cause injury to those having business with the company or persons attending them. . . . But it can hardly be said that a closed door to the stairway down to a basement, with door knob and catch, constitutes a trap or pitfall. Every precaution had been taken, save that of locking it, against its improper use. The heating apparatus was located in the basement, access to which was by this stairway, and leaving the door used by the employees fastened so as to open only upon turning the knob, though unlocked, especially in daylight, when anyone, upon opening it, could plainly see the stairway, was not a negligent act. The company was not bound to anticipate that passengers will assume that every door from the room opens into a toilet, or that without the ordinary use of their senses they will precipitately open the doors therefrom, and enter without thought as to where they lead. From such rooms usually there are several doors, and no one has the right to act unreservedly upon the belief that any door would be locked unless intended for some particular purpose. The fact that a door is there is a warning that it is the means of exit or of entrance from or to some other apartment, and a way up or down stairs, or to a baggage room, or to a closet; and no one has the right to assume, without knowledge or its equivalent, the character of the place to which it affords access. The door was maintained in a way convenient for the employees in caring for the furnace, and not dangerous to the public."

A similar situation was presented in Toomey v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. (Eng.) supra, wherein it appeared that the plaintiff, while waiting for a train, inquired of a person not a servant or employer of the defendant where he could find a urinal, and was directed to go to the right. He did so, and found two doors, on one of which was painted the words "For Gentlemen," and on the other "Lamp Room." Being in a hurry, and unable to read, he opened the wrong door, and fell down some steps. In delivering the opinion of the court, Williams, J., said: "All that appeared was that the plaintiff inquired of a stranger the way to the urinal, and being told to go in a particular direction, where there were two doors, unfortunately opened the wrong one, and through his own carelessness fell down some steps. If there had been any evidence to show that these steps were more than ordinarily dangerous, that possibly might have led to a different conclusion. But all that appears is that the door in question led down some steps into a room which was used for the purposes of the company, and not for the convenience of the public. I cannot say that there was such evidence of negligence in the defendants as the learned judge was bound to leave to the jury." And Willes, J., added: "There was nothing to show that the door and the steps beyond were more than ordinarily dangerous, and it was necessary and proper that something of the sort should be there for the convenient use of the station by the company. It would be difficult so to arrange every part of a station as to render it impossible for careless people to meet with injury."

Likewise, it has been held that a railroad company is not liable, as a matter of law, for any injury resulting to a passenger in a station from opening a strange door, unlike the waiting-room and baggage-room doors, in broad daylight, and falling down a stairway, where the slightest exercise of the sense of sight would have apprised him of the danger before he could have fallen. Speck v. Northern P. R. Co. (1909) 108 Minn. 435, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 249, 122 N. W. 497, 17 Ann. Cas. 460, wherein the court said: "Plaintiff's wife, who for present purposes will be assumed to have been within the rights of a passenger, stood talking to a companion for a time at this door, with her suit case in her hand and with her other hand upon the latch of the single door, turned, and, without making any investigation as to where the door led to, opened it, walked into the opening, lost her balance, fell to the bottom of the basement, and was injured. . . . On this occasion she had gone by the unmistakable baggage-room door, and approached the doors to the waiting room, which were equally well marked. No circumstances distracted her attention or caused haste. She stopped at the door in question, which was plainly differentiated in appearance from the door of the waiting room into which she intended to go, and bore no sign. The threshold of that door was a stone step above the level of the pavement on which she was standing. She opened the door by raising the latch. In broad daylight, without looking ahead, she fell into the open stairway. She failed to note that the door was not marked as a place for women or men, and to observe that the door did not resemble the doors marked as the places where passengers were to go in or to go out of the depot, through one of which she herself had previously passed into and out of the depot. She then walked ahead through the door without looking where she was going, at a time and place where the most casual observation would have revealed to her the open space above the stairway. The slightest exercise of the sense of sight would have apprised her of the danger before she could have fallen. Under these circumstances, defendant, as a matter of law, was not liable in damages."

A. S. M.

COLUMBIAN INSURANCE COMPANY OF INDIANA, Plff. in Err.,
v.
MODERN LAUNDRY.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit — December 21, 1921.

(277 Fed. 355.)

Insurance — false statement of loss — avoidance of policy.

1. A voluntary overvaluation of the loss avoids a fire insurance policy providing that it shall be void if the insured make any attempt to defraud the insurer either before or after loss, although, because of examination of the salvage after the fire by agents of the insurer, it could not have been deceived by the overvaluation.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1164.]

—implication of intent to deceive.

2. When an insured wilfully and knowingly makes a false statement of or regarding a material fact in his proofs of loss or in his testimony regarding the value of the property insured, or the loss or damage thereto by fire, the intention to deceive the insurer is necessarily implied as a natural consequence of such act.

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota (Morris, Dist. J.) to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a fire insurance policy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Argued before Sanborn and Stone, Circuit Judges, and Trieber, District Judge.

Mr. Nathan H. Chase, for plaintiff in error:

The trial court erred in its instructions to the jury in its interpretation of the law applicable to defendant's defense of "attempt to defraud."

Claffin v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 110 U. S. 81, 28 L. ed. 76, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Bank of Timmonsville, 71 C. C. A. 299, 189 Fed. 101; National Bank v. Kershaw Oil Mill, 120 C. C. A. 362, 202 Fed. 90; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hurni Packing Co. 171 C. C. A. 405, 260 Fed. 641; Meyer v. Home Ins. Co. 127 Wis. 293, 106 N. W. 1087; F. Dohmen Co. v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 96 Wis. 56, 71 N. W. 69; Dolloff v. German-American Ins. Co. 82 Me. 267, 17 Am. St. Rep. 482, 19 Atl. 396; Linscott v. Orient Ins. Co. 88 Me. 497, 51 Am. St. Rep. 435, 34 Atl. 405; Rovinsky v. Northern Assur. Co. 100 Me. 112, 60 Atl. 1025; Pottle v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 108 Me. 401, 81 Atl. 481; Fowler v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 35 Or. 559, 57 Pac. 421; Willis v. Horticultural Fire Relief, 69 Or. 293, 137 Pac. 761, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 449; Dumas v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 12 App. D. C. 245, 40 L.R.A. 358; Knop v. National F. Ins. Co. 101 Mich. 359, 59 N. W. 653; Follett v. Standard F. Ins. Co. 77 N. H. 457, 92 Atl. 956; Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Vaughan, 88 Va. 832, 14 S. E. 754; Vaughan v. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. 102 Va. 541, 46 S. E. 692; Hansen v. American Ins. Co. 57 Iowa, 741, 11 N. W. 670; Hodge v. Franklin Ins. Co. 111 Minn. 321, 126 N. W. 1098; Hamberg v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 68 Minn. 335, 71 N. W. 388.

Messrs. M. H. Boutelle, A. H. David, and Le Roy Bowen, for defendant in error:

The instructions of the trial court correctly stated the law applicable to the facts in evidence.

1 Clement, Ins. p. 275; 7 Cooley, Briefs on Ins. § 2416; Alfred Hiller Co. v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 125 La. 988, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 453, 52 So. 104; Insurance Cos. v. Weide (Republic F. Ins. Co. v. Weide) 14 Wall. 375, 20 L. ed. 894; United States v. 99 Diamonds, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 185, 72 C. C. A. 9, 139 Fed. 961; Maher v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 283; Shaw v. Scottish Commercial Ins. Co. 1 Fed. 761; Mack v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 2 McCrary, 211, 4 Fed. 59; Spring Garden Ins. Co. v.

Amusement Syndicate Co. 102 C. C. A. 29, 178 Fed. 519; Oshkosh Packing & Provision Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co. 31 Fed. 200; Hodge v. Franklin Ins. Co. 111 Minn. 321, 126 N. W. 1098; Hamberg v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 68 Minn. 335, 71 N. W. 388; National F. Ins. Co. v. Itasca Lumber Co. 148 Minn. 170, 181 N. W. 337; 4 Joyce, Ins. § 3339; 2 Wood, Ins. § 477; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 342; 14 R. C. L. 1343; Rohrbach v. Aetna Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 613; Rohrbach v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451; Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Gargett, 42 Mich. 289, 3 N. W. 954; German Ins. Co. v. Lockett, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 139, 34 S. W. 173; Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Wagner, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 140, 57 S. W. 876; 2 May, Ins. 3d ed. p. 477, 1104; Clafin v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 110 U. S. 81, 28 L. ed. 76, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error questions the correctness of a portion of the charge of the court to the jury in a trial of an action by the plaintiff, Modern Laundry, Incorporated, against the Columbian Insurance Company of Indiana, a corporation, to recover $10,000 on a policy of insurance against fire for that amount issued to the plaintiff by the defendant on December 16, 1919. The property insured consisted of motors, belts, pulleys, and shafting, tables, chairs, typewriters, stationery, books of account, soaps, cleaning compounds, tools, and implements, and other articles customarily used in the conduct of a laundry. On January 29, 1920, a fire occurred which destroyed a part and injured other parts of the articles insured. On March 23, 1920, the president and secretary of the laundry company made oath to the correctness and truth of schedules of the value of the articles insured, and of the loss and damage on account of the fire thereto, and served these schedules and their affidavit to the correctness thereof upon the insurance company as a preliminary proof of loss. This verified notice of loss stated the value of the articles insured at the time of the fire to have been $20,131.20, and the damage and loss by the fire thereto to have been $12,100. Upon this verified notice the plaintiff demanded the payment by the insurance company of $10,000. The company refused to pay this amount. Thereupon the laundry company sued upon the policy; the insurance company in its answer denied that the property insured was of any such value as that stated in the verified statement of loss, denied that there had been any such loss or damage thereto caused by the fire as was stated therein, alleged that the policy of insurance provided that it should be void if the insured should make any attempt to defraud the insurer either before or after the loss, and that the laundry company, after the fire, had made such an attempt, in that it had knowingly and wilfully greatly overvalued the property insured, and the amount of the loss and damage, in its sworn notice of loss. These issues were tried to a jury, which found the loss to the laundry company, plus the interest on the amount of that loss from June 3, 1920, to December 6, 1920, to have been $7,210, while the laundry company's verified notice made that loss $12,100.

There was substantial evidence at the trial that the defendant in error, in its verified notice of the value of the insured property and of the loss and damage, knowingly and wilfully greatly overvalued that property, and greatly overstated the damage and loss thereto from the fire, although there was also evidence to the contrary. Evidence was introduced at the trial that before the verified statement was made the insurance company had sent men to the scene of the fire from time to time, and that they had been through a portion, but not all, of the laundry building, and that the adjuster of the insurance company had been through the entire building and had examined every piece of machinery.

In this state of the proof the court charged the jury that if they believed from the evidence that the laundry company, by its officers, in the verified statement of loss, knowingly and intentionally made oath to substantial overvaluations of the insured property, or to substantial overstatements of the amount of the loss or damage by the fire, with intent to deceive the insurance company, that would constitute an attempt to defraud the company, and they should return a verdict for the defendant, unless they further found from the evidence that, before the verified notice was served on the insurance company, the latter had investigated and learned the actual value of and the real loss and damage to the insured property, or had had full opportunity so to do, so that the verified statement could not deceive it, but that in case they should find that, before the verified notice was delivered to the insurer, it had investigated and learned the true value of the property and the actual amount of the loss and damage to it from the fire, or had had full opportunity so to do, so that the verified notice could not deceive it, the facts that the laundry company, in that notice had, by its officers, with intent to deceive and defraud the insurance company, knowingly and wilfully falsely sworn that substantial overvaluations of the property were the actual values thereof, and that greatly excessive statements of the loss and damage to the property from the fire were the actual loss and damage, did not constitute an attempt to defraud, or any defense to this action under the contract in the policy that "the policy shall be void if the insured has made any attempt to defraud the company, either before or after the loss."

To this charge the insurance company excepted; and it insists that it was erroneous, because the service of the verified intentionally false statement of overvaluation and of the excessive amount of the loss and damage as clearly constituted, under the terms of this contract just quoted, an attempt to defraud, if it did not and could not deceive the insurance company, as if it could have done so and had done so, and that it has clearly constituted an attempt to defraud if that attempt failed to defraud, as it would have done if it had succeeded.

Counsel for the assured met this contention with this argument: Proof of the avoidance of an insurance policy, under a contract therein that it shall be void if the insured attempts to defraud the insurance company, consists of the same indispensable elements as does proof of the avoidance of a policy under a contract that it shall be void if the insured is guilty of fraud or false swearing in his proof of loss or other evidence relating to the value of the insured property, or the loss of or damage thereto by the fire; proof of the deceit of the insurer and substantial injury to it by the fraud or false swearing is indispensable to an avoidance of the policy, under the contract that it shall be void for such fraud or false swearing, and the impossibility of such deceit is fatal to the attempt to avoid such a policy for fraud and false swearing; therefore the impossibility of the deceit of the insurer in this case by the knowingly and intentionally false overvaluations of the insured property, and the knowingly false statements of greatly excessive loss and damage by the fire, was fatal to the defense that this policy was avoided in this case by the laundry company's attempt to defraud the insurer.

To sustain this argument and its conclusions, counsel for the assured have cited some authorities which fairly support them: Shaw v. Scottish Commercial Ins. Co. (C. C.) 1 Fed. 761, 763; Rohrbach v. Aetna Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 613; Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Gargett, 42 Mich. 289, 3 N. W. 954; German Ins. Co. v. Lockett, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 139, 34 S. W. 173,—although the three cases last cited rest on the fact that the agent of the insurer knew the facts misrepresented when he took the policy. They have also cited many authorities which do not directly rule the questions of law here presented, but which they claim tend to sustain their argument. On the other hand, counsel for the insurer have cited authorities which directly sustain a conclusion diametrically opposite to that which counsel for the assured deduce from their argument, and other authorities which do not directly rule the questions here under consideration, but which they claim tend to sustain the position they take. The authorities thus cited are too numerous to review in detail. The opinions of the courts to which counsel have referred and the briefs of counsel have been read, and these and the arguments at the hearing have received deliberate consideration, with the result that the more persuasive reasons and the weight of authority in the opinion of the court sustain, and it has reached, these conclusions:

The provision of the policy "that the policy shall be void if the insured has made any attempt to defraud the company, either before or after the loss," was a plain, unambiguous contract, binding upon each of the parties to it. That agreement was not that if the insured, before or after the loss, made any attempt to defraud the company, except in instances in which such an attempt could not and did not deceive the insurer, and, except in instances in which such attempt was unsuccessful, the policy should be void. No such exception is expressed or indicated by the clear and comprehensive terms of the agreement, or by the situation or circumstances of the parties when they made it. In false statement of loss—avoidance of policy.

Insurance—

such a state of the facts, courts may not lawfully conceive and ingraft upon the contract such exceptions. The fact that the parties did not set them out in their written contract is conclusive that their minds never met upon them and they never intended to make them.

Proof of the avoidance of a policy, under a contract that it shall be void if the insured attempts to defraud the insurer, does not consist of the same indispensable elements as does proof of its avoidance under a contract that the policy shall be void if the insured is guilty of fraud or false swearing in its proof of loss, or other testimony as to the value of or damage or loss to the insured property.

Neither the deceit of the insurer, nor the possibility of such deceit by the attempt to defraud, is indispensable to plenary proof of avoidance of a policy by such an attempt under the contract here under consideration. An attempt is "an endeavor to do an act carried beyond mere preparation, but . . . short of execution." People v. Moran, 123 N. Y. 254, 10 L.R.A. 109, 20 Am. St. Rep. 732, 25 N. E. 412. And an attempt to defraud is not necessarily a fraud. The attempt may fail, and then the fraud is not perpetrated; it never exists, and the real object and purpose of the contract here under consideration was to protect the insurer against such futile attempts. Deceit and injury to the person deceived thereby are in some cases indispensable to proof of actionable fraud, but neither of them is indispensable to proof of an attempt to defraud. Clafin v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 110 U. S. 81, 83, 84, 28 L. ed. 76, 80, 81, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507; Follett v. Standard F. Ins. Co. 77 N. H. 457, 92 Atl. 957; Sleeper v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 56 N. H. 401, 407, 408; Dolloff v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 82 Me. 267, 17 Am. St. Rep. 482, 19 Atl. 396; Oshkosh Packing & Provision Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co. (C. C.) 31 Fed. 200, 206; Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Vaughan, 88 Va. 832, 14 S. E. 754; Vaughan v. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. 102 Va. 541, 46 S. E. 692.

In Clafin v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., just cited, the contract was: "All fraud or attempt at fraud, by false swearing or otherwise, shall cause a forfeiture of all claims on this company under this policy."

The insurance company, pursuant to a provision of the policy, required the insured to submit to an examination under oath. In that examination he testified falsely as to the manner in which he paid his vendor for the insured property which he purchased. He did this without any intention to deceive or defraud the insurance company, for the purpose of making his testimony consistent with a statement he had made to R. G. Dun & Company in order to enable him to obtain credit. The supreme court, in delivering the opinion in the case, said, among other things: "A false answer as to any matter of fact material to the inquiry, knowingly and wilfully made, with intent to deceive the insurer, would be fraudulent. If it accomplished its result, it would be a fraud effected; if it failed, it would be a fraud attempted. . . . No one can be permitted to say, in respect to his own statements upon a material matter, that he did not expect to be believed; and if they are knowingly false, and wilfully made, the fact that they are material is proof of an attempted fraud, because their materiality, in the eye of the law, consists in their tendency to influence the conduct of the party who has an interest in them, and to whom they are addressed." 110 U. S. 95.

It is further declared, speaking of the contract of avoidance of the policy: "By that contract the companies were entitled to know from him all the circumstances of his purchase of the property insured, including the amount of the price paid and in what manner payment was made; and false statements, wilfully made under oath, intended to conceal the truth on these points, constituted an attempted fraud by false swearing, which was a breach of the conditions of the policy, and constituted a bar to the recovery of the insurance." 110 U. S. 97.

In Follett v. Standard F. Ins. Co. 77 N. H. 457, 92 Atl. 956, the supreme court of New Hampshire held that "false swearing to a statement of loss furnished to the insurer was plainly an attempt to defraud; it was an act done in part execution of what, if carried to a successful issue, would be a completed fraud," and that false swearing by the insured to an overvaluation at the trial, when the insurer presumably was informed of the truth and could not be deceived by the false oath, was an "attempt to defraud the company . . . after the loss."

In Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Vaughan, 88 Va. 832, 14 S. E. 754, the actual loss was $2,000, and the policy only $1,500; but the supreme court of Virginia held that wilfully false statements of a greater loss than the actual loss constituted an attempt to defraud, which avoided the policy, although they could not have deceived the insurance company to its injury.

In view of the conclusions at which we have arrived, there is no logical way of escape from the result that the court below was in error in charging the jury that, if the insurer knew the actual value of the insured property, and the amount of the loss and damage thereto by the fire, or had had full opportunity to know it, so that it could not be deceived by the verified overvaluations and statements of excessive amounts of loss made by the insured, the service of that notice did not constitute an attempt to defraud, although it contained knowingly and wilfully false excessive statements of the value of the property and of the loss and damage caused by the fire.

As this case must be tried again, attention is called to the rule that, where the insured knowingly and wilfully makes a false statement of or regarding a material fact in its proof of loss, or in its testimony regarding the value of the property insured, or the loss or damage thereto by fire, the intention to deceive the insurer is necessarily implied as the natural conse-

implication of intent to deceive.

quence of such act. Claffin v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 110 U. S. 81, 95, 28 L. ed. 76, 82, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Bank of Timmonsville, 71 C. C. A. 299, 139 Fed. 103; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v.

Hurni Packing Co. 171 C. C. A. 405, 260 Fed. 646.

Let the judgment below be reversed, and let this case be remanded to the court below, with directions to grant a new trial.

ANNOTATION.

Overvaluation in proof of loss of property insured as fraud avoiding fire insurance policy.

I. General rules:

- a. Overvaluation made through mistake or inadvertence, 1164.
- b. Overvaluation made knowingly and intentionally, 1168.
- c. Fraudulent intent as question for jury, 1172.

II. Illustrations:

- a. Overvaluation held fraudulent, 1175.
- b. Overvaluation held not fraudulent, 1176.

I. General rules.

a. Overvaluation made through mistake or inadvertence.

It is well settled that where an insured person, in making proof of loss by fire, overestimates through mistake or inadvertence, the value of the property destroyed, the overvaluation does not amount to fraud sufficient to avoid the policy.

United States. — Howell v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. (1874) Fed. Cas. No. 6,780; Huchberger v. Merchants' F. Ins. Co. (1868) 4 Biss. 265, Fed. Cas. No. 6,822; Huchberger v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. (1869) Fed. Cas. No. 6,823, affirmed in (1871) 12 Wall. 164, 20 L. ed. 364; Wiede v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (1871) Fed. Cas. No. 17,617; Sibley v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (1878) 9 Biss. 31, Fed. Cas. No. 12,830; Mack & Co. v. Lancashire Ins. Co. (1880) 2 McCrary, 211, 4 Fed. 59; Oshkosh Packing & Provision Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co. (1887) 31 Fed. 200; Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Amusement Syndicate Co. (1910) 102 C. C. A. 29, 178 Fed. 519; COLUMBIA INS. Co. v. MODERN LAUNDRY (reported herewith) ante, 1159. See also Insurance Cos. v. Weide (Republic F. Ins. Co.

v. Weide) (1872) 14 Wall. 375, 20 L. ed. 874; Putnam v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. (1880) 18 Blatchf. 368, 4 Fed. 753; Miller v. Alliance Ins. Co. (1881) 19 Blatchf. 308, 7 Fed. 649. Alabama. — Tubb v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. (1894) 106 Ala. 651, 17 So. 615.

Arkansas. — American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Ware (1898) 65 Ark. 336, 46 S. W. 129; German-American Ins. Co. v. Brown (1905) 75 Ark. 251, 87 S. W. 135.

California. — Helbing v. Svea Ins. Co. (1880) 54 Cal. 156, 35 Am. Rep. 72.

Illinois. — Commercial Ins. Co. v. Friedlander (1895) 156 Ill. 595, 41 N. E. 183. See also St. Onge v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. (1917) 204 Ill. App. 127; Rockford Ins. Co. v. Nelson (1874) 75 Ill. 548.

Indiana. — Franklin Ins. Co. v. Culver (1855) 6 Ind. 137.

Iowa. — Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. (1886) 68 Iowa, 737, 56 Am. Rep. 870, 28 N. W. 47; Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (1896) 98 Iowa, 606, 40 L.R.A. 845, 67 N. W. 583; Goldstein v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (1904) 124 Iowa, 143, 99 N. W. 696; Helm v. Anchor F. Ins. Co. (1906) 132 Iowa, 177, 109 N. W. 605.

Kentucky. — Western Assur. Co. v. Ray (1899) 105 Ky. 523, 49 S. W. 326; Connecticut F. Ins. Co. v. Union Mercantile Co. (1914) 161 Ky. 718, 171 S. W. 407.

Louisiana. — Daul v. Firemen's Ins. Co. (1883) 35 La. Ann. 98; Erman v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co. (1883) 35 La. Ann. 1095; Dunn v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. (1902) 109 La. 520, 33 So. 585. See also Marchesseau v. Merchants' Ins. Co. (1842) 1 Rob. 438; Rafel v. Nashville M. & F. Ins. Co. (1852) 7 La. Ann. 244.

Maine. — Moore v. Protection Ins. Co. (1848) 29 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 514; Williams v. Phoenix F. Ins. Co. (1871) 61 Me. 67; Hanscom v. Home Ins. Co. (1897) 90 Me. 333, 38 Atl. 324; Hilton v. Phoenix Assur. Co. (1898) 92 Me. 272, 42 Atl. 412; Archibald v. Granite State F. Ins. Co. (1918) 117 Me. 205, 103 Atl. 162.

Massachusetts. — Towne v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. (1888) 145 Mass. 582, 15 N. E. 112.

Michigan. — See Johnston v. Farmers' F. Ins. Co. (1895) 106 Mich. 96, 64 N. W. 5.

Minnesota. — Hamberg v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (1897) 68 Minn. 335, 71 N. W. 388; Hodge v. Franklin Ins. Co. (1910) 111 Minn. 321, 126 N. W. 1098.

Missouri. — Walker v. Phoenix Ins. Co. (1895) 62 Mo. App. 209.

Nebraska. — Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Herpolsheimer (1906) 77 Neb. 232, 109 N. W. 160.

Nevada. — Gerhauser v. North British & M. Ins. Co. (1870) 6 Nev. 15.

New Hampshire. — Compare Leach v. Republic F. Ins. Co. (1878) 58 N. H. 245.

New Jersey. — Carson v. Jersey City Ins. Co. (1881) 43 N. J. L. 300, 39 Am. Rep. 584, affirmed in (1882) 44 N. J. L. 210; Jersey City Ins. Co. v. Nichol (1882) 35 N. J. Eq. 291, 40 Am. Rep. 625.

New York. — Hickman v. Long Island Ins. Co. (1847) 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 374; Unger v. People's F. Ins. Co. (1871) 4 Daly, 96; Gibbs v. Continental Ins. Co. (1878) 13 Hun, 611; O'Brien v. Prescott Ins. Co. (1890) 32 N. Y. S. R. 579, 11 N. Y. Supp. 125, reversed on other grounds in (1892) 134 N. Y. 28, 31 N. E. 265; Cheever v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. (1903) 86 App. Div. 328, 83 N. Y. Supp. 730, affirmed without opinion in (1905) 180 N. Y. 551, 73 N. E. 1121; Nugent v. Rensselaer County Mut. F. Ins. Co. (1905) 106 App. Div. 308, 94 N. Y. Supp. 605; Hirschman v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1910) 123 N. Y. Supp. 781; Simon Cloak & Suit Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1912) 141 N. Y. Supp. 553. See also Titus v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. (1880) 81 N. Y. 410, 8 Abb. N. C. 315.

Ohio. — Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (1878) 4 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 340.

Tennessee. — Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Munday (1868) 5 Coldw. 547.

Texas. — Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Shearman (1897) 17 Tex. Civ. App. 456, 43 S. W. 930, 1063. See also Pelican Ins. Co. v. Schwartz (1892) — Tex. —, 19 S. W. 374.

Washington. — Rasmusson v. North Coast F. Ins. Co. (1915) 83 Wash. 569, L.R.A.1915C, 1179, 145 Pac. 610.

West Virginia. — Teter v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. (1914) 74 W. Va. 344, 82 S. E. 40.

Wisconsin. — Dogge v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. (1880) 49 Wis. 501, 5 N. W. 889; Vergeront v. German Ins. Co. (1893) 86 Wis. 425, 56 N. W. 1096; Beyer v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (1901) 112 Wis. 138, 88 N. W. 57.

England. — Chapman v. Pole (1870) 22 L. T. N. S. 306.

Canada. — Rice v. Provincial Ins. Co. (1857) 7 U. C. C. P. 548; Park v. Phoenix Ins. Co. (1859) 19 U. C. Q. B. 110; Parsons v. Citizens Ins. Co. (1878) 43 U. C. Q. B. 261; Steeves v. Sovereign F. Ins. Co. (1880) 20 N. B. 394; Doull v. Fire Ins. Co. (1886) 18 N. S. 511, 6 Can. L. T. Occ. N. 541; Harrison v. Western Assur. Co. (1903) 35 N. S. 488, reversed on other grounds in (1903) 33 Can. S. C. 473; Adams v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. (1916) 37 Ont. L. Rep. 1, 10 Ont. Week. N. 171, 31 D. L. R. 166.

"An overestimate which was made honestly, and in good faith, clearly would not have the effect to exclude the claimant from all benefits under the policy." Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. (1886) 68 Iowa, 737, 56 Am. Rep. 870, 28 N. W. 47.

"The mere fact that the assured, in the proofs of loss, has made an overvaluation of the property destroyed, will not defeat a recovery on the policy for the actual loss sustained. If the assured, in making proofs of loss, acts in good faith, in the honest belief that the property destroyed was worth the amount of the valuation placed upon it, and the excessive valuation was not intended to deceive or defraud the insurance company, such overvaluation cannot be held to be fraudulent, and it will not defeat a recovery." Commercial Ins. Co. v. Friedlander (1895) 156 Ill. 595, 41 N. E. 183.

So, in Nugent v. Rensselaer County Mut. F. Ins. Co. (1905) 106 App. Div. 308, 94 N. Y. Supp. 605, the court said: "It is provided in the policy that it shall be void in case of any fraud or false swearing by the assured, touching any matter relating to the insurance or the subject thereof, whether before or after a loss. The defendant insists that the plaintiff was guilty of false swearing in overestimating the quantity and value of the personal property which he claimed to have lost by reason of the fire. It is not the purpose of such provision in the policy to put every insurer in danger of losing the entire benefit of his insurance if, in an honest effort to determine and state the property lost by fire, and the value thereof, he inadvertently misstates the same or overestimates their values. A mere misstatement of the loss, based upon an erroneous estimate of values, . . . does not operate to avoid the policy." See to the same effect, Cheever v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. (1903) 86 App. Div. 328, 83 N. Y. Supp. 730, affirmed in (1905) 180 N. Y. 551, 73 N. E. 1121.

"An overestimate of the amount of loss sustained, made honestly and in good faith, is neither fraud nor false swearing, within the meaning of the policy. The fraud or false swearing which would cause a forfeiture . . . must undoubtedly be actual and intentional." Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Munday (1868) 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 547.

In American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Ware (1898) 65 Ark. 336, 46 S. W. 129, the court approved an instruction of the trial judge that an overvaluation did not avoid the policy, unless it was knowingly made, and that if it occurred through oversight or in-advertence, it did not affect any right of the insured under the policy. The court said: "This instruction was correct. The provision of the policy . . . does not refer to an accidental omission or an innocent misrepresentation of fact on the part of the assured. To avoid the policy, the false statement must have been knowingly and wilfully made, thus showing an intention to deceive and to perpetrate a fraud upon the insurer."

Similarly, in Hodge v. Franklin Ins. Co. (1910) 111 Minn. 321, 126 N. W. 1098, the appellate court approved an instruction of the trial court to the effect that an incidental or unintentional overvaluation by the insured did not necessarily amount to fraud sufficient to avoid the policy.

Where an insured, in the proof of loss, gave merely an optimistic account of the value of the goods that had been destroyed, it was held not to be a fraud sufficient to avoid the policy. St. Onge v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. (1917) 204 Ill. App. 127.

In some of the cases it has been said that an overvaluation made by the insured through error of judgment or inadvertence is, in effect, merely an expression of opinion, which affords no ground for an avoidance of the policy, and will not cause a forfeiture thereof.

United States. — Howell v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. (1874) Fed. Cas. No. 6,780; Oshkosh Packing & Provision Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co. (1887) 31 Fed. 200.

Iowa. — Helm v. Anchor F. Ins. Co. (1906) 132 Iowa, 177, 109 N. W. 605.

New Jersey. — Jersey City Ins. Co. v. Nichol (1882) 35 N. J. Eq. 291, 40 Am. Rep. 625.

New York. — Nugent v. Rensselaer County Mut. F. Ins. Co. (1905) 106 App. Div. 308, 94 N. Y. Supp. 605.

West Virginia. — Teter v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. (1914) 74 W. Va. 344, 82 S. E. 40.

Wisconsin. — Dogge v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. (1880) 49 Wis. 501, 5 N. W. 889; Vergeront v. German Ins. Co. (1893) 86 Wis. 425, 56 N. W. 1096.

Canada. — Steeves v. Sovereign F. Ins. Co. (1880) 20 N. B. 394.

"The value of property is, to a great extent, a matter of judgment or opinion. People may, and do, honestly differ widely on such a subject. . . . It is the fraud, and not the mistakes or errors in judgment, of an insured which will avoid his policy." Steeves v. Sovereign F. Ins. Co. (N. B.) supra.

"The mere fact . . . that a party who seeks to recover insurance has even largely overstated the value of the property destroyed will not, of itself and alone, relieve the company from liability. In order to prevail on this ground, the insurer must show that the insured knew it was worth much less than he swore it to be. There may be an honest difference of opinion as to the real value of property. Such a difference of opinion does often exist in the minds of men as to the value of property, because that question may rest largely in opinion. And if the jury find that, even though a valuation is largely excessive, yet if it was made by the insured in good faith, his statement in that respect cannot be held to amount to false swearing or fraud." Oshkosh Packing & Provision Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co. (1887) 31 Fed. 200, supra.

"Nothing is more common in the affairs of life than for men to overvalue their property; and when . . . it is not done with any fraudulent purpose, it should not avoid the policy." Dogge v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. (Wis.) supra.

In Teter v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. (W. Va.) supra, the court said: "It would be a very harsh rule that would forfeit his policy, if the insured happened, innocently, to make a mistake in estimating the value of his property, and should fix it at a little more than most other men would think it was actually worth. Men are prone to value their own possessions a little higher than other people would value them, and often do so in utmost good faith. The law allows a margin in such cases for honest differences of opinion."

Likewise, in Ermann v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co. (1883) 35 La. Ann. 1095, it was said: "A great difference of opinion upon values may well coexist with perfect honesty of all persons differing. The assured may have sworn to what he believed to be true, but which nevertheless was false, and his policy would not thereby be forfeited. He must knowingly and intentionally, and therefore fraudulently, have sworn, with the intent to deceive the insurer and get from him a value falsely put upon the property." See also Dunn v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. (1902) 109 La. 520, 33 So. 585; Daul v. Firemen's Ins. Co. (1883) 35 La. Ann. 98.

So, where an insured, without any evil intent or purpose, but "yielding to that partiality with which, as is commonly known, most men estimate their own property," went to the extreme in giving expression to his opinion of values, it was held that the policy could not be avoided on the ground of fraud. Helm v. Anchor F. Ins. Co. (1906) 132 Iowa, 177, 109 N. W. 605.

Similarly, in Simon Cloak & Suit Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1912) 141 N. Y. Supp. 553, wherein it appeared that the insured had no means by which it could possibly determine the value of the property destroyed, and was compelled to estimate its loss, the court held an overvaluation of more than 100 per cent to be merely an expression of an opinion, which did not operate to avoid the policy, since under the circumstances there was absent the essential element of fraud.

Where the value of the property destroyed is largely in excess of the insurance, so that an exaggeration cannot operate to defraud or injure the insurer, it is quite generally held that an overvaluation, if honestly made, will not avoid the policy. Hanscom v. Home Ins. Co. (1897) 90 Me. 333, 38 Atl. 324; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Winn (1889) 27 Neb. 649, 5 L.R.A. 841, 43 N. W. 401; Jensen v. Palatine Ins. Co. (1908) 81 Neb. 523, 116 N. W. 286; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Shearman (1897) 17 Tex. Civ. App. 456, 43 S. W. 930, 1063;

Camden F. Ins. Asso. v. Puett (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 164 S. W. 418; Dogge v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. (1880) 49 Wis. 501, 5 N. W. 889. Compare Capital F. Ins. Co. v. Beverly (1897) 14 Ohio C. C. 468, 8 Ohio C. D. 37.

"In determining whether an excessive valuation . . . was the result of wilfully false swearing, or of an error in judgment, misinformation, misrecollection, or mistake, it is obviously material and important to consider the amount of the actual loss in relation to the amount of insurance and to inquire whether the insured could have had any motive to swear falsely in order to swell the amount of the loss, when it was already conceded that the loss, honestly stated, would exceed the amount of insurance." Hanscom v. Home Ins. Co. (Me.) supra.

"It is well settled that the making of an affidavit fixing the value of goods insured at an excessive price will not forfeit the right of the assured to recover, where the value of the property actually exceeds the amount of the insurance, so that the same becomes immaterial to the risk." Jensen v. Palatine Ins. Co. (1908) 81 Neb. 523, 116 N. W. 286, supra.

And where the value placed on a stock of general merchandise was only $1,600 above what the jury found it to be; and no motive appeared for the excessive valuation, as the value proven on the trial and fixed by the verdict was nearly $2,000 in excess of the amount of the policy, it was held that there was no ground for a finding of fraud. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Shearman (1897) 17 Tex. Civ. App. 456, 43 S. W. 930, 1063.

In like manner, in Dogge v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. (1880) 49 Wis. 501, 5 N. W. 889, it was said: "The actual value of the property destroyed exceeded the amount of insurance upon it. Under these circumstances, if the plaintiff did honestly, or without any fraudulent intent, place an extravagant valuation upon the property, it would not prevent a recovery upon the policy."

b. Overvaluation made knowingly and intentionally.

Where an insured knowingly and wilfully overestimates in his proof of loss the value of the property destroyed, with the intention of deceiving the insurer, such overvaluation will avoid the policy and defeat any right of the insured to recover thereon.

United States. — Huchberger v. Merchants' F. Ins. Co. (1868) 4 Biss. 265, Fed. Cas. No. 6,822; Huchberger v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. (1869) Fed. Cas. No. 6,823, affirmed in (1871) 12 Wall. 164, 20 L. ed. 364; Geib v. International Ins. Co. (1870) 1 Dill. 443, Fed. Cas. No. 5,298; Huchberger v. Home F. Ins. Co. (1870) 5 Biss. 106, Fed. Cas. No. 6,821; Weide v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (1871) Fed. Cas. No. 17,617; Howell v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. (1874) Fed. Cas. No. 6,780; Mack v. Lancashire Ins. Co. (1880) 2 McCrary 211, 4 Fed. 59; Oshkosh Packing & Provision Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co. (1887) 31 Fed. 200. Compare the reported case (COLUMBIAN INS. CO. v. MODERN LAUNDRY, ante, 1159).

Arkansas. — German-American Ins. Co. v. Brown (1905) 75 Ark. 251, 87 S. W. 135.

Georgia. — Goldberg v. Provident Washington Ins. Co. (1916) 144 Ga. 783, 87 S. E. 1077.

Illinois. — Kavooras v. Insurance Co. of Ill. (1912) 167 Ill. App. 220.

Iowa. — Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. (1886) 68 Iowa, 737, 56 Am. Rep. 870, 28 N. W. 47; Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (1897) 98 Iowa, 606, 40 L.R.A. 845, 67 N. W. 583; Helm v. Anchor F. Ins. Co. (1906) 132 Iowa, 177, 109 N. W. 605.

Kentucky. — Compare Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Wintersmith (1907) 30 Ky. L. Rep. 369, 98 S. W. 987.

Louisiana. — Marchisseau v. Merchants' Ins. Co. (1842) 1 Rob. 438; Alfred Hiller Co. v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (1910) 125 La. 938, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 453, 52 So. 104.

Maine. — Wall v. Howard Ins. Co. (1862) 51 Me. 32; Hilton v. Phoenix Assur. Co. (1898) 92 Me. 272, 42 Atl. 412; Rovinsky v. Northern Assur. Co.

(1905) 100 Me. 112, 60 Atl. 1025; Pottle v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. (1911) 108 Me. 401, 81 Atl. 481; Archibald v. Granite State F. Ins. Co. (1918) 117 Me. 205, 103 Atl. 162.

Nebraska. — Home Ins. Co. v. Winn (1894) 42 Neb. 331, 60 N. W. 575.

New Hampshire. — Sleeper v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. (1876) 56 N. H. 401.

New York. — Hickman v. Long Island Ins. Co. (1847) 4 Edm. Sel. Cas. 374; Sternfeld v. Park F. Ins. Co. (1888) 50 Hun, 262, 2 N. Y. Supp. 766; Furlong v. Agricultural Ins. Co. (1892) 28 Abb. N. C. 444, 18 N. Y. Supp. 844; Anibal v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (1903) 84 App. Div. 634, 82 N. Y. Supp. 600; Simon Cloak & Suit Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1912) 141 N. Y. Supp. 553; Bas v. Williamsburgh City F. Ins. Co. (1913) 141 N. Y. Supp. 555.

Oregon. — Fire Asso. of Phila. v. Allesina (1907) 49 Or. 316, 89 Pac. 960.

Texas. — Fidelity Phoenix F. Ins. Co. v. Sadau (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 178 S. W. 559.

Washington. — Rasmusson v. North Coast F. Ins. Co. (1915) 83 Wash. 569, L.R.A.1915C, 1179, 145 Pac. 610.

Wisconsin. — F. Dohmen Co. v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. (1897) 96 Wis. 38, 71 N. W. 69.

England. — Chapman v. Pole (1870) 22 L. T. N. S. 306.

Canada. — Grenier v. Monarch Fire & Life Assur. Co. (1859) 3 Lower Can. Jur. 100; Larocque v. Royal Ins. Co. (1878) 23 Lower Can. Jur. 217.

"The law is well settled that if the assured intentionally overvalues his loss, . . . for the purpose of obtaining a sum greater than the value of the property destroyed, and the circumstances are such that such conduct is liable to effect such result, it is fraud, which avoids the policy under a clause making fraud or false swearing in respect to the loss have that effect." F. Dohmen Co. v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. (Wis.) supra.

"It is a firmly established legal doctrine that if a plaintiff, in an action on a policy of fire insurance, falsely and knowingly inserts in his sworn proof of loss . . . such a false and excessive valuation on single articles or on the whole property as displays a reckless disregard of truth, he cannot recover." Pottle v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. (1911) 108 Me. 401, 81 Atl. 481.

"In cases of this kind, the plaintiff must come into court with clean hands. The insured is presumed to know better than anyone else the value of his property and the amount of his loss, and is bound to make his statement of loss honestly, without any attempt to obtain more than his actual damage; and this rule of law thus defeats all claims, unless honestly made—is intended to protect insurance companies from frauds which might otherwise be perpetrated on them. It is a rule which can do an honest man no harm." Huchberger v. Home F. Ins. Co. (1870) 5 Biss. 106, Fed. Cas. No. 6,821.

The theory of the rule was well stated in Howell v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. (1874) Fed. Cas. No. 6,780, as follows: "The nature of the insurance business is such that companies cannot know at the time they issue their policies the exact value of the property insured, especially goods or personal property. A business man asks for a certain amount of insurance on his goods in his store, warehouse, or factory. The fact that he pays premiums in proportion to the amount insured is supposed, in the case of most men, to be a guaranty that he has property of the value insured; but in proofs of loss the amount to be paid is to be fixed at the value of the property destroyed, so that it is the amount on hand at the time of the fire that becomes material. This can only be known with any degree of certainty through the assured himself. He is therefore held to a strict and truthful statement as to the value of the property destroyed, and any intentional overvaluation, or any such valuation as displays a reckless and dishonest disregard of the truth, in regard to the extent of the loss, is deemed fraudulent, and causes forfeiture of all claims under the policy."

The rule heretofore stated obtains when the purpose of the insured, in making an overvaluation, is to induce the insurer to make a speedy settlement, and to prevent controversy as to his right to the full amount of his insurance. Sleeper v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. (1876) 56 N. H. 401.

In Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Winn (1889) 27 Neb. 649, 5 L.R.A. 841, 43 N. W. 401, however, wherein the evidence showed that an overvaluation was not made with a design to defraud the insurer, but to secure, if possible, prompt payment, it was held that there was no ground on which to base a forfeiture of the policy.

And see Dogge v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. (1880) 49 Wis. 501, 5 N. W. 889, holding that the evidence failed to show that the insured had overestimated the value of his property in order to induce the insurer to make a speedy settlement.

It has been held that to preclude a recovery on the ground of fraud, the overvaluation must be of a material character. A slight overestimate by the insured will not avoid the policy. Hamberg v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (1897) 68 Minn. 335, 71 N. W. 388; Hodge v. Franklin Ins. Co. (1910) 111 Minn. 321, 126 N. W. 1098; Riley v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1917) 80 W. Va. 236, L.R.A.1917E, 983, 92 S. E. 417.

Thus, in Hamberg v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (Minn.) supra, it was held that the trial court had properly refused a request to charge that the slightest possible exaggeration by the insured of the value of the property destroyed would, if made knowingly and intentionally, forfeit any right to a recovery under the policy. The court said: "According to this request, the slightest possible exaggeration of the amount or value of the property so destroyed or damaged would be sufficient to defeat plaintiff's claim. If plaintiff so exaggerated to the amount of a fraction of a cent, he cannot recover. Such is not the law."

The estimate must be "so extravagant as to lead necessarily to the conclusion that the excessiveness was due not to an error of judgment, but was motivated by an intention to defraud." Adams v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. (1916) 37 Ont. L. Rep. 1, 10 Ont. Week. N. 171, 31 D. L. R. 166. See also Kibzcy v. Home Ins. Co. (1918) 2 West. Week. Rep. (Can.) 541.

And, in order to work a forfeiture, the overvaluation must be so plain that it can be seen that it was made with the intent to work a gross fraud on the company. Hirschman v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1910) 123 N. Y. Supp. 781.

In the reported case (COLUMBIAN INS. CO. v. MODERN LAUNDRY, ante, 1159) it is held that if the insurer knew the actual value of the insured property, and the amount of the loss by the fire, or had had full opportunity to know it, so that it could not be deceived by an overvaluation in the proof of loss, the fact that an overvaluation was made wilfully and intentionally would not constitute an attempt to defraud sufficient to avoid the policy.

So, in Helm v. Anchor F. Ins. Co. (1906) 132 Iowa, 177, 109 N. W. 605, it was held that an overvaluation made knowingly and intentionally must have actually perpetrated a fraud on the insurer.

In Leach v. Republic F. Ins. Co. (1878) 58 N. H. 245, it was held that, although there was no positive intent on the part of the insured to defraud the insurer, an overvaluation in the proof of loss of the property destroyed, which was so grossly disproportioned to the actual value that it could not have been honestly made if any care or attention had been given to the subject, was designed for the insurer to act on as true, and tended to produce the same mischief that would result from actual fraud and wilful falsehood. The court said: "The affidavit in proof of the plaintiff's loss was made without any reasonable grounds for belief in its truth. Having the means at hand for making a true estimate, the plaintiff wilfully ignored them and made a false one. He stated that to be true, in his belief, which he did not know to be true, and which he had no reasonable ground for believing to be true. Such a representation is fraudulent. . . . In an overvaluation, such as was made in this case, so grossly out of proportion to the actual value of the property, the plaintiff is not entitled to immunity from the charge of fraud."

In some cases it has been held that, where the actual loss exceeds the amount of the insurance, the policy will not be avoided by an overvaluation in the proofs of loss though the overvaluation is made knowingly and with fraudulent intent. Home Ins. Co. v. Lowenthal (1904) — Miss. —, 36 So. 1042; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Winn (1889) 27 Neb. 649, 5 L.R.A. 841, 43 N. W. 401; Home Ins. Co. v. Winn (1894) 42 Neb. 331, 60 N. W. 575. In the case last cited the court said: "If the actual value of the stock was greater than the aggregate insurance, the overvaluation in the proofs, although wilfully made, could not operate to defraud the company, and would, therefore, not be material."

So, in Home Ins. Co. v. Lowenthal (Miss.) supra, it was said: "The loss was concededly total, . . . and the values concededly far in excess of the insurance, so that, even if the swearing . . . was designedly false, it is impossible that it could have been prejudicial or harmful in any way to the insurance company."

In Camden F. Ins. Asso. v. Puett (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 164 S. W. 418, a statute was invoked, declaring that any provision in a policy of insurance invalidating the policy because of misrepresentations or false statements made in the proofs of loss should be of no effect, and should not constitute a defense to any suit brought on the contract or policy, unless it was shown on the trial of the suit that the false statement was fraudulently made, and misrepresented a fact material to the question of the liability of the insurance company. It was held that the fact that the insured overvalued in the proof of loss one of the articles of personal property covered by the policy, where the total loss, exclusive of such article, was greatly in excess of the amount of the insurance, would not effect the liability of the insurer, even though fraud was conceded.

But in Capital F. Ins. Co. v. Beverly (1897) 14 Ohio C. C. 468, 8 Ohio C. D. 37, it was held to be reversible error for the trial court to charge the jury that when the actual value of the property destroyed exceeded the amount of the insurance, a wilfully false and fraudulent exaggeration in the proof of loss was immaterial, and would not constitute a defense to an action on the policy.

Where the loss is a total one under a valued policy, the fact that an overvaluation is made knowingly and with intent to defraud has been held to be immaterial, and no defense to an action on the policy. Oshkosh Packing & Provision Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co. (1887) 31 Fed. 200; Bammessel v. Brewers' F. Ins. Co. (1877) 43 Wis. 463; Cayon v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. (1887) 68 Wis. 510, 32 N. W. 540. Thus, in the case last cited the court said: "It is plausibly argued . . . that knowingly and intentionally stating the amount of the loss greater than it actually was must have been with intent to deceive or defraud. . . . The policy covered the building and its contents, and the controversy is mainly concerning the building alone, which was totally destroyed by the fire. In such a case the actual amount of the loss was immaterial, by virtue of the statute (Rev. Stat. § 1943) which provides that the amount of insurance written in the policy on the real property destroyed 'shall be taken conclusively to be the true value of the property when insured, and the true amount of loss and measure of damages when destroyed.' . . . It is not perceived how the company could have been influenced by any such overestimate to settle or compromise, or not to settle or compromise, the claim for the insurance so fixed conclusively by the statute; for in no case could the company be compelled to pay more, nor could the insured be induced thereby to receive less, than the amount so fixed by law."

In one jurisdiction it has been held that an overvaluation, although intentionally and fraudulently made, will not operate to forfeit any rights of the insured under the policy, unless the instrument itself stipulates for such forfeiture. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Moog (1884) 78 Ala. 284, 56 Am. Rep. 31.

So, it has been said that while false and material representations as to value, made to procure insurance and inducing the issuance of the policy, will avoid the policy, false and fraudulent representations as to the extent of the loss sustained, made to secure the proceeds of the policy, will not avoid the same, although they ought to prevent a recovery, at least to the extent that they are false or fraudulent. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Wintersmith (1907) 30 Ky. L. Rep. 369, 98 S. W. 987.

c. Fraudulent intent as question for jury.

Many cases hold that where it appears from the evidence that there was an overestimate of value, it is a question of fact for the jury to determine whether the insured acted honestly and in good faith in making such valuation, or whether there was an intention on his part to defraud the insurer.

United States. — Wiede v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (1871) Fed. Cas. No. 17,617; Insurance Co. v. Weide (Republic F. Ins. Co. v. Weide) (1871) 14 Wall. 375, 20 L. ed. 894; Mack v. Lancashire Ins. Co. (1880) 2 McCrary, 211, 4 Fed. 59; Oshkosh Packing & Provision Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co. (1887) 31 Fed. 200. See also Miller v. Alliance Ins. Co. (1881) 19 Blatchf. 308, 7 Fed. 649.

Alabama. — See Tubb v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. (1894) 106 Ala. 651, 17 So. 615.

California. — Helbing v. Svea Ins. Co. (1880) 54 Cal. 156, 35 Am. Rep. 72.

Illinois. — See Commercial Ins. Co. v. Friedlander (1895) 156 Ill. 595, 41 N. E. 183.

Indiana. — Franklin Ins. Co. v. Culver (1855) 6 Ind. 137.

Iowa. — Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. (1886) 68 Iowa, 737, 56 Am. Rep. 870, 28 N. W. 47; Goldstein v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (1904) 124 Iowa, 143, 99 N. W. 696.

Kentucky. — Western Assur. Co. v. Ray (1899) 105 Ky. 523, 49 S. W. 326.

Maine. — Archibald v. Granite State F. Ins. Co. (1918) 117 Me. 205, 103 Atl. 162.

Massachusetts. — Goldstein v. Franklin Mut. F. Ins. Co. (1898) 170 Mass. 243, 49 N. E. 115.

Minnesota. — Hodge v. Franklin Ins. Co. (1910) 111 Minn. 321, 126 N. W. 1098.

Nebraska. — Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Winn (1889) 27 Neb. 649, 5 L.R.A. 841, 43 N. W. 401.

Nevada. — Gerhauser v. North British & M. Ins. Co. (1870) 6 Nev. 15.

New Jersey. — Carson v. Jersey City Ins. Co. (1881) 43 N. J. L. 300, 39 Am. Rep. 584, affirmed in (1882) 44 N. J. L. 210.

New York. — Compare Sternfeld v. Park F. Ins. Co. (1888) 50 Hun, 263, 2 N. Y. Supp. 766; Hirschman v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1910) 123 N. Y. Supp. 781; Simon Cloak & Suit Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1912) 141 N. Y. Supp. 553.

West Virginia. — Teter v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. (1914) 74 W. Va. 344, 82 S. E. 40. Compare Riley v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1917) 80 W. Va. 236, L.R.A. 1917E, 983, 92 S. E. 417.

Canada. — Rice v. Provincial Ins. Co. (1857) 7 U. C. C. P. 548.

"So complicated a question is one peculiarly for the jury, the determination of which by that body can only be set aside when the court is clearly convinced, after full consideration of all the incidents made to appear at the trial, that the verdict is wrong." Helbing v. Svea Ins. Co. (Cal.) supra.

In Franklin Ins. Co. v. Culver

(Ind.) supra, the court said: "In the present case, no basis existed by which the amount destroyed could be ascertained with any degree of accuracy. The invoices having been consumed with the goods, and there being no other account of the stock on hand, the statement of the insured could be nothing more than the result of his own deliberate judgment, without the means of testing its correctness by numerical calculation. Whether, in the language of the instruction, 'he knowingly exaggerated his loss,' was for the jury to determine."

However, in Simon Cloak & Suit Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co. (N. Y.) supra, it was said that "unquestionably, where the loss is capable of more or less accurate ascertainment, a gross overvaluation of the goods destroyed compels the court to determine as a matter of law that intentional fraud was attempted." The court added: "In order to determine the existence of fraud because of overestimation, the evidence must be conclusive against mistake or misapprehension."

As was pointed out in the opinion of the court in Sternfeld v. Park F. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) supra, where no other conception of the misrepresentation of the loss obtains, but that it was made to deceive the insurer, it becomes incumbent on the court to find fraud and to decree judgment in favor of the insurer.

So, in Riley v. Aetna Ins. Co. (W. Va.) supra, it was held that where there is a disparity between the actual value of the property destroyed and the value stated by the insured in his proof of loss, so great as to show an intent to deceive and defraud the insurer, the question is not one of fact for the jury to determine, but one of law for the court, and the insurer is entitled to an instruction directing a verdict in its favor.

Similarly, where it appears by the insured's own showing that the statements of value were knowingly and intentionally exaggerated, the court should declare the policy forfeited; and where the discrepancy between a representation of the insured and the finding of fact by the jury is very great, a limit will be reached where the court will intervene and decide as a matter of law that the amount of the error is consistent only with bad faith. Hirschman v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1910) 123 N. Y. Supp. 781.

The fact that the jury returns a verdict for less than the amount claimed by the insured is not proof of fraud such as will bar a recovery on the policy.

United States. — Mack v. Lancashire Ins. Co. (1880) 2 McCrary, 211, 4 Fed. 59.

California. — Helbing v. Svea Ins. Co. (1880) 54 Cal. 156, 35 Am. Rep. 72.

Illinois. — Rockford Ins. Co. v. Nelson (1874) 75 Ill. 548; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Friedlander (1895) 156 Ill. 595, 41 N. E. 183.

Iowa. — Goldstein v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (1904) 124 Iowa, 143, 99 N. W. 696.

Louisiana. — Dunn v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. (1902) 109 La. 520, 33 So. 585.

Maine. — Moore v. Protection Ins. Co. (1848) 29 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 514. Compare Wall v. Howard Ins. Co. (1862) 51 Me. 32.

Minnesota. — Hodge v. Franklin Ins. Co. (1910) 111 Minn. 321, 126 N. W. 1098.

New York. — Wolf v. Goodhue F. Ins. Co. (1864) 43 Barb. 400, affirmed in (1869) 41 N. Y. 620; Scheider v. Corby (1878) 15 Hun, 493; Unger v. People's F. Ins. Co. (1871) 4 Daly, 96; Hirschman v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1910) 123 N. Y. Supp. 781. Compare Sternfeld v. Park F. Ins. Co. (1887) 50 Hun, 262, 2 N. Y. Supp. 766; Furlong v. Agricultural Ins. Co. (1892) 28 Abb. N. C. 444, 18 N. Y. Supp. 844.

Washington. — Rasmusson v. North Coast F. Ins. Co. (1915) 83 Wash. 569, L.R.A.1915C, 1179, 145 Pac. 610.

Wisconsin. — Dogge v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. (1880) 49 Wis. 501, 5 N. W. 889.

England. — Compare Levy v. Baillie (1831) 7 Bing. 349, 131 Eng.

Reprint, 135, 5 Moore & P. 208, 9 L. J. C. P. 108.

"There are numerous cases found in the books where the recovery has been sustained although much less than the amount of loss as the same was estimated in the proofs of loss." Commercial Ins. Co. v. Friedlander (Ill.) supra, holding that where the insured estimated the value of a stock of leaf tobacco to be $9,840, and the jury returned a verdict of $1,277.80, the discrepancy was not such as would avoid the policy on the ground of fraudulent overvaluation.

In Unger v. People's F. Ins. Co. (1871) 4 Daly (N. Y.) 96, the court said: "The fact that the plaintiffs in their preliminary proofs, and in their testimony on the trial, swore that their loss was about $3,489.03 more than the referees found it to be, is not even presumptive evidence of false swearing or of fraud. If it were, then it would be dangerous for the insured to make, in any case, a claim of loss, or to attempt to prove it in court, lest the referees or jury should find for them less than they claimed, and their policies be avoided. They have the right to testify to what they believe to be their loss, and no matter how much that may exceed their recovery, no fraud can be predicated of a result which is due to the judgment of the tribunal alone, unless two points be established against them, i. e., that there were no such goods of such value destroyed, and that the insured knew, or must have known, the fact when they swore to their preliminary proof of loss; otherwise it is the misfortune, and not the crime, of the claimants that the court or jury refused to award them the full sum they swore to. The report of referees or verdict of a jury for a lesser sum, when based on evidence sufficient to support it, is deemed conclusive for the purposes of the particular action as to the actual loss, whether the finding be attacked by the insured or the insurer, but it is not conclusive of false swearing or fraud, particularly where it is not based on positive testimony as to that amount, and that only given in contradiction of the insured."

The fact that there is a difference between the value stated by the insured in his proof of loss and the value proved on the trial is not necessarily evidence of fraud sufficient to avoid the policy. Beck v. Germania Ins. Co. (1871) 23 La. Ann. 510, wherein the court said: "The difference between the amount sworn to by him and the value proven on the trial, is not necessarily evidence of fraud and false swearing on his part, and the circumstances of this case are not such as to impose on him any further explanation of the discrepancy than the record contains. It is often extremely difficult, if not impossible, to prove the exact value of goods insured in an open policy, and merchants may always be supposed to consider their goods worth more than they give for them." See also Israel v. Teutonia Ins. Co. (1876) 28 La. Ann. 689.

And it has been held that it does not inevitably follow from the fact that there is a material discrepancy between the statements as to value made by the insured in the proof of loss, and statements made when testifying on the trial, that the former are false, so as to justify the court in assuming it, and directing a verdict for the insurer. Insurance Co. v. Weide (Republic F. Ins. Co. v. Weide) (1871) 14 Wall. (U. S.) 375, 20 L. ed. 894, wherein the court said: "It may have been the testimony last given that was not true, or the statements made in the proofs of loss may have been honestly made, though subsequently discovered to be mistaken."

Although the insured makes a sworn exhibit of his losses largely in excess of the value, as shown by the weight of evidence, yet if it results from a mere error of judgment in estimating values—is not done with the design and intent to deceive the insurer as to the extent of such losses—it will work no forfeiture of the policy. Gerhauser v.

North British & M. Ins. Co. (1870) 6 Nev. 15.

II. Illustrations.

a. Overvaluation held fraudulent.

In Fire Asso. of Phila. v. Allesina (1907) 49 Or. 316, 89 Pac. 960, wherein it appeared that the insured claimed the value of a stock of umbrellas, parasols, etc., to be $13,002.55, when the actual value as found by the trial court did not exceed $7,109.26, the court held on all the evidence that the overvaluation was with knowledge of its falsity, and would avoid the policy.

In Anibal v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (1903) 84 App. Div. 634, 82 N. Y. Supp. 600, it appeared that the insured claimed in his proof of loss the value of certain hotel property destroyed and injured by fire to be $6,780.30, and the actual value was found by trial court to be only $1,857. The court held that a finding of innocent overvaluation was not supported by the evidence, saying: "The purpose of McClellan . . . in grossly inflating the values stated in his proofs of loss was apparent, and that was to enhance his damages as nearly as possible to the aggregate of his entire insurance, so that when the loss was apportioned among the four companies each would be compelled to pay him practically the entire amount of their respective policies. Upon the evidence in this case I cannot resist the conclusion that McClellan was guilty of intentional and wilful false swearing in his proofs of loss, that he so swore for the purpose of defrauding the company, and that, therefore, the policy was, by its terms, rendered void."

Similarly, in Kavooras v. Insurance Co. of Ill. (1912) 167 Ill. App. 220, wherein it appeared that the insured placed a valuation of $4,114.08 on a stock of groceries which the trial court found did not exceed in value the sum of $1,163.94, it was held that the overvaluation justified the conclusion that the insured was guilty of wilful false swearing.

In Bass v. Williamsburgh City F.

Ins. Co. (1913) 141 N. Y. Supp. 555, the court affirmed a judgment of the trial court finding that an insured who claimed $10,700 on a stock of goods and $869 on certain fixtures destroyed and damaged by fire, which appraisers found to be worth about $3,200 and $326, respectively, was guilty of making a fraudulent overvaluation sufficient to avoid the policy.

In Rovinsky v. Northern Assur. Co. (1905) 100 Me. 112, 60 Atl. 1025, the court held that a valuation of $2,076 placed by an insured on household and personal property, some items of which had been purchased for less than the insured claimed their value to be, was fraudulent, saying: "It clearly appears that the plaintiff did not prepare this schedule . . . under the embarrassment which the ordinary householder would experience in attempting to recall specifically a multitude of articles purchased separately, many years before, or to give his judgment or opinion in regard to the exact value of those not purchased by him. The exact prices were here readily accessible, if not actually before his eyes; and the conclusion is irresistible that he wilfully refused to avail himself of the information, and knowingly made false statements in regard to the values."

In Sternfeld v. Park F. Ins. Co. (1888) 50 Hun, 262, 2 N. Y. Supp. 766, it was held that the fact that a discrepancy of over $18,000 existed between the valuation placed by the insured in his proof of loss on the property destroyed and the verdict of the jury was evidence that the overvaluation had been made with a view to defraud the insurer, and precluded the possibility that the loss had been overstated by mistake or inadvertence.

In Furlong v. Agricultural Ins. Co. (1892) 28 Abb. N. C. 444, 18 N. Y. Supp. 844, wherein it appeared that the insured, in his proof of loss, estimated the value of personal property at $1,161, and the jury found the valuation to be less than $100, it was held that the discrepancy showed fraud sufficient to avoid the policy.

In Wall v. Howard Ins. Co. (1862) 51 Me. 32, it appeared that the proofs of loss stated the value of a stock of clothing to be $2,400, and the actual value was found by the jury to be only $1,060. The court held that the inference could not be avoided that the insured had attempted to defraud the insurers, and that he had thereby forfeited all his rights under the policy, saying: "If the difference had been less, we might have supposed that it resulted from some mistake, or error of opinion, that would not necessarily involve the plaintiff in any fraud. But, when the jury have found that his claim was for nearly three times the actual amount, we are not at liberty to account for it on the ground of error or mistake. Assuming that the verdict is for the right amount, the inference cannot be avoided that the plaintiff, by rendering on oath a false account, attempted to defraud the insurers, and thereby forfeited all his rights under the policy." See also Levy v. Baillie (1831) 7 Bing. 349, 131 Eng. Reprint, 135, 5 Moore & P. 208, 9 L. J. C. P. 108.

In Alfred Hiller Co. v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (1910) 125 La. 938, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 453, 52 So. 104, it appeared that the insured had placed a valuation of $31,718.82 on a stock of merchandise which the jury found to be of the value of only $15,757.12, and the evidence showed that, besides errors in bookkeeping, certain items of goods set forth in the inventory on which the proof of loss was based did not truly represent stock on hand at the time of the fire. It was held that the case showed very clearly an attempt to defraud the insurer sufficient to avoid the policy, and to warrant a reversal of the verdict in favor of the insured.

In Pottle v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. (1911) 108 Me. 401, 81 Atl. 481, wherein it appeared that the insured had placed a valuation of $3,272.77 on a stock of merchandise which the jury found to be actually worth only $1,293.75, the court held, in setting aside the verdict, that the overvaluation was fraudulent, and would forfeit the right of the insured to recover on the policy.

b. Overvaluation held not fraudulent.

Building.

In Helm v. Anchor F. Ins. Co. (1906) 182 Iowa, 177, 109 N. W. 605, it appeared that the jury had found the actual value of a store building to be only $1,200, while the insured had valued it in his proof of loss at $2,000, but the jury returned a special finding to the effect that the overvaluation was innocently made. The court held that it should not disturb the verdict.

Similarly, in Parsons v. Citizens' Ins. Co. (1878) 43 U. C. Q. B. 261, wherein it appeared that while the jury had found the value of a general hardware store, which the insured estimated at $4,600, to be only $3,629, they also found that the overvaluation was made in good faith, the court held that it would not disturb the verdict.

In Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Amusement Syndicate Co. (1910) 102 C. C. A. 29, 178 Fed. 519, it appeared that the insured had valued an opera house building and personal property therein at $57,000, and the master appointed to hear and decide the case had found the value to be approximately $22,000. It was held that the overvaluation was not made with any view to deceive the insurer, and did not avoid the policy.

Where the insured, preparatory to making his proof of loss, procured estimates from carpenters of what it would cost to replace the burned buildings with new ones, and made his proofs in accordance with those estimates, assuming that he was entitled to money enough to replace the buildings, so far, at least, as the insurance would do it, it was held to be error, but not so uncommon an error in the practical affairs of life as to justify the court in saying that the mere fact that the owner had committed such an error was sufficient evidence of intentional false swearing. Hilton v. Phoenix Assur. Co. (1898) 92 Me. 272, 42 Atl. 412.

General merchandise.

In Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. (1886) 68 Iowa, 737, 56 Am. Rep. 870, 28 N. W. 47, wherein it appeared that the proofs of loss stated the value of a stock of general merchandise to be $1,680.07 more than its actual value, the court held that whether the overestimate was fraudulently made was a question of fact for the jury, and a general verdict in favor of the insured would not be disturbed, saying: "Whether it was done with such intent was a question of fact which was properly submitted to the jury, and by their general verdict it was determined adversely to defendant. The overestimate, it is true, appears to have been quite large, but it may have been honestly made, and, if so, it will not defeat plaintiff's right to recover for the loss actually sustained. The court cannot say, as matter of law, that it was not so made."

In Connecticut F. Ins. Co. v. Union Mercantile Co. (1914) 161 Ky. 718, 171 S. W. 407, it appeared that an insured had placed the valuation of a stock of goods at approximately $10,000, and the report of a commissioner had found the value to be only $8,002.53. The court held that it was not shown by the evidence that a deliberate overestimate of value, sufficient to avoid the policy, had been made.

In Pelican Ins. Co. v. Schwartz (1892) — Tex. —, 19 S. W. 374, it appearing that the insured had estimated the value of a stock of goods to be $8,683.52, when the actual value, as found by the trial court, was only $4,500, the court held that the trial court was justified in finding that, notwithstanding the fact that an overvaluation was made, the insured did not intend to defraud the insurer, and the policy was not, therefore, avoided.

In Goldstein v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (1904) 124 Iowa, 143, 99 N. W. 696, wherein it appeared that the insured had valued a stock of goods at nearly $2,000, while the verdict in his favor was for but $1,200, it was held that the discrepancy was not evidence of fraud sufficient to avoid the policy. The court said: "It is . . . said that the verdict of the jury is inconsistent. The argument on this point is, in effect, that plaintiff claimed to have lost insured goods to the amount of nearly $2,000, while the verdict in his favor is for but $1,200, or $300 less than the face of the policy. The verdict, being for so much less than he claims to have lost, and less than the face of his policy, is said to convict the plaintiff of fraud, upon which the defendant was entitled to a verdict; and yet the jury, notwithstanding such finding, and in violation of the court's instruction that such fraud would be fatal to his right to recover, nevertheless found in his favor. We think there is no rule of law which attaches a presumption of fraud to a claim because the full amount thereof is not recovered upon the trial."

In Williams v. Phenix F. Ins. Co. (1871) 61 Me. 67, it was held that a discrepancy of about $1,400 between the value of the stock of goods destroyed and the amount claimed was not so great as to prove that there was a fraudulent overvaluation.

In Moore v. Protection Ins. Co. (1848) 29 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 514, the court held that the fact that the insured had estimated the value of a stock of goods at $2,800, where the jury had found it to be of the value of only $1,853, was not proof of fraud, saying: "The defendants rely particularly upon this verdict as proof of false swearing on the part of the affiant, showing, as it is contended, that the jury disregarded the facts asserted and sworn to in the affidavit. The jury were properly instructed that if they found that there was false swearing on the part of the plaintiffs, they would not recover. It cannot be assumed that the instruction was disregarded without convincing evidence. The value of the goods in the store at the time of their destruction was only a matter of judgment by Moore, who made the estimation, and the affidavit founded thereon. No account of the stock had been taken previous to the fire, and the books were consumed with the goods and the store. No basis existed by which the amount of the loss could be ascertained with any degree of accuracy. The judgment of Moore in his estimation of the value of the property lost was properly considered with all other evidence upon the same point. They might believe that his interest in the question would affect his judgment to some extent, though honestly exercised. The general knowledge of the jury in relation to the kind of property consumed, and its value, might also have had upon their minds a legitimate influence. Other facts and circumstances on the same question, coming from other sources, would have their proper effect; and when the whole was weighed, it might have produced the conviction that Moore had erred in opinion, without being guilty of any dishonest intention."

In Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (1897) 98 Iowa, 606, 40 L.R.A. 845, 67 N. W. 583, it appeared that the insured had estimated the value of a stock of drugs, patent medicines, etc., to be $3,960 while the jury had found the value to be $3,600. It was held that the discrepancy was merely the result of mistake or error, and did not defeat the right of the insured to recover on the policy.

In Dunn v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. (1902) 109 La. 520, 33 So. 585, it appearing that the insured had placed a valuation of $48,465.25 on a stock of stationers' bookbinders' and lithographers' merchandise which appraisers found to be worth the sum of $10,924.87, the court held that the discrepancy would not avoid the policy in the absence of proof that the overvaluation was fraudulently made.

In a case where the insured stated in his proof of loss that the amount of his last inventory was $4,711.47, when in fact the correct amount of the inventory was $4,450, the evidence tending to show that the discrepancy was due to a bona fide mistake and was not intentional, it was held not to amount to fraud sufficient to avoid the policy. American Cent. Ins. Co. v.

Ware (1898) 65 Ark. 336, 46 S. W. 129.

In Franklin Ins. Co. v. Culver (1855) 6 Ind. 137, wherein it appeared that the valuation placed by the insured on a stock of goods and a storehouse exceeded the verdict of the jury by $200, it was held that whether the overvaluation was made knowingly and with fraudulent intent was for the jury to determine, and the finding of the jury that it was not fraudulently made must be deemed a proper conclusion from the facts proved on the trial. The court said: "The value of the property, as estimated by the insured, it must be presumed, was properly considered with all the other evidence upon the same point. And though the jury, in view of all the facts, may have been convinced that he had erred in opinion, still they may have found such error to exist without any dishonest intention."

Groceries.

In Rasmusson v. North Coast F. Ins. Co. (1915) 83 Wash. 569, L.R.A. 1915C, 1179, 145 Pac. 610, it appeared that the insured had estimated the value of a stock of groceries at $2,750.67, while the jury found the value to be $2,100. It was held that, the question whether the overvaluation was fraudulently made having been submitted fairly to the jury and determined adversely to the insurer, the verdict could not be disturbed.

In Wiede v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (1871) Fed. Cas. No. 17,617, the court held that where the insured placed a valuation of $54,000 on a stock of groceries the actual value of which was found by the jury to be only about $30,000, the overvaluation was not fraudulent as a matter of law, and did not prevent a recovery on the policy.

In Hirschman v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1910) 123 N. Y. Supp. 781, it appeared that the insured had placed a valuation of $953 on a stock of groceries, and the jury had found the value to be only $600. The court held that the discrepancy did not establish fraud sufficient to avoid the policy.

Household goods.

In Hodge v. Franklin Ins. Co. (1910) 111 Minn. 321, 126 N. W. 1098, it appeared that the insured, after having filed a proof of loss in which several items of household goods were considerably overvalued, had corrected the same by filing another proof of loss. The court held that it was for the jury to determine whether the overvaluation made in the first proof of loss was done for the purpose of defrauding the insurer, and declined to disturb a verdict in favor of the insured.

In Fidelity Phenix F. Ins. Co. v. Sadau (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 178 S. W. 559, it was held that where the insured valued certain household furniture destroyed by fire at $1,000, and the actual value, as found by the jury, was only $578.85, the discrepancy was not such as would require a peremptory instruction to the effect that, if the jury found the said furniture to have been excessively valued, they should find for the insurer.

In Beyer v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (1901) 112 Wis. 138, 88 N. W. 57, it was held to be a question of fact for the jury to determine whether an illiterate woman, in making out her proofs of loss, was guilty of fraud in scheduling secondhand articles of furniture, clothing, and farming implements at their full original cost, the policy being capable of a construction demanding this, in that it required that "the cost of each article" should be inserted in the schedule.

Liquors.

In Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (1878) 4 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 340, wherein it appeared that the insured had placed a valuation of $11,000 on a stock of liquors, the jury found the actual value to be only $1,400, but did not find that the overvaluation had been fraudulently made.

Piano.

Although an insured has reason to know the market value of the property destroyed, an overvaluation, if honestly made, has been held not to occasion a forfeiture of the policy. Gibbs v. Continental Ins. Co. (1878) 13 Hun (N. Y.) 611, wherein the court said, in upholding a ruling of the trial judge: "We think the justice at the circuit was correct in holding that a fraudulent intent was a necessary ingredient in the false valuation, even though there might be evidence from which the jury might have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff knew, or had the means of knowing, or ought to have known, that the valuation in the proofs of loss was overstated." In that case a valuation of $400 was placed by the insured on a piano purchased a considerable time before the fire for $300. It was held not to be fraudulent in view of the fact that the insured had testified that she could not remember what the piano cost, but that a music dealer had offered her $400 for it in exchange for another piano, and in view of the additional fact that it was proved by another witness, an expert, that he knew the piano in question, that it had been used very little, and that, in his judgment, it was worth $300 at the time of the fire.

Tobacco.

In Western Assur. Co. v. Ray (1899) 105 Ky. 523, 49 S. W. 326, it was held that the question whether a corrected proof of loss submitted by the insured, which placed the value of a stock of tobacco at $13,369.90, or $5,000 less than the value stated in the proof of loss first filed, was fraudulent, having been properly submitted to the jury and determined adversely to the insurer, the court could not say as a matter of law that the overvaluation was fraudulently made. L. F. C.

H. C. SNOW, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF TEXAS.

Texas Court of Criminal Appeals—October 26, 1921.

(— Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 237 S. W. 563.)

Appeal — prejudicial evidence in jury room — reversal.

1. Upon trial of a patron of a gambling house for killing an officer who was raiding the place, where the defense was that accused thought the officer was a robber, it is reversible error for a juror to state in the jury room that a raid was expected at the time it occurred, which fact was not established at the trial. (On rehearing.)

[See note on this question beginning on page 1187.]

Homicide — instructions — burden of proof.

2. An instruction in a prosecution for murder in killing an officer raiding a gambling house, that if the jury believed that defendant was not interested in keeping or running any of the tables, but was only a patron of the place, then his right of self-defense was not abridged by the fact that he was a participant in the game, does not place upon him the burden of proving that he was not the proprietor of the house, where it is immediately followed by the statement that the burden of proof is upon the state, that the innocence of the accused is presumed until established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, and directing an acquittal if a reasonable doubt exists, and that to qualify the right of self-defense the jury must believe beyond a reasonable doubt that accused was engaged in running a gambling table.

Arrest — excessive force — effect.

3. A police officer is in the wrong if, in attempting to arrest persons engaged in running a gambling table, he exercises such a wanton and menacing manner as to threaten patrons with serious bodily harm, and the latter have a right to protect themselves.

[See 13 R. C. L. 873.]

Homicide — protection from excessive force in attempted arrest.

4. The right of patrons of a gambling house to protect themselves against excessive force of police officers raiding the place is limited to the use of means appropriate to the necessities of the occasion as viewed from their standpoint.

[See 2 R. C. L. 474; 1 R. C. L. Supp. 550.]

Appeal — failure to instruct in homicide case.

5. Failure to give a special charge on the law of excessive force of officers in attempting an arrest of persons running a gambling house is not reversible error in a prosecution of a patron for killing an officer, where the room contained many armed patrons, and the officers merely exhibited weapons, with the command to those present to put up their hands, and the court told the jury that the right to arrest existed only in the event that the officers, in effecting it, used only such force as was, under all the circumstances, reasonably necessary.

New trial — affidavits to support motion — sufficiency.

6. Affidavits of misconduct of the jury in support of a motion for new trial are not sufficient when taken before an attorney for appellant.

— permitting proper verification of affidavit.

7. A convict who has filed an improperly verified affidavit for motion for new trial should be permitted properly to verify it upon application on the day the motion is to be heard.

— evidence of reputation of accused.

8. Evidence against the reputation of accused, introduced in the jury room, is within a statute making the receipt of new evidence of a material character by the jury, in the jury room, ground for new trial.

— burden of proof — introduction of evidence in jury room.

9. A convict applying for new trial because of the introduction of new evidence in the jury room has the burden of establishing that fact.

Appeal—introduction of new evidence in jury room—conclusiveness of decision of trial court.

10. The decision of the trial court, on motion for new trial, upon the question whether or not new evidence was introduced in the jury room, is conclusive on appeal.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Wichita County (Martin, J.) convicting him of murder. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs Heyser, Hicks, Wilson, & Williams, Bishop & Lantz, and E. H. Gipson for appellant.

Messrs Taylor, Allen, Muse, & Taylor, Charles L. Black, and R. H. Hamilton, Assistant Attorney General, for the State.

Morrow, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant is condemned to confinement in the penitentiary for a period of twenty years for the offense of murder.

At Kemp City, in Wichita county, there was in operation a gambling establishment. On the night of the tragedy, the deceased, Caples, and four other persons, went from Wichita Falls for the purpose of arresting the lawbreakers and bringing to an end the operation of the gambling house. On reaching the place, the house was found to be filled with people engaged in various gambling games. Some of the party stopped near the front entrance while Caples and his companion, Tony, went inside to the rear of the house. Each of them was armed with a pistol. A number of shots were fired, and Caples and Tony were killed by some of them. Caples and Tony presented their pistols, and ordered the persons in the house to put their hands up. The witnesses, attempting to quote them used the expressions, "Put them up and get to the wall;" and, "Stick them up and face the wall."

The theory of the defense is that there were others shooting; that there was no concert action or prearrangement; that the evidence does not exclude the theory that the fatal shots were fired by someone other than the accused; that the shots fired by him were fired because he believed the parties were robbers; and that he had no information or knowledge that they were peace officers or the semblance thereof.

The state, on the contrary, presents the theory that the appellant knew that the party consisted of peace officers, and that the shots were fired to avoid arrest of himself or others, or out of resentment because of the interference with the gambling operation.

Various rulings of the trial court are urged as reasons for a reversal of the judgment. In appraising the merits of the criticisms to the charge, other parts of it must be considered. On the phase of manslaughter, the jury was told that if the deceased "was doing some act which, within itself or by words accompanying it, was reasonably calculated to produce, and did in fact produce, in the mind of the defendant, sudden passion," etc., no qualification adverse to the appellant was embraced. On self-defense, in one paragraph, the law of real and apparent danger growing out of the conduct of the deceased as it appeared to the appellant was embraced. In another, the right to kill the deceased if appellant believed his purpose was to rob, was made absolute. In another, the jury was informed that conducting a gambling house was a felony, and that those engaged in it might be arrested without warrant, and that "if the jury should believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, Snow, and others, were engaged in exhibiting or running a gaming table," then there existed the legal right to arrest them, and that if the deceased attempted to arrest, using only the degree of force that was reasonably necessary under the circumstances, and was shot by the appellant to prevent such arrest or to escape the consequences of the unlawful act, if any, in which he was engaged, his right of perfect self-defense would be abridged, and that his offense might be manslaughter or murder, as the jury might determine. In another subdivision, appellant's right to kill the deceased was affirmed, if, viewing his conduct from appellant's standpoint, it reasonably appeared that he was about to be robbed, or suffer bodily injury at the hands of the deceased or his companion. Following these, in the same paragraph, this instruction was given: "But, if you should find and believe from the evidence that the defendant was not interested or engaged in keeping, exhibiting, or running any of said gaming tables, but was only a patron or player in the place, then his right of self-defense would not be abridged by the fact that he was such a participant in the game, unless you should further find and believe that he shot and killed Marvin Caples in order to prevent said Caples from arresting the parties who were running or exhibiting such games."

This is assailed upon the assertion that it puts upon the appellant the burden of proving that he was not a keeper of the gaming house. The clause is immediately followed by a statement in the charge that the burden of proof was upon the state; that the innocence of the accused was presumed until established by legal evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, and directing an acquittal if a reasonable doubt of appellant's guilt existed in the minds of the jury. In the same connection, the charge instructed the jury, in appropriate language, that if they believed the appellant guilty of an offense, but entertained a reasonable doubt as to its grade, that he must be given the benefit of the doubt. Fairly considered, as a whole, we think the charge was not subject to the objection made. So considered, it does not, in our judgment, place upon the appellant, as said in the objection, "the burden to show that, at the time of the killing, he was not engaged in running a gambling house." In the same paragraph of the charge, as pointed out above, the jury was specifically told that to qualify appellant's right of self-defense on the theory of arrest, the jury was required to believe beyond a reasonable doubt that the appellant and others were engaged in running a gaming table. The language criticized and quoted above, considered in connection with that to which we have just adverted, amounted only to the statement that if they did not believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, that he was conducting a gaming table, his right of self-defense would not be qualified unless he fired to prevent the arrest of those who were so engaged. The right to convict is predicated upon the finding by the jury of the essential facts, beyond a reasonable doubt, and in the concluding paragraph of the charge to which we have adverted the law touching the burden of proof and the presumption of innocence is again stated.

Complaint is made of the refusal of the trial judge to give a special charge on the law of excessive force of the officers attempting the arrest. Though the appellant knew that the deceased was authorized to arrest those engaged in exhibiting a gaming table, and though he may have been so engaged, still the officer would have been in the wrong if, in making the arrest, he exercised such wanton and menacing manner as to threaten the appellant or his companions with serious bodily harm. If in such manner the arrest was attempted, the appellant had a right to protect himself. Jones v. State, 26 Tex. App. 12, 8 Am. St. Rep. 454, 9 S. W. 53. This right was not unlimited, but confined to the use of means proportionate to the necessities of the occasion, as viewed from appellant's standpoint. 2 R. C. L.

Homicide—
instructions—
burden of proof.

Arrest—excessive force—effect.

Homicide—protection from excessive force in attempted arrest.

(— Tes. Crim. Rep. —, 337 S. W. 563.)

p. 474; Condron v. State, 69 Tex. Crim. Rep. 521, 155 S. W. 253; Alford v. State, 8 Tex. App. 545; Keady v. People, 66 L.R.A. 363, and note (32 Colo. 57, 74 Pac. 892); Creighton v. Com. 83 Ky. 142, 4 Am. St. Rep. 143; id. 84 Ky. 103, 4 Am. St. Rep. 193; State v. Gum, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 150, and note (68 W. Va. 105, 69 S. E. 463).

The theory that appellant killed the deceased, knowing that he was an officer, but defending against wanton conduct in making the arrest, is not presented as an affirmative defense. The defense presented, both by appellant and his witnesses, was that he fired without knowledge that the deceased was attempting to make an arrest, and under the belief that his purpose was robbery. As indicated above, imperfect self-defense and perfect self-defense were submitted, the former without qualification and the latter qualified by the theory of lawful arrest. The charge on the subject limited the right of the officers to arrest, and told the jury, in substance, that such right existed only in the event that, in effecting it, they used only such force as was, under all the circumstances, reasonably necessary.

Appellant said in his testimony that he entered the house in which the homicide took place in the evening, and was engaged in playing at a game of poker, and was facing the rear wall when he heard the words, "Get them up; stick them up damned quick, and face the wall;" that he heard this repeated one time by two men; that he looked and saw, about 12 or 15 feet from him, a man standing with a revolver. The people were turning tables over and getting up against the wall. He said: "I just jumped up, and the man that had the gun in his hand was looking at me, and I jerked my gun and shot him, or shot in that direction. I shot twice."

He claimed that there was confusion, and that after he fired he heard the announcement that the parties were officers, but had no such knowledge before he shot. He had more than $800 in his possession, and thought there was an attempt to rob.

In the presentation of all of the defensive testimony, the theory is urged and reiterated that appellant fired before there was any announcement that the parties were officers. The state's testimony was to the contrary. The arrest was attempted at nighttime. There were more than a half a hundred people present, and gambling by appellant and others was in progress in violation of the law. It was obvious from the equipment and the exhibition of gambling games that the keepers of the house and exhibitors of the games were engaged in committing a felony. Penal Code, arts. 551, 559. Many of the persons present were armed, as subsequent developments disclosed, and appellant and many others, if not committing a felony themselves, were aiding and abetting those who were. The officers had their pistols in their hands, but, so far as we discern from the evidence, none were fired by them, and there was no offer to do so before the appellant fired. Under these circumstances, we are of the opinion that the court was not guilty of reversible error in failing in a more specific manner to instruct the jury upon the limitation which the law placed upon the officers, with reference to the use of excessive force in making the arrest. On the contrary, we regard the instructions given as sufficient to fully guard the appellant's rights. His affirmative defenses were well submitted, and all defensive theories arising from the evidence were embraced in the charge. The true issue in the case was not whether the officers used undue force in making the arrest, but whether their character as officers was known to the appellant at the time he fired. Around this issue the evidence crystallized. It was pertinently and fairly submitted to the jury.

Appeal—failure to instruct in homicide case.

The motion for new trial was filed some days before it was heard. In it, misconduct of the jury was claimed and supporting affidavits filed. These affidavits were taken before one of the attorneys for the appellant, and, under the previous rulings of this court, are not sufficient. On the day the motion was heard, however, appellant sought, by amendment, to properly verify them. This should affidavits to support motion—

*New trial—
sufficiency.*

have been permitted. Failure to do so is unimportant, however, inasmuch as evidence was fully developed upon the averments in the motion, and in effect the amendment was allowed. We have made a very careful examination of the evidence adduced upon the motion for new trial. The only part of it that impresses us as at all of importance is that touching the reputation of the appellant. Eight or nine of the jurors testified, one of them Farmer, declaring that in conversation with juror Golden he (Farmer) remarked that "he did not see how the appellant was guilty;" that Golden said: "You know what kind of reputation he has; you just as well go ahead and cast the vote;" and said: "He ought to be convicted on the reputation he has." Farmer was first for acquittal, and later consented to conviction.

*—permitting
proper verification of affidavit.*

A vigorous and lengthy cross-examination of Farmer was conducted, in which it is brought out that he had had several conferences with the attorneys for the appellant; it being the effort to show that he had become biased in favor of the accused. Golden did not testify. Juror Reed said he could not say that he had heard references to the reputation of appellant, but it was very likely that something was said, but that he could not quote it, though he was sure that appellant was not referred to as a man of first-class character. He got the impression from the discussion that Snow was a bad man. Juror Galbreath said that he heard Juror Golden make remarks about "matters that were used in argument, that Golden appeared to know the reputation of the appellant, and said it was bad." Galbreath first voted for acquittal and later for conviction.

Rouse testified that the only reference to the reputation of appellant he heard Golden make was to express the opinion that the appellant was a bad man. Several of the other jurors declared that they heard no conversation on the subject at all.

The law pertaining to the receipt of new evidence of a material character by the jury, either from its members or other source, is not difficult of ascertainment. The statute makes it a ground for new trial. Code Crim. Proc. art. 837. It has often been given effect. See McDougal v. State, 81 Tex. Crim. Rep. 179, 194 S. W. 944, L.R.A.1917E, 930, and cases there cited. No doubt evidence against the good reputation of the accused, introduced for the first time in the jury room, would be material. Hargrove v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 431, 26 S. W. 993; Rose's Notes on Texas Reports, vol. 5, p. 694. Whether in the instant case such evidence was received was a question of fact. The burden of proving it rested upon the appellant, and if the evidence on the motion for new trial was such *—burden of proof—introduction of evidence in jury

*—evidence of
reputation of accused.*

room.*

as rendered the question a controverted one, it was within the province of the trial judge to settle the controversy; and, having done so, the decision would be conclusive. Howe v. State, 77 Tex. Crim. Rep. 108, 177 S. W. 500; Shaw v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 155, 22 S. W. 588; Potts v. State, 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 47, 118 S. W. 535.

Appeal—introduction of new evidence in jury room—con-clusiveness of decision of trial court.

It is difficult to determine whether the proper construction of the testimony of the jurors quoted is that Golden was advancing as new evidence his knowledge of the reputation of the accused, or whether he was commenting upon matters in the record which led him to the conclusion that the appellant was a man of bad reputation. The language used by him, as revealed by the witnesses on motion for new trial, seems more or less ambiguous. He said to Farmer: "You know what kind of a reputation he has. He ought to be convicted on his reputation."

From other jurors who testified, it appeared that Golden indicated the opinion that the appellant was a bad man. Golden was not called as a witness, and the appellant was content with the version of his declarations given by other jurors at the hearing. From the language used by them, it apparently would not be an unfair interpretation to infer that from the evidence adduced upon the trial Golden drew the conclusion that appellant was a bad man. This might not have been an unnatural deduction from the facts proven upon the trial. The bill of exceptions, which we are considering, contains no averment negating the idea that there may have been brought into the trial, either by proof or argument, matters forming a proper basis for the deductions imputed to the juror Golden.

The judgment is affirmed.

A motion for rehearing having been granted, Hawkins, J., on February 1, 1922, handed down the following opinion:

In the motion for rehearing our attention has been called to a very important and serious matter incident to the alleged misconduct of the jury. The bill of exception presenting this issue covers 39 pages in the record. In reading the evidence taken on the hearing of the motion for a new trial our minds became fixed upon that portion of the alleged misconduct which related to a discussion in the jury room of appellant's reputation, and we disposed of the question on that issue alone, not appraising the effect of the other feature of such alleged misconduct as it related to the facts developed on the trial. We are now referred pertinently to another phase of the alleged misconduct; viz., a discussion in the jury room of a contemplated raid by the officers upon the gambling premises where the homicide occurred, which bears directly upon what we stated in our original opinion as being the pivotal point in the case, as follows: "The true issue in the case was not whether the officers used undue force in making the arrest, but whether their character as officers was known to appellant at the time he fired. Around this issue the evidence crystallized."

20 A.L.R.—75.

There is no testimony in the case to the effect that any previous raid had been made upon the premises in question by the officers from Iowa Park, or by any other officers; or that any such raid was contemplated. It being the contention throughout on the part of appellant that he had no knowledge whatever that deceased and his companions were officers until after the shooting was over, it cannot be questioned that if testimony had been available to the state, whereby it could have been shown that the officers had at a previous time made, or contemplated making, a raid upon the gambling house, or that a raid was still in contemplation, and that appellant and others engaged in gambling at the time of the homicide knew that the officers were likely to raid the premises, it would have been the most cogent testimony possible to controvert the truth of appellant's theory, to wit, want of knowledge that deceased and his companions were officers, and not "high-jackers" or robbers, as appellant asserts he believed they were.

The jury was bound to have known that one of the main issues in the case, if not the most important one, was whether appellant, at the time he fired, knew deceased was an officer. This issue was submitted to the jury by the court. The evidence taken on the motion for new trial discloses that the jury were not in accord as to the guilt of appellant during the first ballots taken, as they stood six and six upon that issue in the beginning of their deliberations. We find from the bill of exception that R. E. Golden was one of the jurors. The juror Farmer, testifying as to what occurred in the jury room, said that Golden, who lived in Iowa Park, said: "You know that Turkett and King was out there the night before, and he knew what was coming off." "That he understood from what Golden said that the gamblers knew that the officers from Wichita Falls were coming out there that night; that the boys at Kemp City [where the homicide occurred] knew that the raid was going to be made that night."

This was Farmer's version of what Golden said. The juror Reed testified that he heard Golden say something about Iowa Park officers, but just how he said it or what he was getting at he did not remember, as he was talking to the jury in general. J. C. Galbreath, who was foreman of the jury, testified that he not only heard Golden make the general statement testified to by other jurors, but that Golden, in substance, told Galbreath himself practically the same thing. His version of what it was is as follows: "The conversation that I heard in substance was that officers had been up to Kemp City to raid this particular gambling house either the day before the shooting occurred or a day just prior to that, and that these people had got knowledge of it and had left, and that they were looking for the officers."

This witness further testified that, as the foreman, he informed the other jurors that they should not consider such "outside matters." The juror Browkaw, upon being asked whether he recalled having heard any conversation of Golden similar to that testified to by other jurors, replied: "I heard something similar to that, yes. I remember that something was said about the Iowa City officers."

The juror Rouse was asked: "Do you recall having heard a conversation similar to that testified to by them [that is, the other jurors]? Did you hear Golden make any statement along the line they testified to?" "I remember some statement, but do not remember what it was."

The further question asked him was, "Did he make any remark about those boys were expecting a raid out there?" to which he replied, "Well, he remarked that was his opinion—that is the way he remarked it—his opinion was they expected a raid." Some jurors testified that they heard no such conversation in the jury room, but it was established beyond question that such matter was discussed. Counsel for the state and the court, in examining the jurors, seemed to have conceded that some "outside matters" were discussed by the jury, because the jurors were asked if they permitted such "outside matters" to influence them. It is not a question, therefore, as to whether improper matters occurred in the jury room which might raise a question of fact to be determined by the trial judge upon a motion for new trial. It is not necessary for us to speculate upon the effect of this new matter being injected during the discussion of the jury.

Remembering that the contention of the defense from beginning to end was that when appellant began firing he thought deceased and his companions were "high-jackers," and not officers, it is apparent that these improper statements in the jury room were of a prejudicial character. If such testimony could have been produced by the state from the witness stand, it would have been of a highly vital and important nature.

—prejudicial evidence in jury room—reversal.

The effect of testimony so received after the retirement of the jury has been adverted to in Gilbert v. State, 85 Tex. Crim. Rep. 597, 215 S. W. 106; McDougal v. State, 81 Tex. Crim. Rep. 179, L.R.A. 1917E, 930, 194 S. W. 944; Mitchell v. State 26 Tex. Crim. Rep. 278, 33 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 456; Weaver v. State, 85 Tex. Crim. Rep. 111, 210 S. W. 698; Blocker v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 61 S. W. 392.

In view of another trial, we suggest such changes in the charges discussed in our original opinion as will relieve them of the criticism there reviewed.

The motion for rehearing must be granted. The judgment affirming the case will be set aside, and the judgment of the trial court reversed, and the cause remanded.

ANNOTATION.

Receipt of document or statement in jury room, constituting new evidence, as ground for reversal or new trial in criminal case.

I. Statement by juror:

a. General rule:

1. Rule stated, 1187.
2. Rule in Texas, 1188.

b. Application of rule:

1. Generally, 1190.
2. Statement affecting credibility of witnesses, 1198.

I. Statement by juror.

a. General rule.

1. Rule stated.

It is well settled that the reception of any evidence by the jury in a criminal case, outside of that produced at the trial, will vitiate the verdict whenever there is sufficient ground to suspect that the accused has been prejudiced thereby. See 16 R. C. L. p. 304. Accordingly, where a juror states to his fellows in the jury room material facts based on personal knowledge, which were not adduced in evidence, and the statements influence the jury in arriving at a verdict to the prejudice of the accused, a new trial will be granted.

Iowa.—State v. Salmer (1917) 181 Iowa, 280, 164 N. W. 620.

Kansas.—State v. Woods (1892) 49 Kan. 237, 30 Pac. 520; State v. McCormick (1896) 57 Kan. 440, 57 Am. St. Rep. 341, 46 Pac. 777; State v. Burton (1902) 65 Kan. 704, 70 Pac. 640, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 688; State v. Lowe (1903) 67 Kan. 183, 72 Pac. 524, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 693; State v. Duncan (1904) 70 Kan. 883, 78 Pac. 427; State v. Farrar (1918) 103 Kan. 774,

I. b—continued.

3. Statement reflecting on character of accused, 1195.
4. Statement concerning another conviction of accused, 1196.
5. Statement relating to other offenses of accused, 1199.

II. Document, 1202.

176 Pac. 987; State v. Beam (1895) 1 Kan. App. 688, 42 Pac. 394.

Mississippi.—Compare Taylor v. State (1876) 52 Miss. 84, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 13.

Nebraska. — Richards v. State (1893) 36 Neb. 17, 53 N. W. 1027; Koenigstein v. State (1917) 101 Neb. 229, 162 N. W. 879.

Pennsylvania.—Com. v. Kulp (1895) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 561, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 468.

Tennessee.—Booby v. State (1833) 4 Yerg. 111; Donston v. State (1845) 6 Humph. 275; Sam v. State (1851) 1 Swan, 61; Morton v. State (1878) 1 Lea, 498; Nile v. State (1883) 11 Lea, 694; Irvine v. State (1900) 104 Tenn. 132, 56 S. W. 845.

Washington. — State v. Parker (1901) 25 Wash. 405, 65 Pac. 776; State v. Lorenzy (1910) 59 Wash. 308, 109 Pac. 1064, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 153; State v. McChesney (1921) 114 Wash. 113, 194 Pac. 551.

"When jurors, in their zeal to secure a finding of guilty against the accused, bring before their fellows material statements and facts based on personal knowledge, which were not given in evidence, confidence in their verdict is necessarily shaken. If such matters had been admitted in evidence in court, where the defendant had opportunity to meet and disprove them, it would have been material error; and where they are introduced before the jury when the defendant is absent, and without opportunity to challenge or meet them, they are still more hurtful and erroneous. In the nature of things, these extraneous statements . . . necessarily vitiate the verdict and require a new trial." State v. Burton (1902) 65 Kan. 704, 70 Pac. 640, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 688.

So, in State v. Farrar (1918) 103 Kan. 774, 176 Pac. 987, it was said: "Evidential statements of a prejudicial nature, made by a juror on his personal knowledge, and which would naturally and probably influence the verdict, furnish ground for the granting of a new trial."

But a new trial will not be granted merely on account of statements made in the jury room, where it appears that such statements did not influence or prejudice the jury against the accused. Moore v. People (1899) 26 Colo. 213, 57 Pac. 857; State v. Woodson (1875) 41 Iowa, 425; State v. Cowan (1888) 74 Iowa, 53, 36 N. W. 886; State v. Cross (1895) 95 Iowa, 629, 64 N. W. 614; State v. Wright (1896) 98 Iowa, 702, 68 N. W. 440; State v. Olds (1898) 106 Iowa, 110, 76 N. W. 644; Feddern v. State (1907) 79 Neb. 651, 113 N. W. 127; Irvine v. State (Tenn.) supra. See also State v. Burton (Kan.) supra; State v. Riley (1911) 41 Utah, 225, 126 Pac. 294.

Thus, in Irvine v. State (Tenn.) supra, the court said: "While verdicts have been set aside, and properly, when a juror has communicated to his fellow jurors facts bearing on the issue which were not adduced on the trial, yet we know of no case where a mere suggestion of undisclosed knowledge was permitted to have such an effect. Such an assumption of superior knowledge on the part of a juror, however much it deserved rebuke from his fellow jurors as an exhibition of bad taste, cannot be held to vitiate a verdict, especially when the complaining jurors say they were influenced to agree to a verdict by another . . . consideration."

"Prejudice must be shown, or sufficient ground must appear for presuming prejudice, to authorize interference with the verdict on account of such matters." State v. Woodson (1875) 41 Iowa, 425.

It is not sufficient to authorize a new trial to show merely that improper statements were made by members of the jury while deliberating on their verdict, but it must appear that prejudice resulted from the statements, or that they were of a character to cause prejudice. State v. Olds (1898) 106 Iowa, 110, 76 N. W. 644.

So, where the statements bear no relation to the merits of the case, and are not such as would reasonably be supposed to have influenced any of the jurors in deciding on their verdict, there is no presumption of injury, and a new trial will not be granted. State v. Cowan (1888) 74 Iowa, 53, 36 N. W. 886.

Jurors who are alleged to have been influenced by the statements of another juror may submit affidavits that they were not prejudiced by such statements in arriving at their verdict. State v. Wright (1896) 98 Iowa, 702, 68 N. W. 440.

It has also been held that it would be erecting too high a standard, and would result in a defeat of justice, to set aside the verdicts of juries for the discussion, by jurymen, during deliberation, of matters outside the testimony, although such conduct is highly improper. Taylor v. State (1876) 52 Miss. 84, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 13.

2. Rule in Texas.

In Texas, a statute provides that a new trial shall be granted where the jury have received new evidence after having retired to deliberate on a case. It is held that under this statute a new trial is mandatory where the new evidence is of a material character, and that the statute is especially applicable when the jurors receive statements from one of their number in the jury room. Anschilds v. State (1879) 6 Tex. App. 524; McKissick v. State (1886) 26 Tex. App. 673, 9 S. W. 269; Mason v. State (1891) — Tex. App. —, 16 S. W. 766; McWilliams v. State (1893) 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 269, 22 S.

W. 970; Hargrove v. State (1894) 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 431, 26 S. W. 993; Ellis v. State (1894) 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 508, 27 S. W. 135; Mitchell v. State (1896) 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 278, 33 S. W. 367; Terry v. State (1897) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 38 S. W. 986; Tate v. State (1897) 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 261, 42 S. W. 595; Holmes v. State (1897) 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 370, 42 S. W. 996; Darter v. State (1898) 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 47, 44 S. W. 850; Hardiman v. State (1899) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 58 S. W. 121; Ysaguirre v. State (1900) 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 253, 58 S. W. 1005; Favro v. State (1900) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 59 S. W. 885; Blocker v. State (1901) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 61 S. W. 391; Blalock v. State (1901) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 62 S. W. 571; Buessing v. State (1901) 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 85, 63 S. W. 318; Lankster v. State (1901) 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 298, 65 S. W. 373; Hopkins v. State (1902) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 68 S. W. 986; Sims v. State (1902) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 70 S. W. 90; Hughes v. State (1902) 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 296, 70 S. W. 746; Hefner v. State (1903) 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 441, 71 S. W. 964, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 682; McDaniel v. State (1903) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 77 S. W. 802; Dixon v. State (1904) 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 154, 79 S. W. 310; Riley v. State (1904) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 81 S. W. 711; Crow v. State (1904) 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 225, 82 S. W. 1033; Hambright v. State (1905) 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 518, 84 S. W. 597; Morawitz v. State (1906) 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 366, 91 S. W. 227; Tutt v. State (1906) 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 202, 91 S. W. 584; Kegans v. State (1906) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 96 S. W. 16; Horn v. State (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 404, 97 S. W. 822; Winslow v. State (1906) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 98 S. W. 241; Vanduran v. State (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 440, 98 S. W. 247; Casey v. State (1907) 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 433, 102 S. W. 725; Battles v. State (1908) 53 Tex. Crim. Rep. 202, 109 S. W. 195; Hill v. State (1908) 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 646, 114 S. W. 117; Maples v. State (1910) 60 Tex. Crim. Rep. 169, 131 S. W. 567; Williamson v. State (1911) 62 Tex. Crim. Rep. 132, 136 S. W. 1071; Dunn v. State (1913) 72 Tex. Crim. Rep. 170, 161 S. W. 467; McDougal v. State (1917) 81 Tex. Crim. Rep. 179, L.R.A.1917E, 930, 194 S. W. 944; Weaver v. State (1919) 85 Tex. Crim. Rep. 111, 210 S. W. 698; Cotton v. State (1921) 88 Tex. Crim. Rep. 618, 228 S. W. 943; Hallmark v. State (1921) 89 Tex. Crim. Rep. 257, 230 S. W. 697; Suddath v. State (1921) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 235 S. W. 210. And see the reported case (SNOW v. STATE, ante, 1180).

"One of the grounds for granting a new trial provided by our statute is 'when the jury, after having retired to deliberate upon the case, have received other testimony.' Code Crim. Proc. art. 777, subd. 7. When a verdict was probably influenced by the statement of some of the jurors to his fellows as to other facts not testified to on the trial, a new trial should be granted." Mason v. State (1891) — Tex. App. —, 16 S. W. 766.

So, in Dixon v. State (1904) 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 154, 79 S. W. 310, the court said: "The statute inhibits the receiving of evidence by the jury other than that adduced according to the rules of law; and wherever this evidence is of a character to injuriously affect the rights of the defendant, we will not hesitate to reverse the case."

The statute is intended to preserve to parties accused of crime the constitutional right of a public trial by an impartial jury, and the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him; and the inhibition against the receipt by the jury of testimony after its retirement is against legal evidence, as well as illegal evidence. McDougal v. State (1917) 81 Tex. Crim. Rep. 179, L.R.A.1917E, 930, 194 S. W. 944.

In Ysaguirre v. State (1900) 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 253, 58 S. W. 1005, it was held that the statute does not mean that the testimony must be of a material character. It may be hearsay or otherwise illegal testimony, and if it has a material bearing on some issue in the case, and is calculated to injure the accused, the court will not speculate on whether it did injure, or whether the verdict could otherwise be sustained.

In several other cases from the same jurisdiction the general rule has been held without reference to any statute. Lucas v. State (1889) 27 Tex. App. 322, 11 S. W. 443; Burlesan v. State (1890) — Tex. App. —, 15 S. W. 175; Hughes v. State (1902) 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 511, 67 S. W. 104; Williams v. State (1903) 45 Tex. Crim. Rep. 240, 75 S. W. 509; Mann v. State (1904) 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 250, 83 S. W. 195; Robbins v. State (1904) 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 312, 122 Am. St. Rep. 694, 83 S. W. 690; Warren v. State (1909) 57 Tex. Crim. Rep. 518, 123 S. W. 1115; Knight v. State (1912) 66 Tex. Crim. Rep. 335, 147 S. W. 268; Clements v. State (1913) 69 Tex. Crim. Rep. 369, 153 S. W. 1137; Weber v. State (1915) 78 Tex. Crim. Rep. 253, 181 S. W. 459; Mizell v. State (1917) 81 Tex. Crim. Rep. 241, 197 S. W. 300; Stevenson v. State (1921) 89 Tex. Crim. Rep. 143, 230 S. W. 174.

In this jurisdiction, however, the general rule obtains that if it appears that the statement of a juror did not prejudice the jury, it is not ground for reversal. Jack v. State (1886) 20 Tex. App. 656; Cox v. State (1889) 23 Tex. App. 92, 12 S. W. 493; Gonzales v. State (1894) 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 611, 25 S. W. 781; Ray v. State (1896) 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 354, 33 S. W. 869; Gallihar v. State (1896) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 37 S. W. 329; Angley v. State (1896) 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 427, 34 S. W. 116; Richardson v. State (1906) 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 391, 94 S. W. 1016; Foster v. State (1907) 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 77, 100 S. W. 1159; Smith v. State (1908) 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 344, 106 S. W. 1161, 15 Ann. Cas. 357; Arnwine v. State (1908) 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 213, 114 S. W. 796; Railey v. State (1909) 58 Tex. Crim. Rep. 1, 121 S. W. 1120, 125 S. W. 576; Allen v. State (1911) 62 Tex. Crim. Rep. 557, 138 S. W. 593; Burge v. State (1914) 73 Tex. Crim. Rep. 505, 167 S. W. 63; Clark v. State (1914) 74 Tex. Crim. Rep. 464, 169 S. W. 895.

b. Application of rule.

1. Generally.

Where a juror, in the discussion of a case after retirement, details to his fellow jurors circumstances which were not sworn to by any witnesses, and impresses another juror with the belief that he has more information in regard to the case than the witnesses, and for that reason should have more influence with the jury than the others, a new trial will be granted. McWilliams v. State (1893) 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 269, 22 S. W. 970.

So it has been held that a conviction for homicide would be set aside where one juror stated that a light penalty would be insufficient, since when the defendant should have served out the short term imposed, he would not be as old as his father when he got out of prison, and called attention to what the father had done on his release, having reference to a homicide thereafter committed by him; and it also appeared that jurors who had previously been in favor of a light sentence agreed to a term of twenty-five years. McDaniel v. State (1903) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 77 S. W. 802.

Where one charged with perjury concerning a certain occurrence defends on the ground that he was so drunk at the time of the occurrence that he could not remember what happened, and a juror, during the deliberation on the case, states that he met the defendant the day following the occurrence, and that his mind and general appearance seemed to be all right, a verdict of guilty will be reversed. Hambright v. State (1905) 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 518, 84 S. W. 597.

Similarly, it has been held that where, in a prosecution for violation of the liquor law, it becomes material to determine whether the person alleged to have done the physical act of selling was the employee of the defendant, a statement by one juror to the others that such person was in the defendant's employ, and had been for some time, is sufficient to set aside the conviction, where, although there was some slight evidence tending to establish the fact, it is impossible to say, in view of the fact that the evidence was slight, that the jury were not governed by the juror's statement rather than by the evidence, in making up their verdict. State v. Beam (1895) 1 Kan. App. 683, 42 Pac. 394.

In the reported case (SNOW v. STATE, ante, 1180) a prosecution for the murder of an officer while he was raiding a gambling house, wherein one of the main issues was whether the accused knew the person killed to be an officer at the time of the killing, or thought him to be a robber, a statement of a juror during deliberation that the officers had been in the gambling house the night before, and that the gamblers, including the accused, knew a raid was to be instituted the following night, is held to be sufficiently prejudicial to warrant a new trial.

Where it appears, on an appeal from a conviction of carnally and unlawfully knowing a female under the age of eighteen years, that one of the jurors, during a discussion of the age of the prosecutrix, stated that "three years ago she was a small girl wearing short clothes, and that he saw her about three years ago at a baptism in short dresses," which caused one of the jurymen to remark, "If that's a fact, we will vote for a conviction," and a conviction resulted, a new trial will be granted. State v. Woods (1892) 49 Kan. 237, 30 Pac. 520.

A conviction for assault with intent to murder, alleged to have been committed on the defendant's wife, will be reversed, where it appears that some of the jurors stated that the defendant was not the father of the wife's child, as the child had been born at a certain time, and the defendant was in the penitentiary at that time and previously, and such statements were considered by the jury for the purpose of weighing the defense that the defendant did not call on his wife for the purpose of committing the assault, but for the purpose of seeing his child. Favro v. State (1900) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 59 S. W. 885.

Where a juror controverts the testimony of one on trial for burglary that he went in the room alleged to have been burglarized for the purpose of awaiting the arrival of a train, by stating that he knew the train did not stop at the place the accused said it did, because he lived in the locality, a new trial will be granted. Dixon v.

State (1904) 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 154, 79 S. W. 310.

There is such misconduct as warrants a new trial where a juror who, on his voir dire examination, stated that he did not know the accused, that he had not heard of the case or the defendant, and that he was free from bias or prejudice, declares, after the retirement of the jury, that he knows the accused to be equally guilty with his codefendant, because both were members of a gang of toughs who had occupied a shack in which a man had been murdered, and that the defendants had been implicated in the killing. State v. Parker (1901) 25 Wash. 405, 65 Pac. 776.

In Riley v. State (1904) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 81 S. W. 711, wherein it appeared that, after the retirement of the jury, statements were made by some of the jurors to the effect that there had been too many killings in Houston, and too many men turned loose on charges of murder, and an example had to be made of somebody, the court granted a new trial.

Where it appears that a juror stated to his fellows that he knew that a restaurant at which the accused had testified he was employed did not exist, and the statement caused the jury to bring in a verdict of guilty, a new trial will be granted. Winslow v. State (1906) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 98 S. W. 241.

A conviction will be reversed where, in connection with the question whether certain footprints were those of the defendant or a third person who lived in the neighborhood, it appears that one or two jurors who were familiar with the location explained to the others the location of the third person's house with reference to the prosecutor's and the accused's, and drew a plat of the surroundings for the purpose of showing that the tracks could not have been made by the third person in the route he traveled, no evidence having been introduced with respect thereto. Buessing v. State (1901) 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 85, 63 S. W. 318.

So, in Sam v. State (1851) 1 Swan (Tenn.) 61, wherein it appeared that while the jury were deliberating on the question whether the offense had been committed within a certain county, one of the jurors stated that he had worked on the road in a part of the county, had seen the county line, and knew that it was a considerable distance beyond the place where the offense was said to have been committed, the court held that there was such misconduct as required a reversal of the verdict.

One convicted of conniving at the prostitution of his wife is entitled to a reversal where it appears that one of the jurymen, after retirement, stated to the rest of the jurors that a house which the accused had testified was not devoted to purposes of prostitution was in fact so used, and that if "they would go to Baker, they would find it to be a house of prostitution yet." State v. Lorenzy (1910) 59 Wash. 308, 109 Pac. 1064, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 153.

A conviction of murder will be reversed where it appears that the foreman and other members of the jury made statements, while the question of punishment was being discussed by the jury, to the effect that the governor had wrongfully interfered and used the pardoning power to shorten the terms of imprisonment of condemned persons, and that the death penalty should therefore be assessed in the case at bar. Weaver v. State (1919) 85 Tex. Crim. Rep. 111, 210 S. W. 698.

And where it appears that the accused had proven an alibi, and that, during the deliberation of the jury, a juror stated to his fellows that he had seen the accused traveling toward the place where the crime was committed, a new trial will be granted. Com. v. Kulp (1895) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 561.

A new trial of a prosecution for the illegal sale of liquor should be granted where it appears that, during the jury's deliberations, one juror stated that he knew it was beer which the accused was selling, because he drank some of it himself; and that he knew the accused sold intoxicating liquors, and that he had followed the business for years. State v. Duncan (1905) 70 Kan. 883, 78 Pac. 427.

But it has been held that the act of a juror in a trial for maintaining a liquor nuisance, in stating to the other jurors that he knew that liquor had been sold at this place, as he had drunk it there himself, while highly reprehensible, was not ground for reversal, unless it appeared that the jury acted on the statement rather than on the evidence submitted to them. State v. Wright (1896) 98 Iowa, 702, 68 N. W. 440.

A conviction of larceny will not be set aside on an affidavit made on information and belief that, after the jury's retirement, one member said to the others that he had been told by one who claimed to have heard the statement from a third person that the defendant had keys to some buildings in the city, and that he (the third person) had good reason to believe that the defendant had entered his store by means of such keys. State v. Sprague (1899) 149 Mo. 409, 50 S. W. 901.

Likewise a reversal has been denied where it appeared that the drawing of a diagram by a juror who was personally acquainted with a building in which the shooting was alleged to have occurred did not prejudice the defendant. Railey v. State (1909) 58 Tex. Crim. Rep. 1, 121 S. W. 1120, 125 S. W. 576.

So, a conviction for homicide will not be reversed because of statements made by a juror that he knew the man who was killed to be a boastful young man, but innocent and quiet in his disposition, and that if he made threats against the accused he had no intention of carrying them out, in the absence of proof that the statements were prejudicial. State v. Woodson (1875) 41 Iowa, 425.

A new trial will be denied where it appears that a statement by a juror to the effect that he had once been robbed by a porter (the accused being a porter) was made after the verdict had been agreed on, and had no influence on the other jurors in assessing the punishment. Jack v. State (1886) 20 Tex. App. 656.

The fact that a juror remarks to one of his fellows during deliberation in a prosecution for sodomy that the accused had it in his mind to perform some sort of sexual act, and would have raped a white woman had one passed while he was committing the act charged, where the remark does not appear to have had any effect on the juror who heard it, has been held not to be sufficient ground on which to set aside the conviction. Richardson v. State (1906) 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 391, 94 S. W. 1016.

It has been held that a discussion of the manner in which the accused had been raised from infancy was not ground for a reversal where it appeared that, on the evidence, the jury could hardly do otherwise than render a verdict of guilty. Grayson v. State (1899) 40 Tex. Crim. Rep. 573, 51 S. W. 246.

A reversal is not warranted where it appears that, after the jury had agreed on their verdict, one of the jurors stated that the case would have been tried at the last term of court if one of the accused's witnesses had not feigned sickness and remained away from court, in order to prevent a conviction at the last term. Gallihar v. State (1896) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 37 S. W. 329.

So, a statement by a juror, in a prosecution for assault with intent to rob, that the accused knew the prosecutrix had a sum of money, made after the jury have agreed on a verdict of guilty, and the lowest punishment has been awarded, is no ground for a reversal. Angle v. State (1896) 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 427, 34 S. W. 116.

It is no ground for a reversal that a juror states to his fellows during deliberation that he knew all about the facts in the case before he was selected as a juror, without stating what those facts were. Feddern v. State (1907) 79 Neb. 651, 113 N. W. 127.

Of course, the accused is not prejudiced so as to warrant a reversal where a juror states, during deliberation, that he personally knows the prosecuting witness, whose credibility the accused has attacked, and that his reputation for veracity is bad, but that, nevertheless, he (the juror) believes the accused to be guilty. Lemons v. State (1907) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 103 S. W. 896.

And a conviction will not be reversed on account of the statement of a juror to his fellows that the character of the prosecutrix was good, where the statement was made after the jury had determined the guilt of the accused unanimously, and it could not have had any possible effect on any juror in arriving at his verdict. Gonzales v. State (1894) 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 611, 25 S. W. 781.

2. Statement affecting credibility of witnesses.

"The rule is settled . . . that a new trial will be granted where the jury, after being retired to deliberate on the case, has received other testimony; and when a juror testifies to his fellow jurors during their deliberations, and vouches for the credibility of a material state's witness, the jury has received other testimony." Mizell v. State (1917) 81 Tex. Crim. Rep. 241, 197 S. W. 300.

"It is ground for a new trial that, after the jury has retired for deliberation, a juror has stated to the other jurors, as of his own knowledge, facts material to the case . . . tending to discredit the losing party as a witness." State v. Lorenzy (1910) 59 Wash. 308, 109 Pac. 1064, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 153.

When it appears that the verdict in a criminal case was probably influenced by the statement of a juror to his fellows as to the character for credibility of a witness for the accused, a new trial should be granted. Lucas v. State (1889) 27 Tex. App. 322, 11 S. W. 443.

So, where the most important witness for the accused was impeached by the statement of a juror that he knew the witness to be unworthy of belief, it was held that a new trial would be granted. McKissick v. State (1886) 26 Tex. App. 673, 9 S. W. 269.

In Anschicks v. State (1879) 6 Tex. App. 525, it appeared that one of the jurors had made a statement, after the jury had retired, to the effect that he had lived in the same county with one of the witnesses who testified for the defendant on the trial; that she was unworthy of credit; that she was kept by the defendant at the time; and that the whole of her testimony was concocted between herself and the accused. A new trial was granted, the court saying: "The opinion of one of the jurors, not testified to at the trial, and which was not evidence in any legal sense, did, agreeably to the affidavit of the juror, influence the verdict of the jury, to the prejudice of the appellant, and no effort was made to contradict or to neutralize the effects of the juror's affidavit. On this ground alone, under the circumstances, we are of opinion that the verdict was vicious, and should have been set aside."

It has been held that a new trial would be granted where a juror stated to his fellows during deliberation, that he had heard a witness for the prosecution, whose credibility was doubted by some members of the jury, examined before the grand jury, and that he then made the same statements that he made before the trial jury, and it appeared that the juror's statement produced a powerful effect on the minds of the other jurors, and very probably led to the conviction of the accused. Donston v. State (1845) 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 275.

In Riley v. State (1904) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 81 S. W. 711, it appeared that one of the members of the jury had stated to his fellows in the jury room that he knew a witness who gave material testimony for the accused, and that he was unworthy of belief; that the juror had been asked by another juror whether, if he should be called into court and put on the witness stand, he would be willing to swear that he would not believe the witness on oath, and he replied that he would so swear. The court held that this amounted to misconduct sufficient to require a reversal of the judgment of conviction.

So, a new trial will be granted where it appears that a juror told his fellows that he knew the principal witness for the prosecution to be truthful and honest, and ten jurors who had previously been in favor of acquittal voted for conviction. Battles v. State (1908) 53 Tex. Crim. Rep. 202, 109 S. W. 195.

A conviction will be reversed where a juror states, after retirement, that he has known one of the state's witnesses all his life, as well as his father and mother before him, and he is a truthful man, and another juror states that one of the witnesses for the accused is under indictment for horse theft, and is unworthy of belief. Blalock v. State (1901) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 62 S. W. 571.

Similarly, where a juror states that the principal witness for the prosecution, whose testimony was attacked and whose inability to read was proved on the trial, has worked for him, and he knows said witness to be honest and truthful, and able to read, a new trial will be granted. Tate v. State (1897) 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 261, 42 S. W. 595.

And it has been held that the statement of a juror that he knew one of the state's witnesses to be a truthful, straight, honest, and honorable man, who would not tell anything but the truth, which statement was agreed to by several other jurors, who knew said witness personally, was sufficient to warrant a reversal where two of the jurymen, who were for light punishment, testified that they were influenced by the statements to the extent of agreeing to more severe punishment. Mizell v. State (1917) 81 Tex. Crim. Rep. 241, 197 S. W. 300. See also Williams v. State (1903) 45 Tex. Crim. Rep. 240, 75 S. W. 509.

It is also error for a juror to state facts and circumstances tending to show that a witness for the accused, notwithstanding his acquittal of participating in the offense, was nevertheless guilty. Williams v. State (Tex.) supra.

But unless the verdict is probably influenced by the statement of a juror to his fellows as to the credibility of a witness for the accused, a new trial will not be granted. Cox v. State (1889) 28 Tex. App. 92, 12 S. W. 493.

So, where a statement by a juror in the jury room that a witness for the prosecution is a good man and a Christian does not influence any of the jurors in arriving at a verdict, a new trial will not be granted. Allen v. State (1911) 62 Tex. Crim. Rep. 557, 188 S. W. 593.

The inference from the decision in State v. Jones (1888) 29 S. C. 201, 7 S. E. 296, is that jurors may use their personal knowledge of a witness in reaching a conclusion as to his credibility. The court stated that a charge that a juror can neither consider any facts which come within his personal knowledge, nor communicate them to the other jurors, without being in contempt and violating his solemn oath, does not prevent the jurors from using their personal knowledge of witnesses in reaching a conclusion as to their credibility, and is therefore unobjectionable.

3. Statement reflecting on character of accused.

Where there was no evidence concerning the character of the accused, but one of the jurors stated that he was a bad man, and had been on the county convict farm, and that he, the juror, had guarded on that farm, and it appears that the punishment was assessed at a greater period than the jury were inclined to impose before the statement was made,—the conviction will be set aside. Vanduran v. State (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 440, 98 S. W. 247.

So, where a juror stated to his fellows that while he was deputy sheriff he became well acquainted with the accused, and knew she was a bad character, who gave the officers of the law lots of trouble, a new trial was granted. Dunn v. State (1913) 72 Tex. Crim. Rep. 170, 161 S. W. 467.

Similarly, a new trial was granted where the jury discussed the fact that the accused was a bad man, and had served a term in the penitentiary for cattle theft, and was a member of a family who died with their boots on, there having been no evidence concerning the character of the accused introduced on the trial. Weber v.

State (1915) 78 Tex. Crim. Rep. 253, 181 S. W. 459.

In Gilford v. State (1906) 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 275, 92 S. W. 424, the court granted a new trial because it appeared that while the jury were deliberating, several of its members, in commenting on the fact that the accused was a negro, said that his character, as well as that of his family, was bad, and that all the negroes living in the same locality with the accused were leading immoral lives.

In Koenigstein v. State (1917) 101 Neb. 229, 162 N. W. 879, wherein a juror stated in the jury room that he had known the accused since boyhood, and that he knew his reputation to be bad, the court reversed a judgment of conviction.

A conviction for theft will be reversed where, before a verdict is reached, two of the jurors state that the defendant is the biggest rogue they have ever seen or heard of, that she ought to be hung, and that they would be willing to hang her if the law would permit it; and one of such jurors enumerates several instances of theft by the defendant, and both of such jurors alone stand for the maximum penalty for a considerable time. Holmes v. State (1897) 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 370, 42 S. W. 996.

And where, during the jury's deliberation in a burglary case, one juror states that he does not like the defendant's morals, and intimates that he is connected with a gang of thieves, a conviction will be set aside; and especially so where it appears that before the statement, the jury stood seven for acquittal and five for conviction. Crow v. State (1904) 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 225, 82 S. W. 1083.

In State v. Lowe (1903) 67 Kan. 183, 72 Pac. 524, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 693, it appeared that a juror who had stated on his voir dire examination that he had no knowledge of the case or prejudice which would prevent him from giving the accused a fair trial made statements to other jurors in the jury room to the effect that the accused was a bad man, who should not be turned loose, but should be convicted, no evidence of character having been introduced on the trial. The court reversed the judgment of conviction.

A conviction of manslaughter resulting from the negligent operation of an automobile while under the influence of intoxicants will be reversed where it appears that two members of the jury had stated repeatedly during deliberation that they knew the accused to have been a drunkard ever since his youth, and it is evident that these statements influenced other jurors in arriving at their verdict. State v. Salmer (1917) 181 Iowa, 280, 164 N. W. 620.

In Hargrove v. State (1894) 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 431, 26 S. W. 993, wherein it appeared that, while the jury were deliberating, remarks were made that the accused was a hardened criminal with a bad reputation for peacefulness, as well as for truth and veracity, and that, as the result of these remarks, some of the jurors, who were in favor of acquittal or a short term of years, agreed to a verdict of guilty, and fixed the punishment at twenty-five years' imprisonment, the court granted a new trial.

A conviction of rape will be reversed where it appears that a juror stated to his fellows during deliberation, and while they were divided six for conviction to six for acquittal, that, three years before, the accused went into the bedroom of his neighbor's wife, and a unanimous verdict for conviction resulted from the making of the statement. Ellis v. State (1894) 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 508, 27 S. W. 135.

Where a discussion of the reputation and character of the accused influences one of the jurors to the extent of causing him to agree to a verdict and a higher punishment than he otherwise would have given, a new trial will be granted. Kegans v. State (1906) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 96 S. W. 16.

In Warren v. State (1909) 57 Tex. Crim. Rep. 518, 128 S. W. 1115, one of the grounds on which the court granted a new trial was that several of the jurors stated that they knew all negroes shot craps, and that, if the accused knew the game was being played, it would have been impossible to keep him away from it.

But it has been held that a mere statement made by one juror to another juror, or to all of his fellows, in reference to the character of the accused, is not per se ground for a new trial. Austin v. State (1875) 42 Tex. 355.

And unless it appears that prejudice resulted from statements regarding the character of the accused, a new trial should not be granted. Hardiman v. State (1899) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 53 S. W. 121.

Thus, it has been held that where the accused is not prejudiced by statements made by jurors in the jury room that he is a bad man and generally crooked, a reversal will not be granted. State v. Olds (1898) 106 Iowa, 110, 76 N. W. 644.

When evidence of the character of the accused has been given on the trial, it is not misconduct sufficient to authorize a new trial for the jury to discuss that subject. Brice v. State (1901) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 61 S. W. 121.

A new trial will not be granted merely on account of the statement of a juror that he had known people of the same name as the accused in a place where he had once lived, who were "the toughest set he about ever knew," and that, as he looked at the accused during the trial, he was impressed with his resemblance to that "set." People v. Thompson (1910) 198 N. Y. 396, 91 N. E. 838.

4. Statement concerning another conviction of accused.

It has been held that statements by a juror to his fellows concerning other convictions of the accused are calculated to disparage the accused in the minds of the jury, and the court cannot speculate as to possible injury that may have accrued to the accused, but must grant a new trial. Ysaguirre v. State (1900) 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 253, 58 S. W. 1005; Lankster v. State (1901) 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 298, 65 S. W. 373; Hughes v. State (1902) 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 511, 67 S. W. 104.

As was said in Lankster v. State

(1901) 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 298, 65 S. W. 373, supra: "We do not believe, in a matter of this sort, we are authorized to speculate as to possible injury that may have accrued to appellant. The jury were guilty of misconduct in referring to the former convictions, and the bare fact that this misconduct was of a character calculated to injuriously affect him is enough."

So, a conviction for homicide will be set aside, where it appears that jurors in favor of conviction stated that two former convictions had been reversed, and that the people were expecting a verdict corresponding with the former verdict, even where the jurors make affidavit that they were not influenced by such statements, and expressly refused to consider them, and although their affidavits find some support in the fact that the juries on the former trial assessed the punishment at twenty-five and twenty-one years, respectively, whereas the jury whose acts are complained of imposed a sentence of only three and one-half years. Hughes v. State (1902) 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 296, 70 S. W. 746.

It is error for the court, on a motion for a new trial of one convicted of obtaining property by false pretenses, to refuse to hear evidence that, during the jury's deliberation, one juror stated that the accused had been convicted on a former trial. State v. McCormick (1896) 57 Kan. 440, 57 Am. St. Rep. 341, 46 Pac. 777.

A conviction will be set aside, where, in assessing the punishment, one juror asks what sentence the defendant got on a former trial, and another answers that it was fifteen years, and then a similar verdict is rendered. Hefner v. State (1903) 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 441, 71 S. W. 964, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 682.

Reversal because of a statement by a juror as to the result of a previous trial has been put on the ground that evidence of the fact would not have been admissible on the trial. Morawitz v. State (1906) 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 366, 91 S. W. 227, wherein the court said: "If the state had attempted, in the course of the trial, to prove that defendant had been convicted, and five years' punishment assessed against him on the previous trial, and the same had been objected to by appellant, and the court had admitted the testimony, there could be no cavil or question as to the injurious effect of the testimony. This . . . is an accurate test in matters of this character."

Where a statement made by a juror to the effect that the accused has served a term of imprisonment influences another juror to agree to a verdict finding the accused guilty of a felony instead of a misdemeanor, the court should grant a new trial. Burlesan v. State (1890) — Tex. App. —, 15 S. W. 175.

A discussion of the penalty awarded on a former conviction will be ground for setting aside a conviction, even though it does not seem to have any influence, by reason of the fact that a less term of imprisonment is imposed than by the former verdict. The rule which inhibits any sort of discussion by members of the jury in the jury room of the former verdict should be rigidly adhered to, and it cannot be said absolutely that, notwithstanding the verdict for a lesser term than was imposed by the former verdict, the fact of the former conviction could not have had some influence with the members of the jury. Casey v. State (1907) 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 433, 102 S. W. 725.

A fortiori a new trial will be granted where it appears that the jurors used a verdict in a prior trial as an actual predicate for their own verdict, after one juror had suggested that the previous verdict was twenty years, and another suggested that it would not do to make the verdict the same, whereupon they rendered a verdict of twenty-one years. Hill v. State (1908) 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 646, 114 S. W. 117.

It has been held that the statement of a juror on a trial for bribery, that the defendant had been previously convicted of arson, when taken in connection with comments on the failure of the defendant to testify, was sufficient to warrant a reversal, where its probable effect was to influence the minds of the jurors, and there was no evidence in the case as to the conviction for arson. Maples v. State (1910) 60 Tex. Crim. Rep. 169, 181 S. W. 567.

So, a conviction for rape will be set aside, where it appears that after the jury had retired, some of its members mentioned the fact that the accused had just been convicted of a similar offense, and, although the foreman suppressed any discussion of the matter, it was repeatedly brought up and alluded to by the members of the jury, there being no evidence in the case as to the prior offense. Hopkins v. State (1902) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 68 S. W. 986.

It has been held that the statement by two members of a jury in a burglary case, that the defendant had previously been in the penitentiary, when considered together with the fact that, before the statement was made, some of the jury were in favor of assessing a minimum penalty, whereas a longer sentence was afterwards agreed upon, could not be said not to have influenced the jury, and warrant the denial of a new trial. Hardiman v. State (1899) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 53 S. W. 121.

The considerations which forbid a discussion of a previous conviction and the extent of the penalty on a former trial of the accused make it reversible error for the jurors to consider the conviction and extent of the penalty against the accused's codefendant. Horn v. State (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 404, 97 S. W. 822.

A new trial will be granted where it appears that, prior to a discussion of another conviction of the accused, and mention of the punishment imposed, a portion of the jury had been in favor of an acquittal, but, after being informed of the result of the former trial, one who had been voting for acquittal stated that he would agree to a conviction. Clements v. State (1913) 69 Tex. Crim. Rep. 369, 153 S. W. 1137.

A conviction will be set aside where it appears that, prior to the discussion by the jury of a former trial and conviction, ten jurors were in favor of fixing the punishment at nineteen years' imprisonment, and two were for a less number of years, and that, after the discussion had taken place, the punishment was fixed at nineteen years, even though the jurors generally stated that they were not influenced by the discussion. McDougal v. State (1917) 81 Tex. Crim. Rep. 179, L.R.A.1917E, 930, 194 S. W. 944.

Likewise, where the discussion of a previous conviction of the accused influenced one of the jurors to the extent of causing him to agree to a verdict and a higher punishment than otherwise he would have given, it was held that a new trial would be granted. Kegans v. State (1906) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 96 S. W. 16.

In Cotton v. State (1921) 88 Tex. Crim. Rep. 618, 228 S. W. 943, wherein it appeared that, prior to the discussion of another conviction, the jury stood nine for conviction and three for acquittal, and that, after such discussion was had, a verdict of guilty was rendered, the court granted a new trial.

It has been held that a new trial would be granted where a juror remarked, while the jury was deliberating, that one who was indicted with the defendant had been convicted and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment, and suggested that the jury should not give the accused a smaller sentence, and it appeared that the jury followed the suggestion by rendering a verdict of guilty, and fixing the punishment at ten years. Tull v. State (1906) 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 202, 91 S. W. 584.

Although members of the jury testify that they were not influenced by the discussion of a prior conviction, a reversal will nevertheless be granted for the obvious reason that jurors seeking to justify their conduct would not admit that they were unduly influenced. Mitchell v. State (1896) 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 318, 33 S. W. 367; Lankster v. State (1901) 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 298, 65 S. W. 373; Hughes v. State (1902) 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 296, 70 S. W. 746; McDougal v. State (Tex.) supra.

Thus, in Lankster v. State (1901) 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 298, 65 S. W. 373, supra, the court said: "The jury say that this discussion in no wise influenced them in arriving at their verdict. The affidavits of jurors who are guilty of misconduct, to the effect that they were not prejudiced by what they did, is of little weight. As was said in Mitchell's Case (Tex.) supra: 'Such an affidavit is to be expected from jurors seeking to justify themselves for their own misconduct, and to escape a responsibility imposed upon them by their oaths, which an admission that they were otherwise influenced would entail.'"

But a mere casual reference or allusion by a juror to a former conviction, which does not influence or prejudice the jury against the accused, is not ground for a new trial. Horn v. State (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 404, 97 S. W. 822; Smith v. State (1908) 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 344, 106 S. W. 1161, 15 Ann. Cas. 357; Arnwine v. State (1908) 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 213, 114 S. W. 796; Oates v. State (1909) 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 571, 121 S. W. 370.

"The true rule is that where . . . the testimony supports the verdict, and the charge of the court properly submits the case to the jury, that a verdict ought not to be set aside for every incidental and casual mention of a former trial or a former conviction, and that in no case should it be set aside in a case tried according to law, where the conviction is supported by the testimony, unless the court may fairly and reasonably see, in the light of all the circumstances, that such reference and discussion did or might have prejudiced the appellant's case." Smith v. State (1908) 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 344, 106 S. W. 1161, 15 Ann. Cas. 357, supra.

So, a new trial will not be granted where, although a former conviction may have been incidentally mentioned by a juror who was at once informed by the foreman that the matter must not be discussed or considered, all the jurors say that it was not discussed or considered. Burge v. State (1914) 73 Tex. Crim. Rep. 505, 167 S. W. 63.

And, in Horn v. State (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 404, 97 S. W. 822, it was held that a reversal would not be granted for mere comment by a juror on the fact of a former conviction, where the comment gave the jurors no information which they did not possess when they became jurors, and which knowledge they avowed before they were accepted as such.

Similarly, where it does not appear that any discussion was had in the jury room of a former conviction, and the most that could be said was that it was casually referred to, and did not seem to have made an impression on any member of the jury, there is no misconduct warranting a reversal of the verdict. Moore v. State (1907) 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 336, 107 S. W. 540.

In one jurisdiction it has been held that a new trial will not be granted because of a statement made by a juror as to the nature of the verdict at a former trial, for the reason that the statement is not evidential within the rule that evidential statements of a prejudicial nature, made by a juror on his personal knowledge, which would naturally and probably influence the verdict, furnish ground for the granting of a new trial. State v. Farrar (1918) 103 Kan. 774, 176 Pac. 987.

5. Statement relating to other offenses of accused.

It is reprehensible conduct and generally deemed to be prejudicial to the accused for a juror to refer, during the deliberations of the jury, to other offenses committed by the accused, and the court should distinctly charge that only the evidence adduced on the trial is to be considered, and should not permit references to previous offenses to be made by the jury in the jury room. Morton v. State (1878) 1 Lea (Tenn.) 498.

So, where it appeared that, after the retirement of the jury in a prosecution for arson, statements were made by several of the jurors concerning the fact that the accused had been suspected of burning other buildings, and at least one of the other jurors was influenced thereby, it was held that a new trial would be granted. Mason v. State (1891) — Tex. App. —, 16 S. W. 766.

So, a conviction for violation of the liquor law will be reversed, where it was stated in the jury room that the "defendant had been keeping his sister-in-law," and some of the jurors stated that the defendant had bought an interest in a certain drug store for the purpose of selling liquor, and that liquor was sold in such store every day, none of these things having any basis in the evidence adduced. Williamson v. State (1911) 62 Tex. Crim. Rep. 132, 136 S. W. 1071.

Similarly, a conviction for rape will be reversed where it appears that during the deliberation of the jury two of its members stated that the accused had ruined other girls, and was an improper person to run at large, and should be convicted on general principles, although one of the jurors denied that he made the statements complained of. Richards v. State (1893) 36 Neb. 17, 53 N. W. 1027.

A conviction of rape will be set aside, where, in assessing the punishment, a juror referred to certain acts and statements not in evidence, tending to show that the defendant was inclined to commit and did commit sexual improprieties. Sims v. State (1902) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 70 S. W. 90.

Likewise, a reversal will be granted where, in a prosecution for the stealing of a calf, a member of the jury states, after his retirement, that he knows the accused, and that he is in the habit of stealing calves. Terry v. State (1897) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 38 S. W. 986.

Where it appeared that, on the trial of one accused of receiving stolen goods, one of the jurors stated in the jury room that the defendant had at one time stolen a hog, it was held that a new trial would be granted. Booby v. State (1833) 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 111.

A conviction for homicide will be reversed where one or two jurors stated, after the jury's retirement, that the accused had previously killed another man, and made other statements tending to show that the accused and other members of his family were dangerous characters,—and especially where it appears that after such statements were made the attitude of the jury changed from a majority in favor of acquittal to a unanimous verdict of conviction. Mitchell v. State (1895) 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 278, 33 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 456.

Similarly, a conviction of homicide will be reversed where, after the jurors had determined the guilt of the accused, and while they were trying to fix the punishment, one of the jurors stated that this was not the first man the defendant had killed, and that, if the deceased's dying declarations had been admitted in evidence, the jurors would have known why the deceased had previously gone to the penitentiary, the latter remark having reference to a case in which the defendant and the deceased had previously been indicted for murder, and in which the former was acquitted and the latter convicted. Blocker v. State (1901) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 61 S. W. 391.

And in Suddath v. State (1921) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 235 S. W. 210, it was held that a conviction of murder would be reversed where it appeared that the fact that the accused had previously killed another man was discussed by the jury after retirement, and one of the jurors who at first favored a conviction of manslaughter testified that he was influenced by such discussion to the extent of agreeing to a conviction of murder.

It has been held to be reversible error for a juror to state to his fellows, in a prosecution for rape, that the accused had at one time been charged with theft, where it appeared that no conviction had ever resulted from that charge, and the prosecution had been dismissed. Robbins v. State (1904) 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 312, 122 Am. St. Rep. 694, 83 S. W. 690.

A verdict of guilty will be set aside where it appears that a juror stated to his fellows that it was very common for the accused to be in court, or that he was in court frequently with some charge against him, as the statement was well calculated to prejudice the minds of the other jurors against the accused. Nile v. State (1883) 11 Lea (Tenn.) 694.

Where a juror who testified on his voir dire examination that he knew nothing about the facts of the case stated in the jury room that the accused had shot two other men, and it appears that, as a result of the statement, the highest sentence provided by law for the offense of which the accused was convicted was passed on him, a new trial will be granted. Knight v. State (1912) 66 Tex. Crim. Rep. 335, 147 S. W. 268.

In Warren v. State (1909) 57 Tex. Crim. Rep. 518, 123 S. W. 1115, wherein it clearly appeared that the jury took the previous convictions of the accused for crap shooting, which were referred to and discussed by several of the jurors, as the basis of a conviction for perjury, a new trial was granted.

In Mann v. State (1904) 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 250, 83 S. W. 195, wherein a juror stated in the jury room that the accused had hit the prosecutor on the head with an ax handle on a former occasion, the court granted a new trial.

In a prosecution for cattle theft, the statement by a juror in the jury room that he had lost some cattle, and had traced a wagon track to a place close to the residence of the accused, is misconduct sufficient to warrant a reversal of the verdict. State v. McChesney (1921) 114 Wash. 113, 194 Pac. 551.

But the discussion of other crimes than that charged against the accused, unless the discussion is shown to have influenced some of the jurors, is not ground for reversal. Mason v. State (1891) — Tex. App. —, 16 S. W. 766; Williams v. State (1894) 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 128, 47 Am. St. Rep. 21, 25 S. W. 629, 28 S. W. 958; Parker v. State (1895) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 30 S. W. 553; Ray v. State (1896) 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 354, 33 S. W. 869.

And a reference by a juror to the fact that the accused, after his arrest, had attempted to commit suicide, which the foreman warned the jurors they must not consider, and all agreed that it should not be considered, is not sufficient to warrant a reversal of the conviction. Williams v. State (1894) 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 128, 47 Am. St. Rep. 21, 25 S. W. 629, 28 S. W. 958.

20 A.L.R.—76.

Likewise, where one on trial for forgery is not prejudiced by the statements of several jurors, made in the jury room, that the accused had been caught with a woman or women, suggesting that he had been guilty of immoral sexual relations, and that he had been in several "scrapes," a new trial will not be granted. State v. Olds (1898) 106 Iowa, 110, 76 N. W. 644.

It has been held that a statement by some of the jurors in a homicide case, after their retirement for deliberation, that the accused had killed another man, while highly improper, is not reversible error, where it appears that the matter was mentioned only once, and was then suppressed by the foreman, and that the jurors were not influenced by it. Moore v. People (1899) 26 Colo. 218, 57 Pac. 857.

Similarly, where it appears that one of the jurors merely inquired of another if the accused was the man who had had a row or fight with a deputy sheriff, or if it was a barber by the name of Charley, and the answer was made that the accused was the man instead of the barber, some of the jurors claiming to have heard the discussion, others stating that they did not hear anything said about the matter, a new trial will not be granted. Clark v. State (1914) 74 Tex. Crim. Rep. 464, 169 S. W. 895.

Where a discussion of other offenses imputed to the accused was but casual and incidental, and the jury agreed that, as they were concerned only with the charge on which the accused was on trial, they would not be influenced thereby, a new trial was denied. Testard v. State (1888) 26 Tex. App. 260, 9 S. W. 888.

Where the affidavits of the jurors showed that no discussion of another offense alleged to have been committed by the accused was had until after the verdict was rendered, a new trial was denied. State v. Gay (1896) 18 Mont. 51, 44 Pac. 411.

A new trial will not be granted merely on proof that some of the jurymen stated that the accused had been previously concerned in a transaction similar to that for which he was being tried, where no proof was made that the statements were believed, or that they influenced any of the jurors in reaching a verdict. State v. Cross (1895) 95 Iowa, 629, 64 N. W. 614.

In Austin v. State (1875) 42 Tex. 355, it was held that statements made by a juror to his fellows in the jury room, to the effect that the accused had committed other offenses, was not ground for a reversal under a statute authorizing a new trial where the jury receives new evidence during deliberation, even though the juror who heard the statements was prejudiced thereby.

II. Document.

Although the jury in the trial of a criminal case is sometimes entitled to have such documents as have been regularly received in evidence brought into the jury room, the examination by the jury of documents which are not in evidence is improper and is ground for a new trial if the nature of the document or the use made of it is prejudicial to the defendant. Ogden v. United States (1902) 50 C. C. A. 380, 112 Fed. 523; Atkins v. State (1855) 16 Ark. 568; Waide v. State (1917) 13 Okla. Crim. Rep. 165, 162 Pac. 1139; Thomas v. State (1917) 13 Okla. Crim. Rep. 414, 164 Pac. 995. See also Pound v. State (1871) 43 Ga. 88.

In Ogden v. United States (Fed.) supra, the fact that the jury, on retirement, took into the jury room the indictments on which the accused was tried, on the back of which was indorsed the verdict of a former jury, finding the accused guilty as charged therein, was held to be ground for a new trial.

Under an Oklahoma statute making it a ground for a new trial for the jury to receive out of court evidence other than that resulting from a view of the premises, and other statutes prescribing what documents may be taken into the jury room, it has been held that where the jury are allowed to take into the jury room a transcript of the evidence taken at the preliminary examination, and not introduced at the trial, a new trial should be granted. Thomas v. State (1917) 13 Okla. Crim. Rep. 414, 164 Pac. 995. And see Atkins v. State (1855) 16 Ark. 568, holding to the same effect without reference to any statute.

But, in a prosecution for manslaughter, where evidence which was given at the coroner's inquest was inadvertently taken into the jury room, but did not appear to have been read by any juror, a new trial was refused. State v. Harris (1882) 34 La. Ann. 118.

So, in Com. v. Nash (1883) 135 Mass. 541, it was held that the defendant was not entitled to a new trial as of right because of the fact that a copy of the record of the lower court went to the jury by inadvertence, with the other papers in the case.

It has been held that a new trial would not be granted because city directories were furnished during deliberation by a court attendant to members of the jury, where the fact was made known to the court before the verdict, and the jurors were directed that they were to disregard any information obtained from the directories, and it did not appear that the accused had been prejudiced in any way. United States v. Horn (1862) 5 Blatchf. 102, Fed. Cas. No. 15,389.

It is no ground for a new trial that documents constituting new evidence were introduced into the jury room, in the absence of proof that the jury read their contents. State v. Harris (La.) supra; State v. Tindall (1856) 44 S. C. L. (10 Rich.) 212.

In Kansas a statute provides that "the court may grant a new trial when the jury has received any evidence, papers, or documents not authorized by the court." See State v. Taylor (1878) 20 Kan. 643; State v. Lantz (1880) 23 Kan. 728, 33 Am. Rep. 215; State v. Keehn (1911) 85 Kan. 765, 118 Pac. 851. Under that statute it has been held that where an atlas of the county where the crime was alleged to have been committed was brought into the jury room by a bailiff during the deliberations of the jury, and examined by the jurors, in the absence of proof that the accused was not injured thereby, a new trial should be granted. State v. Lantz (1880) 23 Kan. 728, 33 Am. Rep. 215, supra. But in State v. Keehn (1911) 85 Kan. 765, 118 Pac. 851, a prosecution for homicide, it was held not to be such misconduct as would warrant a new trial under the statute for a juror to submit to his fellows in the jury room a sketch of the scene of the killing, made by him while the evidence was being presented. The court said: "The sketch complained of was not a foreign evidentiary document like the atlas which the bailiff gave the jury in the case of State v. Lantz (Kan.) supra. It represented nothing more than Cagwin's idea of what the testimony disclosed. This idea he could present to the jury without misconduct, and the fact that the sketch was not accurate does not indicate misconduct. The purpose of the sketch, however, was to enable Cagwin to follow the testimony intelligently. This court was obliged to do just as Cagwin did, as it proceeded with a reading of the record. As soon as the jury entered upon its consideration of the case it immediately recognized the necessity for some kind of a drawing to visualize in a general way the scene of the tragedy. Deprived of the chart used on the trial, the jury set about to make one of its own, and Cagwin merely offered his as one that would serve their purpose. Under these circumstances no inference of prejudice could reasonably be drawn from the making and exhibition of the sketch; all possibility of prejudice from its use by the jury was disproved, and no misconduct of any kind appears." L. F. C.

WINIFRED STEELE

v.

JOSEPH C. ALLEN, Commissioner of Banks, et al.

SIMON ROSEN et al.

v.

SAME.

MYER T. ORNSTEEN

v.

SAME.

SAMUEL ORNSTEEN et al.

v.

SAME.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court — March 10, 1922.

(— Mass. —, 134 N. E. 401.)

Bank — effect of simple insolvency.

1. Simple insolvency of a bank at the time of receiving deposits does not warrant rescission of the deposit if there are genuine and reasonable hope, expectation, and intention on the part of the officers to carry on the business and recover sound financial standing.

. [See note on this question beginning on page 1206.]

Definition — insolvency.

2. A trader or a bank is denominated as insolvent when not in a condition to pay its debts in the ordinary course, as persons carrying on trade or banking usually do.

[See 14 R. C. L. 628.]

Bank — taking deposits when insolvent — fraud.

3. Deposits accepted by a bank with knowledge on the part of its officers that it cannot meet its obligations is a fraudulent act.

— right to rescind deposit.

4. A deposit in an insolvent bank may be rescinded and the proceeds, if traced, recovered back in like manner as other trust funds.

[See 3 R. C. L. 557; 1 R. C. L. Supp. 855.]

— mere unsound condition — right to rescind.

5. The mere fact that a bank had been in a somewhat shaky condition for years, had not complied with the requirements of the statute as to its reserve, and had transferred funds from its savings to its commercial department, and was finally taken over by the bank commissioner, does not render fraudulent the acceptance of deposits during such time, so as to justify their rescission, where there is nothing to indicate that the action of the commissioner was anticipated by the bank officers, or that they had any reason to expect that the bank would not continue business for years as it had done in the past.

RESERVATION by the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County for determination by the full court of questions arising in suits to recover the amounts of deposits made by plaintiffs in a certain bank alleged to have been insolvent at the time the deposits were made. Bills dismissed..

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Jacobs & Jacobs for plaintiffs.

Mr. John E. Hannigan for defendant Trust Company.

Rugg, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These are suits in equity whereby the several plaintiffs seek to recover from the defendant as commissioner of banks, in possession of the property of the Prudential Trust Company, the amounts of deposits made by them in the trust company while it was insolvent, on the ground that the trust company was known by its managers to be insolvent at the time of the receipt of the deposits, and that hence the bank became a trustee ex maleficio of the moneys thus deposited. The facts as to the financial condition of the trust company and the knowledge and intention of the executive officers concerning its future were briefly these: The bank was organized and opened for business in June, 1915. During the months of July, August, and September, 1916, it had less than the required legal reserve every day (with three or four exceptions) by amounts ranging from $4,000 to $56,000. From October, 1916, through July, 1917, it had the required reserve substantially all the time. From August, 1917, through January, 1918, it frequently had less than the legal reserve. From June, 1918, through September, 1919, there was a shortage in the reserve a good deal of the time. In October and November, 1919, conditions changed for the better. The largest deposit balance was $2,572,000, and the actual reserve reached its highest point, with an excess in round figures of $267,000. Shortly thereafter began a steady general decline of deposits, interrupted occasionally by temporary increases. The reserve almost never equaled the legal requirements. During September, 1920, the deposits were not quite so low as in February, 1919. In April, 1920, a serious condition was discovered, due to the misconduct of the treasurer, who resigned shortly afterward. He had made excessive loans to and suffered large overdrafts by a single depositor and borrower. Early in May the president of the trust company told the situation to the commissioner of banks. In order to tide over, ten directors gave their notes to the bank, aggregating $125,000, which was reported to have been acceptable to the bank commissioner. At about that time two offers, one for $135 per share and the other for $125 per share, were made for the outstanding stock of the trust company, although these offers did not develop into anything tangible. In August, 1920, the assistant treasurer bought twenty shares of stock at $180 per share. The master finds that the treasurer of the trust company knew its condition all the time, that the president knew it in a general way up to the time of the treasurer's retirement, and in detail thereafter, and that the assistant treasurer knew it from the commencement of his service with the bank in March, 1918, until it was closed. All three of these officers knew of the steady shrinkage of deposits, that the commercial department was burdened by a large amount in slow and doubtful loans, and that there were constant transfers of cash from the savings department to the commercial department, without which the latter would possibly not have had enough cash for its necessities. In accepting all the deposits the president and assistant treasurer "acted under a hope" that the trust company "would in some way or other pull through its difficulties, and did not anticipate its closing. Though both these men knew the facts, . . . they never analyzed the situation." There was no evidence showing, on the part of either of these officers, any personal fraudulent intent to bring about any gain or advantage for themselves by continuing to run the trust company and accept deposits, although, knowing the facts as to its condition, they knew it was insolvent. The trust company was closed by the commissioner on September 10, 1920.

Doubtless the trust company was insolvent at all the times when deposits were made here sought to be recovered. A trader or a bank commonly is insolvent when not in condition to pay his debts in the ordinary course, as persons carrying on trade or banking usually do. Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Cush. 134; Lee v. Kilburn, 3 Gray, 594, 600; Vennard v. McConnell, 11 Allen, 555, 561; Peabody v. Knapp, 153 Mass. 242, 26 N. E. 696; Holbrook v. International Trust Co. 220 Mass. 150, 155, 107 N. E. 665.

Acceptance of deposits by a bank is a representation of solvency. A bank hopelessly insolvent, receiving deposits from those who confide in its good reputation or in its representations, is held to knowledge that it cannot meet its obligations.

Taking deposits under such circumstances is the equivalent of a preconceived purpose not to pay, and is a fraudulent act. The contract of deposit may be rescinded by the depositor and the deposit, or its proceeds, if traced, may be recovered in like manner as other trust funds. On the other hand, simple insolvency, even of a bank, does not warrant the rescission of deposits if there are genuine and reasonable hope, expectation, and intention on the part of the officers of the bank to carry on its business and to recover sound financial standing. There must be the further fact that it is reasonably apparent to its officers that the concern will presently be unable to meet its obligations as they are likely to mature, and will be obliged to suspend its ordinary operation. The facts must establish the conclusion that the trust company accepted the deposit knowing, through its officers, that it would not and could not pay the money when demanded by the depositor. Watson v. Silsby, 166 Mass. 57, 59, 43 N. E. 1117; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 133 U. S. 566, 576-578, 33 L. ed. 683, 686, 687, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390;

Definition—
insolvency.

Bank-taking deposits when insolvent—fraud.

—right to rescind deposit.

—effect of simple
insolvency.

Williams v. Van Norden Trust Co. 104 App. Div. 257, 93 N. Y. Supp. 821; Roberts v. Hill (C. C.) 24 Fed. 571, 573. It was said in Brennan v. Tillinghast, 120 C. C. A. 37, 201 Fed. 609: "The mere fact that the bank is known to be insolvent at the time the deposit is received is not, in our opinion, sufficient of itself, without more, to confer this right of rescission upon the depositor, and such right of rescission would not arise when the bank at the time of receiving the deposit, although embarrassed and insolvent, yet had reason to believe that by continuing in business it might retrieve its fortunes; the necessary condition upon which the right of rescission is predicated being that the deposit was received when the bank was hopelessly embarrassed, and so circumstanced as to constitute its receipt of the deposit a fraud upon the depositor."

A more drastic statement is to be found in some decisions where warranted or required by particular facts, and where a comprehensive statement of a complete rule was not demanded. See, for example, Grant v. Walsh, 145 N. Y. 502, 45 Am. St. Rep. 626, 40 N. E. 209; Richardson v. New Orleans Coffee Co. 43 C. C. A. 583, 102 Fed. 785; Williams v. Van Norden Trust Co. 104 App. Div. 251, 93 N. Y. Supp. 821; Western German Bank v. Norvell, 69 C. C. A. 330, 134 Fed. 724.

In the case at bar it appears that the trust company, while not complying with the requirements of the statute as to reserves, and while not keeping the assets in its savings department separate and distinct from its general assets, was yet continuing to meet its obligations as and when they arose. The exact state of its affairs or the precise extent of its insolvency is not disclosed on this record. It had been apparently in a somewhat shaky condition for several years and yet had been able to continue its business. The commission took possession of its assets and property under Gen. Laws, chap. 167, § 22. There is nothing to indicate that such action was anticipated by the officers, or that they had any reason to expect that the institution might not continue for the next three or four years as it had during the past like period. Its deposits had been previously at a lower ebb than when closed by the commissioner, and had recovered. These suits in effect are claims against all the other creditors. This record discloses no equity in favor of these depositors against other depositors during this period of insolvency. In substance and effect the present plaintiffs are seeking a preference over other creditors which is not clearly established. A ratable distribution appears to be more likely to work out justice. The bill may be dismissed in each case, with one bill of costs to the defendant.

—mere unsound condition—right to rescind.

So ordered.

ANNOTATION.

Right of depositor to rescind, or to claim a trust in respect of a deposit because of insolvency of bank when it was made.

The general rule is to the effect that acceptance of general deposits by a bank which is hopelessly insolvent to the knowledge of its officers constitutes such a fraud as will entitle the unsuspecting depositor to rescind and recover back the money, or give him a preferential claim, or create a trust ex maleficio, provided other conditions sometimes held essential to a recovery, such as augmentation of assets, identification, etc., can be satisfied.

United States.—St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston (1890) 133 U. S. 566, 33 L. ed. 683, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390, reversing (1886) 23 Blatchf. 489, 27 Fed. 246; Somerville v. Beal (1892) 49 Fed. 790, affirmed in (1892) 17 L.R.A. 291, 1 C. C. A. 598, 5 U. S. App.

14, 50 Fed. 647; Richardson v. Denegre (1899) 35 C. C. A. 452, 98 Fed. 572; Richardson v. New Orleans Debenture Redemption Co. (1900) 52 L.R.A. 67, 42 C. C. A. 619, 102 Fed. 780; Richardson v. New Orleans Coffee Co. (1900) 43 C. C. A. 583, 102 Fed. 785; Richardson v. Olivier (1900) 53 L.R.A. 113, 44 C. C. A. 468, 105 Fed. 277; Western German Bank v. Norvell (1905) 69 C. C. A. 330, 134 Fed. 724; Brennan v. Tillinghast (1913) 120 C. C. A. 37, 201 Fed. 609; Furber v. Stephens (1888) 35 Fed. 17; Peck v. First Nat. Bank (1890) 43 Fed. 357; Wasson v. Hawkins (1894) 59 Fed. 233; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Indianapolis Nat. Bank (1895) 65 Fed. 690; Quin v. Earle (1899) 95 Fed. 728; Re Silver (1912) 208 Fed. 797.

Alabama.—St. Louis Brewing Asso. v. Austin (1893) 100 Ala. 313, 13 So. 908. And see Hutchinson v. National Bank (1906) 145 Ala. 196, 41 So. 143.

Illinois.—American Trust & Sav. Bank v. Gueder & P. Mfg. Co. (1894) 150 Ill. 336, 37 N. E. 227, affirming (1894) 51 Ill. App. 349; Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Household Guest Co. (1900) 88 Ill. App. 126. See also Lantermann v. Travous (1898) 174 Ill. 459, 51 N. E. 805.

Maryland.—Pott v. Schumucker (1897) 84 Md. 535, 35 L.R.A. 392, 57 Am. St. Rep. 415, 36 Atl. 592.

Massachusetts.—Furber v. Dane (1910) 204 Mass. 412, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 808, 90 N. E. 859; STEELE v. ALLEN (reported herewith) ante, 1203.

Mississippi.—First Nat. Bank v. Strauss (1889) 66 Miss. 479, 14 Am. St. Rep. 579, 6 So. 232.

Missouri.—Fisse v. Dietrich (1877) 3 Mo. App. 584.

Nebraska.—Wilson v. Coburn (1892) 35 Neb. 530, 53 N. W. 466; Higgins v. Hayden (1897) 53 Neb. 61, 73 N. W. 230.

New Jersey.—Perth Amboy Gas-light Co. v. Middlesex County Bank (1900) 60 N. J. Eq. 84, 45 Atl. 704.

New York.—Cragie v. Hadley (1885) 99 N. Y. 131, 52 Am. Rep. 9, 1 N. E. 537; Atkinson v. Rochester Printing Co. (1889) 114 N. Y. 163, 21 N. E. 178; Grant v. Walsh (1895) 145 N. Y. 502, 45 Am. St. Rep. 626, 40 N. E. 209; Spring Brook Chemical Co. v. Dunn (1889) 39 App. Div. 130, 57 N. Y. Supp. 100; Williams v. Van Norden Trust Co. (1905) 104 App. Div. 251, 93 N. Y. Supp. 821; Chaffee v. Fort (1870) 2 Lans. 81; Craigie v. Smith (1884) 14 Abb. N. C. 409; National Citizen's Bank v. Howard (1886) 3 How. Pr. N. S. 511; Rochester Printing Co. v. Loomis (1887) 45 Hun, 93, 9 N. Y. S. R. 592, affirmed without opinion in (1890) 120 N. Y. 659, 24 N. E. 1103; Importers & Traders Bank v. Everett Bros. (1889) 21 N. Y. S. R. 98, 4 N. Y. Supp. 599; Syracuse Bank v. Wisconsin M. & F. Ins. Co. Bank (1891) 59 Hun, 620, 12 N. Y. Supp. 952; New York Breweries Co. v. Higgins (1894) 79 Hun, 250, 29 N. Y. Supp. 416; Stapleton v. Odell (1897) 21 Misc. 94, 47 N. Y. Supp. 13. And see Importers & Traders Nat. Bank v. Peters (1890) 123 N. Y. 272, 25 N. E. 319, and Re North River Bank (1891) 60 Hun, 91, 14 N. Y. Supp. 261.

Ohio.—Orme v. Baker (1906) 74 Ohio St. 337, 113 Am. St. Rep. 968, 78 N. E. 439, affirming (1905) 27 Ohio C. C. 465; Re Commercial Bank (1895) 1 Ohio N. P. 358, 2 Ohio Dec. 304; Re Commercial Bank (1895) 2 Ohio N. P. 170. And see Howe v. Akron Sav. Bank Co. (1913) 16 Ohio C. C. N. S. 320.

Oklahoma.—Willoughby v. Weinberger (1905) 15 Okla. 226, 79 Pac. 777; Cherry v. Territory (1906) 17 Okla. 213, 89 Pac. 190; Cherry v. Territory (1906) 17 Okla. 221, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1254, 89 Pac. 192.

Pennsylvania.—Corn Exch. Nat. Bank v. Solicitors' Loan & T. Co. (1898) 188 Pa. 330, 68 Am. St. Rep. 872, 41 Atl. 536.

Tennessee.—Bruner v. First Nat. Bank (1896) 97 Tenn. 540, 34 L.R.A. 532, 37 S. W. 286; Freiberg v. Cox (1896) 97 Tenn. 550, 37 S. W. 283; Harris v. First Nat. Bank (1897) — Tenn. —, 41 S. W. 1084; Williams v. Cox (1897) 99 Tenn. 403, 42 S. W. 3; Knaffl v. Knoxville Bkg. & T. Co. (1914) 130 Tenn. 336, L.R.A.1915D, 402, 170 S. W. 476.

Virginia.—Pennington v. Third Nat. Bank (1913) 114 Va. 674, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 781, 77 S. E. 455.

Washington.—See Blake v. State Sav. Bank (1895) 12 Wash. 619, 41 Pac. 909.

Wisconsin.—Hyland v. Roe (1901) 111 Wis. 361, 87 Am. St. Rep. 873, 87 S. W. 252.

Canada.—Re Central Bank (1888) 15 Ont. Rep. 611; Exchange Bank v. Montreal Coffee House Asso. (1886) Montreal L. Rep. 2 S. C. 141.

Where a banker is, to his own knowledge, hopelessly insolvent, he cannot honestly continue his business and receive the money of his customers, and if he does so, even though he has no actual intent to cheat and defraud a particular customer, he will be held to have intended the inevitable consequences of his act, which are to cheat and defraud all persons whose money he receives, and whom he fails to pay before he is compelled to stop business. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston (1890) 133 U. S. 566, 38 L. ed. 683, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; Richardson v. New Orleans Coffee Co. (1900) 43 C. C. A. 583, 102 Fed. 785; Rochester Printing Co. v. Loomis (1887) 45 Hun, 93, 9 N. Y. S. R. 592, affirmed without opinion in (1890) 120 N. Y. 659, 24 N. E. 1103; Re Commercial Bank (1895) 2 Ohio N. J. 170; Hyland v. Roe (Wis.) supra. In Rochester Printing Co. v. Loomis (N. Y.) supra, an action by one not a bona fide holder on a draft deposited by the drawers (defendants) with an insolvent bank, where the issue turned upon the question whether or not the act of the bank in receiving the draft was fraudulent, the trial court refused to charge that the depositors of the draft, to establish their defense, must show that the bank made false representations with intent to deceive, and that representations made to the world were not sufficient, but must be made to the defendants. It did substantially charge that a banker, by proclaiming himself as such, and ready to receive deposits of his customers, holds himself out as a man of sufficient means to meet the obligations he, in that manner, assumes; and if his condition was such, and he knew it, when he received a deposit in the course of business with his customers, that he was likely to be incapable of meeting the demand for it, he was bound to disclose that situation before he received the deposit; that men assuming that relation cannot be permitted to take the money of their customers when they know that they are unable to repay and likely to be compelled to suspend; that mere insolvency does not necessarily render the receipt of money by a banker fraudulent; but insolvency which is hopeless and irremediable, and renders him liable to shut his doors at any moment, makes it improper for him to continue the business of taking deposits, without notice of his situation to customers; that the fact to be found is whether this deposit was received by Moore (the banker) in good faith, under circumstances which render it honest on his part to receive it, or whether it was dishonest and fraudulent towards his customers, the defendants, to receive it; that if a man is doing banking business fraudulently all the time it is not necessary that he should entertain a particular fraudulent intent in each particular instance in which he receives deposits; that if this transaction was fraudulent on the part of Moore, the defense is established, and that if it were honest on his part the plaintiff is entitled to recover. The appellate court, in upholding the trial court, said: "The charge as made covered the ground and stated fairly, we think, the proposition of fact which was for the consideration of the jury, and to be determined by them to reach a result. The relation between a banker and his customers is in some degree confidential, and he, it must be assumed, understands that they make with him deposits upon the faith and reliance that he is financially able to pay their drafts upon him for an amount equal to their deposits. And the relation that he assumes, in view of the nature of his business as such banker, is, in practical effect, a representation on his part that he is able to do so. And if he is in an irretrievable condition of insolvency, so that he knows or has reason to suppose that he cannot meet the engagements he assumes when he takes the funds of his customers deposited to be placed to their credit, the transaction may involve an implied representation or concealment which characterizes it as fraudulent on the part of the banker. . . . The defendants had been customers of Moore in his relation of banker for several months. And their defense did not necessarily depend upon representations expressly made by him to them in respect to his financial condition and ability, but might be implied from the relation he assumed as a banker, by means of which invitation was extended alike to them and others to open an account and deposit their moneys with him. It is true that deception was necessary to fraud, and unless the defendants were deceived they had no defense, but there is no evidence that they had any knowledge or information when they made this deposit that Moore was insolvent or was not responsible for all the obligations he assumed. And, therefore, in view of the charge as made, the court was not required to further charge specifically that they must have been in fact deceived to constitute a defense. It may have been otherwise if the jury had been permitted to find that the defendant had any notice of the financial embarrassment of Moore at the time the deposit in question was made with him." And in Wasson v. Hawkins (1894) 59 Fed. 233, in holding that the reception of deposits after known hopeless insolvency was a fraud, the court said: "The reception of the money and checks, under such circumstances, was a fraud upon the plaintiff, and entitled him to rescind the transaction, and recover back his deposit from the bank. The keeping of the bank open, and the conducting of its business in the usual manner, constituted a representation to its customers of the solvency of the bank, upon which they had the right to rely; and, if the bank was known to be insolvent by the officers who were charged with its management, the concealment of that fact from a person about to make a deposit would constitute a fraud upon him. The title acquired by the bank to the money and checks deposited under such circumstances would be voidable at the election of the depositor, who could bring suit to recover his deposit without any previous demand. The bank would become a trustee ex maleficio, and would hold the deposit for the use of the depositor, and subject to his right of reclamation." And in Furber v. Dane (1910) 204 Mass. 412, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 808, 90 N. E. 859, in discussing the right of an innocent depositor in a bank known by its officers to be insolvent, the court said: "The right of such a depositor springs from the fraud which has been practised upon him by means of the false representation practically made to him that the bank is conducting its business in the ordinary way and is solvent, while in reality it is insolvent and known by its managers to be so. The effect of this fraud is to make the bank a trustee ex maleficio. But the depositor must show that a real fraud has been practised upon him, and to do this he must show affirmatively both that the bank was actually insolvent when it received his deposit, and that its managing officers then knew this to be the fact." In some jurisdictions the question of fraud has been made the subject of statutory regulation. For instance, in Illinois receipt by a bank within thirty days of failure, suspension, or involuntary liquidation has, by statute (Laws 1879, p. 113; 1 Starr & C. Stat. 776), been declared "prima facie evidence of an intent to defraud on the part of such banker." See American Trust & Sav. Bank v. Guelder & P. Mfg. Co. (1894) 150 Ill. 336, 37 N. E. 227, holding that the statute applies to a civil suit to recover back such a deposit. And see Lanterman v. Travous (1898) 174 Ill. 459, 51 N. E. 805, and Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Household Guest Co. (1900) 88 Ill. App. 126, both of which apply the provisions of this statute to a civil action to recover deposits made in an insolvent bank.

In a number of cases which have passed upon the question under consideration in this annotation, the courts have adopted the theory that the receipt of deposits by a bank which is hopelessly insolvent to the knowledge of its officials creates a fraud which will entitle the depositor to rescind the contract of deposit and recover back the amount thereof. To this effect are the following cases:

United States.—Breman v. Tillinghast (1913) 120 C. C. A. 37, 201 Fed. 609; Wasson v. Hawkins (1894) 59 Fed. 233; Quin v. Earle (1899) 95 Fed. 728.

Illinois.—American Trust & Sav. Bank v. Gueder & P. Mfg. Co. (Ill.) supra.

Maryland. — Pott v. Schmucker (1897) 84 Md. 535, 35 L.R.A. 392, 36 Atl. 592.

Massachusetts.—STEELE v. ALLEN (reported herewith) ante, 1203.

Mississippi.—First Nat. Bank v. Strauss (1889) 66 Miss. 479, 14 Am. St. Rep. 579, 6 So. 232.

Nebraska. — Higgins v. Hayden (1897) 53 Neb. 61, 73 N. W. 280.

New Jersey.—Perth Amboy Gas-light Co. v. Middlesex County Bank (1900) 60 N. J. Eq. 84, 45 Atl. 704.

New York.—Cragie v. Hadley (1885) 99 N. Y. 131, 52 Am. Rep. 9, 1 N. E. 537; Grant v. Walsh (1895) 145 N. Y. 502, 45 Am. St. Rep. 626, 40 N. E. 209; Williams v. Van Norden Trust Co. (1905) 104 App. Div. 251, 93 N. Y. Supp. 821; Craigie v. Smith (1884) 14 Abb. N. C. 409; National Citizens Bank v. Howard (1886) 3 How. Pr. N. S. 511; Importers & Traders Bank v. Everett Bros. (1889) 21 N. Y. S. R. 98, 4 N. Y. Supp. 599; New York Breweries Co. v. Higgins (1894) 79 Hun, 250, 29 N. Y. Supp. 416; Stapleton v. Odell (1897) 21 Misc. 94, 47 N. Y. Supp. 13.

Ohio.—Orme v. Baker (1906) 74 Ohio St. 337, 113 Am. St. Rep. 968, 78 N. E. 439.

Tennessee.—See Knaff v. Knoxville Bkg. & T. Co. (1914) 130 Tenn. 336, L.R.A.1915D, 402, 170 S. W. 476.

Washington.—See Blake v. State Sav. Bank (1895) 12 Wash. 619, 41 Pac. 909.

Wisconsin.—Hyland v. Roe (1901) 111 Wis. 361, 87 Am. St. Rep. 873, 87 N. W. 252.

Canada.—Re Central Bank (1888) 15 Ont. Rep. 611.

Provided they rescind the contract of debtor and creditor created by the deposit, on the ground of fraud, and have not elected to affirm the same by proving their claim in insolvency proceedings. Pott v. Schmucker (Md.) supra, holding that where depositors have proved their claim in insolvency they have elected their remedy, and that, consequently, they cannot rescind the contract of deposit and recover the same.

And the doctrine governing the right to recover deposits innocently made in an insolvent bank has been said to be that where deposits are received by a hopelessly insolvent bank, of which insolvency the officers know or should have known, the deposits, because of the fraud, do not become the property of the bank, but remain that of the depositors, who have the right to recover the same. Richardson v. Denegre (1899) 35 C. C. A. 452, 93 Fed. 572; Richardson v. Olivier (1900) 53 L.R.A. 113, 44 C. C. A. 468, 105 Fed. 277; Western German Bank v. Norwell (1905) 69 C. C. A. 330, 134 Fed. 724; Peck v. First Nat. Bank (1890) 43 Fed. 357; Fisse v. Dietrich (1877) 3 Mo. App. 584; Syracuse Bank v. Wisconsin M. & F. Ins. Co. Bank (1891) 59 Hun, 620, 12 N. Y. Supp. 952; Orme v. Baker (1906) 74 Ohio St. 337, 113 Am. St. Rep. 968, 78 N. E. 439. And see Corn Exch. Nat. Bank v. Solicitors' Loan & T. Co. (1898) 188 Pa. 330, 68 Am. St. Rep. 872, 41 Atl. 536. And this is also true where the deposit consists of a check which has not been placed to the customer's credit at the time the bank closes. Showalter v. Cox (1896) 97 Tenn. 547, 37 S. W. 286. And in Sadler v. Belcher (1843) 2 Moody & R. (Eng.) 489, a similar conclusion was reached where money was deposited after banking hours, and, according to custom, was kept in a separate account to be carried to the customer's account the following day, the banker having previously resolved not to open again. And to the same effect is Threlfal v. Giles, apparently unreported, which is set out in the opinion in the Sadler Case at page 492. But compare Ex parte Clutton (1850) 1 Fonbl. N. R.

(Eng.) 167, wherein, as set out in 1 Mews, Eng. Case Law Dig. col. 1049, it was held that money paid in after banking hours passed to the bank and its assignee, although the bank never opened again.

And in some of the cases the rights of the parties have been settled upon the theory that the fraud of the bank creates a trust ex maleficio, entitling the depositor to a preference, provided other necessary conditions are met. Thus in the following cases it has been expressly held that there was a trust in the deposits:

United States.—Richardson v. New Orleans Debenture Redemption Co. (1900) 52 L.R.A. 67, 42 C. C. A. 619, 102 Fed. 780; Richardson v. New Orleans Coffee Co. (1900) 43 C. C. A. 583, 102 Fed. 785; Wasson v. Hawkins (1894) 59 Fed. 233; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Indianapolis Nat. Bank (1895) 65 Fed. 690; Re Silver (1912) 208 Fed. 797.

Alabama.—St. Louis Brewing Asso. v. Austin (1893) 100 Ala. 313, 13 So. 908.

Massachusetts.—Furber v. Dane (1910) 204 Mass. 412, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 808, 90 N. E. 859; STEELE v. ALLEN (reported herewith) ante, 1203.

Nebraska.—Wilson v. Coburn (1892) 35 Neb. 530, 53 N. W. 466.

New York.—Atkinson v. Rochester Printing Co. (1889) 114 N. Y. 168, 21 N. E. 178. And see Importers & Traders Bank v. Everett Bros. (1889) 21 N. Y. S. R. 98, 4 N. Y. Supp. 599.

Ohio.—See Orme v. Baker (1906) 74 Ohio St. 337, 113 Am. St. Rep. 968, 78 N. E. 439.

Oklahoma.—See Willoughby v. Weinberger (1905) 15 Okla. 226, 79 Pac. 777; Cherry v. Territory (1906) 17 Okla. 213, 89 Pac. 190; and Cherry v. Territory (1906) 17 Okla. 221, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1254, 89 Pac. 192.

Tennessee.—Bruner v. First Nat. Bank (1896) 97 Tenn. 540, 34 L.R.A. 532, 37 S. W. 286; Williams v. Cox (1897) 99 Tenn. 403, 42 S. W. 3; Knaffl v. Knoxville Bkg. & T. Co. (1914) 130 Tenn. 336, L.R.A.1915D, 402, 170 S. W. 476.

Virginia.—Pennington v. Third Nat.

Bank (1918) 114 Va. 674, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 781, 77 S. E. 455.

Washington.—See Blake v. State Sav. Bank (1895) 12 Wash. 619, 41 Pac. 909.

Canada.—See Ontario Bank v. Chaplin (1889) Montreal L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 407, affirmed in (1890) 20 Can. S. C. 152, wherein a preference was allowed as to cash, but not as to checks.

In Richardson v. New Orleans Debenture Redemption Co. (Fed.) supra, the court said: "Ordinarily, when funds are deposited in a bank, the relation of debtor and creditor immediately arises between the banker and the depositor. The money deposited becomes the property of the banker. He has the right to use it, but must pay the debt to the depositor by cashing his checks. When the banker obtains the deposit by committing a fraud, as by receiving it after hopeless insolvency, the relation between the parties is very different. The fraud avoids the implied contract between the parties that would arise in its absence, and, having barred contract, a trust is the equitable result. The fraud itself gives no lien. The fraud prevents the money deposited from becoming the property of the banker, and thereby prevents the relation of debtor and creditor arising between the parties. As the money does not become the property of the banker, it, of course, remains the property of the depositor. In the banker's hands, therefore, it is a trust fund,—as much so as if it had been a special deposit. The money which the banker has received in due course of honorable business before insolvency has become his property, and he the debtor of those who deposited it. Now, if the banker, having money in his bank, fraudulently receives other money, and mingles it with the moneys on hand, can the defrauded depositor reclaim his money? . . . So we think, if one's money is wrongfully mingled with a mass of money, that equity can direct the possessor and wrongdoer, or his successor, to take out of the mass a sum sufficient to make restitution."

The general rule that if a bank receives a general deposit when it is insolvent and its insolvency is known to the officers of the bank but unknown to the depositor, the depositor may reclaim his deposit on account of the fraud perpetrated upon him, has been limited in Georgia by holding that the mere silence of the officers of the bank as to its condition at the time of the deposit is insufficient either to authorize a depositor to reclaim his money on account of a fraud, or to give him any superior lien over other creditors, and as a matter of fact such a depositor is in no better position than any other depositor unless, when intending to become a depositor, he made inquiry as to its solvency and was induced to make the deposit as a result of a statement made by the officers of the bank that it was solvent. McGregor v. Battle (1907) 128 Ga. 577, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 185, 58 S. E. 28. If this rule be adhered to it would seem that a depositor, in order to protect himself, would always have to inquire as to the solvency of a bank before making a deposit.

And in Mississippi it has been held that in order to sustain an attachment for receiving a deposit with intent to defraud, the actual intent must be proved, and that it is not sufficient that the deposit was received when the bank was insolvent, which the statute made fraudulent. Hughes v. Lake (1886) 63 Miss. 552.

And there is considerable authority to the effect that the mere fact that a bank, at the time it receives a deposit, is known by its officers to be insolvent, is not necessarily sufficient of itself, without more, to confer the right of recovery upon the depositor. Thus it has been held that the right of recovery does not arise when the bank, at the time of receiving the deposit, although embarrassed and insolvent, has, in the honest opinion of its officers, a reasonable chance to recover sound financial standing by continuing in business, since in such a case the acceptance of a deposit does not constitute a fraud upon the depositor. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston (1890) 133 U. S. 566, 38 L. ed. 683, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390 (rule recognized); Brennan v. Tillinghast (1913) 120 C. C. A. 37, 201 Fed. 609 (quoted in the reported case (STEELE v. ALLEN, ante, 1203); Quin v. Earle (1899) 95 Fed. 728; STEELE v. ALLEN (reported herewith); Williams v. Van Norden Trust Co. (1905) 104 App. Div. 251, 93 N. Y. Supp. 821. The mere fact that a bank is in an embarrassed condition is not sufficient of itself to constitute the necessary fraud, especially where it is continuing with "an honest hope of weathering the financial storm and of being eventually solvent," and deposits received by such banks "in the ordinary course of business . . . become honestly theirs, and the fact that their expectations were unrealized, and their hopes not well founded, would not fasten upon them a fraud that would vitiate their business transactions." Quin v. Earle (1899) 95 Fed. 728, supra. And in the reported case (STEELE v. ALLEN) the court stated the rule to be that simple insolvency of a bank does not warrant rescission of deposits if there are genuine and reasonable hope, expectation, and intention on the part of the officers of the bank to carry on its business and to recover sound financial standing, and, applying the rule, held that deposits made in a bank which had off and on for a period of years been below its statutory reserve and in a shaky condition, but able to continue and meet its obligations, and the officers of which did not anticipate that the commissioner of banks would take over the same, could not be rescinded. And in Williams v. Van Norden Trust Co. (N. Y.) supra, the court said: "The mere fact of insolvency at the time the deposit was received is not sufficient to justify a finding of fraud, but the insolvency must be of such a character that it was manifestly impossible for the bankers to continue in business and meet their obligations; and that fact must have been known to the bankers, so as to justify the conclusion that the bankers accepted the depositor's money knowing that they would not, and could not, respond when the depositor demanded it. It is fraud that must be proved. An honest mistake as to the condition of the bank and an honest belief in the solvency of the institution, if it exists, negative the conclusion of the fraud upon which the plaintiff's cause of action must depend." And that mere insolvency does not necessarily render the receipt of deposits by a banker fraudulent, see Rochester Printing Co. v. Loomis (1887) 45 Hun, 93, 9 N. Y. S. R. 592, affirmed without opinion in (1890) 120 N. Y. 659, 24 N. E. 1103, as quoted, supra; and Stapleton v. Odell (1897) 21 Misc. 94, 47 N. Y. Supp. 13.

Nor will the mere fact that the bank fails soon after receiving a deposit, in the absence of fraud, entitle the depositor to rescind the contract of deposit. Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Lloyd (1881) 25 Hun (N. Y.) 101, affirmed in (1882) 90 N. Y. 530; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 159, 28 N. Y. Supp. 407; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 421; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 421; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 421; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 422; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 422; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 423.

And where a bank is as a matter of fact insolvent at the time a deposit is received, but such fact is not actually known to its officers, and the circumstances are not such as to charge them with constructive notice thereof, the receipt of the deposit does not work a fraud, and the depositor cannot reclaim the deposit, but must stand with other depositors. Goshorn v. Murray (1912) 197 Fed. 407, reversed on other grounds in (1914) 127 C. C. A. 464, 210 Fed. 880; Balbach v. Frelinghuysen (1883) 15 Fed. 675; Terhune v. Bank of Bergen County (1881) 34 N. J. Eq. 367; Perth Amboy Gaslight Co. v. Middlesex County Bank (1900) 60 N. J. Eq. 84, 45 Atl. 704; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 159, 28 N. Y. Supp. 407; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 421; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y.

Supp. 421; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 422; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 422; People v. St. Nicholas Bank (1894) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 423; Stapleton v. Odell (1897) 21 Misc. 94, 47 N. Y. Supp. 13; Williams v. Cox (1896) 97 Tenn. 555, 37 S. W. 282 (on rehearing in (1897) 99 Tenn. 403, 42 S. W. 3).

And it has been held that the knowledge of insolvency which is sufficient to avoid transactions between a bank and its customers, on the ground of fraud, must have been that of the directors, who represent and have control of the bank, and that knowledge upon the part of an officer, such as a cashier, is not sufficient. Balbach v. Frelinghuysen (1883) 15 Fed. 675; Perth Amboy Gaslight Co. v. Middlesex County Bank (1900) 60 N. J. Eq. 84, 45 Atl. 704 (to the contrary, see Pennington v. Third Nat. Bank (1913) 114 Va. 674, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 781, 77 S. E. 455).

And it has been expressly held that to sustain a charge of fraud it is not sufficient that the bank officials knew, or, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence might have known, of the insolvency of the bank. Howe v. Akron Sav. Bank Co. (1913) 16 Ohio C. C. N. S. 320. The court said that the fact that the officials might have known was not sufficient, and approved the rule that they must know or believe.

But there is authority to the effect that the facts may be such that the necessary knowledge of insolvency upon the part of the bank will be presumed, so that it is not necessary to specifically allege knowledge to bring the case within the rule respecting fraud. Thus, in Somerville v. Beal (1892) 49 Fed. 790, affirmed in (1892) 17 L.R.A. 291, 1 C. C. A. 598, 5 U. S. App. 14, 50 Fed. 647, where it was alleged that the bank was "irretrievably insolvent, and made so by the operations of the president and two others of the directors," it was held that it must be presumed that the officers knew the condition of affairs and the consequences of their own acts, so that it was not necessary to aver specifically that the officers had knowledge of the insolvency. And an express showing of actual knowledge is not necessary. See Re Silver (1912) 208 Fed. 797, holding that a private banker who was so hopelessly insolvent on the day of closing that his estate would pay but 1 per cent must be presumed to have had knowledge of his insolvency on the preceding day, so as to make acceptance of deposits by him on that day fraudulent within the meaning of the rule as to recovery thereof.

And it has been held that a mere belief or expectation that the bank is actually solvent, and will be able to meet liabilities and continue in business, is not sufficient to avoid the receipt of a deposit being fraudulent, where the facts are such that the officers had reason to know that the concern was not solvent and could not survive. Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Household Guest Co. (1900) 88 Ill. App. 126.

It has been held that the promise of a third party to see the bank through its difficulties does not justify an insolvent bank in continuing to receive deposits, if there is no security for the performance of the promise. Thus, in Rochester Printing Co. v. Loomis (1887) 45 Hun, 93, 9 N. Y. S. R. 592, affirmed without opinion in (1890) 120 N. Y. 659, 24 N. E. 1103, the court said: "A man cannot honestly carry on banking business upon a mere promise of another to carry him, without some security for the performance of the promise. It will be observed that no legal duty had been assumed by Upton to provide Moore with currency to do his business. Good faith toward his customers required something more for its support than mere expectation that funds would be supplied to enable him to meet his obligations to his depositors. The expectation must be founded upon some right of property, or in some legal duty furnishing in a reasonable degree the right to suppose that his wants would be supplied, or that his demand for the purpose could be in some manner enforced. If A should, without capital, open a banking office, and announce to the public by appearances that he is a banker, and proceed to receive the people's money on deposit, which he cannot and does not repay, it can hardly, in the legal sense, or necessarily, be regarded as an honest enterprise on his part, merely because B had given him assurance, unsupported by liability, that he would furnish him money as he should from time to time need it. The situation represented by the banker is that of ability founded upon capital under his control to meet his engagements, and if he has it not, his customers are deceived and misled by the appearance he gives to his invitation for patronage. And this deception he has no right to produce, whatever may be his hopes founded, neither on capital of his own, or upon any personal obligation of another which he has any power to command or enforce. At all events, whatever may be his hope or expectation under such circumstances, he would not necessarily be relieved from the charge of fraud in obtaining moneys which he has failed and is unable to repay." G. J. C.

CLEVELAND, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO, & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CLARENCE GRAMBO, SR., Admr., etc., of Clarence Grambo, Jr., Deceased.

Ohio Supreme Court—November 22, 1921.

(— Ohio St. —, 134 N. E. 648.)

Municipal corporation — ordinance limiting speed of trains — validity.

1. An ordinance regulating the speed of trains through a municipality, enacted under the exercise of police power, which conforms to the limitations prescribed by the legislature, is presumptively reasonable and valid, and not in conflict with the state or Federal Constitutions. But the presumption may be rebutted, and in order to overcome such presumption a railway company must affirmatively show its unreasonableness.

Headnotes by the COURT.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1222.]

Negligence — of child.

2. Children are not chargeable with the same care as persons of mature years. Although children are required to exercise ordinary care to avoid the injuries of which they complain, such care, as applied to them, is that degree of care which children of the same age, education, and experience, of ordinary care and prudence, are accustomed to exercise under similar circumstances.

[See 20 R. C. L. 125; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 1034.]

— contributory negligence of parent.

3. In the negligence action for the death of a boy ten years of age, the defense of contributory negligence is available against the father and mother as beneficiaries, and is a question for the jury, under proper instructions. In case the issue is resolved against such beneficiaries, the right of recovery is not affected, but only the amount of recovery, when there are other beneficiaries not charged with negligence.

[See 20 R. C. L. 128; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 1036.]

Pleading — striking — unreasonableness of ordinance.

4. Where a city speed ordinance is pleaded as an element of negligence charged in a personal-injury case, and the defendant, by way of defense, admits the existence of the ordinance, but denies its validity, setting out facts which, if true, would tend to show the ordinance to be unreasonable in its application to the facts of the case, the action of the court in sustaining a motion to strike out such matters is error.

ERROR to the Court of Appeals for Franklin County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the death of his decedent, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Hough, J.:

The submission in the above case was for the purpose of reviewing the judgments of the two lower courts for errors appearing on the face of the record.

It was an action for personal injury, which resulted in the death of plaintiff's decedent, a boy ten years of age, the killing of the horse which he was driving, and the destruction of the vehicle, by defendant's passenger train at a grade crossing in the city of Columbus, Ohio, near the west corporation line.

The accident took place on the 17th day of October, 1917. The jury returned a verdict against the railway company, on which judgment was entered. Motion for a new trial was overruled, and error was prosecuted to the court of appeals, where the judgment was affirmed.

The petition is based on the following charge of negligence: That the grade crossing, by reason of its location and grade, the general situation in the immediate vicinity, the arrangement of the tracks, together with the natural obstructions in that vicinity, and because the crossing was without protection of flagman, gate, or barrier, was of a highly dangerous character; that no warning was given or preventions taken; that the train was traveling at an excessive rate of speed, to wit, 45 miles per hour; and that the act of striking and killing plaintiff's decedent was wanton and wilful.

A further allegation is then made that on the 4th day of July, 1889, the city of Columbus duly passed an ordinance which makes it unlawful to operate locomotives and trains over crossings at grade within the municipality at a rate of speed in excess of 6 miles per hour.

To this petition an amended answer was filed, alleging, among other things, that the ordinance of the city of Columbus mentioned in the petition prescribes an unreasonable regulation of interstate commerce and is a direct and unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce, and is therefore unconstitutional in the various particulars therein enumerated.

Other averments are then made, setting out in detail why the ordinance prescribes unreasonable regulations, including an exhibit showing on its face that 22.2 per cent of the distance between the Cleveland and Cincinnati termini of the railway company's line is within municipal corporations, and that from 6 to 7 miles of this right of way are within the limits of the city of Columbus, and setting out other facts to the effect that the crossing where the collision occurred is not of a particularly dangerous character. The answer further avers that about one half of the crossings within the city of Columbus are elevated, and not at grade, and that the tracks of the company within the corporation are upon the property of the company.

On motion these averments of the amended answer were stricken out by the court of common pleas, and exceptions thereto were noted.

A second amended answer was then filed, including four defenses. The first defense admits certain formal matters, including the killing of the young lad and the horse, and the destruction of the vehicle, again avers that the ordinance prescribes an unreasonable regulation of interstate commerce, and otherwise denies each and every allegation not specifically admitted.

The second defense and the third defense are directed to the contributory negligence of the plaintiff's decedent, and the fourth defense charges knowledge on the part of the plaintiff, who is the father of the boy killed, as well as administrator of his estate, and on the part of the boy's mother, of the youth's inexperience, and charges them with contributory negligence in permitting and directing the boy to drive the horse on the highway.

The reply denies that the ordinance mentioned in the petition prescribes an unreasonable regulation of interstate commerce, but admits that the railway company is engaged in interstate commerce; that many trains are operated daily over its tracks; that the train that collided with and killed the decedent was en route from Cincinnati to Cleveland; and that, if said train and said company complied with the ordinance mentioned, the speed thereof would be limited to 6 miles per hour over grade crossings.

The petition in error raises all questions which may be fairly raised by the record.

Messrs. Wilson & Rector for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Fred W. Postle and Harley E. Peters, for defendant in error:

The 6-mile speed ordinance was valid.

Southern R. Co. v. King, 217 U. S. 524, 54 L. ed. 868, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Carlinville, 200 Ill. 314, 60 L.R.A. 391, 93 Am. St. Rep. 190, 65 N. E. 730; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Illinois, 177 U. S. 514, 44 L. ed. 868, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Whitson v. Franklin, 34 Ind. 392; Gratiot v. Missouri P. R. Co. 116 Mo. 450, 21 S. W. 1094; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Bolton, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 87, 81 S. W. 123; Washington Southern R. Co. v. Lacey, 94 Va. 460, 26 S. E. 834, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 266; Larkin v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 85 Iowa, 492, 52 N. W. 480, 11 Am. Neg. Cas. 514; Knobloch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 402, 18 N. W. 106; Erb v. Morasch, 177 U. S. 584, 44 L. ed. 897, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 819; Meek v. Pennsylvania Co. 38 Ohio St. 638; Schweinfurth v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 60 Ohio St. 216, 54 N. E. 89; New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Kistler, 66 Ohio St. 326, 64 N. E. 130, 12 Am. Neg. Rep. 343.

Hough, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The errors of law complained of in oral argument and the briefs of counsel may be reduced to four, namely:

(1) That the rule followed by the trial court in reference to contributory negligence of a person of tender years was incorrect.

(2) That if the decedent was a boy ten years of age, and, because of that age, could not be charged with negligence to the same degree as a person of mature years, then contributory negligence was chargeable to the father and mother, who permitted and directed him to drive the horse on the highway, from which act the injury and death occurred.

(3) That the court charged on matters not covered by the proof.

(4) That the ordinance which was pleaded and admitted in proof prescribed an unreasonable regulation of interstate commerce.

The general charge of the court is challenged on all the above questions.

1. Contributory negligence becomes generally a question to be solved by the jury, and this is true for the reason that in the vast majority of personal-injury cases there is a dispute and contradiction in the declarations and actions of the plaintiff. The instant case is no exception to that majority. The standard governing such negligence on the part of a youth is not the same as that of an adult. Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Corrigan, 46 Ohio St. 283, 3 L.R.A. 385, 15 Am. St. Rep. 596, 20 N. E. 466, and Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mackey, 53 Ohio St. 370, 29 L.R.A. 757, 53 Am. St. Rep. 641, 41 N. E. 980. But, while the standard may differ, the question, when facts are contradictory or disputed, remains one for the consideration and disposition of the jury under the facts and circumstances of the case, with proper safeguards in the charge fixing that standard. The court did not overlook this rule or go astray in this respect, when it said: "Plaintiff's decedent, because of his tender years, is not chargeable with the same standard of care and caution as would be expected of a person of mature years. The degree of care and caution which said decedent child was required to exercise was that degree of care and caution which would ordinarily be exercised <sup>Negligence—of child.</sup> under similar circumstances by a child of the same age, education, and experience; not by any child of the same age, but by a child of the same age, education, and experience, of ordinary care and prudence for said age, education, and experience."

20 A.L.R.—77.

2. The third defense of the second amended answer charges the decedent with contributory negligence, and the fourth defense alleges that because he was a youth of tender years he was incapacitated for performing the task he was engaged in, and that his parents, who permitted and directed him, were guilty of contributory negligence.

The fourth is, in a sense, inconsistent with the third defense. If the boy, by reason of age, education, and experience, was capable of contributory negligence, the parents must be vindicated of that primary contributory negligence that might be claimed by reason of the accident. In fact, the trial court, in submitting the question of contributory negligence of the boy to the jury, did so, and properly, on the theory that the boy's own negligence was an essential, primary factor to be determined by the jury. That is to say, where the proof shows that the boy is of that age, education, and experience to justify the submission of the question of his contributory negligence to the jury, as appeared in this case, the determination of that question by the jury, where no special finding is required or returned, establishing the conclusion of the jury that the boy, because of his age, education, and experience, was not capable of guilt of contributory negligence, effectually covers the element of contributory negligence applied to the particular accident of the particular case, and contributory negligence of the father or mother, or both, as the question is raised in the record, has no relevancy except as it may affect their right of recovery as beneficiaries. The court very properly instructed the jury when it said: "In the event you find that the defendant was liable (that is to say, in the event that the jury resolved the contributory negligence of the boy in the boy's favor, and against the company, and found the company guilty of actionable negligence), if you find that the decedent's father or mother, or either or both, were negligent in placing the decedent in a dangerous position, and that the negligence contributed directly and proximately to the injury and death, you should not allow damages or compensation to the one you find so negligent, or to either if you find both so negligent, but you should only allow damages or compensation to those next of kin not found so negligent."

When the jury have arrived at that stage in their deliberations, if they do so arrive, where the company is guilty of actionable negligence, and the boy is acquitted of negligence, then it is necessary for them to determine whether or not the father or mother, or both of them, were negligent in a manner that contributed directly or proximately to the injury or death. If it is determined that they were, they may not recover as beneficiaries; if determined that they were not, they may so recover. Wolf v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 55 Ohio St. 517, 36 L.R.A. 812, 45 N. E. 708, and Cleveland, A. & C. R. Co. v. Workman, 66 Ohio St. 509, 90 Am. St. Rep. 602, 64 N. E. 582, 12 Am. Neg. Rep. 162.

The jury will be presumed to have determined this question under the instructions given, and, if they found either one thus guilty, to have eliminated in the general verdict any amount to that one as beneficiary, especially in the absence of a request for and the return of special findings thereon.

3. We find nothing that can be fairly construed to be prejudicial error under this head.

4. The petition sets forth the following allegations in reference to an ordinance of the city of Columbus: "On the 4th day of February, 1889, the said city of Columbus duly passed an ordinance which makes it unlawful to operate locomotives and trains over crossings at grade within said municipality at a rate of speed in excess of 6 miles per hour. Said ordinance . . . was in full force and effect on the said 17th day of October, 1917."

The second amended answer concedes the existence of the ordinance, and alleges that it prescribes an unreasonable regulation of interstate commerce. The ordinance itself, which was admitted in evidence, reads as follows: "It shall be unlawful for any railroad company or corporation, by or through its employees or agents, to run or move any locomotive, car, cars or train, upon or along any railroad track within the corporate limits of the city of Columbus, at a rate of speed greater than 6 miles an hour."

The amended answer, which was superseded by the second amended answer, set out much broader allegations in this particular, for the purpose, probably, of accommodating proof tending to show that a compliance with the ordinance would be an impossibility, under the contention that the unreasonableness of carrying out the provisions of the regulation amounted to unconstitutionality in the ordinance. As has been stated above, these matters, upon motion, were expunged from the pleadings by action of the court.

The defendant company asked the court before argument to charge the jury that the ordinance was invalid, and the plaintiff at the same time requested instructions that it was valid. The court refused the request of the former, and granted that of the latter, and in the general charge used the following language:

"An ordinance of the city of Columbus regulating the speed of trains and providing that no train shall be run at a greater speed than 6 miles per hour at grade crossings within the municipality has been introduced, and testimony has been introduced tending to show the violation of this ordinance by the defendant.

"The court charges you that the violation of a municipal ordinance passed in the proper exercise of police power in the interest of public safety, and not in conflict with the general laws, is negligence per se,—that is, is negligence of itself,—and where such acts of negligence by the defendant are the direct and proximate cause of an injury not directly contributed to by want of due care on the part of the injured person the defendant is liable.

"In other words, before recovery can be had against the defendant on account of the negligent act committed by the violation of the ordinance, if you find that such ordinance was violated, it must be shown that that negligent act was the direct and proximate cause of the injury, and that that injury was not directly contributed to by the plaintiff's decedent."

The validity of the ordinance is therefore raised in a number of ways. If the ordinance was valid, the court correctly charged, following the rule of law announced in the case of Schell v. Du Bois, 94 Ohio St. 93, L.R.A. 1917A, 710, 113 N. E. 664, 13 N. C. C. A. 982. And further, if valid, the action of the court in sustaining the motion to strike out was properly taken. But, if the ordinance was invalid, or if the defense tendered thereto in the amended answer was good, then the charge of the court as given was improper, and the disposition of the motion was also improper, and would be the basis of error.

The reply admits that the company is engaged in interstate commerce, operating many trains daily over its tracks, that the train figuring in the accident was so engaged, and at the time en route from Cincinnati to Cleveland, through Columbus, and that the speed, according to the ordinance, could not exceed 6 miles per hour over grade crossings. And here it ought to be noted that the terms of the ordinance itself would permit of a broader admission on the part of the plaintiff below, relying, as he does, upon the ordinance, because, by its terms that speed could not exceed 6 miles per hour, not only at grade crossings, but at all other crossings as well; and, in fact, at all points within the corporate limits of the city of Columbus, a distance of several miles; and it is the claim of the railroad company that the observance of the speed limitation of 6 miles per hour through the city would materially affect time schedules, particularly of the fast mail and other trains carrying interstate passengers and commerce.

That an ordinance regulating speed, passed in the proper exercise of the police power, in the interest of the safety and for the protection of the public, is competent evidence in a personal-injury case, under the settled law of Ohio, cannot be doubted. Back in the '80's Judge Johnson, speaking for this court in a case from the city of Bellaire against a railway company, laid down the rule which was followed for many years, in Meek v. Pennsylvania Co. 38 Ohio St. 632; and again, more than thirty years later, this court, in another Bellaire case, reported by Judge Johnson (another Judge Johnson, of course), in Schell v. Du Bois, supra, announced a like rule so far as competency is concerned, where it is said in ¶ 2 of the syllabus: "The violation of a municipal ordinance passed in the proper exercise of the police power, in the interest of the public safety, and not in conflict with general laws, is negligence per se; and where such act of negligence by a defendant is the direct and proximate cause of an injury, not directly contributed to by the want of due care on the part of the injured person, the defendant is liable."

We come, then, to the reasonableness of existing ordinances as that reasonableness reflects upon constitutional provision and limitation, because it must be conceded that the ordinance is based upon statutory authority, and, of course, in making the test, it must be made under the circumstances and conditions of the case at the present time, and not contemporaneous with the passage of the original ordinance or amendment.

Transportation problems and transportation mediums have undergone an amazing change and development since 1889. It is well to keep in mind that the public transportation agencies owe complex duties and obligations to the whole public,—the passengers whom they carry and the shippers for whom they carry, and the remaining body of the general public,—to the end that their operation may be conducted in such a way as to preserve the highest degree of safety and accommodation to all. Railroads have developed with the time, and with the growth and development of the country, from short-line independent service, with slow schedules and long transfer waits, to the consolidated fast through service of the transcontinental lines of to-day. All these improvements were necessary to keep pace with the times and the demands of the public; and since the period above mentioned other transportation agencies have been created and made efficient by the master minds and industry of the nation. Electric and gasoline motor vehicles for public as well as private transportation have come into vogue, and have fixed themselves permanently in the business and affairs of the country.

In invoking the police power for the safety of the public in this state the legislature has regulated the use of motor vehicles, both public and private, and has imposed speed limits. In other than business or closely built up sections of a municipality a maximum speed of 20 miles per hour is permitted, and although commercial motor cars have been further legislated upon, the maximum speed for the greater majority of classes has not been reduced, but, in some cases, increased.

The scene of this accident was near the corporate limits of the city, so that the 20-mile limit would apply to the speed allowed the majority of motor vehicles at this point.

Rail transportation on fixed steel tracks is conceded and normally a faster method of transportation than that of motor vehicles upon highways, with no fixed or stationary traction; yet the regulatory laws applying to these two methods of transportation differ materially, with an apparent discrimination against the rail type. There is no dearth of authority on this question, as the question has been raised in many ways and passed upon by the Federal and state courts in many instances. And it would appear from a casual survey that there existed a lack of harmony in the conclusions reached. Upon careful analysis much of the inconsistency disappears. The older decisions almost uniformly hold that properly delegated police power may be exercised without limitation, so long as it is not invoked unreasonably and arbitrarily, and just as uniformly sustain the regulatory acts of the legislative bodies, for the reason, we think, that the exigencies of the cases in those earlier times were not persuasive of an unreasonable or discriminatory situation or application.

The rule of law is in no wise different to-day. It is the application of the old rule to a set of facts based upon modern development of the transportation business, with the corresponding needs and demands of the public, reducing the situation surrounding the later-day cases to an unreasonable absurdity, that has led to conclusions of a different and opposite effect, arrived at in the more recent decisions.

An extremely well considered case on the subject is that of Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Carlinville, 200 Ill. 314, 60 L.R.A. 391, 93 Am. St. Rep. 190, 65 N. E. 730, where this question is fully discussed, and a great number of the older decisions are collated and analyzed. While the holding in that case sustains the ordinance under consideration, yet the law announced is pertinent to the instant case. Proposition 5 of the syllabus reads as follows: "The enactment of an ordinance regulating the speed off trains is an exercise of police power, and before a court can hold such an ordinance unreasonable, the want of necessity for such a measure for the public safety must be clearly made to appear."

And, further, proposition 3 announces the following rule: "An ordinance regulating the speed of trains, which conforms to the limitation prescribed by the statute, is presumed to be reasonable, and it is incumbent upon the railroad company seeking to avoid it to show affirmatively its unreasonableness."

Municipal corporation—ordinance limiting speed of trains—validity.

The defendant below attempted to bring itself within these rules of law by the allegations of the amended answer, in such a way as to accommodate proof tending to show the impossibility of observing the regulation and at the same time fulfilling its duties as a carrier, and to further show that the specific crossing had no peculiar elements of danger.

The United States Federal court in 1915 announced substantially the same rule as laid down in the Illinois case, supra. This appears in the case of Lusk v. Dora (D. C.) 224 Fed. 650, where it is said in proposition 2 of the syllabus: "An ordinance regulating the speed of trains, enacted as an exercise of the police power of the municipality, delegated to it by its charter, is presumptively reasonable and valid, and not in conflict with the Federal Constitution, but the presumption may be rebutted."

And in proposition 3 of the syllabus: "The reasonableness of a municipal ordinance, while a question of law, depends on the particular facts in each case."

It was held in this case that the ordinance, under the peculiar facts adduced, imposed an unreasonable burden on interstate commerce.

A decision of the United States Supreme Court, rendered in 1917, very well illustrates the trend of modern decisions upon the question under consideration. In Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Blackwell, 244 U. S. 310, 61 L. ed. 1160, L.R.A. 1917F, 1184, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 640, under the peculiar facts put before the court in that case, the following announcement of the law was made: "That provision of the 'Blow-Post Law' of Georgia (Civ. Code 1910, §§ 2675-2677) which requires railroad companies to check the speed of trains before public road crossings so that trains may be stopped in time should any person or thing be crossing the track there is a direct and unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce as applied to the state of facts specifically pleaded by the defendant interstate carrier in this case, whereby it appears that, to comply with the requirement, the interstate train in question would have been obliged to come practically to a stop at each of 124 ordinary grade crossings within a distance of 123 miles in Georgia, extending from Atlanta to the South Carolina line, and that more than six hours would thus have been added to the schedule time of four hours and thirty minutes. Southern R. Co. v. King, 217 U. S. 524, 54 L. ed. 868, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594, distinguished."

We are persuaded that if, in the trial of the case before us, the defendant had been permitted to develop the issuable facts set out in the amended answer, there would have been presented for solution of court and jury a different situation; and, following the line of decisions above mentioned, we reach the conclusion that the trial court erred in its ruling on the motion to strike out the matters appearing in the amended answer, and that the charge of the court in respect to the validity of the ordinance, as that validity is reflected by its reasonableness or unreasonableness in this case, while consistent, of course, with its holding on the motion, nevertheless constituted prejudicial error. Nor does the conclusion here arrived at in any wise violate the rule of law announced by this court in the first proposition of the syllabus in the case of Blancke v. New York C. R. Co. 103 Ohio St. 178, 133 N. E. 484, nor is it inconsistent with the language used by the judge of this court announcing the opinion in that case, where it is said, at page 184 of 103 Ohio St., at page 486 of 133 N. E.: "The presumption of law obtains that such regulation is striking—unreasonableness

Pleading—
of ordinance.

necessary and reasonable, and before the court will interfere with the discretion committed to the public authorities it must clearly appear that the exercise of such power upon the part of the municipality is unreasonable or unnecessary for the public safety. And only where it is shown clearly to the court that the exercise of this power is unreasonable and arbitrary, unduly restricting the speed of trains within the corporate limits, or where it unreasonably limits the speed of the trains in open or outlying sections of the municipality where the public safety is not affected, may the court declare such regulatory ordinance unconstitutional and void."

The case is therefore reversed, and remanded to the Court of Common Pleas for a new trial in accordance with this opinion.

Marshall, Ch. J., and Johnson, Robinson, Jones, and Matthias, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Reasonableness of regulation of speed of railroad train.

- I. Generally, 1222.
- II. Particular speeds, 1225.
- III. Regulation covering sparsely settled district, 1225.
- IV. Regulation covering switch yard or railroad grounds, 1230.
- V. Interference with business of railroad, 1230.
- VI. Discrimination, 1231.

I. Generally.

This annotation is confined to a discussion of the reasonableness of railroad speed regulations designed to prevent accident. Cases dealing with speed regulations designed to expedite the shipment of live stock are excluded.

While the annotation makes no attempt to deal with the existence of a power to regulate the speed of railroad trains, that power being assumed for the purpose of the present discussion, it may be said by way of introduction that it is well settled that the legislature may empower municipal authorities to pass ordinances to regulate the speed of cars through cities; and it is equally well settled that the municipal authorities of cities and large towns have the right to adopt such ordinances without any special legislative sanction, by virtue of their general police power as to matters within their respective jurisdictions. The cases cited throughout this annotation either uphold the power or take its existence for granted.

Where an ordinance regulating the speed of trains is passed in pursuance of power expressly conferred by the legislature, and the details of the municipal legislation are prescribed by the legislature, the ordinance will not be held invalid by the courts as being unreasonable. See Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Carlinville (1902) 200 Ill. 314, 60 L.R.A. 391, 93 Am. St. Rep. 190, 65 N. E. 730.

But when the details of the legislation are not prescribed, it is generally held that an ordinance passed in pursuance of a general power to regulate speed must be a reasonable exercise thereof, or it will be pronounced invalid. Lake View v. Tate (1889) 130 Ill. 247, 6 L.R.A. 268, 22 N. E. 791, affirming (1889) 33 Ill. App. 78; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Carlinville (Ill.) supra; Soucie v. Payne (1921) 299 Ill. 552, 132 N. E. 779; Burg v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1894) 90 Iowa, 106, 48 Am. St. Rep. 419, 57 N. W. 680; Zumault v. Kansas City & I. Air Line (1897) 71 Mo. App. 670; Plattsburg v. Hagenbush (1903) 98 Mo. App. 669, 73 S. W. 725.

In Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Carlinville (Ill.) supra, the court said: "The legislature did not distinctly say what may be done by municipalities in regulating the speed of trains passing through their limits. It only said that the speed of trains should not be limited below a certain rate per hour, and with that exception left the matter wholly within the discretion of the municipal authorities; and we think it clear the legislature did not prescribe the details to be observed in the passage of an ordinance regulating the speed of trains in their passage through incorporated cities and villages, and that the court has the power to decide such an ordinance as this invalid if it clearly appear that it be an unreasonable exercise of such power."

The Indiana court, however, reached the conclusion in Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Harrington (1891) 131 Ind. 426, 30 N. E. 37, that no error was committed in refusing to hear evidence as to the unreasonableness of an ordinance, enacted under express statutory authority, limiting the speed of railroad trains to 4 miles per hour. The court said: "The ordinance in question was passed in the year 1866. There was a statute in force, at the time, which expressly conferred the power to pass such an ordinance. 1 Gavin & H. 226. In the case above referred to it was said by this court: 'The power of a court to declare an ordinance unreasonable, and, therefore, void, is practically restricted to cases in which the legislature has enacted nothing on the subject-matter of the ordinance, and, consequently, to cases in which the ordinance was passed under the supposed incidental power of the corporation merely.' As this ordinance was enacted by express statutory authority, the court did not err in taking it as the standard of duty by which the appellant was bound, and in refusing to hear evidence that it was unreasonable."

An ordinance regulating the speed of a railroad train, enacted in the exercise of the police power, will be sustained unless it clearly appears to be unreasonable and unnecessary for the safety of the public, and for the protection of life and property.

Alabama.—See Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Loyd (1914) 186 Ala. 119, 65 So. 153.

Florida.—See Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith (1907) 53 Fla. 375, 43 So. 235.

Georgia.—Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Brunswick & W. R. Co. (1891) 87 Ga. 392, 13 S. E. 520; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Adams (1909) 7 Ga. App. 146, 66 S. E. 494; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Peavler (1910) 134 Ga. 618, 68 S. E. 432; Western & A. R. Co. v. Watkins (1913) 14 Ga. App. 388, 80 S. E. 916.

Iowa.—Meyers v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1881) 57 Iowa, 555, 42 Am. Rep. 50, 10 N. W. 896; Larkin v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (1892) 85 Iowa, 492, 52 N. W. 480, 11 Am. Neg. Cas. 514.

Kansas.—Erb v. Morasch (1898) 8 Kan. App. 61, 54 Pac. 323, petition dismissed in (1899) 60 Kan. 251, 56 Pac. 133, which is affirmed in (1899) 177 U. S. 584, 44 L. ed. 897, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 819.

Minnesota.—Knobloch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1884) 31 Minn. 402, 18 N. W. 106; Weyl v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1889) 40 Minn. 350, 42 N. W. 24; Evison v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1891) 45 Minn. 370, 11 L.R.A. 434, 48 N. W. 6.

Missouri.—Robertson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (1884) 84 Mo. 121; Gratiot v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1893) 116 Mo. 450, 21 S. W. 1094; Murrell v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co. (1919) 279 Mo. 92, 213 S. W. 964; White v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1891) 44 Mo. App. 540.

North Dakota.—Edwards v. Great Northern R. Co. (1919) 42 N. D. 154, 171 N. W. 873.

Ohio.—See the reported case (CLEVELAND, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. GRAMBO, ante, 1214).

South Carolina. — See Rowe v. Southern R. Co. (1911) 89 S. C. 217, 71 S. E. 833.

South Dakota.—Sioux Falls Traction System v. Great Northern R. Co. (1917) 39 S. D. 17, 162 N. W. 740.

Tennessee.—Hines v. Partridge (1921) 144 Tenn. 219, 231 S. W. 16.

Texas.—St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Bolton (1904) 36 Tex. Civ. App. 87, 81 S. W. 123; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Dillard (1906) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 94 S. W. 426.

Utah.—Shortino v. Salt Lake & U. R. Co. (1918) 52 Utah, 476, 174 Pac. 860.

Virginia.—Washington Southern R. Co. v. Lacey (1897) 94 Va. 460, 26 S. E. 834, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 266.

Wisconsin.—State v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. (1906) 128 Wis. 79, 107 N. W. 295.

It will be presumed that a speed ordinance enacted pursuant to the exercise of the police power is reasonable. Lusk v. Dora (1915) 224 Fed. 650; Knobloch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1884) 31 Minn. 402, 18 N. W. 106; Weyl v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1889) 40 Minn. 350, 42 N. W. 24; Evison v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1891) 45 Minn. 370, 11 L.R.A. 434, 48 N. W. 6. And see the reported case (CLEVELAND, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. GRAMBO, ante, 1214). The presumption arises especially where the record is silent as to the material facts. Larkin v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (1892) 85 Iowa, 492, 52 N. W. 480, 11 Am. Neg. Cas. 514.

So, a presumption of reasonableness exists where the ordinance is passed in pursuance of express statutory authority. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Carlinville (1902) 200 Ill. 314, 60

L.R.A. 391, 93 Am. St. Rep. 190, 65 N. E. 730; Zumault v. Kansas City & I. Air Line (1897) 71 Mo. App. 670; Plattsburg v. Hagenbush (1903) 98 Mo. App. 669, 73 S. W. 725.

Generally it has been held that the reasonableness of a municipal ordinance regulating the speed of trains is a question of law for the court to decide, unless it depends on the existence of particular facts which are disputed. Lusk v. Dora (1915) 224 Fed. 650; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Peavler (1910) 134 Ga. 618, 68 S. E. 432; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Adams (1909) 7 Ga. App. 146, 66 S. E. 494; Lake View v. Tate (1889) 130 Ill. 247, 6 L.R.A. 268, 22 N. E. 791, affirming (1889) 33 Ill. App. 78; Meyers v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1881) 57 Iowa, 555, 42 Am. Rep. 50, 10 N. W. 896.

In Evison v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1918) 45 Minn. 370, 11 L.R.A. 434, 48 N. W. 6, the court said: "If the invalidity is apparent on the face of a statute or ordinance, it has always been held a question of law for the court, and we cannot perceive why the rule should be different where the invalidity is made to appear from extrinsic facts. Any other rule would lead to the embarrassing result that, upon the same state of facts, one jury might hold an ordinance valid, and another jury hold it invalid."

But to justify a court in declaring void an ordinance limiting the speed of trains within a city, its unreasonableness or want of necessity as a police regulation for the protection of life and property must be clear, manifest, and undoubted. Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Brunswick & W. R. Co. (1891) 87 Ga. 386, 13 S. E. 520; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Carlinville (1902) 200 Ill. 314, 60 L.R.A. 391, 93 Am. St. Rep. 190, 65 N. E. 730; Knobloch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1884) 31 Minn. 402, 18 N. W. 106; Weyl v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1889) 40 Minn. 350, 42 N. W. 24; Evison v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1891) 45 Minn. 370, 11 L.R.A. 434, 48 N. W. 6; Gratiot v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1893) 116 Mo. 450, 21 S. W. 1094; Plattsburg v. Hagenbush (1903) 98

Mo. App. 669, 73 S. W. 725; Hines v. Partridge (1921) 144 Tenn. 219, 231 S. W. 16.

"Ordinances of this kind are passed for the purpose of affording protection to persons and property while on the streets at grade crossings and other places on the line of a railroad where they customarily have a right to go. And a clear case must be made out to authorize an interference by the court on the ground of unreasonableness." Plattsburg v. Hagenbush (1903) 98 Mo. App. 669, 73 S. W. 725.

II. Particular speeds.

Ordinances have been sustained which limited railroad trains within the municipal limits to the following rates of speed:

Four miles per hour: Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Harrington (1891) 131 Ind. 426, 30 N. E. 37; Knobloch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1884) 31 Minn. 402, 18 N. W. 106; Weyl v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1889) 40 Minn. 350, 42 N. W. 24; Hines v. Partridge (1921) 144 Tenn. 219, 231 S. W. 16.

Five miles per hour: Washington Southern R. Co. v. Lacey (1897) 94 Va. 460, 26 S. E. 834, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 266.

Six miles per hour: Western & A. R. Co. v. Watkins (1913) 14 Ga. App. 388, 80 S. E. 916; Crowley v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (1885) 65 Iowa, 658, 20 N. W. 467, 22 N. W. 918; Robertson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (1884) 84 Mo. 121; Merz v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1886) 88 Mo. 672, 1 S. W. 382, affirming (1883) 14 Mo. App. 459; Grube v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1889) 98 Mo. 330, 4 L.R.A. 776, 11 S. W. 736; Bluedorn v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 439, 32 Am. St. Rep. 615, 18 S. W. 1103; Gratiot v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1893) 116 Mo. 450, 21 S. W. 1094; Murrell v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co. (1919) 279 Mo. 92, 213 S. W. 964; Edwards v. Great Northern R. Co. (1919) 42 N. D. 154, 171 N. W. 873; Sioux Falls Traction System v. Great Northern R. Co. (1917) 39 S. D. 17, 162 N. W. 740; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Bolton (1904) 36 Tex. Civ. App. 87, 81 S. W. 123; State v. Wisconsin

C. R. Co. (1906) 128 Wis. 79, 107 N. W. 295. And see the reported case (CLEVELAND, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. GRAMBO, ante, 1214).

Ten miles per hour: Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Adams (1909) 7 Ga. App. 146, 66 S. E. 494; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Carlinville (1902) 200 Ill. 314, 60 L.R.A. 391, 93 Am. St. Rep. 190, 65 N. E. 730; Soucie v. Payne (1921) 299 Ill. 552, 132 N. E. 779; Larkin v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (1892) 85 Iowa, 492, 52 N. W. 480, 11 Am. Neg. Cas. 514.

Twelve miles per hour: Shortino v. Salt Lake & U. R. Co. (1918) 52 Utah, 476, 174 Pac. 860.

On the other hand, the courts have held to be unreasonable ordinances limiting the rate of speed of railroad trains as follows:

Four miles per hour: Meyers v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1881) 57 Iowa, 555, 42 Am. Rep. 50, 10 N. W. 896; Evison v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1891) 45 Minn. 370, 11 L.R.A. 434, 48 N. W. 6; White v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1891) 44 Mo. App. 540.

Six miles per hour: Lusk v. Dora (1915; D. C.) 224 Fed. 650; Burg v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1894) 90 Iowa, 106, 48 Am. St. Rep. 419, 57 N. W. 680; Zumault v. Kansas City & I. Air Line (1897) 71 Mo. App. 670; Plattsburg v. Hagenbush (1903) 98 Mo. App. 669, 73 S. W. 725.

III. Regulation covering sparsely settled district.

Municipal speed regulations are usually upheld even as applied to sparsely settled territory at the outskirts of the municipality, if the extent of sparsely settled territory included is not too great. Larkin v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (1892) 85 Iowa, 492, 52 N. W. 480, 11 Am. Neg. Cas. 514; Erb v. Morasch (1898) 8 Kan. App. 61, 54 Pac. 323; Knobloch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1884) 31 Minn. 402, 18 N. W. 106; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Dillard (1906) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 94 S. W. 426.

Thus, in Knobloch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1884) 31 Minn. 402, 18 N. W. 106, supra, an action for damages, the court held an ordinance limiting the speed of trains within the city of St. Paul to 4 miles an hour not to be unreasonable, although the accident took place at a crossing in a sparsely settled portion of the city. The court said: "At this time, when it is much the fashion to include within the corporate limits of cities large tracts of surrounding country, there will undoubtedly be portions in which a restriction of the speed of trains to 4 miles an hour may be so manifestly unnecessary and unreasonable that a court may declare it void. . . . The portion of the city in question here is different. It appears to be laid out in streets. Within a short distance of the crossing in question there appears to be a considerable and rapidly increasing city population, and the street making the crossing is a good deal traveled. . . . While it may be true that a higher rate of speed through the portion of the city in question would be consistent with the public safety, we cannot say it is so clearly and manifestly the case that we can hold the passage of the ordinance an abuse of discretion on the part of the common council. If the ordinance be unreasonable, and unnecessarily oppressive to commerce, the best way to prove that and secure its modification is to obey it."

So, in Erb v. Morasch (1898) 8 Kan. App. 61, 54 Pac. 323, wherein it was objected that a speed ordinance was unreasonable because of the fact that the part of the city where the accident occurred was uninhabited, and therefore there was no reason to impose restraints on commerce such as existed in the more populous parts of the city, the court said that "had the track of the railroad company been fenced, as in some of the cases referred to by counsel in the brief, and had the country where the accident occurred been agricultural grounds, the objection might have been tenable; but the evidence in the record discloses the fact that that portion of the city where the accident occurred is not thinly populated and is not agricultural lands; that the track of the company was not fenced; and that all the damages to which the inhabitants of the city were subjected existed in that part of the city as well as in any other part, though probably not to so great a degree—but it was simply a matter of degree."

In Larkin v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (Iowa) supra, an ordinance was held to be reasonable which required the defendant to operate its trains at a rate of speed not exceeding 10 miles an hour for a distance of $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile from its station, although the evidence tended to show that the right of way was fenced on each side, and that there was only a private crossing between the place where the accident happened and the station.

If an ordinance regulating the speed of trains embraces in its language the whole area of a city, and is reasonable in itself, the court may submit to the jury the question whether, on account of the special local conditions and surroundings, it is reasonable as applied to a particular locality just inside the city limits. Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Brunswick & W. R. Co. (1891) 87 Ga. 386, 13 S. E. 520; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Peavler (1910) 134 Ga. 618, 68 S. E. 432. In Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Brunswick & W. R. Co. (Ga.) supra, the court said: "It was contended by counsel for plaintiff in error that the city ordinance was unreasonable in its application to the particular locality where this accident occurred; and the assignment of error upon the charge given in reference to this subject implies that the court ought to have so declared. Instead of doing so, the court left the jury to determine, in view of all the facts and circumstances of the case, whether there was a necessity for the ordinance in this particular locality, and whether or not the operation of it at this place was reasonable. This was a very fair and proper method of disposing of this question. The jury, with all the facts before them, were competent to decide it fairly. The charge submitted to them impartially the contentions of both sides as to the necessity and reasonableness of the ordinance, and they were, perhaps, better qualified to reach a just conclusion on the subject than the judge himself. At any rate, he saw proper to submit this question to them, and we are unable to see that in so doing he committed any error."

But a speed ordinance will be declared invalid if made applicable to any considerable extent of sparsely settled territory. In such a case it has no reasonable relation to the public safety. Meyers v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1881) 57 Iowa, 555, 42 Am. Rep. 50, 10 N. W. 896; Burg v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1894) 90 Iowa, 106, 48 Am. St. Rep. 419, 57 N. W. 680; White v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1891) 44 Mo. App. 540; Zumault v. Kansas City & I. Air Line (1897) 71 Mo. App. 670; Plattsburg v. Hagenbush (1903) 98 Mo. App. 669, 73 S. W. 725.

Thus, in Meyers v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (Iowa) supra, an ordinance which prohibited the running of a railway train at a higher rate of speed than 4 miles an hour for a distance of 3 miles through agricultural lands outside the inhabited portions of a city, on a track fenced on both sides, was declared to be unreasonable and void. The court said: "Under the ordinance in question in this case it would take three quarters of an hour, after entering the corporate limits of Council Bluffs, to pass over 3 miles of railroad, through agricultural lands, fenced on both sides, and reach the inhabited portion of the city, and it would take over one hour and a quarter to reach the terminus of the railroad at the Union Pacific depot. One of the objects of railroads is to secure quick transportation for freight and passengers. The ordinance in question not only places an unreasonable restriction upon the railways themselves, but it unreasonably impedes the whole traveling public. No necessity has been shown, and none certainly exists, for limiting railways to a speed of 4 miles an hour, for 3 miles before they enter the inhabited portion of a city, and whilst passing through agricultural lands fenced upon both sides. If all the cities situated along the line of the defendants' road between Council Bluffs and Chicago should enact and enforce a like ordinance, it is apparent that the time between the two cities would be greatly increased. The ordinance operates as a restraint upon commerce, and, in our opinion, ought not to be sustained."

And in Burg v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1894) 90 Iowa, 106, 48 Am. St. Rep. 419, 57 N. W. 680, an ordinance limiting the speed of railroad trains to 6 miles per hour was declared to be unreasonable and void as applied to that part of the city added to, and included in, its boundaries after the ordinance was passed, and at a point where no platted streets were open across the track, and where the right of way was fenced on both sides. The court said: "It is not to be understood that the ordinances of the city do not apply to it as enlarged; but, in determining the question whether or not the ordinance is so unreasonable as to be of no validity at the point in question, importance may be given to the fact of whether or not the act, at the time of its passage, was designed or intended as having force there; for, if not, the legislative sanction comes from the fact that the ordinance stands unrepealed after the territorial change in the city, rather than from legislative action based upon known conditions. How far such a fact should, or might, properly influence a judicial determination of the question of the unreasonableness of an ordinance, as bearing on its validity, is not, perhaps, to be definitely stated, nor would it likely be the same in all cases. At the place where the accident occurred, there was no greater necessity for such a limit on the speed of the train than in very many places outside the city or station limits. East of the point some 2,800 feet are brickyards, where there is an opening for men and teams to cross the track. From this point west, some 2 miles beyond the place of the accident, the defendant's right of way is fenced. It is also fenced through West End addition to the city of Des Moines, which is over 1,200 feet east of the place of the accident, and in this addition the platted streets do not cross the railway track. Along where the accident happened, on both sides of the track, there are no residences, except that of Burg, it being about a fourth of a mile from any other, and the land is wooded and uncultivated on both sides of the road, except a small piece near the house of Burg. This case comes clearly within the rule and reasoning of Meyers v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (Iowa) supra. Some importance is attached to the facts of the platted West End addition and the brickyards crossing just east of it. They are not of such importance as to change the rule. In the addition, there are but a few buildings,—seven in all,—and, as we have said, the streets, as opened, do not cross the right of way, which is fully protected by its fences. The brickyards crossing is some 2,800 feet east of the point of the accident, and could not in any way affect the reasonableness of the rate of speed at that point. After leaving the brickyards crossing, if not before, the train had passed the conditions as to settlement and the business of the city which demanded the limit upon train speed that is imposed by the ordinance. The city, as enlarged, is 9 miles in width, requiring, under the limitations of the ordinance as to rate of speed, one hour and thirty-five minutes to make the distance, when, without any opportunity for dispute, for a part of the distance the limit is absolutely unnecessary."

Likewise, in White v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1891) 44 Mo. App. 540, a speed ordinance permitting only 4 miles an hour through the outlying districts of a small town was held to be unreasonable, the court saying: "The uncontroverted facts show that the city has a population not exceeding fifteen hundred inhabitants, and that only about one third of its area is platted, the residue consisting of farming lands. The restriction, if valid at all, extends over this entire area. As far as the farm lands are concerned, the necessity of any restriction whatever is not obvious, and as far as the residue of the town is concerned, the necessity of a restriction to 4 miles an hour, which, as we know, is less than the maximum speed permitted in the most populous cities in this state, is equally not apparent. In the absence of any necessity shown, the restriction is clearly unreasonable. If one city may adopt it, they all may, and thereby make rapid transit, in which the people of the entire state are interested, an impossibility."

In Zumault v. Kansas City & I. Air Line (1897) 71 Mo. App. 670, it was said: "No reason has been shown, nor has any been seen by us, why the speed of the defendant's trains should be reduced on that part of its road situate between the eastern city limits and the crossing of the Missouri Pacific Railway. The defendant's track, for the most of the way, is on a high embankment, on the north side of which there is nothing but the unused river shore, and on the south side there are only agricultural lands. There are no street intersections and only one or two public traveled roads crossing its track. People do not habitually go along or over its track. What, then, is the necessity for the restriction? It seems to us that it is so manifestly unnecessary for the protection of life and property that no two reasoning minds could differ as to it. It is well known that a great number of people, who are engaged in commercial and other pursuits in Kansas City, reside at Independence, Fairmount park, and near other stations along the line of defendant railway, and to successfully carry on their business must have the advantage of rapid transit to and from the city. Why oblige the trains of defendant, while engaged in carrying them to and from the city, to take twenty to twenty-five minutes in running the 2 miles or less between the eastern limits of the city and the Missouri Pacific crossing, which could, and no doubt would, be accomplished in five minutes or less, but for the restriction imposed by said ordinance? This needless interference with rapid transit on defendant's railway injuriously affects the traveling public and the defendant alike. There appears to be no greater necessity for imposing the restriction on defendant in running its trains in the city between the points already inlicated than there is between the eastern limits of the city of Independence, where no rate of speed would be negligence per se. By imposing the restriction the defendant is placed at a disadvantage with other and competing lines between the two cities, and it is, therefore, oppressive and discriminating in its character. Within the populous parts of the city the ordinance is perhaps well enough, but in the sparsely settled parts thereof it is unreasonable and in restraint of suburban travel, and cannot be upheld."

So, in Evison v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1891) 45 Minn. 370, 11 L.R.A. 434, 48 N. W. 6, it was said: "It is self-evident that a limitation of the rate of speed might be reasonable in the thickly populated and crowded portions of a city, where continuous buildings obstruct the view of approaching trains, and where the noise and bustle of travel and business are apt to prevent people from hearing the approach of a train, which would be wholly unnecessary and unreasonable in the large tracts of sparsely populated territory of a merely rural character, now so often included within the corporate limits of cities. Without going into details, the undisputed evidence in this case is that the distance between Phalen street and the eastern boundary of the city is nearly 2 miles; that in the whole of this district there was only one street or highway crossing over defendant's road, viz., at Hazel park (a mile east of Phalen street), which was protected by cattle guards; that the railroad was fenced on both sides the entire distance from Phalen street to and beyond the city limits, so that, with the exception of the crossing at Hazel park, there was not a place where either persons or animals could get upon the track except by breaking down or jumping over the fence. Substantially the same condition of things existed from Phalen street westward to Seventh street station, a distance of over half a mile, according to the scale of the map in evidence, the only street crossing at that time between these points being, as we understand the evidence, at Duluth avenue, which is four blocks west of Phalen street. It is also very clear that the country on both sides of the railroad from Phalen street eastward to the city limits was very sparsely settled, being largely in a state of nature, and covered with brush and trees, and what was improved was mainly used for farms or gardens. Phalen street itself was a well-traveled street, being a leading thoroughfare to reach Stillwater avenue to the north, and thence out into the country on the road to Stillwater. But this fact was of little importance so far as the speed of trains was concerned, as the railroad did not cross this street at grade, but on a bridge 14 feet above. Confining ourselves to the country from Phalen street east to the city limits, we have defendant's railroad running for 2 miles on the company's own right of way, and securely fenced on both sides, through a sparsely settled and comparatively unimproved country, essentially rural in its character, with but one road or street crossing on the whole distance, and an ordinance limiting the rate of speed to 4 miles an hour (about the rate at which an active man would walk), at which rate it would take a train half an hour to run the 2 miles. A mere statement of these facts ought to be conclusive that, as applied to this part of defendant's road, the ordinance is so manifestly unnecessary to the protection of life and property that no two minds could reasonably differ as to the fact. According to the map, which is made part of the record, the limits of the city must be about 9 miles in length by 7 in breadth, embracing much land that is not even platted, and hence presumably either unimproved or else devoted to purely agricultural purposes; and it is undoubtedly true that much of that which is platted on paper is in the same condition. To apply a uniform iron-clad rule to the whole of this territory, that no train shall run over 4 miles an hour, is unnecessarily oppressive, and, if obeyed or enforced, would deprive the public of anything like reasonable suburban transportation."

IV. Regulation covering switch yard or railroad grounds.

An ordinance limiting the speed of trains is not unreasonable because it applies to unclosed switch yards in the exclusive use of the railroad company. Crowley v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (1885) 65 Iowa, 658, 20 N. W. 467, 22 N. W. 918; Grube v. Missouri R. Co. (1889) 98 Mo. 330, 4 L.R.A. 776, 14 Am. St. Rep. 645, 11 S. W. 736; Bluedorn v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 439, 32 Am. St. Rep. 615, 18 S. W. 1103.

Nor is a speed ordinance unreasonable because it is applicable to tracks located on the unclosed private property of the railroad company. Merz v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1886) 88 Mo. 672, 1 S. W. 382, affirming (1883) 14 Mo. App. 459.

V. Interference with business of railroad.

The mere fact that a speed ordinance may operate to restrain trade or retard rapid transportation will not justify a court in holding it to be invalid when the speed limit is not below that prescribed by the legislature, and when it does not clearly appear that the ordinance is unreasonable and unnecessary for the safety of the public and for the protection of life and property. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Carlinville (1902) 200 Ill. 314, 60 L.R.A. 391, 93 Am. St. Rep. 190, 65 N. E. 730; Knobloch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1884) 31 Minn. 402, 18 N. W. 106; Weyl v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1889) 40 Minn. 350, 42 N. W. 24. In the case last cited, the court sustained an ordinance prohibiting a greater rate of speed than 4 miles an hour, saying: "It is not so palpably and manifestly unreasonable and oppressive, such an abuse of discretion and arbitrary exercise of the power of the city council, upon its face, as would justify the court in setting it aside. An ordinance of this character may restrain trade, and yet be necessary and reasonable as a police regulation. The rapid transaction of business by the railway company may be hindered and trammelled by an ordinance controlling and regulating the rate of speed with which railway trains may be sent over and through the streets and populous portions of our towns and cities, but, when necessary for the proper protection of life and property, the celerity and despatch with which business may be accomplished is but secondary."

But it appearing that indisputable injury would result to the railroad, both in the matter of maintaining schedules and the physical injury likely to happen to trains, when operated at 6 miles an hour, due in part to the grade and curvature of the land, it was held in Lusk v. Dora (1915) 224 Fed. 650, that an injunction would issue to restrain the enforcement of an ordinance so limiting the speed. The court said: "The reasonableness of an ordinance, while a question of law, is dependent upon the particular facts in each case, and decisions in other cases are to be distinguished for this reason, though persuasive where the facts are similar. In this case it cannot be said that the railroad passes through a densely populated territory in passing through Dora. The use of the track by citizens, owing to the topography of the land, is largely confined to the street crossings, of which four cross the track at grade, and only one is very considerably traveled. The track is not laid in a public street, within the corporate limits, but on the privately owned right of way of the railroad, and is not left fit for passage of pedestrians or vehicles along the line longitudinally. The only considerable points of danger are the grade crossings. The operation of trains through the town is made difficult by the grade and curvature of the railroad. These difficulties of operation are intensified when trains are limited to as low a speed as 6 miles an hour. When this low speed is required to be maintained for as great a distance as 1½ miles, the effect of the restriction upon the schedules of fast trains is disastrous; especially when it is considered that other incorporated towns have and may exercise the same right, if the defendant has it. Under modern conditions of transportation, a speed of much in excess of 6 miles an hour cannot be said to be a dangerous rate of speed, except through densely populated territory. It is an inadequate rate of speed. . . . In view of the undisputed injury that will result to the plaintiffs in their operation of the railroad, both in the matter of maintaining schedules and the physical injury likely to happen to trains when operated at so low a speed as 6 miles an hour, under the unfavorable conditions such as the evidence shows exist in passing through Dora, it is clear that, if there is a method of reasonable avoidance of or minimizing the dangers incident to the passage of trains through the corporate limits of Dora, which does not necessitate the maintenance of such a low rate of speed, it should be adopted in lieu of the reduced speed requirement of the ordinance. In view of the fact that the railroad, owing to the conformation of its right of way as compared with the level of the town and its general character, cannot well be used for travel throughout its length, but only at the points of crossing of the streets and the railroad, it would seem that a method which conserved the safety of the public in crossing the railroad at the street crossings would answer the exigency, and if this could be accomplished, without requiring the railroad to reduce the speed of its trains to as low a rate as 6 miles an hour, it would be an unreasonable burden on interstate commerce to exact of it such a maximum speed requirement. It seems to me clear that the grade crossings, even if they are four in number, as contended by the defendant, can be adequately protected by flagmen against the passage of the plaintiffs' trains over the crossings at a very much greater speed than 6 miles an hour. There is now a flagman at the principal crossing. The present record is not convincing as to whether flagmen are required at the other crossings, or whether the present arrangement affords adequate protection. The court is not authorized to determine what would be a reasonable maximum speed limit for the railroad to operate under, but is limited to a declaration that the present ordinance, fixing a maximum speed of 6 miles an hour, is an unreasonable burden on interstate commerce, and unenforceable against plaintiffs for that reason. This finding is predicated upon the idea that the danger to be apprehended can be adequately guarded against by properly protecting the crossing or crossings that need protection, by flagmen, without unnecessarily impeding the plaintiffs' operation of the railroad by so stringent a speed limit. The injunction prayed for will be granted, upon condition that the plaintiffs, during the period of its operation, maintain, within the corporate limits of Dora, adequate protection against the hazards arising from the operation of trains across the town streets, at grade, to those using such streets."

See also the cases cited supra, III.

VI. Discrimination.

Where a speed ordinance discriminates between two competing lines, its validity depends on whether the special circumstances are such that, in the interest of public safety, the discrimination is necessary and therefore warranted. Lake View v. Tate (1889) 130 Ill. 247, 6 L.R.A. 268, 22 N. E. 791, affirming (1889) 33 Ill. App. 78. In that case the ordinance in question established two districts, based on the density of population, and limited the speed of railroad trains in the more thickly settled district to 10 miles an hour. In the more sparsely settled district the trains of a competing railroad were permitted to run at a much higher rate of speed. The contention that the ordinance was unreasonable because it constituted a special and unwarranted discrimination between two rival and competing lines of railway was sustained, the court saying: "In suburban transportation speed is a matter of prime importance, and the railway company that is able to offer to the public the speediest transportation thereby acquires a very important and manifest advantage over its competitors. That said ordinance constitutes an important discrimination between said lines of railway does not admit of serious question. Its validity then, must depend upon whether the special circumstances, as shown by the evidence, are such that, in the interest of public safety, such discrimination is necessary and therefore warranted. Undoubtedly the circumstances of two lines of railway running through the same city may be such as to justify or even necessitate the imposition of different measures of restraint upon the speed of their trains. One may run through a portion of the city which is densely populated and where a high rate of speed would be extremely dangerous to persons and property, while the other may run through a portion of the same municipality where there are but few inhabitants, and where it is extremely improbable that injury will happen to any person who is in the exercise of ordinary care. In such case a discrimination could hardly be said to be unreasonable. In the case before us, no such disparity of circumstances seems to be shown. Part of the lines of both railways is through thickly settled portions of the city, and part through sections where there are but few inhabitants. It may be fairly inferred from the evidence that the number of persons and vehicles ordinarily crossing the track of the Chicago & Evanston Railway at the street crossings of the city within a given time is somewhat greater than the number of those crossing the track of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway during the same time; but it appears that the number crossing the tracks of both railways is very large, and that the disparity is not so great as to necessitate or even justify different regulations as to the speed of trains. We are of the opinion, then, that no justification for the discrimination is shown, and that the ordinance, therefore, must be held to be invalid."

An ordinance limiting the speed of trains at street crossings is not unreasonable because it excepts from its operation the street car lines (Erb v. Morasch (1898) 8 Kan. App. 61, 54 Pac. 323), or a belt line which, under statute, can charge only 5 cents for each passenger (Buffalo v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1897) 152 N. Y. 276, 46 N. E. 497); or because, after its adoption, an electric street car line is established, and the city fails to limit the speed of the cars (Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Waddington (1907) 169 Ind. 448, 82 N. E. 1030).

A. S. M.

J. RALPH HARPER et al., Copartners Doing Business as Ralph Harper & Company, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

ADOLPH HOCHSTIM et al., Copartners Doing Business as Hochstim & Bossak.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit — December 14, 1921.

(278 Fed. 102.)

Sale — c. i. f. — how executed.

1. A sale c. i. f. is to be accomplished or executed by a delivery of documents by vendor to vendee, and not by the physical delivery of the actual goods for which the documents are the evidence of title.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1236.]

— what documents necessary.

2. The documents necessary to execute a sale c. i. f. are a bill of lading and policy of insurance.

[See 23 R. C. L. 1336; see note in 10 A.L.R. 701.]

— effect of Sales Act.

3. C. i. f. contracts are not affected by the uniform Sales Act.

[See note in 10 A.L.R. 701.]

Contract — repugnancy — effect.

4. Only when parts of a written agreement are so radically repugnant that there is no rational interpretation that will render them effective and accordant must any part perish.

[See 6 R. C. L. 847; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 226.]

— effect of provision for insurance by seller.

5. A provision for insurance in the name of the seller is not so repugnant to a c. i. f. contract as to permit tender of the goods rather than the documents, since the seller may be regarded as the buyer's agent to contract and settle with the insurer.

— construction — conflict between written and printed parts.

6. The written portions of a document will, in the absence of proof to the contrary, prevail over the printed parts.

[See 6 R. C. L. 847, 848; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 226.]

Sale — c. i. f. — tender of commodity — effect.

7. A contract by one in China to sell a specified quantity of skins c. i. f. New York requires the seller to ship the skins and send the documents ahead by mail for the buyer's use as desired, and is not satisfied by a tender of the actual skins in New York.

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York (Mayer, J.) to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for alleged breach of a contract by defendants to accept certain skins from plaintiffs. Affirmed.

Statement by Hough, Circuit J.:

The parties hereto entered into a contract evidenced by a document, whereof the material parts are as follows (the italicized portion being written, and the rest a printed form):

"New York, February 16, 1920. According to this convention, written and signed in duplicate, the seller, Ralph Harper & Company, of Tientsin, in China, sells to Hochstim & Bossak the quantity of about 30,000 Shantung weasels with tails. Shipments from China per steamer direct or indirect to New York during March and/or April. Price: $2.45 each C. I. F. New York. Import duty, if any, to be paid by the buyer. Payment: Four m/s confirmed banker's letter of credit $73,500 to be opened by the buyer in favor of and to be approved by the seller. Letter of credit to be telegraphed within two days after confirmation. . . . In case of a c. i. f. sale and the goods are damaged while in transit, the buyer agrees 20 A.L.R.—78.

to accept in settlement thereof the same percentage of allowance as the seller may secure from the insurers by way of settlement of recovery."

The sellers were in China; the above contract was signed on their behalf by an agent, and the printed form used was the agent's form.

Plaintiffs (the sellers) never shipped any weasel skins under this contract, but on June 25, 1920, they obtained in New York 10,000 weasel skins of the kind contracted for and tendered them to the buyers, who refused the same. The sellers then brought this action, alleging that the weasel skins tendered had been shipped from China (though not by them) to New York, via Seattle, and further asserting that they "would and could have obtained and delivered to defendants" the remaining weasel skins "within the reasonable time for delivery in New York of March or April shipments by steamer from China."

The complaint further asserted that the weasel skins actually tendered "were insured in the amount and against the risks usual in an ordinary c. i. f. contract under a policy payable to the plaintiffs," and finally, alleged a "general custom and usage among the dealers in furs in New York city" to the effect that shipments such as above contracted for permitted "shipments from China by steamer to San Francisco and Seattle and thence overland by freight to New York." This custom is said in the pleadings to have been "well understood by both parties" to the above contract.

The breach alleged is the refusal of the buyers to accept the weasel skins tendered, and their refusal to accept any skins so obtained in New York and tendered as were the 10,000 above mentioned.

To this complaint defendants demurred, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer prevailed, and to judgment accordingly plaintiffs brought this writ.

Argued before Rogers, Hough, and Manton, Circuit Judges.

Messrs. Stockton & Stockton, for plaintiffs in error:

The manner of making the tender was sufficiently alleged.

Arnhold, Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, G. J. & Co. [1916] 1 K. B. 495, 7 B. R. C. 934, 85 L. J. K. B. N. S. 665, 114 L. T. N. S. 152, 32 Times L. R. 186, 60 Sol. Jo. 156, 21 Com. Cas. 174, 13 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 235; Mee v. McNider, 39 Hun, 345; 1 Abbott, Forms of Pl. p. 720.

The complaint alleges a proper tender within the time permitted under the contract.

Cunningham v. Judson, 100 N. Y. 179, 2 N. E. 915; Sharpe & Co. v. Nosawa & Co. [1917] 2 K. B. 814, 22 Com. Cas. 286; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Hill, 15 Wall. 94, 21 L. ed. 64; Bell v. Bruen, 1 How. 169, 11 L. ed. 89; Ward v. Whitney, 8 N. Y. 442; Produce Brokers Co. v. Weiss, 118 L. T. N. S. 111, 87 L. J. K. B. N. S. 472; Williston, Sales, § 280; United States v. Andrews, 207 U. S. 229, 52 L. ed. 185, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100; Tanners Nat. Bank v. Lacs, 136 App. Div. 92, 120 N. Y. Supp. 669; Klots Throwing Co. v. Manufacturers' Commercial Co. 30

L.R.A. (N.S.) 40, 103 C. C. A. 305, 179 Fed. 813; Law & Bonar v. British American Tobacco Co. [1916] 2 K. B. 605, 85 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1715, 115 L. T. N. S. 612; Poel v. Brunswick-Balke Collender Co. 216 N. Y. 310, 110 N. E. 619; Barhydt v. Ellis, 45 N. Y. 107; Miller v. Hannibal & St. J. R. 90 N. Y. 430, 43 Am. Rep. 179; Michaelis v. Wolf, 136 Ill. 68, 26 N. E. 384; Hardie-Tynes Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Glen Allen Oil Mill, 84 Miss. 259, 36 So. 262; Eager v. Mathewson, 27 Nev. 220, 74 Pac. 404; Divorkwitz v. New York C. Co. 230 N. Y. 188, 129 N. E. 650; Re Berkovitz, 193 App. Div. 424, 183 N. Y. Supp. 304.

Messrs. Jacob Newhouse and Sidney Rosenbaum for defendants in error.

Hough, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The allegation of custom, or, properly speaking, of usage (Eames v. H. B. Claflin Co. 152 C. C. A. 465, 239 Fed. 631), need not be considered; for, if plaintiff did not tender what he agreed to sell, the manner of his shipment is of no importance. The only question in the case is as to the nature of the contract admittedly made.

If that contract is for what is now widely known as a "sale c. i. f.," such sale was by specific agreement to be accomplished or executed by the delivery of documents by vendor to vendee, and not by the physical delivery of the actual goods for which the documents are the evidence of title. The bargain must be kept as made; the buyer can no more refuse the documents and ask for the goods than can the seller withhold the documents and tender the goods; and the documents necessary are a bill of lading and policy of insurance, although additional papers, especially an invoice, are usual. The foregoing is now too well settled to need more than reference to Thames & M. M. Ins. Co. v. United States, 237 U. S. 19, 26, 59 L. ed. 821, 824, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 496, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1087, and cases there cited; Landauer v. Craven [1912]

Sale—c. i. f.—how executed.

—what documents necessary.

2 K. B. 94, 81 L. J. K. B. N. S. 650, 106 L. T. N. S. 298, 56 Sol. Jo. 274, 17 Com. Cas. 193; Manbree Saccharine Co. v. Corn Products Co. [1919] 1 K. B. 198, 88 L. J. K. B. N. S. 402, 120 L. T. N. S. 113, 35 Times L. R. 94, 24 Com. Cas. 89; Setton v. Eberle-Albrecht Flour Co. 169 C. C. A. 625, 258 Fed. 905; Klipstein v. Dilsizian (C. C. A.) 273 Fed. 473; Smith Co. v. Moscahlades, 193 App. Div. 128, 183 N. Y. Supp. 500, and cases there cited.

This question of construction is one of general law, if not general commercial law, and unaffected by any statute of New York, especially the Sales of Goods Act (Consol. Laws, chap. 41, §§ 82-158), even assuming that the place of execution of agreement furnishes the law of the contract. That the Sales Act left c. i. f. contracts "as before" was specifically held in Smith Co. v. Moscahlades, supra.

We are thus required to construe or interpret a commercial or mercantile agreement partly written and partly printed, wherein at the very beginning it is written that the price is to be "c. i. f. New York," and the shipment from China; but later follow printed words plainly implying that the seller is not only to procure insurance, but collect from the insurers, and therefore suggesting that such insurance would naturally be in the seller's name. It is urged that this latter proviso is so repugnant to the nature of a c. i. f. contract as to transform it into something else, and justify a tender of goods in New York, instead of a delivery of documents by mailing in China.

It cannot be doubted that it is only when parts of a written agreement are so radically repugnant that "there is no rational interpretation that will render them effective and accordant that any part must perish." Rushing v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 139 C. C. A. 520, 224 Fed. 74. Applying this rule, it must be admitted that for the seller under a c. i. f. contract to insure in his own name is an apparent departure from the theory of such a sale; for the goods are the buyer's from and after delivery of documents; yet it is perfectly possible for the seller or anyone else to act as buyer's agent and validly insure for his principal's benefit (Hooper v. Robinson, 98 U. S. 528, 25 L. ed. 219), and the whole of this agreement may be consistently regarded as containing an authorization from buyer to seller to get the insurance, and, in case of loss, settle for the buyer with the underwriters. As the case cited shows, and it is matter of common knowledge, insurance for "account of whom it may concern" was known to be procurable, and it might run to seller, yet inure to buyer.

There is no radical repugnancy here presented, and the reconciliation above suggested is far less difficult than in many reported cases, of which Harding v. 4,698 Tons of New Rivers Steam Coal (D. C.) 147 Fed. 971, is a fair example.

But, if inconsistency be still insisted upon, the equally settled rule that the written portions of a document, in the absence of proof to the contrary, will prevail over the printed parts, may be appealed to. Lipschitz v. Napa Fruit Co. 139 C. C. A. 228, 223 Fed. 704; Thomas v. Taggart, 209 U. S. 385, 389, 52 L. ed. 845, 848, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 519. The reason for this rule has never been better stated than by Lord Halsbury in Glynn v. Margetson [1893] A. C. at page 357, 62 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 466, 1 Reports, 193, 69 L. T. N. S. 1, 7 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 366, quoting largely from Lord Ellenborough's rulings of 1803. This rule plainly gives decision as it was given below.

A still older rule in the construction of instruments inter vivos is that the earlier of two supposedly —effect of Sales Act.

place of execution of agreement fur-

—effect of provision for insurance by seller.

—construction
—conflict between written and printed parts.

Contract—
repugnancy—effect.

that "there is no rational interpretation that will ren-inconsistent clauses prevails over the later; and this canon of interpretation has lately been insisted on by high authority. Vickers v. Electrozone Commercial Co. 67 N. J. L. 665, 675, 52 Atl. 467. It also supports defendant's demurrer.

But a dependence upon rules which, detached from the circumstances surrounding and justifying their formulation, often seem arbitrary, is unsatisfactory; every rule should be one of reason. Here the first and reasonable inquiry is: What is the dominant or leading thought revealed by this writing, read with the eye of experience?

Plainly, that seller was to ship the furs and send the documents ahead by mail, so that buyer could, if he wanted, sell the goods again "to arrive." That is a c. i. f. contract. Therefore the parties intended to make that sort of agreement, and the "rules" are resorted to to effect

Sale—c. i. f.—
tender of commodity—
effect.

their intent. This is the fundamental guide in construction; it is well put (with an extreme application thereof) in Morrill & W. Constr. Co. v. Boston, 186 Mass. 217, 71 N. E. 550, by saying that, where "a repugnancy is found between clauses, the one which essentially requires something to be done to effect the general purpose of the contract itself is entitled to greater consideration than the other, which tends to defeat a full performance; and repugnant words may be rejected in favor of a construction which makes effectual the evident purpose of the entire instrument."

The evident purpose of this agreement was to give buyer substantially what a c. i. f. sale would have given him; the seller never even attempted to put buyer in that desired and agreed-upon position, and the decision below was right, because the contract was of the kind known as c. i. f.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

ANNOTATION.

What constitutes delivery of goods sold under "c. i. f." contract.

This note, dealing with the question What constitutes delivery of goods sold under a "c. i. f." contract, is supplementary to that in 10 A.L.R., at page 701.

The general rule stated in the original note, that "when goods are sold under a c. i. f. contract, delivery thereof to the purchaser is complete when the goods have been actually delivered to the carrier for transportation, and the shipping documents, consisting of the bill of lading, the invoice, and the policy of insurance, are delivered or tendered to the purchaser," was upheld in Andersen, M. & Co. v. American Trading Co. (1921) 115 Wash. 37, 196 Pac. 630, the court holding that the shipper was not liable for delay of the voyage, caused by war conditions.

So, in Northern Grain Warehouse Co. v. Northwest Trading Co. (1921) — Wash. —, 201 Pac. 903, affirmed on reargument in (1922) — Wash. —, 204 Pac. 202, the court, after quoting from several of the cases cited in the original annotation, said: "These contracts, being so generally used, have received a uniform interpretation, and it will not do to introduce confusion into commercial activities by establishing a rule which is inharmonious with the general custom of merchants throughout the trading world." Applying the rule stated it was said further in the case last cited: "Delivery of the shipping documents and the insurance policies, in order to complete the transaction, need not be made until a reasonable time has elapsed. In this case documents which entitled the appellant to physical possession of the property, though other than the bill of lading, were delivered to the appellant, which entitled it to physical possession of the property, and it is in no position to complain that the bill of lading was not delivered.”

Similarly, the reported case (HARPER v. HOCHSTIM, ante, 1232) states the rule as follows: “If that contract is for what is now widely known as a ‘sale c. i. f.’ such sale was by specific agreement to be accomplished or executed by the delivery of documents by vendor to vendee, and not by the physical delivery of the actual goods for which the documents are the evidence of title. The bargain must be kept as made; the buyer can no more refuse the documents and ask for the goods than can the seller withhold the documents and tender the goods; and the documents necessary are a bill of lading and policy of insurance, although additional papers, especially an invoice, are usual.”

In Warner, B. & Co. v. Warner Sugar Ref. Co. (1921) 117 Misc. 247, 192 N. Y. Supp. 151, the court said: “The contract, as pointed out above, calls for payment of a price which includes cost, insurance, and freight; and such contracts, popularly described as ‘c. i. f.’ contracts, ordinarily require the seller merely to make shipment, and the property in the goods and risk of loss pass upon such shipment to the buyer, for the seller has done everything he is called upon to do under his contract.” The contract under construction contained the following clauses: “Damaged, if any, to be taken at a fair allowance. . . . In the event of total loss, buyers to collect insurance and effect settlement with sellers for the full amount of invoice.” The court reformed the contract by striking out the clause first quoted, as having been inserted by mutual mistake, and said: “It seems to me that in the present case, if the contract is reformed as prayed for in the complaint, the reformed contract is susceptible of the reasonable construction that, though the seller was required to deliver the goods at a customary wharf in New York, and the price could not be finally determined until the goods were landed, yet that the property in the goods and the risk of loss were intended to pass when the full shipping documents were presented, including an insurance policy. If the goods were totally lost, then, by the express terms of the contract, the buyers were to pay the full amount of invoice, and if the goods were partially lost, then it is fairly inferable that, while payment was to be made according to landed weights, the seller should not be deprived of the right to show that these landed weights were diminished by loss or damage due to the risk of the voyage. Any other construction of the contract would require the seller to provide insurance for the buyer for a loss which falls not on the buyer, but on the seller.”

In two recent cases the general rule heretofore stated has been approved, but the court has declared that the contract of the parties took the case out of its operation. Thus, the general rule was stated in Seaver v. Lindsay Light Co. (1922) 233 N. Y. 273, 135 N. E. 329, reversing (1921) 196 App. Div. 397, 187 N. Y. Supp. 622, and reinstating judgment (1920) 111 Misc. 553, 182 N. Y. Supp. 30, as follows: “Unless there is something in a c. i. f. contract to indicate to the contrary, the seller completes his contract when he delivers the merchandise called for to the shipper, pays the freight thereon to point of destination, and forwards to the buyer bill of lading, invoice, insurance policy, and receipt showing payment of freight.” In that case, however, it was held that the correspondence of the parties showed an intention that the delivery should be at the residence of the buyer, in Chicago, and not at the residence of the seller, in London.

So, in Klipstein v. Dilsizian (1921) 273 Fed. 473, it was said: “The c. i. f. contract is an expression which indicates that the price fixed covers the cost of the goods and insurance and freight on them to the place of destination. Under such a contract, the seller must ship the goods, arrange the contract of affreightment to the place of destination, pay its cost and allow it from the purchase price, and procure insurance for the buyer's benefit for the safe arrival of the goods, and pay therefor. When the seller has done this, and forwarded the papers to the buyer, he has fulfilled his contract, and delivery is complete. There is no obligation by the seller to deliver the goods at the place of destination." But in that case the contract in suit, "provided for the sale of 50 long tons of gum arabic, 1918 crop, freight average at 25 cents per pound net, c. i. f. New York. Payment was to be made by letter of credit at a bank in New York, on which the seller was at liberty to draw a sight draft with invoice, bill of lading, and insurance certificates attached. Under the clause 'Shipment' it provided: 'From Red sea to New York on vessel Phyllis, which is now on her way to Red sea,' and under the term 'Remarks,' 'Sellers not responsible if shipment of merchandise or sailing of vessel prevented by any government regulations in country of export or destination, by act of God, perils of the sea, or by any other circumstances beyond the seller's control.' " The court, holding that title did not pass until delivery of the goods in New York, said: "The entire contract contemplates a delivery of the gum arabic on the vessel Phyllis in a port of the United States. Delivery and payment therefor were to be simultaneous acts, and until delivery title remained in the seller. Where goods are delivered on board vessel, to be carried, and a bill of lading is taken, a delivery by the seller is not a delivery to the buyer. The ship is a bailee for the delivery to the person indicated in the bill of lading as the one for whom they are to be carried, and this applies even in cases where bills of lading show that the goods are free of freight because they are the owner's property. Shepherd v. Harrison (1871) L. R. 5 H. L. 116, 40 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 148, 24 L. T. N. S. 857, 20 Week. Rep. 1, 1 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 66, 23 Eng. Rul. Cas. 349. The contract provides for shipment on a particular vessel from the Red sea to New York, which was specifically identified as to name and location when the contract was made."

In J. Aron & Co. v. Comptoir-Wegimont [1921] 3 K. B. (Eng.) 435, the contract in suit provided as follows: "Price, 150s. per cwt. c. i. f. Antwerp; Shipment: by steamer and/or steamers direct and/or indirect from U. S. A. ports during October, advised as already shipped on S. S. Idaho (no sale if steamer lost)." The goods were delivered at dock in New York in October, the agent of the shipping line giving a receipt stating that they were for a named vessel. Owing to a strike they were not put on that vessel and did not leave New York in October. It was held that there was not a good delivery and title did not pass.

In Diamond Alkali Export Corp. v. Fl. Bourgeois [1921] 3 K. B. (Eng.) 443, the court construed a contract calling for shipment c. i. f. from American seaboard in September or October. Instead of an insurance policy, an instrument described as a "certificate of insurance" was tendered. The bill of lading read as follows: "Received in apparent good order and condition from D. A. Horan to be transported by the S. S. Anglia now lying in the port of Philadelphia and bound for Gothenburg, Sweden, with liberty to call at any port or ports in or out of the customary route, or, failing shipment by said steamer, in and upon a following steamer, 280 bags dense soda." It was held that the bill of lading was insufficient because it did not acknowledge "actual shipment on board," and that the certificate of insurance was not the equivalent of the policy of insurance required under a c. i. f. contract. A similar holding as to a bill of lading was made in Hansson v. Hamel & Horley (1921) 91 L. J. K. B. N. S. (Eng.) 65.

In the case of Re Denbigh Cowan & Co. (1921) 90 L. J. K. B. N. S. (Eng.) 836, it was held that a contract for the sale of goods "to be taken c. i. f. terms" imported all the conditions of a c. i. f. contract, and that the failure to tender a policy of insurance avoided an attempted delivery.

W. A. S.

DEWEY ROBISON, by Next Friend, Resp't.,
v.
FLOESCH CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, Appt.

Missouri Supreme Court (Division No. 1)—December 19, 1921.

(— Mo. —, 236 S. W. 332.)

Judgment — entered without hearing — invalid.

1. A judgment in favor of an infant for compensation for personal injuries is not binding on him, where it is entered by a justice of the peace, upon papers prepared by defendant's attorney; the justice being taken to the sick room of the plaintiff for the purpose, and acting without any judicial hearing or determination.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1249.]

— against infant — impeachment.

2. An infant cannot avoid a judgment or decree against him merely on the ground of infancy.

[See 15 R. C. L. 734; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 490.]

— when binding on infant.

3. A judgment against an infant is not binding on him, although entered with his consent, unless it is based upon facts judicially ascertained upon a real, and not a perfunctory, hearing.

[See 15 R. C. L. 645; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 481; see also note in 15 A.L.R. 667.]

Rescission — restoration of money received — what sufficient.

4. In an equitable suit to rescind a compromise, where a tender of money received is proper, it is sufficient for plaintiff to offer, in his petition, to restore what he has received.

[See 26 R. C. L. 625, 626; see also note in 12 A.L.R. 938.]

Trial — question for jury — negligence of minor.

5. The jury must determine the question of negligence of a minor unfamiliar with his surroundings, who, while at work on a dark night on an excavator, the body of which is 12 feet from the ground, with high-power uninsulated wires lying about, in attempting to reach the ground in the performance of his duties, goes where he thinks the ladder is, and not finding it, and seeing the boom coming towards him, dives down inside the framework; instead of outside, so that his leg is caught and crushed by the boom.

[See 20 R. C. L. 166; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 1040.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Cape Girardeau Court of Common Pleas (Snider, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Oliver & Oliver, for appellant:

The judgment of the justice court, having been made in open court in the presence of both parties, will not be vacated or declared void except upon the most positive, clear, and satisfactory proof of fraud in its procurement, and that it was a fraud upon the court as well as upon the other party to the suit.

Lieber v. Lieber, 239 Mo. 31, 143 S. W. 458; McDonald v. McDaniel, 242 Mo. 172, 145 S. W. 452; Payne v.

O'Shea, 84 Mo. 129; 23 Cyc. 726; Obermeyer v. Einstein, 62 Mo. 341; F. G. Oxley Stave Co. v. Butler County, 121 Mo. 614, 26 S. W. 367; Murphy v. De France, 101 Mo. 151, 13 S. W. 756; Hancock v. Blackwell, 139 Mo. 440, 41 S. W. 205; Cantwell v. Johnson, 236 Mo. 575, 139 S. W. 365; Wolf v. Brooks, — Mo. —, 177 S. W. 337.

Plaintiff neither pleaded nor proved any material facts represented to plaintiff by defendant, false or otherwise.

Morgan County Coal Co. v. Halderman, 254 Mo. 596, 163 S. W. 828; Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 250, 31 L. ed. 678, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 435.

There is no allegation of diligence on the part of plaintiff, nor that he was prevented or hindered by any act of defendant in exercising such diligence.

Carolus v. Koch, 72 Mo. 645; Wabash R. Co. v. Mirrielees, 182 Mo. 126, 81 S. W. 437; Cantwell v. Johnson, 236 Mo. 575, 139 S. W. 365; 23 Cyc. 1042.

There is no averment of any artifice, trick, promise, or concealment of any fact whereby plaintiff was deceived.

Wabash R. Co. v. Mirrielees, 182 Mo. 126, 81 S. W. 437; Springfield Traction Co. v. Dent, 159 Mo. App. 220, 140 S. W. 606.

The mere expression of an opinion is no ground for setting aside any instrument, whether the opinion is correct or not.

Magnuson v. Continental Casualty Co. 125 Mo. App. 206, 101 S. W. 1125; Carroll v. United R. Co. 157 Mo. App. 247, 137 S. W. 303.

When a money judgment is paid, the judgment is performed and that is the end of it. It will not be reopened by that or a higher court, whether obtained by fraud or not.

Davis v. Blair, 88 Mo. App. 372; Weston v. Clark, 37 Mo. 568; 23 Cyc. 893.

Neither coverture nor infancy are grounds for equitable interference with a judgment, the defect not being jurisdictional.

Wyman v. Hardwick, 52 Mo. App. 621; 23 Cyc. 993.

Equity will not entertain a bill for relief against a judgment founded on matters which were tried and determined in the action at law, or which were there so put in issue that they might have been adjudicated, however unjust the judgment may appear to be.

23 Cyc. 1017; Cantwell v. Johnson, 236 Mo. 575, 139 S. W. 365; Summer v. Whitley, 1 Mo. 708; Matson v. Field, 10 Mo. 100.

The plaintiff was so plainly guilty of contributory negligence that it was the duty of the trial court to have directed a verdict for defendant.

Woods v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. — Mo. —, 187 S. W. 11; Boesel v. Wells, F. & Co. 260 Mo. 463, 169 S. W. 110; Henry v. Missouri P. R. Co. 141 Mo. App. 351, 125 S. W. 794; Carson

v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 96 Iowa, 583, 65 N. W. 831.

Where there is an obviously safe and an obviously unsafe way to do a thing, both open to the plaintiff, and he chooses the obviously unsafe and is injured, he cannot recover.

Wolff v. Scullin Steel Co. — Mo. App. —, 217 S. W. 571; McCarty v. Rood Hotel Co. 144 Mo. 397, 46 S. W. 172, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 169.

The master is not an insurer against either accident or injury.

Trainer v. Sphalerite Min. Co. 243 Mo. 359, 148 S. W. 70, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 949; Miller v. Missouri P. R. Co. 175 Mo. App. 349, 162 S. W. 290; Pulley v. Standard Oil Co. 136 Mo. App. 172, 116 S. W. 430; Lowe v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 165 Mo. App. 523, 148 S. W. 956; Coin v. John H. Talge Lounge Co. 222 Mo. 488, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1179, 121 S. W. 1, 17 Ann. Cas. 888.

An employee does not assume risks caused by his employer's negligence, but he does assume the risks which are liable to happen on account of the nature of the employment, when the employer has used reasonable care to avoid that result.

Powers v. Loose-Wiles Co. 195 Mo. App. 430, 192 S. W. 1045; Whelan v. United Zinc & Chemical Co. 188 Mo. App. 603, 176 S. W. 704; Oxford v. Dudley, 204 Mo. App. 614, 217 S. W. 607; Kaemmerer v. St. Louis Axle Co. — Mo. App. —, 196 S. W. 439; Roberts v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. 166 Mo. 370, 66 S. W. 155.

Messrs. Hardesty & Limbaugh, for respondent:

Equity will set aside judgments rendered in violation of the law of procedure by or against infants.

Thornton v. Thornton, 27 Mo. 302, 72 Am. Dec. 266; Scott v. Royston, 223 Mo. 568, 123 S. W. 454; Neenan v. St. Joseph, 126 Mo. 89, 28 S. W. 963; State ex rel. Flentge v. Gawronski, 110 Mo. App. 414, 85 S. W. 126; Weiss v. Coudrey, 102 Mo. App. 65, 76 S. W. 730; McMurtry v. Fairley, 194 Mo. 502, 91 S. W. 902.

Neither an infant nor anyone for him can consent to a judgment.

Revely v. Skinner, 33 Mo. 98; Litchfield v. Burwell, 5 How. Pr. 341; McClure v. Farthing, 51 Mo. 109; Collins v. Trotter, 81 Mo. 275; Tyler, Infancy & Coverture, p. 175; Tuttle v. Garrett, 16 Ill. 354; Holden v. Hearn, 1 Beav. 445, 48 Eng. Reprint, 1012, 8

(— Mo. —, 236 S. W. 332.)

L. J. Ch. N. S. 260, 3 Jur. 428; Le Bourgeoise v. McNamara, 82 Mo. 189.

In practically all jurisdictions, equity uniformly sets aside judgments rendered in violation of said rule and of the substantial rights of an infant.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Lasca, 79 Kan. 311, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 338, 99 Pac. 616, 17 Ann. Cas. 605; Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 650, 33 L. ed. 1047, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638; Walsh v. Walsh, 116 Mass. 377, 17 Am. Rep. 162; Tripp v. Gifford, 155 Mass. 108, 31 Am. St. Rep. 530, 29 N. E. 208; Ewing v. Ferguson, 33 Gratt. 563; Cralle v. Meem, 8 Gratt. 530; Bank of Alexandria v. Patton, 1 Rob. (Va.) 535; 1 Minor, Inst. 520; 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 189; Daingerfield v. Smith, 83 Va. 81, 1 S. E. 599; Ferrell v. Broadway, 126 N. C. 258, 35 S. E. 467; Crapster v. Taylor, 74 Kan. 771, 87 Pac. 1138; Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Haley, 170 Ill. 610, 48 N. E. 920; Long v. Mulfurd, 17 Ohio St. 484, 93 Am. Dec. 638; Waterman v. Lawrence, 19 Cal. 210, 79 Am. Dec. 212; Kromer v. Friday, 10 Wash. 621, 32 L.R.A. 671, 39 Pac. 229; Gooch v. Green, 102 Ill. 507; Ralston v. Lahee, 8 Iowa, 17, 74 Am. Dec. 291; Leslie v. Procter & G. Mfg. Co. 102 Kan. 159, L.R.A.1918C, 55, 169 Pac. 193; Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Hayes, 97 Ala. 201, 12 So. 98; Burke v. Northern P. R. Co. 86 Wash. 37, 149 Pac. 335, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 919; Thompson v. Maxwell Land Grant & R. Co. 168 U. S. 451, 42 L. ed. 539, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121; Rankin v. Schofield, 70 Ark. 83, 100 Am. St. Rep. 59, 66 S. W. 197; Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Donaldson, 123 Ill. App. 196; Day v. Johnson, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 107, 72 S. W. 426; Knight v. Waggoner, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 214 S. W. 690.

The infant's tender of the check prior to suit was unnecessary, defendant having failed to make legal delivery of the same to him, and he being powerless to make a legal tender except through the regular court procedure for infants.

Ridgeway v. Herbert, 150 Mo. 606, 73 Am. St. Rep. 464, 51 S. W. 1040; Craig v. Van Bebbler, 100 Mo. 584, 18 Am. St. Rep. 569, 13 S. W. 906; 22 Cyc. 557-559; Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Donaldson, 123 Ill. App. 196; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Lasca, 79 Kan. 311, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 338, 99 Pac. 616, 17 Ann. Cas. 605; Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Hayes, 97 Ala. 201, 12 So. 98; Leslie v. Procter & G. Mfg. Co. 102

Kan. 159, L.R.A.1918C, 55, 169 Pac. 193; Black River Lumber Co. v. Warner, 93 Mo. 374, 6 S. W. 210; Carroll v. United R. Co. 157 Mo. App. 247, 137 S. W. 303.

This action to set aside the judgment of the justice was brought in the proper court.

Leslie v. Procter & G. Mfg. Co. 102 Kan. 159, L.R.A.1918C, 55, 169 Pac. 193; 1 Black, Judgm. ¶ 297; Leith v. Shingleton, 42 Mo. App. 449; Langford v. Doniphan, 61 Mo. App. 288; Weiss v. Coudrey, 102 Mo. App. 65, 76 S. W. 730; Lillibridge v. Ross, 59 Mo. 217; Neenan v. St. Joseph, 126 Mo. 89, 28 S. W. 963.

The court could not declare plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law.

Dowling v. Gerard B. Allen & Co. 74 Mo. 13, 41 Am. Rep. 298; Vanesler v. Moser Cigar & Paper Box Co. 108 Mo. App. 621, 84 S. W. 201; 26 Cyc. 1176; Ransom v. Union Depot Co. 142 Mo. App. 361, 126 S. W. 785; Hull v. Thomson Transfer Co. 135 Mo. App. 119, 115 S. W. 1054; McFern v. Gardner, 121 Mo. App. 1, 97 S. W. 972; Boyce v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 120 Mo. App. 168, 96 S. W. 670; Lang v. Missouri P. R. Co. 115 Mo. App. 489, 91 S. W. 1012; Brown v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 104 Kan. 505, 180 Pac. 211; Interstate Coal Co. v. Love, 153 Ky. 323, 155 S. W. 746.

The court could not declare defendant free of negligence, as a matter of law.

Nash v. Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. 109 Mo. App. 600, 83 S. W. 90; Vanesler v. Moser Cigar & Paper Box Co. 108 Mo. App. 621, 84 S. W. 201; Dowling v. Gerard B. Allen & Co. 75 Mo. 13, 41 Am. Rep. 298; 26 Cyc. 1176; Wellman v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 219 Mo. 126, 118 S. W. 31; O'Connell v. St. Louis Cable & W. R. Co. 106 Mo. 482, 17 S. W. 494, 4 Am. Neg. Cas. 650.

Ragland, C., filed the following opinion:

Plaintiff, a minor, brought this suit by his next friend November 4, 1914, to recover for personal injuries. He recovered judgment for $10,000, and defendant appeals.

There is but little conflict in the evidence. Where, however, it is not in accord, the facts will be stated from the standpoint of plaintiff's evidence, because appellant's only contention with respect to the trial on the merits is that the evidence discloses that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

In September, 1918, the defendant, a New York corporation, was engaged in the construction of ditches and levees in southeast Missouri, and maintained offices for the management of its business in Cape Girardeau. It used in this work large machines called dragline excavators. At the time just mentioned one of these machines was operating day and night near Greenbrier, in Bollinger county. This machine consisted of two parts, the base and the cabin. The base was a steel framework 24 feet square and 10 feet high, which stood on wheels similar to those of a railroad box car, and which ran on a steel track. On the top of the framework was a circular track upon which rested the cabin. This cabin was of rectangular shape, and looked very much like a railroad freight car. It housed the principal part of the machinery used to operate the excavator. A steel boom 100 feet in length extended from one end of the cabin, and from the extreme end of the boom there swung a bucket or dipper. When the machine was in operation the dipper was lowered to the ground, where it scooped up a dipper of earth. The loaded dipper was then raised from the ground, and the upper part or the cabin of the machine, together with the boom carrying the loaded dipper, was made to turn, at the time of the operation in question, in approximately a half circle, while the base of the machine remained stationary. By this means the earth was carried away from the ditch that was being dug and deposited in a different place, forming a levee. The machine was operated by electric power generated in the city of Cape Girardeau, and carried over high-tension wires. This electric current passed through a transformer and then to the machine. The operator's position was in the cabin near the front end. In order to move the end of the boom from a position over the ditch to a position over the levee, he pulled a lever, and the entire cabin part of the machine turned to the required distance. Just underneath the bottom of the boom, where it was attached to the cabin, there was a pulley around which the cable controlling the bucket passed before going to the drum inside the cabin. Just outside the door of the cabin, and down a step lower, was a small semicircular platform, called the apron or porch. It was another step from this apron down to the top of the framework. There were large steel I-beams or girders inside of the top of the framework which ran diagonally across the square of the frame. Just before they reached a corner they divided, so that, instead of running directly to the corner, one half of the beam went to one side of the corner and the other half to the other side, leaving a space of something like 2 feet in width between the two parts of the beam at the corner. There was a ladder made of iron or steel which hooked over the outside edge of the framework and was always kept at or near one corner of the framework. It was shifted from one corner to another as the convenience of the men using it required.

The machine was lighted with some thirty-odd incandescent electric lights; four clusters of four each on the boom, some six or eight in the cabin, and eight underneath, two at each corner of the framework. The clusters of lights on the boom had reflectors behind them which caused their rays to be thrown downward. The cabin had two doors and three windows on each side, and there was a large opening in front.

On the night of September 9, 1918, the machine in question was being run by a crew of five men, the operator, the oiler, and three pitmen. The operator manipulated the levers in operating the machine; the oiler kept the machinery in the cabin oiled and greased; and the three pitmen, a foreman, and two laborers, took up the track in the rear of the machine and put it down in front when necessary for the machine to move forward. These latter also oiled the bucket, removed obstacles in the way of the advance of the machine, and performed such other work as was required to be done on the ground. All the oil and grease were kept in the cabin, and the pitmen working on a night shift customarily ate their midnight lunch there. The operator was the foreman in charge of both machine and crew.

On the night just mentioned plaintiff was one of defendant's crew, working as a pitman. He was nineteen years of age and had worked on a farm all of his life. Between cropping seasons he had done other kinds of work, such as cutting logs and clearing land. On one occasion he worked a month and a half at a sawmill. He had had no experience whatever in working around or about defendant's excavator, and had no previous knowledge of the manner of its operation, except such as he gained from passing it occasionally during the time it had been operating in the vicinity of his home. He had worked but one night previously, and then the machine was not run at all because out of order. The workmen spent the entire night repairing it. Plaintiff began work at 7 o'clock in the evening. At midnight the machine was stopped for a few minutes while the operator ate his lunch. During this interval the pitmen oiled the bucket bearings. When they had finished the pit foreman directed the plaintiff to take the oil back to the cabin, where it was regularly kept. Plaintiff took the oil to the cabin, and stayed to eat his lunch. After finishing he was told by the operator, who had again started the machine, to tighten the jacks that steadied the framework. In order for plaintiff to do that it was necessary for him to go from the cabin to the ground. In the meantime the machine was kept running.

In getting up and down from the cabin the workmen sometimes used the ladder; at other times they climbed the framework or let themselves down by the same means. Plaintiff had been up and down twice before he ate his lunch that night, but not when the machine was running. The first time he went up on a ladder, and the next time he "went up on a corner." On one of these occasions, in getting down, he got down on the inside of the framework, and the pit foreman said to him: "I always get down on the outside." Prior to his injury plaintiff had never received any other instruction or warning with respect to getting down from the cabin, except that he had been cautioned in a general way not to come into contact with the electric cables on the ground and up in the machine. The top of the framework was about 12 feet above the general level of the ground.

When plaintiff started down from the cabin to tighten the jacks, he stepped out of the door down onto the apron or porch. It was a dark night, and there was not sufficient light thrown from the cabin or from the lights on the other parts of the machine to enable him to discover the location of the ladder. He waited until the dipper picked up its load of earth and started with it, then stepped down on the frame and walked toward the corner where he thought the ladder was. The boom was then moving away from him. When he got to the corner of the frame he let himself down and felt along the side with his feet for the ladder. Not finding it, he got around on the other side of the corner and felt there, but there was no ladder. He then looked around and saw the boom coming toward him; he climbed back upon the framework, intending to get back on the apron. While still on his knees, and before he could get in a standing position, it appeared to him that he would not have sufficient time to get up and onto the apron before the boom reached him. The opening between the prongs of the diagonal I-beam just inside the corner of the frame was right in front of him, and seemed the only safe avenue of escape, and into that he went headforemost. He succeeded in getting all of his body through except his left leg, which the pulley underneath the lower end of the boom caught and crushed against the upper part of the framework. On cross-examination he said in part: "When I started down in there I went headfirst. I was on top of these girders. If I had slid down on the outside of the framework instead of trying to conceal myself on the inside of this prong, I would have had to have dropped about 12 feet to the ground, and besides there were some live wires there at that time. The wires were insulated, but worn. . . . I chose that side of the machine to climb down. I don't remember whether that was the same side I climbed up or not. The ladder was not at the corner. I had gone up the ladder that same night; I didn't have time to choose any other corner only that one. . . . When the dipper got its load and started I stepped off there where I thought the ladder was. . . . The boom was not coming toward me when I stepped off; it was going the other way. When it came back it hit my leg. It takes a minute for it to do that. I was on that girder during that time, right there at the corner. I got down and felt for the ladder, but it was not there, and I went to the other corner, and by that time it was coming back. I did not wait for it to come back; it just came back. I was still there."

Asked why he did not look for the ladder instead of getting down and feeling for it with his feet, he said: "No use to look; you couldn't see it." In reply to a further question, he said: "I tried to go down on the ladder. I was not trying to go down off the machine by going down on the inside, when I was injured." As a matter of fact, the ladder was at the same place when plaintiff was hurt that it was when he went up on it that same night.

Plaintiff's injury consisted of a compound fracture of the left leg, the femur being broken about 8 inches below the hip. He was taken to a hospital at Cape Girardeau, where the fracture was reduced, and his leg put in a swing splint. Some six weeks later it was discovered that the parts of the bone were not uniting; an incision was made, and a plate was put on the bone to assist in bringing about a union. Still later infection set up, and it became necessary to amputate the leg.

On October 7, 1918, while plaintiff was still in the hospital, and before there was any indication that he was not making a normal recovery from his injury, he was visited by Mr. L. W. Mees, an attorney representing the defendant. Mees introduced himself, and stated that he had come to make a settlement. Plaintiff told him that he was not of age, and that a settlement would have to be made with his father. Mees said that it was not necessary to have his father; that as he was over fourteen years of age he could have a next friend appointed, and through him a settlement could be effected by means of a friendly suit. He then asked plaintiff how much he wanted, and the latter said he thought he ought to have $350. Mees, after questioning the plaintiff at some length as to how the accident occurred, told him that he did not think the company at fault, but that he would pay him $250 and his hospital fees and doctor bills anyway. Plaintiff made no immediate response, and Mees started to go, when plaintiff said: "Well, mister, I will take that $250." He was then asked whom he wanted appointed next friend, but plaintiff knew no one in Cape Girardeau. Mees suggested Mr. S. M. Carter, secretary of a trust company there, and plaintiff made no objection,—in fact, said nothing.

Mees then went away and prepared what he deemed the necessary papers,—a petition for the appointment of a next friend, statement of the cause of action laying plaintiff's damages at the sum of $250, the consent of Carter to act as next friend, a waiver of service of process and entry of appearance by defendant, a stipulation that the cause be set down for trial and tried on that day, and a judgment entry. He then, in company with defendant's local manager, went to Mr. Carter's place of business and requested him to act as next friend for a young man nineteen or twenty years old, who had been injured on one of their dragline machines. They told Carter "a little bit how the young man got hurt;" that they were going to pay him $250 and his hospital fees and doctor bills; that they did not think there was any liability, but that the company would rather pay the $250 than be annoyed with a lawsuit. Carter accepted their statement, and, after reading the papers, signed such of them as Mees requested, without further investigation.

Mees next went to a justice of the peace and told him that he wanted him to go to the hospital and take up a friendly suit. The justice consented, and they went at once to the hospital. On arriving there the justice was introduced to the plaintiff. He asked plaintiff where he came from, and how he got hurt. In answer to the latter question, plaintiff told him that he got hurt on a dragline machine. Mees asked plaintiff if he still wanted the $250 in compromise, and he replied that he did. Mees then said, "You must sign these papers." After plaintiff had signed the paper or papers presented to him, the justice asked, "Is this your free act?" and plaintiff said, "Yes." Mees then handed plaintiff a check for $250, and told him that the company would pay all of his expenses at the hospital, and that he need not leave until he got well. He and the justice then left.

The judgment entry written in the justice's docket recited the appearance of the parties, the waiver of a jury, hearing and submission on the evidence, and "the receipts and releases of the parties," a finding and judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $250, and an acknowledgment of satisfaction thereof in open court. Immediately under the judgment entry are the words "approved by," followed by the purported signatures of plaintiff and Carter as his next friend.

There is no contention that Mees, during the negotiation of the settlement, made any misstatement of fact to plaintiff, to Carter, or to the justice.

The petition is in two counts. The first is in equity, and seeks to have the judgment of the justice of the peace set aside. The grounds on which the right to such relief is predicated are set forth in the petition as follows:

"On October 7, 1918, the defendant, by fraudulent representations made to plaintiff, induced him to acquiesce in the defendant's proposal to settle his claim for $250; that the defendant, through its own initiative and without the consent or approval of the plaintiff, secured the appointment of a next friend and caused to be instituted a suit by such next friend against the defendant and in behalf of the plaintiff for damages for the aforesaid injury; that said next friend was unknown to plaintiff, and plaintiff never had an opportunity to see him or consult with him about said suit; that defendant prepared all the papers, pleadings, and orders in said proceeding, and filed the same with F. A. Kage, a justice of the peace within and for Cape Girardeau township and county, Missouri, and fraudulently represented to the said F. A. Kage that plaintiff had agreed that judgment in said case be rendered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant in the sum of $250, and requested that such judgment be entered; that by reason of said fraudulent representations of the defendant the said F. A. Kage did enter judgment in said case in favor of plaintiff for $250, and the defendant thereupon issued and delivered to plaintiff a check for $250.

"Plaintiff states that the judgment aforesaid was rendered without a trial upon the pleadings or statement before the court; that there was no evidence offered or proofs made before the court upon the merits of the case, the extent of the plaintiff's injury, or on the question as to whether such judgment was for the best interest of the plaintiff; that such proceeding was made without the knowledge or consent of J. C. Robison, father of Dewey Robison, and against his wishes, as the defendant well knew that said proceeding was all taken while the plaintiff was in the hospital, where he had no chance to consult anyone as to the best means to protect his interests, and before he was fully cognizant of the extent of his injury; and that the said judgment thus rendered was produced and obtained by the defendant for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff by barring a cause of action for damages for the injuries he received.

"Plaintiff states that the amount of said judgment is entirely inadequate to compensate the plaintiff for his injuries, and that if said judgment is allowed to stand it will bar further attempts of the plaintiff to prosecute his claim for damages for said injuries.

"Wherefore the plaintiff brings herewith the check given him by the defendant in payment of said judgment, and files the same with the clerk of this court, and prays the court to declare the judgment as aforesaid void, and order it to be set aside, and said check returned to the defendant."

The second count is an ordinary suit for personal injuries. Its allegations are sufficiently broad to include the acts and omissions submitted to the jury for their determination as to whether they constituted negligence, viz., the continued operation of the machine after plaintiff was directed to go from the cabin to the ground, failure to have a regular place for the ladder, failure to have a guide light for indicating the location of the ladder, failure to furnish sufficient light, and failure to instruct plaintiff as to the manner of descending from the upper part of the machine to the ground and warn him of the danger incident thereto.

As to the first count, the answer admits the rendition of the judgment by the justice of the peace, and pleads the judgment in bar. With respect to the second count it is a general denial and a plea of contributory negligence.

A trial of the issues under the count in equity was first had, resulting in a finding for plaintiff. The second count was then tried to a jury. Appellant seeks a reversal of the judgment on two principal grounds: First, that plaintiff wholly failed to make out a case under his pleading, entitling him to have the judgment of the justice of the peace set aside; and, second, that plaintiff's evidence shows that he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

1. It is the generally accepted doctrine that an infant cannot avoid a judgment or decree Judgment—against infant—
impeachment. against him merely on the ground of infancy, and that he cannot impeach such a judgment or decree by an original bill except upon grounds that would be available to an adult, such as fraud. In this case the bill alleges, among other things, that the judgment entered by the justice of the peace was caused to be so entered through and by means of fraudulent representations. As ordinarily understood, a fraudulent representation is a false statement relating to a matter of fact, made with intent to deceive. The evidence wholly fails to show that any untrue statement of fact was made by defendant's agent, either in negotiating the settlement with plaintiff, or in procuring the entry of a formal judgment by the justice of the peace, and for that reason appellant insists that plaintiff failed to make a case entitling him to the relief prayed under the first count of his petition. But plaintiff does not predicate his right to such relief solely on the ground of fraudulent representation. There are other allegations of fact in the petition, and they are amply supported by the proof. It is to be determined whether these constitute such fraud as warranted the court below in canceling the so-called judgment.

There is no question but that plaintiff and defendant's agent, Mees, agreed upon a settlement, whereby, in consideration of the payment of $250, together with his hospital fees and doctor bills, plaintiff was to release defendant from further liability for the injuries he had sustained on account of its negligence. Such contract of settlement, even after it became executed, the plaintiff, being a minor, would have had the right to disaffirm and repudiate at any time during his minority, and within a reasonable time after coming of age. In order to cut off this right and make the contract absolute and final on the part of the plaintiff, Mees proceeded to cloak the transaction in the guise of a legal proceeding. This much the evidence clearly shows.

There can be no doubt, of course, but that in a suit instituted by a minor by his next friend a judgment may be rendered that will be valid and binding upon him. Such judgment, however, cannot be based merely on the consent of the minor, for he is without discretion, or on that of the next friend, because he is not invested with either the power or the duty so to do. Ewing v. Ferguson, 33 Gratt. 563; Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Hayes, 97 Ala. 201, 12 So. 98; Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 650, 33 L. ed. 1047, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638. The court in such case is charged with the duty of protecting the minor's interest, and it is only when its judgment is based upon facts judicially ascertained, upon a real, and not a perfunctory, hearing, that its judgment is binding upon him. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Lasca, 79 Kan. 311, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 338, 99 Pac. 616, 17 Ann.

Cas. 605; Ferrell v. Broadway, 126 N. C. 258, 261, 35 S. E. 467; Tripp v. Gifford, 155 Mass. 108, 31 Am. St. Rep. 530, 29 N. E. 208.

The judgment under consideration had no such basis. The proceeding, if it may be so called, was colorable merely from beginning to end; it did not possess a single element of a judicial hearing and determination. Its entire record was the handiwork of Mees; he prepared all of the papers, and the next friend and the justice did nothing but complaisantly sign their names "on the dotted lines" pointed out by him. It should be said, however, that the two gentlemen who so obligingly signed the papers for Mees were given to understand, and they considered, that their acts in the matter were purely formal. And so they were. The "friendly suit" was not a suit in fact; it was merely a screen contrived to conceal the real transaction, the contract of settlement and release between plaintiff and defendant, and having for its purpose the foreclosure of plaintiff's right to disaffirm and repudiate his folly, upon reaching the age of discretion, or upon the receipt of mature counsel. It is considered fraudulent to take advantage of the incompetency of an infant to protect his own interests (Ralston v. Lahee, 8 Iowa, 17, 25, 74 Am. Dec. 291; Leslie v. Proctor & G. Mfg. Co. 102 Kan. 159, L.R.A. 1918C, 55, 169 Pac. 193), and, as the alleged proceeding before the justice of the peace was designed for no other purpose, it should be so treated. On this ground the court was warranted, under the pleadings and evidence, in setting aside the pretended judgment.

—entered without hearing—invalid.

2. Appellant makes the further contention that plaintiff was not entitled to recover under the first count of his petition, because it was neither alleged nor shown that, before instituting the suit, he had offered to restore to defendant what he had received under the settlement. Plaintiff brought the check, the only thing that he had received from defendant, into court, filed it with his petition, and asked the court to direct its return to the defendant. In an equitable action to rescind a compromise, where a tender back of moneys received is

—when binding on infant.

Rescission—restoration of money received
—what sufficient.

proper, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to offer in his petition to restore what he has received. After such offer the rights of the parties will be regulated and protected in the final judgment. Such is the rule in this state, and the one that prevails generally. Whelan v. Reilly, 61 Mo. 565; Paquin v. Milliken, 163 Mo. 79, 105, 63 S. W. 417, 1092; Carroll v. United R. Co. 157 Mo. App. 247, 293, 137 S. W. 303; 18 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 836.

3. Appellant strenuously insists that the evidence convicts plaintiff of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The facts having a bearing on this phase of the case have been very fully set out in the preceding statement, and need not be repeated here. The particulars in which it is claimed that plaintiff was negligent are: (1) In going down on the framework of the machine instead of on the ladder provided for that purpose; and (2) in going down on the inside of the frame after he had been warned not to do so, and when the outside was obviously the safer way. As to the first, plaintiff testified directly and positively that he was trying to go down on the ladder, and not the frame. He says that when he stepped out of the cabin down onto the porch it was so dark about the lower part of the machine that the ladder could not be seen. He did not say that he looked for it, but that it was so dark that there was no use to look. He had come up on the ladder, and it was at the same corner. He was to a certain extent unfamiliar with his surroundings and the movements of the machine. He stepped down on the frame as and started to where he thought the ladder was. Certainly it cannot be said as a matter of law that he was negligent because he was mistaken as to the corner.

Even if the statement of the pit foreman to the plaintiff that he (the foreman) always went down on the outside of the frame could be construed as a warning to plaintiff not to go down on the inside, the warning was not wilfully disregarded. Plaintiff was not attempting, in the first instance, to go down on the frame, either on the inside or the outside. He was hunting the ladder. He suddenly became aware that he was in a position of peril. It now seems true, as appellant contends, that plaintiff could, in all probability, while holding to the upper plate of the framework, have let himself down on the outside, and then dropped 2 or 3 feet to the ground without injury. But plaintiff was not in a condition to reason calmly about his situation. He was controlled by the instinct of preservation, and not by the dictates of care and reason. He pictured himself coming into contact with highly charged electric wires with broken insulation, if he dropped down on the outside; to him that was not an obviously safe way. On the other hand, he had once before gone down between the prongs of one of the I-beams safely and easily, and he thought that he had the time to do so again. It seems clear that whether in so doing he failed to exercise that degree of care that an ordinarily prudent for jury—negligence of minor.

Trial—question

man of his experience would have exercised under the same circumstances was a question for the jury.

Appellant's counsel earnestly insist that the cases of Boesel v. Wells, F. & Co. 260 Mo. 463, 169 S. W. 110, and Henry v. Missouri P. R. Co. 141 Mo. App. 351, 125 S. W. 794, are controlling on the facts of this with respect to the question of contributory negligence. But those cases are wholly unlike the one at bar on the facts, unless one isolated bit of evidence in the latter, inconsistent with the other evidence in the case, be held to portray the real facts. One of defendant's witnesses testified that plaintiff stated that he believed the pulley on the lower end of the boom would clear his leg,—pass over it,—and that he would therefore be safe with one leg over the I-beam, and plaintiff did not, in rebuttal, expressly deny having made the statement. But the substance of the statement was in effect contradicted by all of plaintiff's testimony touching that phase of the case; and it was for the jury to say, from all the evidence, what the true facts were.

We concur in the trial court's finding under the first count, and, as no reversible error in connection with the trial to the jury under the second count has been pointed out, the judgment should be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

Small, C., concurs.

Brown, C., absent.

Per Curiam:

The foregoing opinion of Ragland, C., is adopted as the opinion of the court.

All the Judges concur.

ANNOTATION.

Right of infant to set aside consent judgment in action for personal injuries.

(Supplementing annotation in 15 A.L.R. 667.)

The cases on the point fully support the doctrine of the reported case (ROBISON v. FLOESCH CONSTR. Co. ante, 1239) that an infant may avoid a judgment entered in his favor in compromise and settlement of a claim upon his part of damages for personal injuries ascribable to the tort or negligence of the defendant, when the judgment is entered in a merely formal proceeding, instituted for the purpose of carrying out the settlement, there being in fact no judicial investigation or inquiry into the merits, and the judgment being a mere device to bind the infant by the compromise. The cases upon the subject are referred to in an annotation appended to the case of Carroll v. Atlantic Steel Co. 15 A.L.R. 660. With the exception of the reported case, no later case on the point has been found.

A. G. S.

FRANK RICHARDSON, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF TEXAS.

Texas Court of Criminal Appeals—January 11, 1922.

(— Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 239 S. W. 218.)

Appeal — refusal of instructions on reasonable doubt as applied to grades of homicide.

1. Refusal to give an instruction on the law of reasonable doubt as between the grades of homicide is reversible error, where the attention of the court is specially called to it, although no special request is submitted and the law of reasonable doubt is in an instruction, applied to the whole case. (On rehearing.)

[See note on this question beginning on page 1258.]

20 A.L.R.—79.

Evidence — statement tending to show state of mind.

2. Evidence of a statement by a man shortly before he killed his brother, that he did not see what the brother was doing on the place which accused claimed to own, is admissible on his trial for the homicide as tending to show his state of mind towards the deceased.

— showing bias of witness.

3. Where a witness for accused in a murder case denies having made a statement that deceased was in hell, where he ought to be, evidence is admissible that he made such statement as tending to show bias or prejudice.

[See 28 R. C. L. 615, 620; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 1586.]

— evidence of conviction — remoteness.

4. That several years had elapsed since the conviction of witness for bigamy does not prevent the introduction of evidence of the fact to affect his credibility.

[See 28 R. C. L. 627.]

Homicide — justifiable — defense of property.

5. To justify homicide in defense of property the possession must be actual, and not merely constructive, and every effort must be made by the possessor to repel the aggression before he is justified in killing.

[See 13 R. C. L. 842, 843.]

— when killing not in defense of property.

6. A homicide is not in defense of property where a son, claiming to have bought the interests of all children except one in the home farm and of his mother who resided there, upon going to the property, found there and killed the child whose interest he had not purchased, who had instituted legal proceedings to oust accused from possession, which were pending.

Appeal — omission of instructions — absence of error.

7. Refusal to give one accused of murder the benefit of an instruction as to presumption of law from the use of a deadly weapon by deceased is not reversible error, where the attention of the trial court was not called to the omission, and the statute requires the submission of prepared instructions to counsel, who must in writing present objections, specifying grounds, in the absence of which there shall be no reversal because of errors in the charge. (On rehearing.)

[See 14 R. C. L. 795; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 287.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Van Zandt County (Bond, J.) convicting him of murder. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Stanford, Sanders, & West, Charles L. Hubbard, and Gentry & Gentry, for appellant:

The defendant being charged with murder, and there being evidence that at the time he fired the fatal shot the deceased was advancing on him with a drawn pistol in his hand, the court erred in not charging the jury the presumption arising from the use of a deadly weapon on the part of deceased at the time of the homicide. And this is reversible error, although there was no exception to the charge of the court on this ground, and no special charge was requested on the subject.

Kendall v. State, 8 Tex. App. 569; Jones v. State, 11 Tex. App. 412; Bishop v. State, 43 Tex. 390; Jackson v. State, 22 Tex. App. 445, 3 S. W. 111.

On a charge of murder, where the evidence raises the issue of manslaughter, the jury should be charged the law of both murder and manslaughter, and the law of reasonable doubt should be given in charge to the jury, not only upon the general question of the guilt or innocence of accused, but also as between the different degrees of culpable homicide, so as to afford the accused the benefit of such doubt as between the greater or less degree.

Murray v. State, 1 Tex. App. 417; Lister v. State, 1 Tex. App. 744; Eanes v. State, 10 Tex. App. 452; Tinsley v. State, 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 91, 106 S. W. 347; Cockerell v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 592, 25 S. W. 421; Hall v. State, 28 Tex. App. 147, 12 S. W. 739; Wallace v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 97 S. W. 1051.

The evidence, with the exception of one witness, shows that the deceased, at the time he was killed, had a pistol drawn on defendant and was driving him from the room. If this be true then the law of resorting to all other means did not apply.

Sims v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep.

(— Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 239 S. W. 218.)

154, 36 S. W. 256; Carr v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 380, 55 S. W. 51.

Messrs. R. G. Storey, Assistant Attorney General, and Butler, Price, & Maynor, for the State:

The court did not err in the main charge to the jury, in failing to give in charge to the jury article 1106 of Vernon's Criminal Statutes of the State of Texas, in substance, that it was presumed that by the use of a pistol the deceased designed to inflict death or serious bodily injury upon defendant.

Furr v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 194 S. W. 395; Debth v. State, 80 Tex. Crim. Rep. 4, 187 S. W. 341; Ross v. State, 75 Tex. Crim. Rep. 59, 170 S. W. 305; Galan v. State, 76 Tex. Crim. Rep. 619, 177 S. W. 124; Crossett v. State, 74 Tex. Crim. Rep. 440, 168 S. W. 552; Stanley v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 44 S. W. 519; Ward v. State, 70 Tex. Crim. Rep. 393, 159 S. W. 272; Mason v. State, 83 Tex. Crim. Rep. 642, 228 S. W. 952.

The court did not err in its main charge to the jury, in failing to charge the jury that if they found from the evidence that the defendant was guilty of some degree of homicide, but had a reasonable doubt as to whether he was guilty of murder, they should resolve the doubt in favor of the defendant, and find him guilty of no higher degree of homicide than manslaughter.

Frizzell v. State, 30 Tex. App. 42; Furr v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 194 S. W. 395; Wysong v. State, 66 Tex. Crim. Rep. 201, 146 S. W. 941; Conger v. State, 63 Tex. Crim. Rep. 312, 140 S. W. 1112; Farris v. State, 55 Tex. Crim. Rep. 481, 131 Am. St. Rep. 824, 117 S. W. 798; Little v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 654, 47 S. W. 984; Cockerell v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 585, 25 S. W. 421; Ardry v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 233 S. W. 839; Howard v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 233 S. W. 847.

When a part of the evidence is admissible and a part is inadmissible, but an objection is made to the whole without singling out the part which is inadmissible and objecting thereto, no error is committed by the court in overruling the objection.

Davis v. State, 83 Tex. Crim. Rep. 539, 204 S. W. 652.

The testimony of the witness, Leard Smith, was admissible for the purpose of showing the motive of the appellant for the killing of Jones Richardson.

Weathersby v. State, 29 Tex. App. 278, 15 S. W. 823; Givens v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 563, 34 S. W. 626.

Morrow, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was convicted of murder; punishment fixed at confinement in the penitentiary for a period of twenty-five years.

Jones Richardson was shot and killed by the appellant. They were brothers, both being of mature years. They were, at the time, in the house upon the farm known as the "old Richardson home place." It had been owned by appellant's father and mother; had been their home prior to his death, and her home thereafter. Appellant also resided there for twelve years immediately preceding the homicide. His mother, for a short time, had been away, leaving her personal belongings. The daughter and son-in-law of appellant also resided on the farm. They, however, were moving away from it, and appellant was in the act of moving to the city of Tyler, where he was in business. The deceased resided with his family in the state of Oklahoma, and had done so for about twelve years.

The appellant had purchased the interest in the farm of all the children save the deceased, and his mother had made to him a deed to her interest. Shortly preceding the homicide, the deceased came to the vicinity, and, acting on behalf of his mother and in her name, brought against the appellant a forcible entry and detainer suit for the possession of the farm, and upon the trial the judgment was in her favor, and from it appellant appealed.

Evidence of threats against the deceased, and conduct indicating ill feeling, and expressions of such sentiments was introduced.

Appellant's mother testified that she made the deed to the appellant without understanding the nature of the document that she executed.

Appellant denied the threats and expressions of bad feeling, though he did not think the deceased had treated him right. He explained his possession of the pistol on the occasion of the homicide, by stating that he had had difficulty with another person and was expecting trouble with him; that he had no knowledge of his brother being at the place when he went there; that on arrival he learned from his mother that his brother was there, and he walked up and said: "Hello, Jones; what are you doing here?" and he said, "I will show you," and jumped up, and got his gun out of his grip, and cocked it; and the appellant said to him, three or four times, "Take it out of my face." He then retreated a couple of steps. The deceased advanced. His mother sought to interfere. Appellant said, "He must take that gun out of my face." That Jones said to his mother: "Step aside! I am going to shoot." Whereupon the appellant shot. Appellant fired one shot, which killed the deceased.

There was sharp conflict in the testimony touching the possession of the pistol by the deceased at the time of the homicide.

Complaint is made in bill No. 2 of the receipt of evidence to the effect that the appellant stated that he had appealed the forcible entry and detainer case. In qualifying the bill, the court said that the testimony given by the witnesses was this: "I heard defendant say that he had appealed the case that his mother had won against him, and that he didn't see what Jones, his brother, was doing there on the place."

This testimony, coming, as it did, shortly preceding the homicide, related such a declaration by the appellant as was, in our opinion, available to the state upon the issue of

Evidence—statement tending to show
state of mind.

motive. The declaration of the appellant was competent and relevant to show his state of mind towards the deceased. McKinney v. State, 8 Tex. App. 627; Branch's Anno. Penal Code (Tex.) § 1881, and cases listed.

A witness who had given material testimony in favor of the appellant was asked, on cross-examination, if he had not stated with reference to the deceased: "The son of a bitch is dead in hell, where he ought to be." Upon the denial by the witness, proof was made, for the purpose of impeachment, that he did make the statement. This testimony, in our opinion, was admissible under the rule which permits the opposing party to break the force of the testimony of an adverse witness by proof of ^{—showing bias of witness.} his bias or prejudice. Watts v. State, 18 Tex. App. 384; Brownlee v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 410, 87 S. W. 1153; Gelber v. State, 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 462, 120 S. W. 863; Tow v. State, 22 Tex. App. 184, 2 S. W. 582; Branch's Anno. Penal Code (Tex.) § 163, and cases listed.

While upon the witness stand, state's counsel directed to the appellant this question: "Isn't it true that some five or six years ago, in Parker county, you were tried, indicted, and convicted of the offense of bigamy, and sent to the penitentiary for that offense?"

Objection was made, as stated in the bill, upon the ground that, before the witness was placed upon the stand, his counsel asked the court to instruct the state's counsel to refrain from making inquiry, for the reason that the conviction had taken place in the year 1912. The court required an answer, which was: "Yes, sir; that is correct." In approving the bill, the court disallows the part thereof stating that he was requested to prevent the inquiry on account of the date of the offense. He calls attention to the fact, in his qualification, that the question did not indicate that the inquiry related to a remote offense, and adds that it was on redirect examination; that it developed that the conviction took place in October, 1912; that, prior to this development on redirect examination, the court had no information as to the date other than indicated by the question. The propriety of making proof of the conviction of other felonies to affect the credibility of the accused when testifying as a witness is well established. Lights v. State, 21 Tex. App. 313, 17 S. W. 428, and other cases listed in Branch's Anno. Penal Code (Tex.) § 167. We are not advised of any rule that would have conviction—remoteness.

—evidence of

excluded the testimony as too remote, even if there had been a request to do so. Instances are available in which such testimony has been received over the objection that it was too remote, when the prior offense had occurred at a time more distant than in the instant case. Scoville v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 77 S. W. 792. Even, however, if the time of the prior offense was too remote to render proof of it available to the state, the matter, as presented, does not authorize a reversal upon that ground. The question, as framed, fixing the time at five or six years, gave no indication that it called for testimony too remote (Davis v. State, 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 630, 108 S. W. 667), and the bill, as qualified, shows that the trial court had no knowledge that the conviction had occurred prior to the time indicated by the question. After the date was revealed upon redirect examination, no request was made to exclude the testimony.

Three special charges bearing upon the possession of property were requested. One of them reads thus: "You are charged that in law the defendant was in possession of the home where the killing occurred, and that he had a right there, and that the deceased did not have the right to forcibly eject him; and if you find from the evidence that, when the defendant returned to the place of the homicide, the deceased undertook to eject him, then the defendant had the right, under the law, to defend his possession of the property, and, if you find from the evidence that he shot and killed the deceased in defense of his home, you will acquit the defendant, or, if you have a reasonable doubt as to this, you will acquit."

Another charge in substantially the same language was given, and the third was in these words: "You are further charged that the defendant had a legal right to the possession of the premises where the homicide occurred, and that he had the further legal right to inquire into and demand an explanation of the presence of any other person whom he might find in possession of or on said premises."

The third special charge was given, the others were refused, and the refusal is complained of. We do not regard the complaint as meritorious.

Touching the homicide in defense of property, our statute is as follows: "Homicide is justifiable also in the protection of the person or property against any other unlawful and violent attack besides those mentioned in the preceding article, and, in such cases, all other means must be resorted to for the prevention of the injury, and the killing must take place while the person killed is in the very act of making such unlawful and violent attack; and any person interfering in such case in behalf of the party about to be injured is not justifiable in killing the aggressor, unless the life or person of the injured party is in peril by reason of such attack upon his property." Penal Code, art. 1107.

Also, the possession must be of corporeal property, and not a mere right, and the possession must be actual, and not merely constructive. The justifiable—defense of property.

Homicide—

possession must be legal, though the right to the property may not be in the possessor. Every effort in his power must have been made by the possessor to repel the aggression before he would be justified in the killing.

We have given above a synopsis of the testimony as we comprehend it. That pointed out by the appellant as raising the issue is that of appellant stating his age, forty-four years of age; that the deceased was younger; that appellant and his family had resided there for a number of years; that his mother had also lived there; that he had bought from, or contracted for all the interest of, all the heirs except the deceased, and had received the deed to the land from his mother in 1915, and had claimed the place since that time; that the deceased had an interest in it, but that it was only a short time before the homicide that appellant learned that the deceased had anything to do with the possession; that deceased had never come to him with reference to his interest in the land; that his mother had left home on the 8th day of January, while the appellant was in Tyler; that he heard that the deceased came on the 23d of December, but did not know of his own knowledge when he came. Appellant's daughter testified that she had heard the deceased remark: "We have got possession now, and that is what I have been working for, and that is all I want." It is not clear that this was communicated to the appellant.

The facts do not impress us as presenting the issue that the homicide was in defense of property, but the true issue was whether it was in defense of appellant's person. If the issue existed, we think the special charges requested were not pertinent to present it. They ignored the essential elements of the law of homicide in defense of property, namely, that of resorting to other means before taking life. In the case of Wells v. State, 63 Tex. Crim. Rep. 622, 141 S. W. 98, Presiding Judge Davidson, speaking for the court, said: "They were some feet apart; the distance is made uncertain by the varying testimony of the witnesses, the defendant's evidence putting him at the door, the state witnesses putting him back from the door. Appellant was in the room and deceased upon a gallery. The law requires, before killing, the possessor of the house must use every other reasonable effort in his power to repel intrusion in order to be justified in taking human life. Where a party is an intruder or trespasser upon the habitation of another, or, being his guest, puts himself wrong by his conduct in the house, the owner has a right to put him out, provided he uses no more force or greater or more dangerous means than are necessary to effect the expulsion of the party. Turner v. State, 16 Tex. App. 378; Stanley v. State, 16 Tex. App. 392; Hinton v. State, 24 Tex. 454. Reasonable force must be used. McCray v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 609, 44 S. W. 170. And it was held in Sargent v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 325, 33 S. W. 364, that on a trial for murder, where the evidence presented the issue of an unlawful intrusion into the home, the defendant would have no right to complain of a charge which authorized him to slay deceased for such intrusion after he had resorted to all other means, except retreating, to get rid of him."

In the instant case, on the facts viewed in their strongest light in favor of the appellant, the house in which the homicide took place was the home of the mother of appellant and deceased. The deceased was there with the consent of the mother. His presence cannot be given the color of an attempt to eject the appellant by physical force. Admittedly, the means to which he had resorted to oust the appellant were those provided by law. There was litigation pending. The mother, admittedly entitled to possession coinciding with that of appellant, was also claiming title. The deceased was the owner of an interest in the property, and, to settle the differences, resort was had by the courts. The fact that the homicide took place upon the premises in controversy did not characterize it as a homicide in defense of the property. Such a construction of it would have been manifestly against the rights of the appellant. From his standpoint, he was attacked by the deceased and fired to save his life. His right to defend his person was far broader than his —when killing not in defense of property.

right to defend his property. In Ruling Case Law, vol. 13, p. 839, it is said: "It is not true, as a general rule, that an invasion of property rights constitutes an excuse for homicide. On the contrary, it is only when the element of danger to the person is present that the law countenances the taking of human life. The fact that the slayer is on his own land at the time of the killing, and the further fact that the deceased was engaged in acts of aggression or violence, are of great—oftentimes conclusive—probative force in establishing self-defense; but it is a defense of the person that is in issue, not the element of protection of property dissociated from protection of persons."

In Hill v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 585, 67 S. W. 506, the court said: "The difficulty here arose as to the right of appellant to pasture his horse on the lands of the prosecutor, and this involved the right to the possession of said land. The difficulty itself, however, did not occur in the defense of property. Possession was a disputed question. It appears that the land had been awarded to appellant, and prosecutor had been living on that section for some time, and was still living on it. The fact that the altercation grew out of adverse claims to the possession of property would not require a charge involving the right of appellant to protect his claim to the property against an intrusion of the prosecutor."

On the subject under discussion, we think the rights of the appellant were fully conserved in giving to the jury the special charge which we have quoted above.

The court, in separate paragraphs, charged on the law of murder, manslaughter, and self-defense. In one of the concluding paragraphs of the charge, the court instructed on the law of reasonable doubt as applied to the whole case. An exception was reserved to the failure of the court to charge on the law of reasonable doubt as between the grades of homicide. We think this would have been the better practice, and it is conceivable that a case might arise in which the refusal to do so would be harmful error. McCall v. State, 14 Tex. App. 353; Murray v. State, 1 Tex. App. 417; Blake v. State, 3 Tex. App. 581. The general rule, however, seems not to imperatively demand that the trial court give such an instruction where, as in the instant case, the law of reasonable doubt is, in the charge, applied to the whole case. In Cockerell's Case, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 592, 25 S. W. 422, Judge Davidson, on the subject, used the following language: "Even had the court failed to instruct the jury to apply the reasonable doubt between the degrees of culpable homicide charged upon, such omission would not have been error where the court applies such doubt to the whole case"—citing Hall v. State, 28 Tex. App. 146, 12 S. W. 739, wherein it is said: "The charge of the court is made the subject of several objections, which are claimed for error. It is objected that the court did not instruct the jury to apply the reasonable doubt as between the several degrees charged upon. Such omission has never been held reversible error, where the court applies the reasonable doubt to the whole case, except in those cases where such an additional instruction has been specially requested and refused by the court."

Other cases directly in point are found, among them being Little v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 655, 47 S. W. 984; Wallace v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 97 S. W. 1051; Furr v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 194 S. W. 398.

There are other bills of exceptions which we have carefully examined. They, in our opinion, present no doubtful question or matter which we deem it necessary to discuss.

We find no error in the record, and therefore order the judgment affirmed.

A petition for rehearing having been granted, Hawkins, J., on March 22, 1922, handed down the following opinion:

In the original submission of his case appellant raised the question that the court below committed error in not giving him the benefit of a charge as to the presumption of the law from the use of a deadly weapon by deceased under article 1106, Vernon's P. C. Complaint is made because such assignment was not discussed in our original opinion.

No exception was taken to the failure of the court to embrace said article in his charge, neither was any special charge requested upon the subject. In no way was the lower court's attention called to such omission. Notwithstanding this, appellant insists that it was fundamental error to omit to charge thereon, and that the provisions of article 743, Vernon's C. C. P., if properly construed, require this court to pass upon the question, in the absence of a special charge requested or exception taken at the time of trial. Said article, in connection with the preceding ones, has been so frequently construed since the amendment of the legislature in 1913 (chap. 138), we do not think it necessary to again review the matter. One of the clearest statements of the construction of the court under the present Practice Act will be found in Williamson v. State, 74 Tex. Crim. Rep. at page 293, 167 S. W. 362. Referring to the article in question and the acts of the thirty-third legislature, the court used this language: "It was provided in that act that the charge, before being read to the jury, should be submitted to counsel, and they must at that time present in writing any objections to the charge, distinctly specifying each ground of objection, and if no objection is made at that time, the case shall not be reversed because of errors in the charge, and if such objections are made we shall not reverse unless such errors were calculated to injure the rights of defendant, or unless it appears he has not had a fair and impartial trial."

We believe the foregoing to be a correct interpretation of article 743 under the acts of the legislature referred to, and have been unable to agree with the construction thereof urged by appellant.

The omission to charge article 1106 was not such fundamental error as would require reversal in the absence of proper exceptions.

Appeal—omission of instructions—absence of error.

The court charged on the issues of murder and manslaughter. Nowhere in his charge is the doctrine of reasonable doubt as between degrees presented. Counsel by timely and pertinent exception pointed out this omission. In our original opinion we held that, the law of reasonable doubt having been applied to the whole case, the omission to charge the same as between the degrees was not reversible error. It is urged in the motion for rehearing that in this portion of our opinion we were in error, especially so as the omission was called to the attention of the trial judge by timely exception, presented in writing before the charge was read.

We have had occasion to review many decisions in our consideration of this question on rehearing. In Guagando's Case, 41 Tex. 634, the jury was charged to acquit if there was reasonable doubt of guilt, but there was omission to instruct reasonable doubt between degrees of murder; held, error. In Murray v. State, 1 Tex. App. 423, Judge White says: "This question is as to the propriety and necessity of a charge upon the reasonable doubt between the different degrees in cases of murder, especially when such a charge is asked by defendant. There are, as it appears to us, many good reasons why this rule should be adopted. Oftentimes it is of as great and vital importance to a defendant to have the benefit of whatever reasonable doubt may arise in determining the grade and degree of his crime as in adjudging the general measure of his guilt."

In Lister's Case, 1 Tex. App. 744, no special charge on the subject was requested; the reasonable doubt between the degrees was approved, and commended to the trial courts. In Eanes v. State, 10 Tex. App. 452, reasonable doubt was charged generally, and then was added, "and the rule of reasonable doubt applies to the grade of offense." It was held not sufficiently definite as applied to degrees. McCall (McCall v. State, 14 Tex. App. 353) was charged with theft, but Judge Willson says: "Where an offense consists of different degrees, a charge giving the defendant the benefit of a reasonable doubt between the degrees would be proper, and it would be error ordinarily in such case to refuse such a charge when requested."

In Hall v. State, 28 Tex. App. 146, 12 S. W. 739, it is said: "It is objected that the court did not instruct the jury to apply the reasonable doubt as between the several degrees charged upon. Such omission has never been held reversible error, where the court applies the reasonable doubt to the whole case, except in those cases where such an additional instruction has been specially requested and refused by the court. McCall v. State, supra."

In Frizzell v. State, 30 Tex. App. 56, 16 S. W. 751, is found this language: "To the objection that the charge of the court omitted to instruct the jury to apply the reasonable doubt as between the several degrees charged on, we reply such omission is not error when the court has applied the reasonable doubt to the whole case, except in this, where the court has refused special instructions, covering the omission."

In Cockerell's Case, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 592, 25 S. W. 421, Judge Davidson says: "Exception was reserved to the charge, because it failed to charge the 'reasonable doubt' between manslaughter and self-defense. The court gave this charge as between murder in the first and second degrees, also between murder in the second degree and manslaughter, and further instructed, if there was a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, he should be acquitted. This was sufficient." The foregoing quotation disposed of the question, but this clause is added: "Even had the court failed to instruct the jury to apply the reasonable doubt between the degrees of culpable homicide charged upon, such omission would not have been error where the court applies such doubt to the whole case."

The Hall and McCall Cases, supra, are here then cited, both of which were to the effect that it would be error if request was made for such instruction and refused. In Little v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 661, 47 S. W. 984, will be found the following language, used by Judge Henderson: "Appellant objected . . . because [the court] failed to instruct the jury as to a reasonable doubt between the degrees of murder. . . . The court . . . instructed the jury, if they had a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant, to acquit him. This applied to all the degrees, and it was not necessary for the court to give a specific charge as to a reasonable doubt between the degrees. The charge in question, as given, authorized the jury to acquit of any degree, if they had a reasonable doubt of the guilt of defendant of that particular degree."

No authorities are cited in support of the proposition as announced in the Little Case, and no reference whatever is made in that opinion to the cases reviewed by us announcing a contrary doctrine. Upon a more thorough examination, we find that the case of Wallace v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 97 S. W. 1051, cited by us in our original opinion, does not support the exact proposition under discussion. The question there before the court was the failure to charge upon reasonable doubt directly in connection with the charge on self-defense, and the holding in the Wallace Case was to the effect that, having charged the doctrine of reasonable doubt as applied to the whole case, it was sufficient. The same is true with reference to the case of Furr v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 194 S. W. 398, cited in the original opinion. That was a seduction case and the decision turned largely upon the same point presented in the Wallace Case. We find in the examination of the authorities much confusion arising at this point. A great many cases cited by the state, in their brief in reply to appellant's motion for rehearing throw no light upon the direct question before us, but are in support of the proposition that it is not necessary for the trial judge to charge the law of reasonable doubt in connection with each separate defensive issue. There is no lack of authorities to support the latter proposition, and many of them may be found collated in Mr. Branch's Anno. Penal Code, under § 11, on page 5. We may have overlooked some authorities; but, so far as we have examined those to which our attention has been directed, or which have been discovered by us, the Little Case, supra, is the only one which holds unqualifiedly that it is not error for the court to refuse to charge on reasonable doubt as between the degrees, in the face of a request for such instruction. The failure of the opinion in that case to cite any authority, or make any reference to the immediately preceding decisions announcing a contrary doctrine, caused us to make the research, and we have been unable to reconcile that opinion with the many others cited by us.

As we understand the construction placed upon the present Practice Act, the trial judge is still expected to write the law applicable to the case in his charge to the jury, and if he has inadvertently omitted some phase of the law, or if he thinks some phase of the law inapplicable where counsel for appellant entertains the contrary view, and the omission is specifically and pertinently pointed out by written objection to the charge as prepared, it is not necessary in a felony case, that a special charge be submitted to supply the omission, but appellant may stand upon his objection filed, if it is sufficiently specific to call the court's attention to the matter complained of. Of course, a different rule obtains in misdemeanor cases.

—refusal of instructions on reasonable doubt as applied to grades of homicide.

We have reached the conclusion that we were in error in holding that the law of reasonable doubt, as charged by the court as applicable to the question of guilt, cured the failure to charge upon the same subject as between degrees. The jury might entertain no reasonable doubt as to the guilt of one upon trial, and yet be confused in reaching a conclusion as to the degree of the offense. The omission in the charge having been directed to the court's attention in a timely manner, the same should have been supplied.

For a failure to do so, we have reached the conclusion that the judgment of affirmance must be set aside, and the judgment of the trial court reversed and the cause remanded.

ANNOTATION.

Duty to charge as to reasonable doubt as between different degrees of crime or included offenses.

For the purposes of the present discussion it is assumed to be the law that on the trial of an indictment for a crime which is divided into degrees, or which includes other crimes, if the jury have a reasonable doubt as to the crime, or degree of crime, of which the accused is guilty, the benefit of that doubt must be given to him. Starting with that assumption, the precise question considered herein is whether it is the duty of the trial judge to instruct the jury specifically as to that rule of law. The sufficiency of such an instruction is not discussed.

The weight of authority is to the effect that if the evidence admits of a conviction of a lower degree than that charged, or of an included offense, the jury should be instructed that, in case of a reasonable doubt between two degrees or offenses, they are to convict of the lesser only, and a general instruction that the guilt of the accused must be shown beyond a reasonable doubt is not sufficient.

Alabama.—Compton v. State (1895) 110 Ala. 24, 20 So. 119; Stoneking v. State (1897) 118 Ala. 68, 24 So. 47.

Georgia. — Compare Ramsey v. State (1898) 92 Ga. 53, 17 S. E. 613.

Indiana. — Coolman v. State (1904) 163 Ind. 503, 72 N. E. 568.

Iowa. — State v. Walters (1877) 45 Iowa, 389; State v. Jay (1881) 57 Iowa, 164, 10 N. W. 343; State v. Neis (1886) 68 Iowa, 469, 27 N. W. 460; State v. Asbury (1915) 172 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 915, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 856.

Kentucky.—Shelton v. Com. (1911) 145 Ky. 543, 140 S. W. 670; McCandless v. Com. (1916) 170 Ky. 301, 185 S. W. 1100; Bennyfield v. Com. (1893) 15 Ky. L. Rep. 321, 22 S. W. 1020; Mullins v. Com. (1902) 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2433, 67 S. W. 824; Arnold v. Com. (1903) 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1921, 72 S. W. 753; Demaree v. Com. (1904) 26 Ky. L. Rep. 507, 82 S. W. 231; Williams v. Com. (1882) 80 Ky. 313; Fields v. Com. (1884) 5 Ky. L. Rep. 861. See also Ireland v. Com. (1900) 22 Ky. L. Rep. 478, 57 S. W. 616.

Missouri. — Compare State v. May (1903) 172 Mo. 630, 72 S. W. 918.

New York. — Compare Abbott v. People (1881) 86 N. Y. 460.

Texas. — Guagando v. State (1874) 41 Tex. 626; Murray v. State (1876) 1 Tex. App. 423; Eanes v. State (1881) 10 Tex. App. 421; Childress v. State (1909) 55 Tex. Crim. Rep. 186, 115 S. W. 582. See also Tinsley v. State (1907) 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 91, 106 S. W. 347; Bryant v. State (1908) 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 65, 111 S. W. 1009. And see the reported case (RICHARDSON v. STATE, ante, 1249) wherein the Texas cases are reviewed in detail. Compare Little v. State (1898) 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 654, 47 S. W. 984; Smith v. State (1904) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 78 S. W. 517.

Wisconsin. — Compare Miller v. State (1909) 139 Wis. 57, 119 N. W. 850.

In Coolman v. State (Ind.) supra, the court said: "Instruction numbered five, tendered by appellant, was a statement of the law concerning reasonable doubt—a subject which had been fully and carefully considered in other instructions given by the court. It did contain the additional statement that, 'when there is a reasonable doubt in which of two or more degrees of an offense he is guilty, he must be convicted of the lowest degree only.' The sentence just quoted was stricken out by the court, and the instruction was given as so modified. The clause above set out was a correct declaration of a statutory rule of law. Burns's Rev. Stat. 1901, § 1893; Newport v. State (1895) 140 Ind. 299, 39 N. E. 926. In other instructions the court had clearly advised the jury in regard to the three degrees of homicide included in the charge of murder in the first degree, and had told them what proof was necessary to establish each degree of the felony. But it had not, in terms, instructed them concerning their duty in case they were satisfied of the guilt of the defendant of some degree of homicide, but were in doubt as to which degree. Under the circumstances, we are of the opinion that the instruction should have been given without modification."

So, in McCandless v. Com. (1916) 170 Ky. 301, 185 S. W. 1100, it was said in an opinion reversing a conviction on other grounds: "The court should, also, upon another trial, give the instruction provided for by § 239 of the Criminal Code, which directs the jury to find the accused guilty of the lesser offense, if entertaining a reasonable doubt of which offense he is proven to be guilty."

In Texas it is held that, in the absence of a request, it is not error to fail to charge specially as to reasonable doubt as between the degrees of the crime charged. Powell v. State (1890) 28 Tex. App. 393, 13 S. W. 599; Frizzell v. State (1891) 30 Tex. App. 42, 16 S. W. 751; McCall v. State (1883) 14 Tex. App. 353; Hall v. State (1889) 28 Tex. App. 146, 12 S. W. 739; Cockerell v. State (1894) 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 592, 25 S. W. 421; Simpson v. State (1913) 69 Tex. Crim. Rep. 376, 154 S. W. 999. In McKinney v. State (1900) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 55 S. W. 175, it was said: "The court gave a charge on reasonable doubt applicable to the whole case, and, in the absence of some special showing why a charge on reasonable doubt between the degrees should have been given, this was sufficient."

In at least two jurisdictions the rule seems to be that, where the court has charged that the guilt of the accused must be established beyond a reasonable doubt, it is not error to refuse to charge that he is to be given the benefit of a reasonable doubt as to the degree of the crime of which he is guilty. Ramsey v. State (1893) 92 Ga. 53, 17 S. E. 613; State v. May (1903) 172 Mo. 630, 72 S. W. 918. See also Abbott v. People (1881) 86 N. Y. 460; Miller v. State (1909) 139 Wis. 57, 119 N. W. 850.

In State v. May (1903) 172 Mo. 630, 72 S. W. 918, supra, it was said: "It is illogical to say that a person may be guilty of two grades of an offense in the same case, where the ingredients of the grades are so different as in murder in the first and second degrees, in the first of which the killing must be done with deliberation, in the other without deliberation, but with malice and premeditation. Then, if the jury believe him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and are authorized under the instructions to find him guilty of either degree of which the evidence shows him to be guilty (and they cannot convict unless they so find), it does seem to us that there is no reason for an instruction telling them that, if they have a reasonable doubt as to which of two degrees of the offense the defendant is guilty, they will give him the benefit of the doubt and find him guilty of the lower grade, for the very obvious reason that, if they have a reasonable doubt as to his guilt of either grade of the offense, they are bound to find him not guilty of that grade, and to find him guilty of the other grade if satisfied of his guilt as to that. A verdict of guilty upon one grade of the offense is, in effect, a finding that he is not guilty of the other. In short, a person cannot be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of two grades of the same offense,—for instance, murder in the first and second degrees,—for the line of demarcation between the two grades is well defined, as by the instructions in this case; that is, the homicide, in order to constitute murder in the first degree, must be committed with deliberation; in the second degree without deliberation, but with malice and premeditation. There is, therefore, under such circumstances, no necessity for an instruction, and no error in the refusal of one, to the effect that if the jury believe the defendant guilty, but entertain a reasonable doubt as to which of two grades of the offense he is guilty of, they will give him the benefit of the doubt and find him guilty of the lower grade of the offense; for they can only convict him of that grade, if either, of which they may believe him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, which is inconsistent with the idea of the existence in the minds of the jury of a reasonable doubt with respect to the grade of offense of which defendant is guilty, for it must follow that if the defendant is guilty of one grade of the offense, he is not of the other, and if they entertain a reasonable doubt of his guilt of either grade, they cannot convict of that grade."

In Abbott v. State (1881) 86 N. Y. 460, the court said: "The request to charge that it was the duty of the jury, if a reasonable doubt existed in their minds from the evidence as to what degree of crime the prisoner was guilty of, to convict of the lesser degree, was sufficiently answered by the judge. He said that he had told the jury that the prisoner was entitled to the benefit of all reasonable doubt.

No exception was taken to this, and no claim made that it was not satisfactory. It must, therefore, be assumed that it was acquiesced in as covering the request, as it really did."

In Miller v. State (1909) 139 Wis. 57, 119 N. W. 850, it was said: "Error is assigned because the court did not give an instruction requested, to the effect that, if the jury were satisfied that any one of the accused was guilty of some offense of criminal homicide beyond a reasonable doubt, but yet entertained a reasonable doubt as to whether it was of a particular or lower degree, the lower offense should be found. Counsel made an attempt to draft an instruction like the one in Ryan v. State (1902) 115 Wis. 488, 92 N. W. 271, which was held permissible by construction. The model before counsel was to the effect that, in the contingency mentioned, the jury should 'return a verdict of guilty of the lower offense, rather than of the higher.' It was supposed the instruction, taken in connection with others given, meant not that, if the jury entertained a reasonable doubt as to whether the accused was guilty of either of two grades of offenses, he should be convicted of the lower, but if they believed he was guilty, at least, of one of them, but there was yet a reasonable doubt as between the two, the verdict should be for the lowest the evidence established with the requisite degree of certainty. We hardly think the requested instruction would have given the jury any better guidance than the general instructions, which seem fairly to have covered the point. By them the jury were, in effect, told that, in rendering a verdict of guilty, it should be for no greater offense of criminal homicide than they believed, with the degree of certainty pointed out, the person convicted was guilty of."

W. A. S.

SUNNYSIDE LAND & INVESTMENT COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

JOHN D. BERNIER and Wife, Respts.

Washington Supreme Court (Dept. No. 1)—April 3, 1922.

(— Wash. —, 205 Pac. 1041.)

Broker — exclusive right to sell — sale by owner — right to commission.

1. Giving to a broker the exclusive right to sell real estate does not deprive the owner of the right to sell it himself without liability for a commission.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1268.]

Appeal — conclusiveness of verdict.

2. A verdict on conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.

[See 2 R. C. L. 194; 1 R. C. L. Supp. 432.]

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Yakima County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover a broker's commission. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Stephen E. Chaffee and R. John Lichty, for appellant:

It was the intention of the parties that it should make no difference who actually made a sale within the stipulated time; if the sale was actually made, the commission would be paid; and it is also provided that in case no sale is made, but in the event the appellant is instrumental in finding a purchaser, then it is entitled to the commission.

Popplewell v. Buchanan, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 204 S. W. 874; Metcalf v. Kent, 104 Iowa, 487, 73 N. W. 1037; Murphy v. Sawyer, 152 Ky. 645, 153 S. W. 991; Green v. Cole, 127 Mo. 587, 30 S. W. 135; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Johnson, 177 Mo. App. 503, 160 S. W. 535; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Lamar, 148 Mo. App. 343, 128 S. W. 20; Novakovich v. Union Trust Co. 89 Ark. 412, 117 S. W. 246; Dain v. Loeffler, 256 Pa. 319, 100 Atl. 888; Hunter v. Wenatchee Land Co. 50 Wash. 438, 97 Pac. 494; Hammond v. Mau, 69 Wash. 206, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1142, 124 Pac. 377.

Messrs. Richards, Fontaine, & Gilbert, for respondents:

If the plaintiff can recover at all, it is because the contract denied or negatived the right of the owners to sell their property to a buyer who was not procured through the agency of the plaintiff.

6 R. C. L. 854, § 242; 13 C. J. 544, § 516; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1217; Mechem, Agency, § 207; Turner v. Baker, 225 Pa. 359, 74 Atl. 173; Ingold v. Symonds, 125 Iowa, 82, 99 N. W. 713, affirmed on rehearing in 134 Iowa, 206, 111 N. W. 802; Waterman v. Boltinghouse, 82 Cal. 659, 23 Pac. 195; Brownell v. Hanson, 109 Wash. 447, 186 Pac. 873; Keith v. Peart, 115 Wash. 552, 197 Pac. 928.

Fullerton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On October 2, 1920, the respondents Bernier owned a tract of land situated near Sunnyside, in this state. On the date given they listed the same for sale with the appellant, Sunnyside Land & Investment Company, a real estate broker. The listing agreement was in writing and was to the following effect:

"This agreement made and entered into this 2d day of October, 1920, by and between John D. Bernier, of Outlook, Washington, party of the first part, and the Sunnyside Land & Investment Company, a corporation having its principal office and place of business at Sunnyside, Washington, party of the second part, witnesseth:

"That the said party of the first part for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar (\$1) to him in hand paid by the second party, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and of the services to be performed by the second party as hereinafter stated, does hereby give and grant to the second party for a period of three months from date hereof, and thereafter until withdrawn by fifteen days' written notice, exclusive right to sell the following described real property situated in the county of Yakima, state of Washington, to wit: N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ lying east of 29.68 govern. lateral, in section 17, township 10 north, range 22 east W. M.—containing 44 acres, subject to the contract entered into with the Sunnyside Water Users' Association, a corporation, for water right for said land on which there has been paid \$—— per acre, and also subject to contract for an additional water right with the United States of America on which there has been paid \$10 per acre, on the following terms, to wit:

"Purchaser assumes drainage.

"The purchase price of said property to be $300 per acre, on which the sum of equity is to be paid when abstract of title is furnished showing marketable title except as herein stated, and balance to be paid as follows: ———, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable annually. The purchaser to assume the balance due on water right for said premises in addition to said payments.

"There is a mortgage for $7,000, $1,000 per year, against said property, which the purchaser shall assume and agree to pay as part of the purchase price.

"Contract for deed to be given, and the purchaser may at his option, when one half of the purchase price has been paid, demand a deed and give back notes secured by first mortgage for balance of purchase price. Contract to be executed by first party, on above terms as soon as purchaser is found.

"The second party, in consideration of the premises, hereby agrees that it will endeavor to sell said premises, and the first party, in consideration of said agreement and the payment of one dollar ($1), does hereby agree to and with the second party that he will in case of sale, or, if said second party is instrumental in finding a purchaser, pay said second party a commission on the selling price of 5 per cent."

Prior to the expiration of the agreement, the respondents sold the land to one James Robinson. They refused to pay the broker the commission provided for in the listing contract, and this action was instituted to recover the same. The case was tried by the court, sitting with a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the respondents.

It was a question in the court below whether Robinson, to whom the appellant sold the property, was a customer procured by the appellant; and the appellant in this court argues that he was, but the evidence on the question is conflicting and was resolved by the jury in favor of the respondents. This concludes the question here.

The remaining question is: Was the listing contract of such an exclusive nature as to entitle the appellant, on a sale of the property during the life of the contract, to the commission named therein, regardless of the fact whether it was or was not the procuring cause of the sale?

It is a general rule supported by practically unanimous authority that, where an owner of property does nothing more than list his property with a broker for sale on commission at a stated price, the broker is entitled to his commission only when he is the procuring cause of the sale; that such a listing does not prevent the owner from selling the property to a purchaser of his own procuring, or render the owner liable to the listing broker for a commission if he does so sell.

When the owner gives to the broker the exclusive agency to sell, the authorities are not so unanimous as to the liability of the owner. The weight of authority is, perhaps, that the owner is liable for the commission when he sells the property during the life of the contract, even though to a purchaser of his own procuring. There are, however, authorities which have adopted the contrary rule, and we have heretofore aligned ourselves with them. In Hammond v. Mau, 69 Wash. 204, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1142, 124 Pac. 377, we used this language: "If a contract is silent as to the character of the agency, the owner is entitled to sell without making himself liable for the payment of commissions, and many cases go so far as to hold that, if the contract provides that the broker shall have an exclusive right to sell, but does not in terms inhibit the principal from selling, the contract is not violated if the principal sell to one who is not a customer of the broker. It is only where an exclusive agency is granted upon sufficient consideration, or it is plainly the intent of the parties that the agency shall be exclusive, that the principal is liable when he makes the sale on his own account."

In Brownell v. Hanson, 109 Wash. 447, 186 Pac. 873, the contract appointed the brokers "sole agents for the sale" of the property for a named period. The case was determined upon other grounds, but we again said: "We would be inclined to hold, in accordance with the minority of the courts, that a contract giving the broker exclusive authority to find a purchaser for property, but not negating the right of the principal to sell the property himself, is not violated by a sale by the principal, and in the event of such a sale the agent is not entitled to a commission."

In Keith v. Peart, 115 Wash. 552, 197 Pac. 928, the brokerage contract gave the broker the "exclusive agency" for the sale of the property, but did not negative the right of the owner to sell during the life of the contract. The owner made a sale of the property during such time, and the broker brought the action to recover commissions. In the complaint he alleged that he was the procuring cause of the sale. The answer denied the allegation, and on the trial the court held this question to be immaterial, construing the contract as one entitling the broker to his commission if the property was sold by the owner during the life of the contract regardless of the procuring cause, and directed a judgment in his favor. This we held error, using this language: "The written authority given the respondent [the broker] made him an exclusive agent, but did not negative the right of the principals to sell the property themselves. . . . This is the test in this case. It is a question as to whether or not the respondent was the efficient procuring cause of the sale to Shook."

Appeal—conclusiveness of verdict.

There is, however, a difference in the wording of the contracts in the cases to which we have referred and the wording of the contract in the present case. In the second of the cited cases the brokers were appointed as "sole agents" for the sale of the property, and in the third they were given an "exclusive agency" for the sale, while in the present case they are given the "exclusive right" to sell. Based upon this difference in language, the appellant contends for a difference in rule, arguing that the phrase "exclusive agency" has not the same meaning as the phrase "exclusive right," and that, where the broker has a contract giving him the exclusive right to sell the property of his principal, he has the right to his commission, even though he might be denied the right if the contract was only one of exclusive agency. But we cannot think there is any essential difference in the contract, no matter which of the phraseologies is used. Primarily the contract is, in each instance, one agreeing to pay a commission in case the broker procures a purchaser for the listed property able, ready, and willing to take it on the terms the owner offers it for sale; and if the grant of an exclusive agency for that purpose means, as the rule adopted by us presupposes, that the owner will not list the property with another agent during the life of the agency, the grant of an exclusive right can mean no more.

The concluding clause of the contract, it will be observed, provides that the broker will endeavor to sell the premises, and that the owner agrees to and with him "that he will in case of sale, or if the second party is instrumental in finding a purchaser," pay the broker a stipulated commission. It is argued that the language quoted from this clause of the contract renders the owner liable in the case of a sale, regardless of who was the procuring cause of the sale. But it is manifest, we think, that the language means a sale to a customer procured by the broker, and is without reference to a sale with which the broker has nothing to do.

The judgment is affirmed.

Parker, Ch. J., and Mitchell, Tolman, and Bridges, JJ., concur.

. Petition for rehearing denied.

NOTE.

The question whether an ordinary broker's contract excludes the right of sale by owner is the subject of an annotation in 10 A.L.R. 814, which is supplemented by the annotation following ETTINGER v. LOUX, post, 1268.

Broker—exclusive right to sell—sale by owner—right to commission.

PHILIP ETTINGER
v.
HENRY A. LOUX, Appt.

New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals—November 14, 1921.

(— N. J. —, 115 Atl. 384.)

Broker — exclusiveness of authority.

1. By an authorization in writing by an owner of real estate, to a broker, to sell the same within thirty days, the owner does not relinquish his right to sell the property himself, independently of the broker; in such a case, the owner is not liable to the broker for commissions.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1268.]

— effect of authorization.

2. The authorization is not a contract, either express or implied. It is simply a naked, revocable power, an offer to pay for services when rendered, if performed before revocation.

[See 4 R. C. L. 818; see also note in 10 A.L.R. 814.]

Headnotes by BLACK, J.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court affirming a judgment of the First District Court of the City of Newark in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover commissions alleged to have been earned by him as a real estate broker. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. John V. Laddey, for appellant:

The authorization in question does not constitute an exclusive agency.

19 Cyc. 223; Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 328; Payne v. Twitchell, 81 N. J. L. 193, 81 Atl. 350; Dresser v. Gilbert, 81 N. J. L. 358, 79 Atl. 1043; MacBride v. Rogers, 83 N. J. L. 407, 85 Atl. 202; Ritch v. Robertson, 93 Conn. 459, 7 A.L.R. 81, 106 Atl. 509; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441; Cadigan v. Crabtree, 179 Mass. 474, 55 L.R.A. 77, 88 Am. St. Rep. 397, 61 N. E. 37; Moran v. Standard Oil Co. 211 N. Y. 187, 105 N. E. 217.

Even if authorization constituted an exclusive agency, the owner always has the right to revoke, for the purpose of making a sale himself, without liability for agent's commissions, before a sale by the agent.

Smith v. Sharpe, 162 Ala. 433, 136 Am. St. Rep. 52, 50 So. 381; Kimball v. Hayes, 199 Mass. 516, 85 N. E. 875; Wright v. Waite, 126 Minn. 115, 148 N. W. 50; Ettinghoff v. Horowitz, 115 App. Div. 571, 100 N. Y. Supp. 1002; Schusterman v. Kraus, 148 App. Div. 727, 132 N. Y. Supp. 758; Massey v. Southern Land Co. 117 Ark. 655, 174 S. W. 531; McCombs v. Moss, 121 Ark. 20 A.L.R.—80.

533, 181 S. W. 907; Cissel, T. & Co. v. Hayden, 41 App. D. C. 477; Bryant v. Palmer, 171 Ill. App. 213; English v. William George Realty Co. 55 Tex. Civ. App. 137, 117 S. W. 996; Smith v. Preiss, 117 Minn. 392, 136 N. W. 7, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 820; Johnson & Moran v. Buchanan, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 328, 116 S. W. 875; Clark v. Asbury, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 134 S. W. 286; Turner v. Baker, 225 Pa. 359, 74 Atl. 172; Bomar v. Munn, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 158 S. W. 1186; Starks v. Springgate, 39 N. D. 228, L.R.A.1918D, 728, 167 N. W. 221; Harris & White v. Stone, 137 Ark. 23, 207 S. W. 443; Roberts v. Harrington, 168 Wis. 217, 10 A.L.R. 810, 169 N. W. 603; Burch v. Hester, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 109 S. W. 399; Faith v. Meisetschlager, — Cal. App. —, 187 Pac. 61; Davis v. Van Tassel, 107 N. Y. Supp. 910; Beck v. Howard, 43 S. D. 179, 178 N. W. 579; Alley v. Griffin, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 215 S. W. 479; Hammond v. Mau, 69 Wash. 204, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1142, 124 Pac. 377; Staats v. Mangelsen, 105 Neb. 282, 180 N. W. 78; California Land Security Co. v. Ritchie, 40 Cal. App. 246, 180 Pac. 625; Greene v. American Malting Co. 153 Wis. 216, 140 N. W. 1130; Dreyfus v. Richardson, 20 Cal. App. 800, 180 Pac. 161; McPike v. Siver, 168 Iowa, 149, 150 N. W. 52; Leschziner v. Bauman, 83 N. J. L. 743, 85 Atl. 205; Payne v. Twitchell, 81 N. J. L. 193, 81 Atl. 350; Stevenson Co. v. Oppenheimer, 91 N. J. L. 479, 104 Atl. 88; Courter v. Lydecker, 71 N. J. L. 511, 58 Atl. 1093; Volker v. Fisk, 75 N. J. Eq. 498, 72 Atl. 1011; Parkhurst v. Tryon, 184 App. Div. 843, 119 N. Y. Supp. 184; Wright v. Beach, 82 Mich. 469, 46 N. W. 673; Learned v. McCoy, 4 Ind. App. 238, 30 N. E. 717; Morgan v. Harper, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 219 S. W. 888.

Messrs. Stein, Stein, & Hannoeh, for appellee:

Plaintiff earned his commission by producing a ready, able, and willing purchaser during the period provided for by the contract.

Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 328; Freeman v. Van Wagenen, 90 N. J. L. 358, 101 Atl. 55; Homan v. Griffin, 94 N. J. L. 845, 110 Atl. 825; Payne v. Twitchell, 81 N. J. L. 193, 81 Atl. 350; Dresser v. Gilbert, 81 N. J. L. 358, 79 Atl. 1043; MacBride v. Rogers, 83 N. J. L. 407, 85 Atl. 202; Kruse v. Ferber, 91 N. J. L. 470, 103 Atl. 409; Stevenson Co. v. Oppenheimer, 91 N. J. L. 479, 104 Atl. 88; Blumenthal v. Bridges, 91 Ark. 212, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 279, 120 S. W. 974.

Plaintiff was employed by defendant for thirty days to render services set forth in the written authorization; he was wrongfully discharged during that period, and is therefore entitled to recover the commissions he would have been able to earn had his employment continued the full period.

Payne v. Twitchell, 81 N. J. L. 193, 81 Atl. 350; Kruse v. Ferber, 91 N. J. L. 470, 103 Atl. 409; Kehoe v. Rutherford, 56 N. J. L. 23, 27 Atl. 912; Cavanagh v. Ridgefield, 94 N. J. L. 147, 109 Atl. 515; Blumenthal v. Bridges, 91 Ark. 212, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 279, 120 S. W. 974; 4 R. C. L. 253; Walker v. John Hancock Mutual L. Ins. Co. 80 N. J. L. 342, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 153, 79 Atl. 354, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 526; 2 C. J. 527.

Black, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this case the plaintiff obtained a judgment in the trial court against the defendant. The judgment was for commissions alleged to have been earned as a real estate broker. This judgment was affirmed on appeal in the supreme court. From the affirmation of the judgment an appeal was taken to this court. The facts from which the cause of action arose are brief. They are not in essentials controverted. The defendant on September 8, 1919, owned the premises No. 189 Sixteenth avenue in the city of Newark, New Jersey. On that day, he signed and delivered to the plaintiff a writing, of which the following is a copy:

Philip Ettinger, Agent: I hereby authorize the above to sell my property at 189 16th ave. at a 3½ per cent rate, for $11,000, or any price above $11,000; provided said property is sold by Mr. Philip Ettinger within (30) thirty days from this date in accordance with my provisions of sale mortgage 4,000.

Henry A. Loux.

Dated 9/8/1919.

On September 13, 1919, the owner of the property sold the same to a buyer unknown to and not procured by the plaintiff. Immediately thereafter, the plaintiff was notified that the owner had sold the property, revoking the authorization of the plaintiff to sell.

However, on September 19, 1919, the plaintiff produced one David Alpert to the defendant, as a purchaser for the property, who was then, in the language of the stipulated facts, ready, able, and willing to purchase the property in accordance with the terms of the authorization. The defendant then declined to sell the property to him, on the ground that it had been sold. The problem therefore for solution is: Did the real estate broker earn a commission? Was the owner by the above writing precluded from selling his own property within the thirty-day period, and so depriving the broker of an opportunity to earn a commission, within the limited period? We think the answer to these questions must be no. The broker did not earn a commission.

Broker-exclusiveness of authority. The owner did not preclude himself from making a sale within thirty days to a purchaser not procured by the broker. The authorization was not an exclusive —effect of authorization. one, either expressly or by implication. It was said in the case of Vreeland v. Vetterlein, 33 N. J. L. 250, the agent, through whose instrumentality the sale is carried to completion, is entitled to the commissions. An examination of the writing shows that in form it is that of an offer, and not that of a contract. There is no consideration, which is essential to a contract. It is in essence simply a revocable, naked power,—an offer to pay for services, when rendered, if performed within the limited period and before revocation. An examination of our reports does not reveal any case in which this precise point has been considered.

It is an accepted rule of construction that a contract of employment does not give the broker an exclusive agency, unless it is so specified, either expressly or by implication. 19 Cyc. 265; 9 C. J. p. 623.

A general rule which is supported by the weight of authority is to the effect that when the owner of real estate places it in the hands of a real estate broker for sale, he does not thereby relinquish his right to sell the property himself, independently of the broker. 4 R. C. L. p. 318, ¶ 56; 9 C. J. p. 622. So, it is said that when the broker is given an exclusive agency, as distinguished from an exclusive right, to sell, it merely precludes the owner from employing another broker, and does not preclude the owner from making a sale himself, without the broker's aid, and in such a case the owner will not be liable to the broker for commissions (9 C. J. p. 622), unless there is a special contract giving a right to commissions regardless of who makes the sale, as in Kruse v. Ferber, 91 N. J. L. 470, 103 Atl. 409, and Stevenson Co. v.

Oppenheimer, 91 N. J. L. 479, 104 Atl. 88, or unless the owner does not notify the broker of the sale, as in Payne v. Twitchell, 81 N. J. L. 195, 81 Atl. 350.

The authorities, however, on this vexed question, in the various jurisdictions, are not altogether in harmony. They will be found collected and compared in the notes in 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 599; 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 280; 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 370; and 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 999.

The conflict may, perhaps, be more apparent than real, when the different wordings in the broker's written authorization to sell in the reported cases are compared and considered.

Those cases which make the owner liable for a broker's commissions when the sale is made by himself within the time limit are put upon the ground that the written authorization is a contract, that it implies an exclusive right to sell within the time named, without the right of the principal to revoke the agency, unless there is a reservation to the contrary, as in Blumenthal v. Bridges, 91 Ark. 212, 215, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 282, 120 S. W. 974.

The revocation of the agent, either directly or by making a sale of the property, is a breach of the contract on the part of the principal, and renders him liable to the agent for damages which the latter sustains thereby.

On the other hand, that class of cases which maintain the opposite doctrine hold that, as the broker paid nothing, incurred no expense or loss, and entered into no obligation on his part, the broker was at liberty to act or not, as he pleased; and would incur no liability by failing to do anything, as the court said, in Goward v. Waters, 98 Mass. 598. The authorization to sell is simply a naked, revocable power. It is not a contract, either express or implied.

There is no mutual obligation to constitute a contract. Nor is there a consideration. So, the writing in this case is simply a naked, revoca-ble power. It did not preclude the owner from making a sale of the property himself, without the broker's aid, and did not subject the owner to liability to the broker for commissions. In this case, there is no suggestion that the owner did not act in good faith toward the broker by selling his own property to a buyer independently of the broker.

The conclusion we have reached in this case, and the principle on which it is based, find support and illustration in the following cases: Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 378, 385, 38 Am. Rep. 441; Cadigan v. Crabtree, 179 Mass. 474, 55 L.R.A. 77, 88 Am. St. Rep. 397, 61 N. E. 37; id. 186 Mass. 7, 66 L.R.A. 982, 104 Am. St. Rep. 543, 70 N. E. 1033; Cronin v. American Securities Co. 163 Ala. 533, 539, 136 Am. St. Rep. 88, 50 So. 915; Hammond v. Mau, 69 Wash. 204, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1142, 124 Pac. 377.

The judgment of the Supreme Court is reversed.

ANNOTATION.

Does ordinary broker's contract exclude right of sale by owner.

- I. Introductory, 1268.
- II. Mere listing of property or creation of agency to sell, 1268.
- III. Creation of exclusive agency, 1270.
- IV. Specification of time for action, 1271.

I. Introductory.

(Supplementing annotation in 10 A.L.R. 814.)

In the annotation in 10 A.L.R. 814, it is stated that if the property is merely placed in the broker's hands for sale, or the broker is given a mere right to sell, the owner himself may make a sale without liability to the broker for commissions, provided the broker has not done the work required to earn his commissions, and the owner's sale does not directly interfere with his efforts or appropriate the fruits of his labors. Also that the mere fact that the agency of the broker is made exclusive does not prevent a sale by the owner without liability for commissions. With respect to contracts in which a period of time is specified during which the broker shall have the exclusive right, it is stated that there is a conflict of authority, with the weight of the authority in favor of the rule that an exclusive agency for a specified time prevents a sale by the owner without liability to the broker either for commissions or for damages for breach of the contract. But, to bind the owner, there must have been some consideration for the contract; for the mere naming of a period of time during which the broker can act gives him no right to have the period so continued. The cases which have been decided since the former annotation was published have not changed the rules as there laid down.

II. Mere listing of property or creation of agency to sell.

(Supplementing annotation in 10 A.L.R. 814.)

The mere employment of the broker, without giving him the exclusive right of sale, does not preclude a sale by the owner. Peters v. Ruebenhagen (1921) — Minn. —, 184 N. W. 16; Cook v. Salisbury (1920) — Mo. App. —, 225 S. W. 112; Buck v. Hogeboom (1902) 2 Neb. (Unof.) 853, 90 N. W. 635; English v. William George Realty Co. (1909) 55 Tex. Civ. App. 137, 117 S. W. 996.

In Hartig v. Schrader (1921) 190 Ky. 511, 227 S. W. 815, in which the defense failed because the owner was held not to have effected a sale before receiving notice of a sale by the broker, the court says: Undeniably the rule is that the owner of property, who has placed it in the hands of a real estate agent, but not by a contract of exclusive agency, retains the right to sell the same himself before such agent shall have produced a purchaser ready, willing, and able to buy same upon the terms named.

"When land is listed with a broker, who is to receive a commission for making a sale, or find a purchaser, and no period is stipulated in the contract within which he is to have the exclusive privilege of making a sale of it, the party listing the land may revoke the contract at any time, and a sale of the land by him is treated as a revocation; and although an exclusive agency is given the broker, if there is no specified time fixed in the contract, within which he has to exercise his agency, and no exclusive privilege of sale is given him, it is held that such a condition in a contract does not prohibit the owner of the land from making a sale and terminating it, and that such a condition in it only prohibits the owner from effecting a sale through some other agent; but when the exclusive privilege is given the broker to sell the land within a time fixed in the contract for that purpose, the owner thereby contracts that he will not sell the land himself, or through any other person, during the continuance of the period fixed in the contract; and hence, then having no right to sell it himself, or to sell it through any other person than the broker, if he does make a sale of it himself, or sells it through any other broker or person, he violates the contract and is liable for the consequences." Carter v. Hall (1921) 191 Ky. 75, 229 S. W. 132.

In McCombs v. Moss (1916) 121 Ark. 533, 181 S. W. 907, where the agency had been transferred from one broker to another, and the former assisted the latter in making the sale, the question was as to who was liable for the commissions; but the court says it is held that where real estate is placed in the hands of a broker for sale in the ordinary way, without stipulation, express or implied, that the agent shall have the exclusive right to sell the property, the principal is not deprived of the right, in good faith, to make the sale himself, free from liability to the agent for commissions.

But the sale by the owner, although lawful, does not necessarily absolve him from liability for services performed and expenses incurred by the broker in his efforts to sell the property. Staats v. Mangelsen (1920) 105 Neb. 282, 180 N. W. 78.

In Payne v. Twitchell (1911) 81 N. J. L. 193, 81 Atl. 350, the contract recited that property had been listed by the broker, and that he was entitled to commissions in case he found a satisfactory purchaser. But, before he found the purchaser, the owner had sold to another, notwithstanding which he was held liable for a commission when, without notice of the prior sale, the broker produced a customer who fulfilled the requirements of the contract. The court held that ability to convey was not a necessary element of liability for commission, and therefore the conveyance of the land by the owner had, of itself, no tendency to rescind the agreement to pay for the stipulated service; the revocation could be effected only by notice to the broker. The court continues: "As soon as we get rid of the notion that the ownership or control of the land is an essential part of the agreement by one person to pay another for performing a specified service, we see at once that such employments are in law assimilated not with agreements touching interests in land, or even, strictly speaking, with the relation of principal and agent, but rather with those special employments by which one is engaged to seek out a particular person, or a person answering to a particular description, and bring such person into communication with his employer. A person who has been injured in a collision may desire to be put into communication with those who witnessed the accident. A solicitor may be seeking the heir to an estate; a mother may wish to have her child adopted; and a host of such cases may be imagined, in all of which the character of the employment is not legally distinguishable from that of one who desires to be put in touch with a person who will pay a certain price for a certain piece of land. Yet I apprehend that no one would think of saying that the price stipulated for the service when rendered need not be paid if the plaintiff had settled his damage suit, or the solicitor had retired from the case, or the mother had decided to keep her child. . . . 'A bargain is a bargain;' and a bargain, once made, remains such until a change of mind by one party, known only to him, has been communicated to the other party."

This case seems to be at variance with the reported case (ETTINGER v. LOUX, ante, 1265).

As shown in the former annotation, the Georgia Code provides that the fact that the property is placed in the hands of the broker to sell does not prevent the owner from selling unless otherwise agreed; and that rule was recognized in Hawks v. Moore (1921) — Ga. App. —, 109 S. E. 807.

But the owner cannot sell to the broker's customer, so as to deprive the broker of his commissions. Washington v. Jordan (1921) — Ga. App. —, 109 S. E. 923; Crawford v. English (1921) 26 Ga. App. 563, 106 S. E. 621.

III. Creation of exclusive agency.

(Supplementing annotation in 10 A.L.R. 816.)

As shown in the former annotation, a distinction has been made between an exclusive agency and an exclusive right to sell, the owner having a right to sell where the broker is merely given the exclusive agency, but not where he is given the exclusive right to sell. This distinction has been maintained.

Giving a broker an exclusive agency does not, of itself, preclude the owner from making a sale. Clark v. Asbury (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 134 S. W. 286.

In Harris v. McPherson (1922) — Conn. —, — A.L.R. —, 115 Atl. 723, the court recognizes and applies the distinction between an exclusive agency to sell and an exclusive right to sell, saying: A contract of the owner, giving the broker the exclusive sale of property, is an agreement by the property owner that he will not sell the property during the life of the contract to any purchaser not procured by the broker.

In Erswell v. Ford (1921) 205 Ala. 494, 88 So. 429, where the owner of the property had by letter given the broker "the exclusive right to handle the sale," the court states that, as a general rule, a broker who is given an exclusive right to sell property is entitled to a commission on any sale made by the owner, but that he must act within a reasonable time. And it was held that a delay of over nine years was too long. The court says the exclusive right to handle the sale terminates if no sale is made within a reasonable time after giving the authority.

In Bomar v. Munn (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 158 S. W. 1186, which was an action for commissions where the sale had been effected by the owner, the court says: "While it is alleged in the petition that plaintiffs were employed by the defendants as their agents and brokers for the purpose of selling the property, and that plaintiffs were given 'the exclusive right, for the period of one year thereafter, to sell said land, and upon a sale thereof plaintiffs should receive 5 per cent of the selling price as commission,' yet, in subsequent portions of the petition, the contract of employment is designated as one of 'exclusive agency' to sell said lands. If the contract of employment was that of exclusive agency only, then, in the absence of special contract to the contrary, the defendants would have the right, under the law, to sell the property themselves, without incurring any liability to plaintiffs for commissions. Of course, if defendants agreed with plaintiffs not only to give them the exclusive agency for the sale of the land, but also to pay them a commission upon any sale, by whomsoever made, then such a contract would render the defendants liable even though the efforts of the plaintiffs were not the procuring cause of the sale."

The case of SUNNYSIDE LAND & INVESTMENT COMPANY v. BERNIER (reported herewith) ante, 1261, fails to observe the distinction above noted, and holds that giving the exclusive right to sell does not deprive the owner of the right.

IV. Specification of time for action.

(Supplementing annotation in 10 A.L.R. 818.)

The mere specification of a time in which the agent is permitted to act does not prevent the sale by the owner unless some consideration has been given by the contract, or the agent has performed services which will be regarded as a consideration.

Under a contract to pay a commission "in case of the sale or conveyance of" the described property "at any time within one year," the owner himself may sell without paying the commission. Parkhurst v. Tryon (1909) 134 App. Div. 843, 119 N. Y. Supp. 184.

Where the broker was given authority to sell lands, which should continue until ten days' notice of their withdrawal was given, the court held that the owner did not thereby disable himself from revoking the agency, and that he had the right to sell the land by his own efforts, and the sale would, by operation of law, revoke the broker's authority. Hallstead v. Perrigo (1910) 87 Neb. 128, 126 N. W. 1078.

In Beck v. Howard (1920) 43 S. D. 179, 178 N. W. 579, it appeared that land was placed with brokers for sale, and the contract provided that they should have the exclusive sale until a date specified. On the succeeding day the owner sold the property himself, and the question was as to his liability for the commissions. The court says that a broker's agency is not made irrevocable by the fact that his right to sell is exclusive; that a sale by the owner operates as a revocation of the broker's agency; and if the broker has not complied with his undertaking at the time of the sale by the owner, he will not be entitled to a commission.

Where the broker was constituted the exclusive agent to sell the property, and the authorization was to continue for the period of ninety days, and the owner expressly contracted to convey to a customer produced by the broker, the court held that the owner had no right to sell within the time stipulated without being liable for a commission. Houston v. Williams (1921) — Cal. App. —, 200 Pac. 55.

Without, apparently, considering the question of the necessity of a consideration to make the contract binding, the court, in Miller v. Brown (1921) — Wash. —, 196 Pac. 573, held that if a broker is given the exclusive sale for a definite period, the owner will be liable for a commission if he himself makes a sale within the time specified.

The expiration of the time specified in the contract terminates the agent's authority so that the owner is privileged to make the sale without liability to the broker after that time. Learned v. McCoy (1891) 4 Ind. App. 238, 30 N. E. 717.

If the contract is for subdivision and sale of a tract of land, with a specified time in which to effect the sale, the owner cannot, after the broker has incurred expenses and performed services in carrying out the contract, sell the property himself without liability in damages for breach of the contract. Green v. Cole (1895) 127 Mo. 587, 30 S. W. 135.

Where a broker has secured the right to sell a tract of land for a definite period by undertaking to expend money in its improvement and subdivision, the owner cannot himself sell the property within the time specified without being liable in damages for revocation of the contract. The contract being founded on a valuable consideration, neither party could violate it without being liable to the other for the breach. And the court concluded that a principal cannot, after having made a valid contract with an agent for the exclusive right to sell, render performance on the part of the agent impossible by making the sale himself, and then successfully defend an action for breach of contract by claiming that the agent might not have made the sale. Atlantic Coast Realty Co. v. Townsend (1919) 124 Va. 490, 98 S. E. 684.

And that ruling was recognized as sound on the subsequent appeal in Robertson v. Atlantic Coast Realty Co. (1921) 129 Va. 494, 106 S. E. 521.

H. P. F.

SAMUEL M. STEWART

v.

SAMUEL W. TODD et al., Appts.

Iowa Supreme Court—July 10, 1919.

(190 Iowa, 283, 178 N. W. 619.)

Partnership — between husband and wife — validity.

1. A partnership contract between husband and wife is valid.

*[See note on this question beginning on page 1304.]Contract — between husband and wife — survivorship of property.

2. Where under the statute a married woman may contract freely as to her own property, a contract between husband and wife founded on good consideration that the survivor shall have the entire property is valid inter sese.

*[See 13 R. C. L. 1364.]Evidence — communications to attorney — privilege.

3. Communications by a wife to an attorney, when consulted by herself and her husband as to their property rights, are not privileged, in an action by the husband to establish rights under agreements then entered into.

*[See 28 R. C. L. 565.]Contract — to leave property to another — testamentary character.

4. An agreement by a wife founded on good consideration, to leave her property to her husband, is not unenforceable because not executed as a testamentary instrument.

*[See 28 R. C. L. 65.]Specific performance — contract to make will.

5. An agreement on good consideration to make a particular disposition of property by will is enforceable after the death of the promisor, against his heirs, devisees, or personal representatives.

*[See 25 R. C. L. 306, 311.]Trust — devisee of property promised to another.

6. Where, after making a will to carry out an agreement to devise property, testator revokes the will by executing a new will, the devisees under the new will take the property impressed with a trust in favor of the person to whom the promise was originally made.

*[See 25 R. C. L. 311.]Contract — revocation — mutual will.

7. A contract between husband and wife to make reciprocal wills, followed by the actual execution of the wills, can be revoked only by mutual consent of the parties.

*[See 28 R. C. L. 172.]— promise on consideration — binding effect.

8. A promise made upon a consideration binds both promisor and promisee.

*[See 6 R. C. L. 586, 649; 1 R. C. L. Supp. 157.]Partnership — dissolution — title to property.

9. Partnership property, upon dissolution of the firm, becomes the joint property of the partners.

Contract — revocation — survivorship of property — consideration.

10. A contract between husband and wife that the survivor shall take all their property, which consists of partnership business, which contract is supplemented by mutual wills, cannot be revoked by the wife after the husband has labored for many years in increasing the property by building up the business.

Specific performance — when enforced.

11. Equity may enforce a contract a breach of which might be the foundation of a civil action for damages.

*[See 25 R. C. L. 206.]— parol evidence — contents of writing.

12. Specific performance of a written contract is not defeated by the fact that the contract has been lost and is proved only by parol evidence of its contents, if the evidence satisfactorily accounts for the loss, and establishes its existence and contents.

Will — conferring rights in property not owned by testator.

13. A will confers no rights in property not owned by testator at the time of his death.

Estoppel — probate of will — setting up contract for estate.

14. A man who is, by statute, required to file his wife's will for probate, and who has no power to contest the instrument, does not, by probating the will and electing not to take under it, estop himself from setting up a contract by which he was to be entitled to her entire estate.

(Salinger and Evans, JJ., dissent.)

On Rehearing.

Evidence — contents of lost paper — sufficiency.

15. A general and approximate recollection by a witness of a writing purporting to be a partnership agreement between husband and wife, which he had seen once, twenty years before, and had not thought of for many years, is not sufficient to sustain a finding that it contained words which would pass to the husband, upon the wife's death, separate property which she acquired from her parents.

[See 17 R. C. L. 1197.]

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Van Buren County (Hunter, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to compel specific performance of an alleged contract between him and his wife to convey property to survivor. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Sloan & Sloan, W. D. McCormick, J. C. Calhoun, and W. L. Burkheimer, for appellants:

A will is an instrument of writing by which a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his death, and which is ambulating and revocable during his life.

Jarman, Wills, p. 16; Underhill, Wills, § 4, p. 7; Burlington University v. Barrett, 22 Iowa, 60, 92 Am. Dec. 376; Mullong v. Schneider, 155 Iowa, p. 12, 134 N. W. 957; Crispin v. Winkleman, 57 Iowa, 523, 10 N. W. 919.

Mutual wills, whether joint or several, are revocable by either testator during the lifetime of the other so far as his disposition of property is concerned, without notice to or consent of the other, unless the making of the will is the result of a valid contract by which each has agreed to devise his property to the other.

1 Underhill, Wills, p. 19, § 13; Robertson v. Robertson, 136 Am. St. Rep. 604, note; 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 621; Edson v. Parsons, 155 N. Y. 555, 50 N. E. 265; McClanahan v. McClanahan, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 463, note, 77 Wash. 138, 137 Pac. 479.

The fact that mutual wills are made by parties in favor of each other, or a mutual will by two parties in each other's favor, creates no presumption that it is made pursuant to contract. Such a contract must be proven by legal evidence, and by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence.

Robertson v. Robertson, 136 Am. St. Rep. 596, note; Edson v. Parsons, 155 N. Y. 555, 50 N. E. 265.

It appearing that a will conceded to have been executed cannot be found after the death of the testator, the presumption arises that the same was destroyed by him animo revocandi.

Thomas v. Thomas, 129 Iowa, 159, 105 N. W. 403; Re Thorman, 162 Iowa, 237, 144 N. W. 7, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 484.

Where a husband and wife verbally contracted each to bequeath his or her property to the other, and executed wills pursuant thereto, the execution of a new will by the husband invalidated the oral contract and precluded its specific performance.

McClanahan v. McClanahan, 77 Wash. 138, 137 Pac. 479, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 461.

The execution of a will is not such part performance of an oral contract to bequeath property as will take the contract out of the Statute of Frauds.

Edson v. Parsons, 155 N. Y. 555, 50 N. E. 265; McClanahan v. McClanahan, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 463, note.

If the writing is intended to operate both as a will and a contract, that part of it which is wholly testamentary cannot be regarded as entitled to specific performance.

1 Underhill, Wills, p. 19, § 13; Hazleton v. Reed, 46 Kan. 73, 26 Am. St. Rep. 86, 26 Pac. 450.

Proof of a parol contract to convey land must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing to warrant specific performance.

Ross v. Ross, 148 Iowa, 729, 127 N. W. 1034; Wills v. Westendorf, 140 Iowa, 293, 118 N. W. 376.

Any language indicative of an intent to make a testamentary disposition is sufficient.

Re Stumpenhousen, 108 Iowa, 555, 79 N. W. 376; Longer's Estate, 108 Iowa, 34, 75 Am. St. Rep. 206, 78 N. W. 834; Schouler, Wills, 2d ed. § 262.

An agreement for the disposition of property intended to take effect or continue after the death of the owner cannot be given testamentary force and allowed to have operation, unless in such form as to be valid as a will.

Crispin v. Winkleman, 57 Iowa, 523, 10 N. W. 919; Wilson v. Carter, 132 Iowa, 442, 109 N. W. 886.

Where title is conveyed for the purpose of defrauding creditors, equity will not restore it.

De France v. Reeves, 148 Iowa, 351, 125 N. W. 655; Mellen, Crawford & Co. v. Ames, 39 Iowa, 283; Briggs v. Coffin, 91 Iowa, 329, 59 N. W. 259; Baldwin v. Davis, 118 Iowa, 36, 91 N. W. 778; Cloud v. Malvin, 108 Iowa, 52, 45 L.R.A. 209, 75 N. W. 645, 78 N. W. 791.

A sale which practically includes all the property used by a firm in carrying on its business, whether made by the firm or a member thereof, operates as a dissolution thereof.

Patterson v. Hare, 4 App. Div. 319, 38 N. Y. Supp. 565; Pennville Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Thomas, 21 Ind. App. 1, 51 N. E. 351; Whitton v. Smith, Freeman. Ch. (Miss.) 231; Smith v. Vanderburg, 46 Ill. 34; Thompson v. Bowman, 6 Wall. 316, 18 L. ed. 736; Blaker v. Sands, 29 Kan. 551; Dellapiazza v. Foley, 112 Cal. 380, 44 Pac. 727.

To establish a lost will or prove its contents, the evidence must be of a very clear and satisfactory character.

Re Thorman, 162 Iowa, 239, 144 N. W. 7, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 484; McCarn v. Rundall, 111 Iowa, 406, 82 N. W. 924; Thomas v. Thomas, 129 Iowa, 159, 105 N. W. 403; Re Brown, 143 Iowa, 649, 120 N. W. 667; 1 Underhill, Wills, p. 375, § 275; Thornton, Lost Wills, p. 130, §§ 92, 93.

Section 3154 of the Code forbids that the interest of either husband or wife in the property of the other shall become the subject of contract between them.

Berry v. Donald, 168 Iowa, 744, 150 N. W. 1050; Garner v. Fry, 104 Iowa, 515, 73 N. W. 1079; Miller v. Miller, 104 Iowa, 186, 73 N. W. 484; Poole v. Burnham, 105 Iowa, 620, 75 N. W. 474; Frazer v. Andrews, 134 Iowa, 621, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 593, 112 N. W. 92, 13 Ann. Cas. 556; Newberry v. Newberry, 114 Iowa, 704, 87 N. W. 658.

The relations between partners, so far as they involve their rights between themselves, are necessarily "personal transactions" as between them, and, on the death of either, the other is not a competent witness to testify in relation thereto, in any case involving any matter of probative force, against the executor, legatee, or devisee of the decedent.

Re Brown, 92 Iowa, 379, 60 N. W. 659; Williams v. Brown, 45 Iowa, 102; Peck v. McKean, 45 Iowa, 18; Smith v. Johnson, 45 Iowa, 308; Wilson v. Wilson, 52 Iowa, 44, 2 N. W. 615; Ridler v. Ridler, 93 Iowa, 347, 61 N. W. 994; Van Sandt v. Cramer, 60 Iowa, 424, 15 N. W. 259; Duffield v. Walden, 102 Iowa, 676, 72 N. W. 278.

One who asks to establish a resulting trust by parol evidence and ingraft the same on legal title must do so by evidence that is clear, certain, and practically overwhelming.

Andrew v. Andrew, 114 Iowa, 526, 87 N. W. 494; Murphy v. Hanscome, 76 Iowa, 192, 40 N. W. 717; Noel v. Noel, 1 Iowa, 423; Sunderland v. Sunderland, 19 Iowa, 325.

The fact that the plaintiff managed the operation of the farm does not make him the owner of the profits arising therefrom, and it does not give him any interest in the property purchased with such profits, or create a trust in his favor.

Deere, W. & Co. v. Bonne, 108 Iowa, 281, 75 Am. St. Rep. 254, 79 N. W. 59; Robb v. Brewer, 60 Iowa, 540, 15 N. W. 420; Carse v. Reticker, 95 Iowa, 25, 58 Am. St. Rep. 421, 63 N. W. 461; Nash v. Stevens, 96 Iowa, 616, 65 N. W. 825; Carn v. Royer, 55 Iowa, 651, 8 N. W. 629; Webster v. Hildreth, 33 Vt. 457, 78 Am. Dec. 632; Hoag v. Martin, 80 Iowa, 718, 45 N. W. 1058.

It is the general rule that the evidence necessary to take a contract out of the Statute of Frauds must all be furnished by the writings, parol evidence not being admissible to supply evidence not found in them.

1 Greenl. Ev. § 268; Watt v. Wisconsin Cranberry Co. 63 Iowa, 730, 18 N. W. 898; Vaughn v. Smith, 58 Iowa, 558, 12 N. W. 604; 3 Phillips, Ev. 351; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 722.

The evidence is not sufficient to establish the alleged contract of February, 1882.

Holmes v. Connable, 111 Iowa, 298, 82 N. W. 780; Ross v. Ross, 148 Iowa, 729, 127 N. W. 1034; Finger v. Anken, 154 Iowa, 507, 131 N. W. 657; Bolton's Estate, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 575; Moore, Facts, §§ 47, 728, 830, 893, 976; McCarn v. Rundall, 111 Iowa, 406, 82 N. W. 924; Bremer v. Haag, 151 Iowa, 449, 131 N. W. 667; Re Gazett, 35 Minn. 532, 29 N. W. 347.

It is not permissible to read to a witness a paper that purports to be a copy of a lost writing, to enable him to testify as to whether the copy corresponds with his recollection of the original.

8 Enc. Ev. 358; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Riley, 80 Ala. 314; Jaques v. Horton, 76 Ala. 238.

Where a fact must be proved by clear evidence, as the contents of a destroyed will, testimony of a witness to the best of his recollection will be insufficient.

McCarn v. Rundall, 111 Iowa, 406, 82 N. W. 924.

The contract of February, 1882, is of no force and effect, because of the provisions of § 3154 of the Code.

Berry v. Donald, 168 Iowa, 744, 150 N. W. 1049; Re Kennedy, 154 Iowa, 460, 135 N. W. 53; Pieper v. Pieper, 145 Iowa, 373, 124 N. W. 181.

It is the duty of the court to construe the will of decedent according to the expressed intention thereof, and to do so must be given full force and effect to every clause therein.

McTigue v. Ettienne, 155 Iowa, 450, 136 N. W. 229; Roskrow v. Jewell, 154 Iowa, 634, 135 N. W. 3, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 63; Richards v. Richards, 155 Iowa, 394, 136 N. W. 132.

Messrs. J. C. Mitchell and Robert R. McBeth for appellee.

Gaynor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Samuel M. Stewart and one Emma A. Stewart were husband and wife. On or about February, 1881, they entered into a contract in writing. The original of this contract was not produced on the trial. Its absence was accounted for, and secondary evidence of its contents rightly permitted. From this evidence it appears that the contract so entered into was substantially as follows:

"Contract entered into this — day of February, 1881, by and between Emma A. Stewart and S. M. Stewart, both of Van Buren county, Iowa, witnesseth:

"That said parties have agreed to start a general store under the firm name of E. A. Stewart, in which each party is to be an equal partner. S. M. Stewart is to transact and do all the business, sign the firm name of E. A. Stewart to any and all papers necessary, and all the property accumulated, purchased, and owned by either party to be in the firm name of E. A. Stewart. Both parties to use any money they need, and at the death of either party the one living shall fulfil all contracts, pay all debts, and have all property left or owned by either party, or in the firm name."

Upon the execution of this contract the parties thereto opened a general store at Mt. Sterling, Iowa, in the name of E. A. Stewart. The capital used in this enterprise was very small, but the larger portion of it was undoubtedly furnished by Samuel M. Stewart. From that time until 1894 the store was run in the name of E. A. Stewart, managed and controlled, so far as this record shows, by Samuel M. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart both assisting in the purchase and sale of goods and in the conduct of the business generally. This proved a successful venture, and the close of each year found a large profit to the credit of the firm.

On the 25th day of September, 1894, the stock of merchandise and fixtures in this store were sold to Madden & De Hunt, the contract reciting "that E. A. and S. M. Stewart have this day sold to Madden & De Hunt their stock of merchandise and fixtures, situated," etc., describing the location. The consideration paid was $3,000. The exact amount is not clearly ascertainable from this record.

On February 28, 1894, before the sale of this stock and while the store was being operated under the contract aforesaid, Emma A. Stewart and S. M. Stewart entered into a written contract with one John Gwinup for the purchase of 196 acres of land for $6,550. This contract was signed by Emma A. Stewart and S. M. Stewart. In the consummation of the contract the deed was made on June 2, 1894, to Emma A. Stewart. The original deal was made by S. M. Stewart, and the preliminary contract signed by both. The purchase price was paid with partnership money, the proceeds of accumulated profits during the continuance of the business. The record affirmatively shows that up to this time neither party had any source of revenue except that which came from this partnership venture. There is some suggestion that Mrs. Stewart may have received money from her father, but there is no substantive evidence of this fact, and therefore we say that the record discloses that this land was purchased and paid for out of partnership funds.

Soon after the purchase of this land Samuel M. Stewart and his wife took possession, and thereafter continued to occupy it as their home farm until the death of Mrs. Stewart. The land is referred to in the record as the "home farm."

After the purchase of this farm, it was managed and controlled by Samuel M. Stewart. Stock was purchased by him and placed on the farm. In fact, he had the full management and control of it. The farm also proved profitable, and, in the course of time, other lands were purchased, and title taken in the names of E. A. Stewart and Emma A. Stewart, a detailed description of which is not necessary to the determination of the matters involved in this suit. But the record discloses that after the sale of the store there was no source of revenue to these parties except that which came as profits from this farm venture. In fact, all property the legal title to which stood in the name of Emma A. Stewart or E. A. Stewart at the time of the death of Mrs. Stewart on September 9, 1913, was purchased from accumulated profits arising from the original enterprise started by these parties under the contract of partnership made in 1881, and is traceable to that enterprise, except the lands conveyed to Emma A. Stewart in 1896 by her father and mother. The record of these conveyances is found in book 59, pages 108, 109, of the Clark county records of the state of Missouri, and in book 36, page 66, of the Van Buren county records of this state. There seems to have been no consideration paid for either of these pieces of land, either by Mr. or Mrs. Stewart.

The plaintiff, however, does not rely upon a claim of partnership as a basis for the relief sought in this case. He bases his claim of right to all the property, whether in the name of E. A. or Emma A. Stewart, on the claimed binding force of the original contract entered into in 1881, providing "that at the death of either party the one living shall fulfil all contracts, pay all debts, and have all property left or owned by either party, or in the firm name," supplemented by two reciprocal wills executed on the 1st day of May, 1896.

The existence of the partnership is only an incident, and not the basis on which plaintiff rests his right to relief in this case. The rights he seeks to enforce are based upon the original written contract of partnership entered into in 1881, supplemented by the two reciprocal wills executed on the 1st day of May, 1896. It is claimed that the formation of the partnership, the investment of money in the partnership, and the subsequent investment of the earnings of the partnership in land in the name of one of the parties, show a consideration for a performance of, and such reliance on, that contract that its binding force and legal efficacy, supplemented by the wills aforesaid, cannot be avoided by the acts of one of the parties to it without the consent of the other.

In May, 1896, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart went to the office of William M. Walker, a practising attorney in Van Buren county. They had with them at that time the original contract of partnership hereinbefore set out. It was submitted to Mr. Walker for examination. He read it. He said: "The contract was handed to me, and I was asked to read it and give my opinion as to whether or not it was a valid and binding contract. After an examination, I said to them that, in my judgment, it was a valid and binding contract, and that I would advise that she and her husband each make a will in favor of the other, and then, in my judgment, the contract and the wills would be binding and valid. At that time, Mrs. Stewart's father and mother and husband were all present. Mrs. Stewart said at that time that it was her thought and her husband's that she would in all probability outlive him, and they wanted to know whether the contract would have the effect of giving to her, in case of his death, all their property, and wanted to know, in case of her death, would it have the same effect as to him. They expressed the desire that in case of death of either of them the other should have all the property which they owned at the time. Thereupon I prepared two wills, one for each. They were exactly alike, except that Mrs. Stewart made a special bequest of her watch to one of her nieces."

After the wills were executed, they discussed between themselves a place of deposit. They concluded, however, to deposit them with the clerk of the district court on Mr. Walker's suggestion. The will executed by Samuel M. is substantially as follows:

"I will and bequeath that all my just debts and funeral expenses be paid.

"2d. After the payment of my debts and expenses, I will, devise, and bequeath all my property, both real and personal, of whatever kind and wherever situated, of which I may die possessed, to my beloved wife, Emma A. Stewart."

Mrs. Stewart's will was the same, except as to the devise of her watch to her niece, and devised all the property of which she died seised to Samuel M. Stewart. These reciprocal wills were deposited with the clerk of the court, but were subsequently taken from his custody and placed in a receptacle, to which both parties had access, in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart. So far as Samuel M. Stewart knew, or had reason to know, they remained there and were there at the time of the death of Mrs. Stewart. Upon the death of Mrs. Stewart, however, it developed that on the 17th day of August, 1907, Mrs. Stewart executed another will, in which she revoked and canceled any and all former wills made by her, and undertook to and did make a disposition of her property inconsistent with the provisions of the reciprocal will heretofore referred to. It is this will that provokes the controversy. This will was produced and duly probated, and under this will claims are being urged, antagonistic to the claims of plaintiff in this suit.

This is the record on which the rights of the parties in this suit are to be determined.

Before coming to the real merits of the controversy, we have to say that the contract relied upon was one which the parties had a right to make. There is no statutory inhibition Contract—between husband and wife —survivorship of property. against the making of such a contract, and when it rests upon a good consideration it is enforceable. A married woman can contract freely with relation to her own property. The inhibition of Code § 3154 relates only to trafficking in her inchoate right in the property of her husband. Baker v. Syfritt, 147 Iowa, 49, 125 N. W. 998. That she had a right to enter into a partnership with her husband

Partnership—between husband and wife—validity.

and carry on a partnership business the same as a stranger might do has been settled by the decisions of this court. Hoaglin v. Henderson, 119 Iowa, 720, 61 L.R.A. 756, 97 Am. St. Rep. 335, 94 N. W. 247.

As said before, the original written contract of partnership was not produced. Its contents are proven by the testimony of Mr. Walker, to whom it is claimed it was submitted at the time the reciprocal wills were drawn. Both parties were present at that time. It was submitted to him for a legal opinion at the request of both parties, and in the presence of the father and mother of one of the parties, and it is claimed that what was said is privileged under the statute. This position cannot be sustained. The communications to attorney

Evidence—
—privilege.

privilege does not apply to cases where two or more persons consult an attorney for their mutual benefit. Mueller v. Batcheler, 131 Iowa, 653, 109 N. W. 186.

It is claimed that the contract is testamentary in its character, at least in so far as it purports to give all property left by Mrs. Stewart at the time of her death to her husband; and that being testamentary in character, and not executed as the law requires testamentary instruments to be executed, it cannot be enforced.

It is true that as a testamentary instrument it cannot be enforced, but an agreement to leave property to another, resting upon a consideration, is valid and binding, and

Contract—to leave property to another—testamentary
character.

will be enforced by the courts. In Mueller v. Batcheler, 131 Iowa, 650, 109 N. W. 186, the facts were that one William C. Knight executed and delivered to his wife a deed to certain real estate and a bill of sale to certain personal property; that as part of the same transaction Mrs. Knight executed and delivered to William C. Knight a deed to all the real estate of which she was then owner. The mutual agreement between them was that the survivor of them, on the death of the other, was to own all the property, that the deed executed by the survivor was to be destroyed, and that the survivor should give by deed or by will all the property which such survivor should own at the time of his or her death to the plaintiff in the action; the consideration of each deed being the mutual promise of the other. William C. Knight died intestate. His wife also died intestate. At the time of her death she was the owner of all the property claimed by the plaintiff in the action. Plaintiff brought an action against her heirs to recover the property. The court below granted him the relief prayed for, and this court affirmed the action.

As said in Baker v. Syfritt, 147 Iowa, 55, 125 N. W. 1001: "It has often been held that an agreement upon sufficient consideration to make a will is valid, and that upon breach of such promise the beneficiary thereof has a right of action for damages, or, under some circumstances, may enforce specific performance. And the person coming into the possession of such property otherwise than as an innocent purchaser is held in equity to be trustee thereof for him to whom it ought of right to have been devised."

See Carmichael v. Carmichael, 72 Mich. 76, 1 L.R.A. 596, 16 Am. St. Rep. 528, 40 N. W. 173. In this case it is held that, where a husband and wife bind themselves to make a particular disposition of their property by will, and such contract is fully performed on the part of the husband, and the benefits received and accepted by the wife, equity will prevent the wife from violating her part of the contract in fraud of parties interested, and that, if a conveyance is made by her after the death of her husband, in violation of her agreement, the conveyance may be set aside at the suit of the parties for whose benefit the agreement was made. See also Teske v. Dittberner, 70 Neb. 544, 113 Am. St. Rep. 802, 98 N. W. 57.

This doctrine has been quite generally recognized by the courts, to wit, that where one makes a valid agreement, resting upon a sufficient consideration, to dispose of his property by will, such agreement may be enforced, after his decease, against his heirs, devisees, or personal representatives. A part performance of an agreement to make a particular disposition of property by will takes it out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds. Dicken v. McKinley, 163 Ill. 318, 54 Am. St. Rep. 471, 45 N. E. 134; Johnson v. Hubbell, 10 N. J. Eq. 332, 66 Am. Dec. 773; Burns v. Smith, 21 Mont. 251, 69 Am. St. Rep. 653, 53 Pac. 742.

In Turnipseed v. Sirrine, 57 S. C. 559, 76 Am. St. Rep. 580, 35 S. E. 757, 1035, it was held that, if two persons make an oral agreement to make mutual wills, and one of them, in execution thereof, bequeaths to the other, who subsequently dies without making a will, a legacy of $10,000 and the residue of her estate, this is such a part performance of an agreement on her part as takes the case out of the Statute of Frauds and permits the agreement to be proved by parol, and authorizes a decree against the heirs of the deceased, to the effect that the party who has made her will is the equitable owner, and entitled to be clothed with the legal title to all of the property which she would have received, if the will of the other party to the agreement had been made. See also Allen v. Bromberg, 147 Ala. 317, 41 So. 771.

If, therefore, it can be said to be the rule that one can make an agreement in writing or in parol without executing it in the form required in the execution of testamentary instruments, and bind himself by such agreement to give his property upon his death to another, and that such agreement can be enforced after the death of the promisor provided it is shown that the agreement rests upon a valid consideration, there can be no logical reason for holding that, where one makes such a contract, resting upon a consideration, and thereafter, in pursuance of the contract, makes a will for the purpose of making more effectual this agreement and promise to make the will, the original contract becomes less binding upon him.

We are met, however, with the proposition that before the death of Mrs. Stewart she revoked the reciprocal will by executing another will, disposing of her property to the defendants in this suit. Now, of course, this reciprocal will could not be probated. She had revoked it. The revocation destroyed the right to probate, but the contract still remained, and the last will, being probated, gave no added right by its probate. It simply pointed out and designated the persons who were appointed in her stead to perform the contract made. The will undoubtedly passed the property to these parties named in the last will, but they took it impressed with a trust in favor of the party to whom the promise was originally made. Courts of equity, considering that done which ought to be done, will enforce the original contract by impressing a trust on the property received under the second will in favor of the original promisee.

Trust—devisees of property promised to another.

Inasmuch as their original contract rested on the mutual promise of the contracting parties, carried out and recognized by the making of reciprocal wills, it cannot be rescinded except by the consent of both. As it takes the mutual consent of both to make a contract, so it takes the mutual consent of both to rescind or destroy the contract.

Contract—revocation—mutual will.

We have said that the promise must rest upon a consideration. A promise made upon a consideration binds the promisor and promisee.

—promise on consideration
—binding effect.

What is the consideration for the promise made in the contract executed between these parties in 1881, and what was the consideration for the mutual promise made in the reciprocal will?

It appears that all the property, except that which came from the father and mother of Mrs. Stewart, is simply the product of the growth and development of the original business entered into at the time the contract was made. The money used in purchasing the Gwinup farm was the money of the partnership. The title to it was taken in the name of one of the parties. It was purchased at a time when the commercial enterprise was still in

Partnership—
dissolution—title to property.

operation. It belonged to the partnership, and upon the dissolution of the partnership, if there was any dissolution, the property became the joint property of the partners. It was managed and controlled by the husband.

The record shows that practically all the business that made the farm profitable was done by him. The proceeds of this joint property were invested in other property, and this continued to be the joint property of these parties. After the purchase of this Gwinup farm, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart made their visit to the office of William M. Walker. The original contract was then exhibited to him, and recognized by them as a then binding contract between them. This was after the sale of the store, and after the purchase of the Gwinup farm. The husband continued to recognize the contract as binding, and labored in the interest of the joint enterprise, giving his time and attention and money to make it effectual and profitable.

Without his consent, and without notice to him, his wife, on the 17th day of August,

Contract—revocation—survivorship of property—
consideration.

1907, made her will, in which she attempted to revoke, and we may assume did revoke, the reciprocal will made in 1896, and undertook to relieve herself of the obligation of her contract, without the knowledge or consent of Mr. Stewart. This will was admitted to probate. Mr. Stewart filed an election not to take under the will, and brought this action, in which he claims to be the owner of all the property left by the deceased at the time of her death, unaffected by the provisions of this later will. The court below found in his favor, and we think rightly so, for the reason that the original contract and its agreements therein, supplemented by the reciprocal wills made later, became and are as one contract binding upon both parties, and not revocable by either. Brown v. Webster, 90 Neb. 591, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1196, 134 N. W. 185, supports this conclusion, and is such a full and fair discussion of the question involved in this suit that we invite a careful reading of it. See also Keith v. Miller, 174 Ill. 64, 51 N. E. 151.

The record in this case discloses that the plaintiff devoted the best years of his life to the performance in good faith of the original contract entered into in 1881. For thirteen years a mercantile business was carried on in the name of E. A. Stewart, a name agreed upon under which the partnership business should be transacted. So far as this record shows, the entire accumulation of these years was invested with his consent, and in reliance, no doubt, upon the original contract, in lands in the name of his wife. After much of this land had been purchased and taken in the name of his wife, they together consulted Mr. Walker. Some question had undoubtedly arisen in their minds touching the legal efficacy of the contract. They both recognized it as binding upon them if enforceable at law. To make sure that the contract was binding, they applied to Mr. Walker. He informed them then that the contract was legal and of binding efficacy upon both, and suggested that, to avoid any doubt as to the legal efficacy of this contract, reciprocal wills should be made. These reciprocal wills were made, undoubtedly for the purpose of making more effectual, and more fully evidencing, the agreement made in the original contract. They could have been made for no other purpose, so far as Mrs. Stewart was concerned. The property at that time was all in her name. So far as Samuel was concerned, the will and contract remained in full force with all the legal efficacy that attached to it up to the time of the death of his wife. It was then for the first time that he discovered that she had attempted to repudiate her obligation and to assume to be the owner of all the property in her own right, and to make disposition of it accordingly. We may assume that she revoked her reciprocal will to the extent that it could not, upon her death, be admitted to probate, but the contractual rights which the contract and the will created could not be destroyed by her act without the consent of her husband. Therefore the rights of the plaintiff in this suit rest upon the agreement evidenced by the original contract of 1881, of which the reciprocal will attempted to be revoked was a part by mutual consent of both parties, as evidenced by the testimony of Mr. Walker.

While it is true that any effort at a testamentary disposition of property can be made effectual only by following the statute governing the making of testamentary instruments, yet it does not follow that two parties cannot make an agreement upon consideration touching the disposition of the property of each upon the death of either. If such contracts were not binding upon the parties, no suit could be maintained for a breach thereof, and yet this court has recognized the right to maintain actions as for a breach of such contracts, and damages have been recovered. Equity may enforce a contract a breach of which might be the foundation of a civil action for damages. It will not always do so, but it lies in the power of the court to do so. Chehak v. Battles, 133 Iowa, 107, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1130, 110 N. W. 330, 12 Ann. Cas. 140; Stiles v. Breed, 151 Iowa, 86, 130 N. W. 376. In this case plaintiff claims that a contract was entered into by the terms of which he was to live with decedent until attaining his majority, and upon decedent's death he was to take all his property as though his own son. The court said: "That [such] a contract . . . may be enforced was decided in Chehak v. Battles, 133 Iowa, 117, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1130, 110 N. W. 330, 12 Ann. Cas. 140. There the contract was in writing, while in this case oral evidence is relied on. The only difference is the manner of proof. Such an agreement, if resting in parol, must be fully established by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence."

20 A.L.R.—81.

Specific performance—when enforced.

The evidence is conclusive that plaintiff complied with all the terms of his alleged agreement. The court found the contract was enforceable, and enforced it against the heirs of the deceased. See also Horner v. Maxwell, 171 Iowa, 660, 153 N. W. 331.

It is argued, however, that the contents of this original instrument are proven, if at all, by parol testimony. The right, however, rests upon a written instrument. The proof of the contents of the written instrument is by parol. We say the proof of the contents leaves in our minds no doubt of the existence of the original contract and of its contents, as claimed by the plaintiff. The proof of the contents was made by a lawyer skilled in his profession, to whom the original instrument was submitted for advice, submitted by both parties, and its contents examined for the purpose of giving advice as to its efficacy as a legal document. It was read carefully by the lawyer, and upon reading the advice was given which resulted in the preparation of the reciprocal wills. The existence of the original contract was fully proven, its contents were fully proven,

—parol evidence
—contents of
writing.

and this justifies us in saying that the writing was substantially as hereinbefore set out. The loss of the contract was fully accounted for. Search was made in every place where the contract was likely to be. While there is some statement in plaintiff's petition that it might be in the hands of White, White was on the stand and denied that he ever had possession of it. It seems to be conceded by the defendant that the loss of the contract was fully proven. Further, the objections first urged to the instrument as a copy were withdrawn by the defendant, and no point is made in defendant's brief points as to the sufficiency of the evidence to show that the contract was lost and not within the power of the plaintiff to produce.

It is urged in argument that, because the plaintiff did not oppose the probate of this last will, and filed his election not to take under the will, he is estopped to claim that the will was not efficacious as an instrument disposing of all rights which he might have urged under the original contract now sought to be enforced. This contention is not sound, inasmuch as it was his duty, under the law, to file the will with the clerk for probate. There is a penalty for suppressing it. Code 1897, § 5043. It is the duty of the clerk to fix the date for proving it. On a hearing the only issue is: Is the instrument the last will and testament of the decedent? Was she of sound mind when she signed it, etc.? It is probated or proven when this is shown. A husband cannot contest the will of his wife. If he does not care to take under the will, he can file his election not to take under the will. In filing his election not to take under the will, no matter what its provisions are, he receives the same share in his wife's estate as he would receive had there been no will. No matter

Will—conferring rights in property not owned by testator.

what the provisions of the will are when probated, it confers no rights in property not owned by the testator at the time of her death, and in no event could it be made to avoid contractual obligations assumed during her life. There is no estoppel shown in this case.

No prejudice resulted to any of the contesting parties as a consequence of the silence, or even active participation, of the plaintiff in the probate of this will. It is only a circumstance tending to show, if anything, that he consented in the revocation of the original reciprocal will, and it is our opinion it has no such tendency under the record in this case. The will neither negatives nor affirms the ownership of the property mentioned in the will against the rights of third persons. The court below in its decree found in favor of the plaintiff, and adjudged him to be the owner and entitled to all the property owned by Emma A. Stewart at the time of her death, except the watch and chain referred to in her reciprocal will hereinbefore set out, and decreed specific performance of said contract.

Estoppel—
probate of will —setting up contract for estate.

There are other questions discussed, but they do not reach the merits of this controversy. On the whole record we think the court was right in its decree, and the cause is affirmed.

Ladd, Ch. J., and Weaver, Preston, and Stevens, JJ., concur.

Salinger, J., dissenting:

I. Something should be said upon the admission of secondary evidence to prove the contents of the alleged lost written contract. The majority opinion has the statement that: "the original of this contract was not produced on the trial. Its absence was accounted for and secondary evidence of its contents rightly permitted."

Again: "The loss of the contract was fully accounted for. Search was made in every place."

This surely treats the right to introduce secondary evidence as being a question in the case. So treating it, I pointed out, among other reasons for holding that no sufficient foundation was laid, the following allegation of the petition: Plaintiff "has not access to the alleged contract, because he has no copy of it and does not know of any copy within the jurisdiction of this court. He does not know whether the alleged contract has been destroyed or not, and, if not destroyed, he does not know in whose hands it now is, but he believes it is in the possession of Matthew White, one of the defendants, and who resided in the state of Texas."

I argued that since White was a party to the suit, filed answer, and testified on the trial, and since plaintiff pleaded that he believed the original of the alleged lost contract to be in the possession of White, it was error to receive secondary evidence of the contents of that paper until it was determined, by the examination of White or some other method available, that the belief of the plaintiff that White had the paper was unfounded. These statements on my part carried the inference that White had not been examined upon the point, and when I made them I mistakenly believed that this was so. The majority opinion still retains its ruling that secondary evidence was rightly received, and so its inferential holding that that question is in the case. But it has added, in effect, that the testimony of White shows that he did not have the paper. It is further stated in effect that the objection of insufficient foundation was abandoned on the trial. I am unable to agree to either position.

It is true, as said, that White was examined upon the point, but the examination was this:

Q. You have heard Mr. Walker's testimony with reference to the alleged contract of partnership; did you ever have a contract of that kind, or anything like it, in your possession?

A. No, sir; I never did, never knew of it until this suit.

Q. In all your conversations with Mrs. Stewart, did she ever mention a contract of that kind? What would you say as to whether or not she would have mentioned such a contract if such a contract ever had existed?

A. Well, I would have thought she would; of course, she might not.

Q. You say that you never had in your possession a contract like Mr. Walker spoke of in his testimony with reference to the alleged partnership.

A. No, sir; I never did.

This, true enough, settles that White never had a paper containing what Mr. Walker's testimony says it did contain. But it is not a statement that he did not have in his possession a paper dealing with the partnership, but which did not contain the particular stipulation upon which the plaintiff relies and to which Mr. Walker testifies. I am of opinion, therefore, that, notwithstanding this testimony, secondary evidence should not have been permitted. As to abandonment of the objection, one objection to testimony by Walker made was: "We make the further objection as to the contents of that paper, because there is no evidence sufficient of its loss or destruction, or that the original cannot be produced."

Later plaintiff offered in evidence a part of the original petition included in pencil parentheses,—the part which sets up the survivorship feature of the contract. Objection was made to this which does not include want of sufficient foundation, and later counsel for the defendant stated: "We will withdraw any objection made to the inquiries on account of it being a copy of the original."

It will be noticed that nowhere was a withdrawal of the objection that was made when Mr. Walker was being examined; to wit, the objection "as to the contents of that paper, because there is no evidence sufficient of its loss or destruction, or that the original cannot be produced."

The withdrawal relates solely to the needless offer of a part of plaintiff's petition. Same was in the record without offer in evidence, and offering it in evidence would add nothing to the force of the pleading. If there was a concession that the alleged copy set out in the petition contained what the original did, there would be no occasion for most of the majority opinion. Had it been conceded that the petition was a true copy of the original contract, this court need have spent no time in considering whether the testimony of Mr. Walker proves the contents of the original; there would have been no occasion to say: "Its contents are as fully proven and as clearly made known as though the written instrument itself were before the court."

The case would have come to an end in the trial court and here, on the one proposition that defendant had conceded that the copy pleaded in the petition was as good as the original.

In the same opinion which treats the question of foundation in the case comes the final amendment that the brief points for the appellant do not present this question. I find upon examination thus suggested that this is so. For that reason I have no more to say on the question of secondary evidence, except that the majority should dispose of the reception of that testimony upon the one ground that the brief points do not raise the question.

II. In the main, the majority states clearly enough that plaintiff may not recover in this suit unless he has proved the contract he has pleaded. Also, that the contents of that contract "are proved by the testimony of Mr. Walker,"—and so, only. It should be said in passing that this clarity is not maintained throughout, and there are statements in the opinion from which it can be gathered that plaintiff can prevail though he has not proved the very contract alleged, and that things other than the testimony of Walker have made that proof. Three illustrations of this confusion of thought are typical and illustrative. It is unnecessary to advert to more, and any attempt to keep this dissent at reasonable length forbids so doing. The three illustrations are these: A large part of the opinion is devoted to a demonstration that such a contract as is asserted is valid and enforceable. I agree, and shall later use its validity as an argument. But I cannot understand how the fact that a given contract would be valid if made dispenses with proof of its existence and contends against a denial of its existence. Time and again the thought is expressed that the making of mutual wills by the parties will permit plaintiff to recover even if he has not proved the contract he has pleaded. Again, much stress is laid upon the alleged fact that money belonging to both husband and wife bought the property in controversy, and that such property was put in the name of the wife. Neither the making of the wills, nor so buying and placing the title of the property, in the least dispenses with proving the contract pleaded. If the contract is not what is pleaded, the wills are of no avail because they are revocable, and revoked by a later will made by the wife. It is universally held that mutual wills, whether joint or several, are revocable by either testator during the lifetime of the other so far as his disposition of property is concerned, without notice to or consent of the other, unless the making of the will is the result of a valid contract by which each has agreed to devise his property to the other. 1 Underhill, Wills, p. 19, § 13; Robertson v. Robertson, 136 Am. St. Rep. 604, note, div. 6, 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 621; Edson v. Parsons, 155 N. Y. 555, 50 N. E. 265; McClanahan v. McClanahan, 77 Wash. 138, 137 Pac. 479, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 463. The plaintiff himself recognizes this situation, because he pleads that the said reciprocal wills "were executed in confirmation and consideration as well as supplemental to the written contract set out in the original petition." So the pleader concedes that the wills are not material until the alleged contract has been established. The will is available only if it was so executed. A will cannot be a confirmation of, supplemental to; or supported by, the consideration of a contract if no contract existed. Without the contract the plaintiff gets no "rights" except such as belong to a claimant under a revoked will. If the contract is proved, he gets all the property though there be no will. Without the contract the will gives him nothing. It follows that the existence of the will cannot dispense with proving the contract pleaded.

If it be necessary to establish the contract, neither its existence, nor the fact that the will is made pursuant to and in consideration of the contract, is established by proving the existence of the will. See div. 4, 136 Am. St. Rep. 596, note, citing Edson v. Parsons, 155 N. Y. 555, 50 N. E. 265.

As to the buying the property with joint money and placing the title in the wife—assume this fact and others of like character to be competently established by the proof, and yet they are irrelevant on the issues. The fact that property was paid for with joint money and the title placed in the wife can effect no more than to give the husband a right to enforce a trust to the extent of his contribution. Proving it will not dispense with his proving the contract pleaded, because so buying and placing gives neither party all the property. The majority declares over and again, and in every variety of expression, that all that was done was done "under the terms of said contract." Plaintiff demands all the property because he has performed what the alleged contract requires. In attaching importance to the alleged manner of dealing with the property, the majority confuses the case with a suit to enforce a trust to the extent of half the property. Plaintiff is not declaring on a trust in part of the property. He says, "Give me more than the law of trusts will give, because my contract entitles me to more." Under the contract he claims the land given his wife by her parents. Without such contract no court would give the husband all of that land. It is manifest that proving property was bought with joint funds and title placed in the name of one party is no evidence that the parties made a contract that on the death of one the survivor should have all the property. With all deference, it seems to me the majority is confused on what is indispensable proof and on what is proper evidence to establish whatsoever is indispensable. The mind of man cannot conceive how this plaintiff can get all the property without competent proof that the contract he sues on was made and that its provisions entitle him to all. It seems to be conceded that on that question the only competent testimony is that of Mr. Walker. As, then, nothing will base the relief the majority proposes to give plaintiff, except the contract pleaded, and as nothing but the testimony of Mr. Walker is competent evidence upon the existence and provisions of this contract, elimination brings about that plaintiff can have no relief unless the testimony of Walker establishes the contents of the paper with the clarity required by hornbook law. To whether it does this I now address myself.

III. There is a denial that the alleged contract bore the signatures of plaintiff and his wife. The only competent testimony as to signatures is that of Mr. Walker, and he disclaims ability to speak to the question. He says: "At this time I don't think I was acquainted with the genuine signature of either one of them; that is, to take the signatures by themselves and say whether it was their genuine signature, I wouldn't be able to do that."

IV. Part of Mr. Walker's testimony is clear. I have but one criticism to make of the dealing with it by the majority. It asserts that Mr. Walker carefully read the paper.

The testimony is:

Q. State whether or not you examined this contract.

A. Yes, I read it.

Q. Did you or not read it carefully?

A. I think I did.

Q. You read it carefully.

A. I would have to do that from the question that you asked me.

This is not, in strictness, any statement that the paper was carefully read. The clear testimony is this: "The contract was handed to me, and I was asked to read it and give my opinion as to whether or not it was valid and binding. Mrs. Stewart said it was the thought of both that she would, in all probability, outlive him, and they wanted to know whether the contract would have the effect of giving her all their property in case of his death. And whether, in case of her death, it would have the same effect as to him. They expressed the desire that in case of death of either the other should have all the property which they owned at the time. After an examination I said to them that, in my judgment, it was a valid and binding contract, that I should advise that each make a will in favor of the other, and then, in my judgment, the contract and the wills would be binding and valid. Thereupon I prepared two wills, one for each. They were exactly alike, except that Mrs. Stewart made a special bequest of her watch to one of her nieces."

It will be noticed that nowhere in this statement does the witness assume to state the wording of the contract he examined. What he does say is that, in his present opinion, the paper examined by him and some provision which would effect that the survivor should have all "their" property, provided mutual wills were executed. He does not reveal a page in his memory which exhibits what the contract was, but gives his deduction from some things he does remember. His reasoning is that the parties desired a contract to a certain general effect; that he examined to see whether they had one and found that they had, if wills were added. His deduction is that the contract, when supplemented by the wills, would at the death of either give "their" property to the other. He could testify truthfully just as he does, if, in fact, the paper merely provided that partnership property in existence when one partner died should go to the other if the partnership had not been earlier dissolved. His testimony does not negative a provision making the contract effective only if death occurred by a stated time. It would seem certain that the witness did not read a contract such as is set out in the petition, because, if the contract examined was such a one as that, there was no occasion to say that the contract would be binding and valid if the parties made the will aforesaid, and that then, in his judgment, "the contract and the wills would be binding and valid." If the contract provided that all property owned by either partner or the partnership should go to the survivor, no matter when the death occurred, and no matter whether the partnership then still subsisted, there was no occasion to make a will. Such will gave less than such a contract. Such contract would give the survivor all. The will would give nothing but the individual property and the half interest in the partnership possessed by the decedent. The majority intimates that advising the wills may have been due to abundance of caution. The witness makes no such claim. He does not say he thought the contract would effect the purpose of the parties, but advised it would be safer to make wills and so save all doubt upon the point. He says the wills were necessary; in other words, that the contract did not contain the survivorship clause. His testimony is: "I said to them that, in my judgment, it was a valid, binding contract, and I would advise that she and her husband each make a will in favor of the other, and that then, in my judgment, the contract and the wills would be binding and valid."

And there is no room for urging mere abundance of caution. The majority not only concedes, but asserts, that the adviser was well skilled in the law. We are all agreed that the alleged contract was effective without the making of a will. No skilled lawyer would doubt it. As well say that proof that a deed was made is not weakened by the fact that a skilled lawyer, who claims he saw an effective deed, advised the grantee to take a mortgage on the same land from the same grantor. In the dissent by Mr. Justice Evans, addressed to the finding that the land given to Mrs. Stewart by her parents should go to plaintiff, the point I have just spoken to is most forcefully dealt with. It is there said: As to the right to include the land given the wife by her parents, that "rests wholly upon four little words," found in the alleged contract. "No attention was directed to particular words. . . . Nor did the proof offered purport to be anything but an approximation or substance of a contract. . . . The method adopted for the proof of the contents of the alleged lost contract was a very vague one. The purported copy set forth in the pleading was formulated by the pleader, not by the witness. . . . Is the evidence clear and convincing that these little words were contained in the alleged lost contract? . . . He also testified to his recollection of the contents of a paper read twenty years before, and which had been completely forgotten by him for many years. Can it be said that this general and approximate recollection by the witness of the contents of this paper is clear and convincing evidence that the paper contained the four words, . . . upon which the title to the 136 acres hangs? I cannot think so."

It seems to me the only flaw in the dissent is failing to hold that what is said of proof of part of plaintiff's claim applies with equal force to all of the claim. All, as well as part, rests upon the proof of the alleged contract.

V. Counsel for appellee evidently were of opinion that the testimony referred to would not meet the exigencies of this case. They did not stop with it. They brought the witness squarely to the vital point, and attempted to have him say that the paper examined by him contained the survivorship clause pleaded. Assume here that witness carefully read the paper on a single occasion, twenty years in the past. No matter how carefully it was read, that will not add to the clarity of the testimony which attempts to give the result of such reading. When the vital point was reached, and the witness was asked concerning the alleged survivorship clause, this occurred: He was asked to examine "that part of the first page of the petition closed in pencil line, and to state whether or not, as you recollect, the same is substantially a copy of the contract exhibited to you that day by Mrs. Stewart, and on which you gave her the advice you did and prepared the wills you have testified to preparing." He answered, over objection: "I could not, from recollection, give the contents of that paper, only in a general way. This paper agreed in the parenthesis on the first page of the original petition is as near my recollection of it as I can give now, and I think it is my opinion that the date '1882,' in this—I think it was a year earlier, 1881. Now I do not say that to be sure. I think it was 1881, from my recollection of the contract, and perhaps more from my knowledge and of their business and when they were doing business, and from the conversation there that day, and from that I think this is incorrect as to its date, although it may be correct as to its date, but the contents of this is as near my recollection of what that contract was as I can give it." (Ab. 81.)

This testimony does not appear in the majority opinion. If it be as much as referred to, it must be by the declaration that the contents of the paper "are as fully proven and as clearly made known as if the written instrument itself were before the court." In all deference, that is a rather strong indorsement of this loose, almost incoherent, testimony.

(a) This loose statement deals with an examination made twenty years before the day on which this testimony was given. To be sure, there is an attempt to strengthen the case by claiming an extraordinary memory for the witness. On page 77 of the abstract appears a claim by the witness to remember, twenty years back, where all the parties were sitting with reference to each other, and that he remembers plaintiff "had his feet upon the desk." If this supports the case of the plaintiff because it does disclose an extraordinary memory, that case is weakened because it appears also, and most strongly, that the witness lacked average memory. Eleven years before the day on which he testified, he drew and witnessed a will for Mrs. Stewart. On the day of the trial he remembered what occurred twenty years earlier, when he examined the alleged contract. But he had utterly forgotten the making of this will, which was nine years more recent than the examination of the contract. It may be said that it is not unusual to remember an event long past, and to forget one more recently occurring. As a rule, this is true only where senile dementia is indicated. Be that as it may, such an avoidance can hardly avail where the more recent event is highly impressive,—as much or more so than the more remote occurrence. I submit the witness does not claim to remember that the contract was the one pleaded. But if, as is insisted by the majority, he does remember the contents of the contract, from a single examination of the paper made twenty years before, he should not have forgotten the will in question, prepared nine years subsequent to the examination of the contract. The will is exceedingly elaborate and complicated, and must have required great care and preparation. What is more, if the witness remembered twenty years after the examination of the contract the terms of that contract, then he surely remembered those terms at a time nine years earlier. Grant that one might remember a contract twenty years after reading it, and not remember a will drawn by him eleven years after drawing it, I know of no peculiarity of the human mind by which one would remember the terms of a contract twenty years after reading the contract and have forgotten the same contract eleven years after reading it. If, then, the witness did remember the contract when he drew this will, it is inexplicable how he can have forgotten the will. As said, not only was it complicated and laborious, but it was an absolute repudiation of the contract. To follow the majority to the logical end, one must believe that the witness here had so good a memory as that one may depend on his narration of the terms of a contract read twenty years before, and so poor a memory that he has utterly forgotten the drawing and witnessing of the will which destroyed that contract which will he drew only eleven years after reading the contract. I do not care to elaborate the claim that he did forget the will. A reference to page 74 of the abstract will demonstrate that he did.

On one theory he had forgotten the contract when he prepared this will. If so, it is strange he remembered the same contract eight years later. If his testimony were clear, and it is not, the weight of it must be seriously affected by his not having recollected the contract in 1907 while professing to recollect it in 1915. On the other theory, if he did recollect the contract in 1907, when he drew what should certainly have impressed him as a breach of the contract, then the fact that he does not now remember the very making of such a will greatly detracts from any claim that may be made that his testimony establishes he recollected the material clause in the contract, in the year 1915. The majority does not mention the forgetting of the will. I do not overlook the witness says he has been pretty busy in the last thirty years, and has transacted a great deal of court business and written many instruments. If the fullness of his life explains why he has forgotten the making of this will, it also affords a reason for being skeptical as to his recollection of the contract. If a full professional life explains why in 1915 he had forgotten an impressive occurrence in 1907, that absorption is some reason for doubting that in 1915 he could recollect from one reading a paper read by him in 1896.

VI. It has, I think, been made to appear that Mr. Walker does not profess to remember the terms of the alleged contract. And up to this point his testimony is neither clear, convincing, nor satisfactory. I now come to a matter which comes near to demonstrating affirmatively that on September 26, 1913, only some fifteen months before he testified, he did not remember the alleged contract. And this point the majority gives practically no attention to. On that day he signed and had plaintiff verify an application reciting that said will had been filed for probate, and praying that same be admitted to probate. This will utterly disregarded the alleged contract. If he remembered the terms of that contract when he became a witness in January, 1915, he should have remembered them on September 26, 1913, when this application to probate was made. If he then remembered these terms, said application is inexplicable. If the terms of the contract were then remembered and are what plaintiff now asserts them to be, the maker of the will had no property to will. Why should one who knew the will was a piece of waste paper ask that it be probated? Why should he say to the court on oath of his client that "this applicant was the husband of decedent, and is interested in the estate and the settlement thereof?" If, by contract, he owned all the property devised by the will, what did it matter that he was the husband of deceased? The statement is, in effect, a declaration that his rights in the property arose from that relation, and not from contract. Why should one who knew that decedent had no estate, that there was no "property of the estate," and that he owned all that the will touched, say that "owing to the character of the property of the estate, the nature of the legacies in the will, and some other matters that may be involved in the estate, it is desired that all matters as to the probate of the will, and questions as to its being admitted to probate, be determined at an early date?"

Why should one who owned all the property described in the will say "that, so far as the applicant knows or is informed, there will not be any objections made to the probate of the will?" The testator having nothing to devise, how was it material to say that "the person named as executor in said will is not now a resident of Iowa?" Why, as late as October 24, 1913, was there a contest made against this executor serving, on the ground that because a nonresident he could not manage the estate properly?

When the executor resisted, giving as one reason that testatrix intended to enlarge her legacy by the fees due an executor, why was it answered that the legacy as found in the will was all that testatrix "intended to leave that branch of the family?" Why should Mr. Walker testify that he advised this application in order "to have the property taken care of?" If it was remembered that the contract made plaintiff owner, it did not matter what ability to manage that property the executor named in the will had or did not have; it did not matter what intent there was to enlarge his legacy. No application that the probate court care for the property was necessary. The owner of the property could demand it and care for it himself. There was no need for the owner to have the court act because of "the character of the property of the estate." This owner had no interest "in the estate and the settlement thereof." As to him, there was no estate to settle and "no property of the estate." It is evident that, a short time before the petition in this suit was filed, neither Mr. Walker nor the plaintiff remembered any contract such as is now being asserted. Plaintiff pleads that decedent "had no right or interest in any of the property, either real or personal, which in what is termed her last will she purports to bequeath or devise, by which she could deprive this plaintiff of the sole possession and absolute ownership of the same at her decease." In second amendment to petition it is pleaded that all the property attempted to be willed was accumulated "under the terms of said contract." This was evidently not remembered when said probate proceedings were conducted a short time before the petition in this suit was filed. The only possible explanation is that while witness remembered in January, 1915, that there was such a contract as is now asserted, he did not remember it on September 26, 1913, and on October 24, 1913. But such explanation comes very near to destroying the standing of the memory of the witness.

I adopt the statements of Mr. Justice Evans as to the inconsistent conduct exhibited in the application to probate and the contest on who should be appointed executor, but am unable to see why that inconsistency operates only against giving plaintiff a certain part of the property. It seems to me it is as much and as good reason for denying him all of it.

(a) But I must not overlook that the majority attempts an explanation. It is that the probate proceedings were initiated because "it was his duty under the law to file the will with the clerk for probate. There is a penalty for suppressing it. Code 1897, § 5043." That statute provides a severe penalty if one having in his possession or under his control any last will "wilfully suppress, secrete, deface, or destroy the same . . . with intent to injure or defraud any devisee, legatee, or other person." How could this statute touch the plaintiff or his counsel after plaintiff had promptly filed said will with the clerk? What penalty does it threaten that compelled the application to probate aforesaid? The statute does not explain.

(b) There is still another time at which it was forgotten that plaintiff owned this property. He was served with formal notice to make an election under the statute. Everything indicates that the witness Walker drew the resulting declination to take under the will. The statute has, of course, no application where the deceased spouse leaves no property. It is therefore undeniable that a statute election to take under the will is a solemn admission that the testator owns what the will devises. A declination under the statute, as much as does a taking, admits that testator owns such property, because the declination works an election to take, instead of what is given by the will, such part of said property as is given by statute.

VII. The witness is competent, but not disinterested. He states laboriously what he did and did not do about drawing pleadings and aiding in trial. But he studiously refrains from saying that he has no financial interest growing out of the fact that his partner is conducting this litigation. The case is fairly within State v. Jensen, 178 Iowa, 1098, L.R.A.1917C, 455, 160 N. W. 832, where a partner was disqualified from helping prosecute an indictment because of a civil suit carried on by the other partner.

VIII. Some things shown by the evidence tend to disprove rather than to prove that the claimed contract ever existed. One alleged provision of it is that the husband "is to transact and do all the business and sign the firm name E. A. Stewart to any and all papers necessary." If there was such contract, why did husband and wife affix their individual signatures to the paper selling the partnership store, —or to the contract to buy the Gwinup farm?

The alleged contract contemplates inevitably that the time of the husband belonged to the joint venture, and the majority opinion asserts he so devoted it. Why, then, the testimony that he did a large separate business?

There is testimony that when the husband effected insurance he did so in the name of the wife. If he had the interest he now claims, he endangered the insurance by obtaining it in that manner.

Why did plaintiff respond to a formal notice requiring him to elect, by declining to take under the will? The will gave him a life estate in lands which, under the contract claimed by him, he owned in fee. The natural answer by the possessor of such a contract would have been a statement that he had no occasion to elect whether or not to take under the will, because he owned the property attempted to be disposed of by the will.

(a) The plaintiff as a witness was asked—

Q. Now, why did you have these deeds all in her name?

He answered: Well, the reason I put it in her name was because it was property we wanted to keep for ourselves. I was always sickly, and if anything happened to me she would have no trouble afterwards. You see in the Alcorn affair they had robbed the widow there, and we had no children, and we fixed it so when I was gone there would be nothing to bother the woman. That was my reason.

When asked whether he recollected why he put "the title of the Kansas land in the name of E. A. Stewart," he answered: "It was because it was trading land and I was not expecting to keep it."

How unnatural all these answers are in view of the asserted contract! How natural it would have been to answer: "I did these things because the contract I am seeking to enforce required me to put the title to lands bought in the name of my wife."

(b) All the testimony, including Mr. Walker's, agrees that Mrs. Stewart was a conscientious, God-fearing woman. It is inconceivable that such a woman would have made the will she made, knowing that she had made such a contract as is asserted. Something is claimed for the wills as being a construction of what was intended by the contract. If the contract was worded as claimed, it needed no construction. But if construction is the theory, an honest woman construed it when she made her last will, which repudiates such a contract as plaintiff asserts.

(c) The contract is unnatural and unreasonable. It is claimed to have been made with one who had just left an earlier partnership as an insolvent, with judgments hanging over his head. The enterprise required a capital of some $215, which the husband borrowed by having the father of his wife sign the note. Past treatment of Mrs. Stewart by her parents made it reasonably plain that she would receive a large property from them. It is testified to without dispute that she was a capable business woman. Yet, the claim asserted is that in this situation she made an agreement that everything she might ever own should belong to her husband after she died, and that even what her parents might give could not be willed to those of her blood, to the grandchildren of the donors. Something is claimed for the love of the wife for the husband. If that was strong enough to prove that she desired to give him what her parents gave her, at the expense of the only grandchildren of those parents, how can it be explained that she made a will recognizing the natural claims of these grandchildren?

IX. I am constrained to dissent from the holding of the majority that the contents of the contract "are proved by the testimony of Mr. Walker. . . . Its contents are as fully proven and as clearly made known as if the written instrument itself were before the court." Nor can I agree that the probate proceedings are "only a circumstance tending to show, if anything, that he consented to the revocation of the original reciprocal will, . . . and it has no such tendency under the record in this case." I think that these proceedings and all else which has so far been adverted to work that plaintiff has failed to establish his case by that amount and quality of evidence which the law requires.

It would be affectation to go deeply into authority on the degree and quality of proof required. For manifest reasons sounding in public policy the evidence by which one person takes the estate standing in the name of another must be clear, satisfying, convincing,—practically overwhelming. See Baker v. Vining, 30 Me. 121, 50 Am. Dec. 617; Mullong v. Schneider, 155 Iowa, 12, 134 N. W. 957; Andrew v. Andrew, 114 Iowa, 526, 87 N. W. 494, and cases cited; Malley v. Malley, 121 Iowa, 237, 96 N. W. 751, and cases cited; Stiles v. Breed, 151 Iowa, 86, 130 N. W. 376; Potter v. Potter, 185 Iowa, 559, 170 N. W. 773, and Melin's Case, — Iowa, —, 171 N. W. 20. If the claim were that the alleged contract was oral instead of the claim that it was written and has been lost, appellee would be confronted with the requirement of the statute on express trusts and those of the Statute of Frauds. See Edson v. Parsons, 155 N. Y. 555, 50 N. E. 265; McClanahan v. McClanahan, 77 Wash. 138, 137 Pac. 479, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 461. Where the law fears perjury will be committed unless there be a duly signed writing, it may well be said that the law is hostile to oral proof that the contract was in writing and has been lost. The danger of perjury is as imminent in one case as the other. While I do not claim the law will refuse evidence of the contents of a contract which must be made in writing where it is shown that the contract has been lost, I do say that the policy underlying the requirement that the contract shall be in writing emphasizes that the proof of the contents to such lost writing must be clear and overwhelming. See Re Thorman, 162 Iowa, 239, 144 N. W. 7, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 484, and cases cited.

Speaking to the farm given the wife by her parents, the dissent by Mr. Justice Evans says: "I think that the evidence in that respect has much more corroboration in the circumstances, as well as in its reasonableness and probability, than does the evidence pertaining to the individual property of the wife. I cannot avoid doubt of its sufficiency even in this respect. I am not disposed, however, to interpose my mere doubt as a basis of dissent on this point from the settled judgment of the majority."

This indicates upon just what that "settled judgment" rests. The basis seems to be that doubts of the sufficiency of the testimony are not sufficiently vigorous. The consultation gave me the impression that the claim of contract was sustained because, while the testimony for plaintiff was not strong, it had not been demonstrated that the asserted contract had not been made. As I view it, this exhibits a mental twist. Such a contract cannot be held to be established unless the testimony is practically overwhelming and clearly satisfies the judicial mind of its existence. It is not enough that the claim of the plaintiff is possible or even probable. It is not enough that the testimony for the defendant has not satisfied the court the alleged contract was not made. If, when the testimony is all considered, the mind of the judge is not abidingly satisfied that the claims of the plaintiff are made out, then his claim should be rejected.

We said in Stennett v. Stennett, 174 Iowa, 435, 156 N. W. 407, that to establish such a contract "the proof must be clear, unequivocal, and definite," and held that the proof there did not meet this standard. Many inconsistencies and contradictions found present in this case controlled in the Stennett Case. It being found here that the witness is skilled in the law, unusual clarity was demanded.

Insistence upon this burden will, in individual cases, work hardship, but not a greater hardship than to deny all relief because the contract was not made in writing originally, even though there be irrefragable proof that such contract was orally entered into. The occasional hardship will be found to arise because of negligence, and such isolated suffering is more than compensated by general safety afforded by insistence upon strict proof. I say, in all respectfulness, that an affirmance here will tend to prove the statement in Graves v. Bonness, 97 Minn. 282, 107 N. W. 164, that it has been charged "American appellate courts rule on such questions to sustain or reverse the trial courts because of convictions as to the merits of the case, or for other reasons which they are unwilling or unable to express," and say, further, that the majority opinion will either upset elementary rules of law of evidence, or else be a decision that will remain in the books without either being followed or being expressly repudiated; that it will accrete the army of judicial "snags," and of cases that are overruled by being "distinguished!"

Division two.

The plaintiff can recover nothing in this suit, even if he proved the existence and the contents of the alleged contract. I have exhibited the probate proceedings as an evidentiary factor bearing on the weight to be given to the testimony of Mr. Walker. I now enlarge, and assert that these proceedings are more than a piece of evidence on that point, and that they estop plaintiff from now asserting that he, and not testatrix, owned the property described in the will and in the petition.

As to this point the majority says: "There is no estoppel shown in this case, no prejudice resulted to any of the contesting parties as a consequence of the silence or even active participation of the plaintiff in the probate of this will."

It is to be gathered from the opinion that there is no estoppel, because the admission of the will to probate did not settle who owned the property described in the will, and that the admission was no benefit to plaintiff and no injury to the appellants. Grant that. That such want of advantage and of prejudice, respectively, is fatal to an estoppel in pais, is true. But the majority overlooks that the estoppel here is one that the books classify as "estoppel by conduct in court." In such estoppel the element of prejudice is supplied by the fact that it would discredit the administration of justice if one were allowed to assert a thing in court in aid of an object then being promoted, and later to aid a differing object by an assertion contrary to the first. See Bigelow, Estoppel, 6th ed. p. 783. I contend that it is overwhelmingly settled that, on estoppel by inconsistent conduct in court, it is immaterial that neither loss nor gain has resulted from the change in position.

It is hornbook law that one may not make a solemn assertion in court, then having knowledge of all the facts, and afterwards obtain relief by the assertion of something which is so inconsistent with the position first taken as to destroy that position. See Tone Bros. v. Shankland, 110 Iowa, 528, 81 N. W. 789; Clough's Case, L. R. 7 Exch. 36, 41 L. J. Exch. N. S. 17, 25 L. T. N. S. 708, 20 Week. Rep. 189; Butler v. Hildreth, 5 Met. 49; McCormick v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. 120 Iowa, 593, 95 N. W. 181; Theusen v. Bryan, 113 Iowa, 502, 85 N. W. 802; Oliver v. Monona County, 117 Iowa, 43, 90 N. W. 510; Powers v. Iowa Glue Co. 183 Iowa, 1082, 168 N. W. 326; Sloanaker v. Howerton, 182 Iowa, 487, 166 N. W. 78; Kirkhart v. Roberts, 123 Iowa, 139, 98 N. W. 562; Kelly v. Norwich F. Ins. Co. 82 Iowa, 142, 47 N. W. 986; and Colton's Case, 143 Iowa, 366, 368, 122 N. W. 152, wherein is quoted with approval the statement of Lord Kenyon that "a man shall not be permitted to blow hot and cold with reference to the same transaction, or insist at different times on the truth of each of two conflicting allegations, according to the promptings of his private interests."

We said in Thorson's Case, 107 Iowa, 50, 77 N. W. 510, that no suit-or shall be allowed to invoke the aid of the courts on contradictory principles of redress upon one and the same line of facts. In Sioux City v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 129 Iowa, 694, 702, 113 Am. St. Rep. 501, 106 N. W. 186, we condemn the assuming of "antagonistic positions in litigation with reference to the same property, or the same . . . state of facts." We said in Seeley's Case, 180 Iowa, 632, 114 Am. St. Rep. 452, 105 N. W. 382, that it is not essential to the application of this principle that there shall be technically an election of remedies, "and no action in court need be taken as the basis for such an election. Any unequivocal act with knowledge of the fraud, whether in court or not, is sufficient." And this estoppel prevails as well on plain inferences from the facts in hand as on the facts themselves. Bigelow, Estoppel, 6th ed. 788, citing Ormes v. Dauchy, 82 N. Y. 443, 37 Am. Rep. 583; East Hampton v. Kirk, 68 N. Y. 459, 464.

Assent to a particular proceeding in court, if given with knowledge of the facts, is conclusive. Bigelow, Estoppel, 6th ed. p. 788, citing Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Marcott, 41 Mich. 433, 2 N. W. 795. It is all summed up in Bigelow, Estoppel, 6th ed. 783, by a statement that it may be laid down as a broad proposition that one who, without mistake of fact, has deliberately taken a particular position in the course of any litigation, must forever act consistently with that position.

What if obtaining the admission to probate gave plaintiff nothing? Even if the position first taken gets a party nothing of value, how can that affect the rule, which is that one may not get something in court which would give him something by making an assertion which is contrary to a position taken earlier. The rule has often been applied where nothing was gotten by the first position. Kearney Mill & Elevator Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 97 Iowa, 724, 59 Am. St. Rep. 434, 66 N. W. 1059; Elliott v. Merchants & B. F. Ins. Co. 109 Iowa, 39, 79 N. W. 452. A party has been estopped because of a position taken in an action which he discontinued by dismissal without trial (Kearney Mill & Elevator Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 97 Iowa, 726, 59 Am. St. Rep. 434, 66 N. W. 1059); and where all he got by taking the earlier position was a judgment void for want of jurisdiction (Clay Dist. Twp. v. Buchanan Independent Dist. 69 Iowa, 90, 91, 28 N. W. 449; Shank v. Mohler, 93 Iowa, 273, 34 L.R.A. 161, 57 Am. St. Rep. 274, 61 N. W. 981; Ellis's Case, 61 Iowa, 646, 17 N. W. 28; Israel's Case, 15 Colo. 147, 10 L.R.A. 693, 22 Am. St. Rep. 381, 25 Pac. 81; Nield v. Burton, 49 Mich. 53, 12 N. W. 906). The making the matter turn on want of prejudice wholly disregards all applicable law.

The election "cannot be withdrawn, though it has not been acted upon by another by any change of position." Kearney Mill & Elevator Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 97 Iowa, 725, 66 N. W. 1059, citing Bigelow, Estoppel, 673. See Bigelow, 6th ed. 733; Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Norton, 96 U. S. 234, 24 L. ed. 689; Ward's Case, 4 Best & S. 355, 122 Eng. Reprint, 492; Campbell v. Kaufman Mill. Co. 42 Fla. 328, 29 So. 435; O'Bryan Bros. v. Glenn Bros. 91 Tenn. 106, 30 Am. St. Rep. 862, 17 S. W. 1030. Where one claims she dismissed her suit without prejudice, she is estopped to claim in the supreme court that there was a final judgment to be reviewed, and it is not material that elements essential to an estoppel in pais are lacking, or that the taking of the contradictory position has worked no prejudice. Mollring v. Mollring, 184 Iowa, 464, 167 N. W. 525. Where defendant makes a special appearance, and challenges the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that notice was served on an improper person, if effective service is subsequently had, it may not thereafter plead in abatement on the ground that the action was prematurely brought because the first notice was binding and effective; and it is held the position may not so be changed, even if the original assertion to the contrary has caused the plaintiff no injury. Hueston v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. 184 Iowa, 408, 168 N. W. 150. Though a delivery of a shipment by a carrier is unauthorized, it is ratified if the shipper thereafter, with knowledge of all the facts, demand payment of the price from the buyer. And such demand estops him to sue the carrier for conversion, although his subsequent taking of this contrary position has worked no injury. Midland Linseed Co. v. American Liquid Fireproofing Co. 183 Iowa, 1046, 166 N. W. 574, 575.

I conclude that the disposition of the point by the majority on the ground that appellant suffered no prejudice is a disposition upon a ground which is not in the least controlling, and is utterly untenable.

II. The will made by the wife in favor of plaintiff was made on May 1, 1896, and after the date of the alleged contract. The deed from the parents to Mrs. Stewart was a gift, and it was made later than said will was, on December 26, 1896. Abstract, 100, 216. The contract on its face is a partnership contract. Throughout all the pleadings it is treated as being such a contract. The opinion so treats it, time and again. The will cannot be said to have contemplated devising this gift from parent to child, because the gift was not yet made. If the partnership contract is carried beyond disposing of all property accumulated by the partnership, then the partnership contract diverts the farm given to Mrs. Stewart from those of the blood to a stranger to the blood. In other words, the partnership contract is claimed to cancel the will of Mrs. Stewart, by which she attempts to pass the land given to her by her parents to the only grandchildren of those parents. A court of equity should not strain to give the contract such effect. And the least that should be done is to construe the alleged contract to cover nothing but property accumulated by the partnership, as such. On this point the dissent of Justice Evans covers the ground fully and most ably.

III. One statement by the majority is that "plaintiff, however, does not rely on a claim of partnership as a basis for the relief sought in this case." In the light of the pleadings, of plaintiff's own testimony, and of the relief sought and given, this is a most remarkable pronouncement. If language can express a thing aptly, this record and the majority opinion overflow with words that can have but the one meaning, to wit, that the parties contracted to and did form a partnership; that same accumulated property; that such contract partnership subsisted until the death of the wife dissolved it; that it then possessed the property in question; and that plaintiff demands all of such property, because the terms of the partnership contract give him all of the property if the partnership is still in existence when the other partner dies. In other words, the entire framework and the theory of the case is that the parties remained in the contract partnership until death dissolved that partnership, and that, while without the contract the survivor could not have all the partnership property, by the terms of the contract he gets all such property, provided the partnership subsists until death dissolves it and leaves the claimant the survivor. It is not a suit based upon the fact that the parties were once in partnership, dissolved it, and then formed a partnership other than the one formed by said contract, or that they formed a trust by investing the money of the dissolved contract partnership in the name of one of the parties. It is a suit demanding that the survivor have all the property because the partnership subsisted until Mrs. Stewart died, and that therefore the condition precedent of the contract had transpired. I invite an examination of the petition and the decree and of the testimony of Mr. Stewart, and am sure that thereupon it must be found that in this suit plaintiff can recover nothing unless it is made to appear that the partnership continued until it was dissolved by the death of Mrs. Stewart. If it was dissolved by something other than that, no rights accrue under the contract, whatever rights the plaintiff may have. I submit it is absolutely proved that the partnership was dissolved years before Mrs. Stewart died.

Nothing appears in the alleged contract to compel the partnership to continue until one of the partners die. See 2 Lindley, Partn. p. 571. The partnership was dissolved about September 25, 1894, by a sale of the entire stock and the fixtures. The contract expressly provides that the partnership shall be one conducting a "general store." Necessarily such a sale of stock and fixtures terminated such a partnership. It is well settled that "a sale which practically includes all the property used by a firm in carrying on its business, whether made by the firm or a member thereof, operates as a dissolution thereof."

See note found on page 416 of 69 Am. St. Rep., citing the following authorities: Patterson v. Hare, 4 App. Div. 319, 320, 38 N. Y. Supp. 565; Pennville Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Thomas, 21 Ind. App. 1, 51 N. E. 351; Whitton v. Smith, Freem. Ch. (Miss.) 231; Smith v. Vanderburg, 46 Ill. 34; Thompson v. Bowman, 6 Wall. 316, 18 L. ed. 736; Blaker v. Sands, 29 Kan. 551; Dellapiazza v. Foley, 112 Cal. 380, 44 Pac. 727.

It follows plaintiff should fail in this suit because, even if the alleged contract were proved, such contract defeats the suit brought to enforce it. The contract relief is due only if death dissolved the partnership. Here it appears as matter of law that it was dissolved by act of the partners in selling out. The contract gives property to the partner who shall survive the other,—to the surviving partner in the contract partnership. There can be no such surviving partner if there be no partnership existing when one of the parties to the contract dies. It follows inevitably that the contract deals with nothing save property that may be owned by the contract partnership when death dissolves it. In a suit upon such contract it is fatal that the contract partnership was dissolved before either party to the contract died.

I am unable to agree to the statement in the dissent of Justice Evans that the selling of the store "was not necessarily a dissolution of the partnership." So to declare overlooks that the contract was for a partnership in a mercantile store. Of necessity, selling that store and its stock, fixtures, and good will ended the contract enterprise. No doubt, investment of what was realized from operating and from selling the store might become the capital of a new partnership or trust property. No store business was engaged in after the sale. And whatever rights might accrue after the sale dissolved the contract partnership, they do not rest on the contract to become partners in the store business that was sold. The sale ended the contract business and the contract.

IV. It is defended that if the contract was made it was with purpose to hinder and delay the creditors of plaintiff. I have to say there is no reasonable explanation of why the contract was entered into if that was not the purpose. Just before its alleged making, plaintiff had retired from a concern that had become insolvent, and there were unsatisfied judgments against him, and he was insolvent. The contract was not recorded. It was never mentioned or shown, except that thirteen years after it was made it was read by Mr. Walker,—and as to showing it to him, it was no doubt thought that the exhibition was a privileged communication. Plaintiff made no claim of rights under the contract, and his wife asserted that he had none. No proper reason can be imagined for covering the half interest of the plaintiff with a firm name that was the name of the wife. Such firm name concealed that plaintiff had any interest which creditors could subject. It told the world that the wife owned all. No purpose but a covinous one explains putting the lands in the name of the wife. The contract stipulation that lands should so be held does not explain. The contract was at an end when most of the property was acquired. Of course I agree with the statement of the dissent of Justice Evans that defendants had the burden of proving the alleged fraudulent purpose. But I submit they have proven it. It must usually be done by circumstantial evidence. It is, here, and the evidence exhibits most of the main badges of fraud. I am unable to agree that the evidence "simply is that the fact of partnership was not generally known." At the least the evidence establishes an intent to hinder and delay creditors.

20 A.L.R.—82.

V. Little can be added to what Mr. Justice Evans says on the effect of § 3154 of the Code. The only criticism I can make is to say that his reasoning calls for his applying the ban of the statute to all the property rather than to a part of it. The statute provides that neither spouse has any interest in the property of the other which can be made the subject of contract between them. This contract clearly contemplates that any lands or other property either party might acquire in his own right should be transferred to the partnership by death of the survivor. This amounts to an advance agreement for the transfer of such interest as was owned by reason of being a spouse. To put it mildly, it was an advance relinquishment of dower rights to the partnership, and ultimately to the surviving partner. Be that as it may, there is an express provision that the survivor should take all the property and in consideration pay the debts of both the partnership and of the deceased partner. This might easily become an advance agreement that rights of the spouse exempt from the payment of debts should be exhausted by the paying of debts.

I would reverse.

Evans, J., dissenting in part:

I. I cannot wholly agree with the majority opinion. The property involved in the controversy falls into two classes: (1) The alleged partnership property; (2) the property acquired by the wife, independently of the partnership, from her parents in the distribution of their estate.

I do not think that these properties upon this record can be deemed to fall into hotchpot, nor that the facts of this record decisive as to one are decisive as to the other. The contract pleaded was as follows: "Contract entered into this ——— day of February, 1882, by and between Emma A. Stewart and S. M. Stewart, both of Van Buren county, Iowa, witnesseth: That said parties have agreed to start a general store under the firm name of E. A. Stewart, in which each party is to be an equal partner. S. M. Stewart is to transact and do all the business, sign the firm name of E. A. Stewart to any and all papers necessary; and all the property accumulated, purchased, and owned by either party to be in the firm name of E. A. Stewart. Both parties to use any money they need, and at the death of either party the one living shall fulfil all contracts, pay all debts, and have all property left or owned by either party, or in the firm name."

This alleged contract was not produced at the trial; neither was a written copy of it offered; nor did the proof offered purport to be anything but an approximation or substance of the contract. It will be noted that the claim of the appellee to the 136 acres of land acquired by his wife from her parents as a distribution of their estate rests wholly upon four little words which we have italicized above. If these words were eliminated there would be nothing left to the appellee as a basis for any claim to the ownership of such land. Is the evidence clear and convincing that these little words were contained in the alleged lost contract? The method adopted for the proof of the contents of the alleged lost contract was a very vague one. The purported copy set forth in the pleading was formulated by the pleader, not by the witness.

This pleading being presented to the witness Walker, the following question and answer appears in the record:

Q. I will ask you to examine that portion of the first page of the original petition in this case, and which we have inclosed in pencil lines, and state whether or not, as you recollect it, that is substantially a copy of the contract that was exhibited to you that day by Mrs. Stewart, and on which you gave her the advice you did and prepared the wills which you have testified to have prepared.

A. I could not from my recollection give the contents of that paper, only in a general way. This paper agreed (inclosed) in the parenthesis on the first page of the original petition, is as near my recollection of it as I can give now; and I think it is my opinion that the date 1882 in this—I think it was a year earlier, 1881. Now I do not say that to be sure. I think it was 1881, from my recollection of the contract, and perhaps more from my knowledge and of their business, and from the conversation there that day; and from that I think this is incorrect as to its date, although it may be correct as to its date; but the contents of this is as near my recollection of what that contract was as I can give it.

A similar question was put to the plaintiff as a witness, which resulted in a similar answer. This is the entire evidence on the question of the actual contents of the lost paper. No attention was directed to particular words. The witness Walker frankly concedes: "I could not from my recollection give the contents of that paper only in a general way. This paper is as near my recollection of it as I can give now. . . . This is as near my recollection of what that contract was as I can give it."

He was testifying to his recollection of the contents of a paper read twenty years before, and which had been completely forgotten by him for many years. Can it be said that this general and approximate recollection of the witness of the contents

Evidence—
contents of lost paper—
sufficiency.

of this paper is clear and convincing evidence that the paper contained the four words above italicized and upon which the title to the 136 acres hangs? I cannot think so.

II. If we had the exact terms of the alleged contract before us, it might present a question of construction. If the exact terms were those set forth by the pleader, it would present such a question of construction. I am of the opinion that the contract presented by the pleader should be construed as referring solely to the fruits of the partnership. It will be noted that the subject-matter of that contract is the partnership affairs. Primarily it is a contract of partnership whereby the parties propose to engage in business and whereby they declare each other's rights in the fruits to be realized. Under the evidence they did engage in partnership upon a capital of $215. The earnings of this partnership while they were engaged in the mercantile business amounted to several thousand dollars, and this was invested in lands, title to which was taken in the name of one of the partners. Assuming, therefore, that this contract extends in its application to all such fruits of the partnership, is it not a forced construction thereof to say that it includes also matters that were entirely foreign to such partnership and foreign to the contemplation of the parties at the time that the contract was entered into?

If it be thought that the question of construction is close as to the four words referred to, then the doubt ought to be solved against the appellee, because of the great weakness of his proof that the particular words which create the doubt were contained in the contract at all.

III. I think also that Code § 3154 is an impediment in the way of appellee to claim that the contract can operate upon the individual property of the wife acquired independently of the partnership. Under this section it is provided that neither husband nor wife has any interest in the property of the other which can be the subject of contract between them. The majority opinion has dealt with this question rather briefly, and has considered the application of the rule only as to partnership property. We have held that husband and wife may enter into partnership and that they may contribute their individual property to the partnership. We have held, also, that the necessary effect of such a course is to withhold the inchoate right of dower in the partnership property, and that the entire partnership property thus contributed becomes liable to the call of the partnership. Baker v. Syfritt, 147 Iowa, 49, 125 N. W. 998. I am not, therefore, claiming that § 3154 is an impediment to the operation of this contract between husband and wife in so far as it is construed to apply only to partnership property. I claim only that it is an impediment to an application of the contract to the individual property of the wife, treating the contract, as appellee does, as the equivalent of an agreement by the wife to make a will conveying all her property to her husband subject to her debts. The completion of such an agreement depends upon the valid acceptance thereof by the husband. An acceptance by the husband would mean nothing else than that, after the death of the testatrix, he would waive his right to dower and would take under the will, even though all the property might be absorbed in the payment of the debts of the testatrix. Of course, on first impression, it would seem that where a husband or wife leaves all his or her property to the surviving spouse, the benefits are one-sided and operate necessarily to the advantage of the surviving spouse. But such is not necessarily the case. To put the question briefly, could a husband and wife enter into a contract during their lifetime whereby the husband agreed to leave all the property to his wife subject to his debts, and whereby she agreed to accept under such will and to waive dower? It might appear at the time of the making of such contract greatly advantageous to the wife, in that the property of the husband was greatly in excess of his indebtedness. Can the wife elect in her lifetime to waive dower and take under the will of her husband? Can she make a binding contract in advance of the death of her husband, to so elect after his death? Does not this section of the statute say in express terms that this right is not the subject of contract between them? Indeed, we have so held. Berry v. Donald, 168 Iowa, 744, 150 N. W. 1048. The prohibition of the statute, if it applies at all, necessarily applies to advantageous contracts as well as to disadvantageous ones. The application of this statute therefore furnishes a further reason why the contract should be construed, as I have already contended, to apply only to partnership property.

IV. I think that there is much in the conduct of the plaintiff pertaining to the probate of the will and the appointment of an executor which was wholly inconsistent with his present claim that he already owned all the property devised in the will. I can see how he might have claimed the ownership of some of the property and yet claim the benefit of the devise in the will as to other property; but his conduct was wholly inconsistent with his present position that he held all the devised property, by a superior right. He obtained the will from its custodian and presented it to the court with verified petition for its probate. He asked and obtained the appointment of an executor other than the one named in the will. The executor thus appointed upon his application was Tobin. White, who was named executor in the will, appeared and showed his competency to act, and asked that the appointment of Tobin be set aside, and that he be appointed pursuant to the terms of the will. This application by White was successfully contested by the plaintiff. He had not at that time disclosed his present contention. If he had, he would have appeared without direct interest either in the probate of the will or in the appointment of the executor. In contesting the removal of Tobin he was simply saving his antagonist. He had no other interest in the question except the selection of an antagonist. It is said that he was bound to file the will under the mandate of the statute. This mandate applies to the custodian of the will. The plaintiff was not the custodian. He obtained it from the custodian. He had a right to return it to him. In applying for immediate probate of the will he averred that there would be no contest thereon. The opinion treats this conduct on the part of the plaintiff as a mere question of estoppel in pais. It is not such. It has to do with that rule enforced by the courts, that a litigant who, by assuming a certain attitude, obtains orders of the court in furtherance of his claim, may not thereafter adopt the contrary attitude and obtain relief inconsistent with his first attitude.

V. I think the evidence is sufficient to establish the contract of partnership between husband and wife. As against this it is claimed that the contract, if entered into, was covinous, and therefore void, as tending to defeat the creditors of Stewart. Stewart was insolvent. The burden of proving its alleged character as a covinous contract is upon the appellants. They introduced evidence that the money for starting the business was furnished by the wife. This is their contention in argument. It is quite destructive to the charge of covin.

If she furnished the money for the capital of the partnership, no fraud was perpetrated upon the creditors so far as the formation of the partnership was concerned. As to whether, notwithstanding this fact Stewart may have intended to conceal from his creditors his profits earned in the firm, a somewhat different question is presented. The evidence does not deal with it except as inference might be drawn from the circumstances. The fact remains that the interest of Stewart was subject to the appropriation of creditors at any time. The existence of the partnership was not wrongful. Nor is there any evidence that the fact of partnership was actively concealed or denied by Stewart at any time. The evidence on this question simply is that the fact of partnership was not generally known. I think, therefore, that the charge of covin is not sustained. I do not think that the fact that the parties sold their store in 1894 was necessarily a dissolution of the partnership. It was entirely competent for the parties to continue in partnership to handle the proceeds of the sale of the partnership property. If they invested the same in the 196-acre farm and took the title in the name of one of the partners, I see no reason why the farm should not be deemed partnership property. It is urged that, the husband having negotiated for this farm and taken the title in the name of his wife, Emma A. Stewart, and not in the partnership name, E. A. Stewart, this created the presumption of gift to the wife. It was not necessary that the title should be taken in the name of the firm. Indeed, we should take judicial notice that it is quite customary for a partnership to take title to real estate in the name of a partner rather than in the name of the firm, in that it often avoids complexities in the record chain. This is not a case where a husband bought land with his own funds and took the title in the name of his wife. In such a case the presumption of gift would obtain, as contended by appellants. It is a case where a partnership, through one of its members, bought land with the partnership funds and took the title in the name of the other partner. It is universally held in such a case that the grantee thus named is presumed to hold the title in trust for the partnership. I reach the conclusion, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to impress a trust upon this farm as being held for the partnership, and that this is so also as to other lands paid for with partnership funds, including the Todd-Buckles lands and some town lots. I see no legal obstacle to the indefinite continuation of this partnership in the management of the farm business. This conclusion would entitle the plaintiff to one half of all such property as owner and to one half of the other half as surviving husband of his wife. I think he would be entitled to relief along that line. If, however, he is permitted to take all of the alleged partnership property it must be by virtue of the terms of the contract pleaded. Can the contents of the contract be deemed proved to the extent of its application to the partnership property? I think that the evidence in that respect has much more corroboration in the circumstances, as well as in its reasonableness and probability, than does the evidence pertaining to the individual property of the wife. I cannot avoid doubt of its sufficiency even in this respect. I am not disposed, however, to interpose my mere doubt as a basis of dissent on this point from the settled judgment of the majority.

I dissent, therefore, from the opinion of the majority as regards the 136-acre farm acquired by Mrs. Stewart from her parents in the distribution of their estate. In other respects I concur.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, the following Per Curiam response was handed down December 16, 1920 (190 Iowa, 296, 327, 180 N. W. 146):

Upon further examination of the record, we have reached the conclusion that the contract entered into by Stewart and his wife should be construed as one of partnership, and as having relation only to property which might be invested therein in the prosecution of its business, and the profits, together with its earnings, investments, and to profits derived therefrom. In this view, the farm of 136 acres acquired by Mrs. Stewart from her parents in the distribution of their estate would not be included in that passing under the contract to Stewart upon her death, but would descend under the general law or will, but what disposition shall be made thereof is not adjudicated in this action. The reasons for this conclusion appear in the first two paragraphs of Judge Evans's dissent to the main opinion. With this modification, the petition for rehearing is overruled, and the decree as so modified is affirmed.

Salinger, J., dissenting:

While I am with the result, I am of opinion the steps that lead to that result demand more than is now given. My reasons for that position are fully stated in the dissent I have heretofore filed. I call special attention to that part of the dissent which points out that Mr. Walker never claimed to remember the contents of the alleged lost contract, and that he discloses a memory which would make it impossible for him to remember it. Also call attention to the conduct utterly inconsistent with the claim now being advanced and sustained; to the fact that Mr. Walker advised the contract would be binding if wills were made, while, if the contract is as plaintiff claims, it was valid and binding without the making of wills. I call attention to the last-quoted paragraph in the left-hand column of page 628, 173 N. W., to the last paragraph on the left-hand side of page 629, and the remainder of that page to the first paragraph on page 630, and the remainder of that column to paragraph "a" in the right-hand column of page 630, and the first paragraph on page 631. I insist once more that the present holding destroys the rule that claims such as this must be established by evidence that is conclusive and overwhelming. I wish to specially emphasize my opposition to the pronouncement: "There is no estoppel shown in this case, no prejudice resulted to any of the contesting parties as a consequence of the silence or even active participation of the plaintiff in the probate of this will."

In my judgment this overrules an unbroken line of cases to the effect that as to inconsistent conduct in court the rules governing an estoppel in pais do not obtain, and that such inconsistencies cannot be permitted, even though no prejudice has resulted, and though no one has changed his position. The cases so holding are set out on page 633. I wish to emphasize further that here was, at best, nothing but a partnership contract dealing with the fruits of the partnership; that therefore the surviving partner has no interest in anything but partnership property existing when the partnership was dissolved; that this partnership was dissolved in the lifetime of Mrs. Stewart, and therefore her partner has no interest in the property of which Mrs. Stewart thereafter died seised. See 173 N. W. 634.

I would reverse.

NOTE.

The validity of partnership agreement between husband and wife is the subject of the annotation following MARCRUM v. SMITH, post, 1304.

J. A. MARCRUM, Admr., etc., of Mary A. Smith, Deceased, Appt.
v.

A. C. SMITH et al.

Alabama Supreme Court — October 13, 1921.

(206 Ala. 466, 91 So. 259.)

Husband and wife — right to become partners.

1. A husband and wife may contract with each other to perform certain services and thereby make themselves partners.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1304.]

Parties — husband and wife — partnership service.

2. Where a husband and wife, in accordance with a contract between themselves to render services for another, perform the contract with him, each is a proper and necessary party to an action to enforce the latter contract.

Appeal — presumption as to evidence.

3. When the record does not purport to contain all the evidence, the reviewing court will assume that there was evidence before the court sufficient to warrant its ruling in refusing an affirmative charge.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Madison County (Kyle, J.) in favor of plaintiffs in a suit to recover an amount alleged to be due for board, care, and attention of defendant's decedent by plaintiffs. Affirmed.

It was alleged in the complaint that plaintiffs made an agreement with deceased during her lifetime to board and care for her, to furnish fuel and do her washing, and in compliance with that agreement they did board and care for her, furnish her fuel, and did her washing, from March 5, 1918, to April 8, 1919.

Messrs. Cooper & Cooper for appellant.

Messrs. Betts & Richardson, for appellees:

The law implies a contract or promise to pay for services rendered by one or more persons to another, whatever the nature of the services, whether personal or otherwise.

Kinnebrew v. Kinnebrew, 35 Ala. 628; Davis v. Badders, 95 Ala. 348, 10 So. 422; Jonas v. King, 81 Ala. 285, 1 So. 591; 9 Cyc. 242, 653, 655 & 660.

If any two persons can jointly contract to perform a certain act, or to do a certain thing, or carry on a certain business, then a wife and husband can so contract between themselves, even though the wife is contributing her personal services to the enterprise, as a personal service to another.

Larkin v. Woosley, 109 Ala. 258, 19 So. 520; Schlappack v. Long, 90 Ala. 525, 8 So. 113; Compton v. Smith, 120 Ala. 233, 25 So. 300.

If the relation of blood between parties is close, then the law will presume that personal services rendered are so rendered gratuitously, and not upon an implied contract to pay therefor; but this applies to parent and child, does not extend to relation of aunt and nephew, and does not apply to facts in this case.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 861; Borum v. Bell, 132 Ala. 91, 31 So. 454; Kinnebrew v. Kinnebrew, supra.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A. C. Smith and Mattie K. Smith sue J. A. Marcrum, as administrator of the estate of Mary A. Smith, deceased, under the common counts for board, washing, fuel, nursing, care, and attention of decedent from November 5, 1918, to April 8, 1919. There was jury trial and verdict for plaintiffs, judgment of court thereon, and defendant appeals.

A. C. Smith is the husband of Mattie K. Smith. The husband and wife may contract with each other except as prohibited by statute.

Husband and wife—right to become partners.

Code 1907, § 4497.

They (the husband and wife) could contract together to perform the services rendered deceased as averred in the complaint, and thereby make themselves partners; and, if they jointly contracted with each other to render the services, and if they rendered them as contracted, then each would be a proper and necessary party plaintiff to recover under their express or implied contract, jointly made with the deceased, as averred in the complaint. Schlapback v. Long, 90 Ala. 525, 8 So. 113; Code 1907, §§ 4492, 4497, 4487; Belser v. Tuscumbia Bkg. Co. 105 Ala. 517, 17 So. 40; Compton v. Smith, 120 Ala. 233, 25 So. 300.

Parties—husband and wife—partnership service.

There are three assignments of error, but in fact there is practically one. They are refusing, at request of defendant, by the court to give these written charges:

"If you believe the evidence, you cannot find for the plaintiffs under either count of the complaint in this case."

"If the jury believe the evidence in this case, the verdict should be for the defendant."

And the third assignment of error is in overruling appellant's motion for a new trial. This motion is based on refusal of the court to give those written charges, and that the verdict was contrary to the evidence and the law.

The bill of exceptions does not purport to contain or state it is all, or in substance all, of the evidence in the case. It sets out certain evidence, but there is no express statement that all of the evidence or the substance thereof is contained therein. This being the condition of the record on the evidence, the court will presume there was other evidence sufficient before the court

Appeal—presumption as to evidence. to warrant its ruling in refusing the general affirmative charges and in overruling the motion for new trial. Griggs v. State, 58 Ala. 425, 29 Am. Rep. 762; Hood v. Pioneer Min. & Mfg. Co. 95 Ala. 461, 11 So. 10. Therefore we decide the court did not err in refusing to give those written charges, and in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Affirmed.

Anderson, Ch. J., and Sayre and Gardner, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Validity of partnership agreement between husband and wife.

I. In absence of statute, 1804.

II. Under statute:

- a. View that agreement is valid, 1305.
- b. View that agreement is invalid, 1312.

I. In absence of statute.

At common law the legal existence of the wife was so far merged in that of the husband that they could not contract with each other, hence all partnership agreements between them were prima facie invalid. De Graum v. Jones (1887) 23 Fla. 83, 6 So. 925; Brown v. Jewett (1846) 18 N. H. 230; Wallace v. Finberg (1876) 46 Tex. 35; Brown & Co. v. Chancellor (1884) 61 Tex. 437; Miller v. Marx (1885) 65 Tex. 131; Purdom v. Boyd (1891) 82 Tex. 130, 17 S. W. 606. See also the cases cited, infra, II. a.

In De Graum v. Jones (Fla.) supra, the rule at common law was followed that it was impossible for a married woman to enter into a contract of partnership, the court saying: "To establish a partnership between two or more persons the parties must be capable of contracting to regulate the terms of their joint enterprise, to wit, the amount of capital stock to be furnished and the services to be performed by each partner; the business in which said partners are to engage, and the length of time it is to last. These are all obligations of a purely personal character. When one of the parties is without the legal capacity to assume these obligations, as a married woman is, there can be no legally existing partnership between them. She has no separate legal existence, her husband and she being in contemplation of law but one person. Smith, Contr. 317, 318; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1367. To make an agreement of partnership requires a contracting capacity which is not possessed by a married woman."

In Brown v. Jewett (1846) 18 N. H. 230, it appeared that one of the members of the defendant partnership was a married woman. It was held that her coverture at the time of making the promise was a bar to the action, and recovery could not be had against her.

In Wallace v. Finberg (1876) 46 Tex. 35, it was held that a husband and wife could not make a partnership agreement, and that debts incurred under such an agreement were void as to the wife. The court said: "If the husband should use the separate property of the wife in carrying on a mercantile business, it does not render her liable as a partner in the purchase of goods made to continue the enterprise; and, notwithstanding the husband and wife may assume to act as mercantile partners in trade, and the merchants with whom they deal in the purchase of goods may so recognize them in their dealings, and the attorneys who bring suits upon contracts made by them in such dealings may bring or defend suits against them substantially as partners or joint obligors,—it is the duty of the courts, in adjudicating their liabilities, to repudiate the existence of such a relation between man and wife in this state; for surely the marital relation has become sufficiently complicated already without adding that of mercantile partnership or anything like it."

In Miller v. Marx (1885) 65 Tex. 131, a wife who had attempted to enter into a partnership was joined in an action on a debt contracted by the firm. The court held that a married woman could not become a partner in business, either with her husband or anyone else.

In Purdom v. Boyd (Tex.) supra, the rule as laid down in the Wallace and Miller Cases (Tex.) supra, was followed.

In Brown & Co. v. Chancellor (1884) 61 Tex. 437, it appeared that the defendant White was a married woman who, prior to her marriage, had engaged in a partnership agreement with the codefendant, and such partnership was continued after her marriage to him. Subsequently to her marriage, the debt in question was contracted. The court held that the partnership agreement was dissolved by the defendant's marriage, and subsequent to her marriage she could not enter into a partnership with her husband or another by which she could be bound.

II. Under statute.

a. View that agreement is valid.

In practically every state, legislation has been enacted enlarging the rights of married women, but the construction placed on these statutes by the courts of the various states is not uniform. In some jurisdictions it has been held that enabling statutes passed by the legislature confer on a married woman the right to enter into a partnership agreement with her husband.

United States. — Re Kinkead (1873) 3 Biss. 405, Fed. Cas. No. 7824 (Illinois statute); Bernard & L. Mfg. Co. v. Packard & Calvin (1894) 12 C. C. A. 123, 28 U. S. App. 84, 64 Fed. 309.

Alabama. — Leinkauff v. Frenkle (1885) 80 Ala. 136 (Pennsylvania statute); Schlapback v. Long (1890) 90 Ala. 525, 8 So. 113; Belser v. Tuscumbia Bkg. Co. (1894) 105 Ala.

514, 17 So. 40; MARCRUM v. SMITH (reported herewith) ante, 1303.

Georgia. — Butler v. Frank (1910) 7 Ga. App. 655, 67 S. E. 884; Schofield v. Jones (1890) 85 Ga. 816, 11 S. E. 1032; Burney v. Savannah Grocery Co. (1896) 98 Ga. 711, 58 Am. St. Rep. 342, 25 S. E. 915; Ellis v. Mills (1896) 99 Ga. 490, 27 S. E. 740; Vizard v. Moody (1904) 119 Ga. 918, 47 S. E. 348; Morrison v. Dickey (1905) 122 Ga. 353, 69 L.R.A. 87, 50 S. E. 178.

Illinois. — Heyman v. Heyman (1904) 210 Ill. 524, 71 N. E. 591, affirming (1903) 110 Ill. App. 87.

Indiana. — Anderson v. Citizens Nat. Bank (1906) 38 Ind. App. 190, 76 N. E. 811. Compare Montgomery v. Sprankle (1869) 31 Ind. 113 (before statute) and Haas v. Shaw (1883) 91 Ind. 384, 46 Am. Rep. 607 (under early statute).

Iowa. — Hoaglin v. Henderson (1903) 119 Iowa, 720, 61 L.R.A. 756, 97 Am. St. Rep. 335, 94 N. W. 247. STEWART v. TODD (reported herewith) ante, 1272.

Kentucky. — Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Alexander (1894) 16 Ky. L. Rep. 306, 27 S. W. 981.

Mississippi. — Toof v. Brewer (1888) 96 Miss. 19, 3 So. 571; Jones v. Jones (1911) 99 Miss. 600, 55 So. 361. Compare Howard v. Stephens (1876) 52 Miss. 239.

Missouri. — Dunifer v. Jecko (1885) 87 Mo. 282.

New York. — Zimmerman v. Erhard (1879) 8 Daly, 311, affirmed in (1880) 83 N. Y. 74, 38 Am. Rep. 396; Suau v. Caffé (1890) 122 N. Y. 308, 9 L.R.A. 593, 25 N. E. 488; Graff v. Kinney (1885) 15 Abb. N. C. 397, 1 How. Pr. N. S. 59, affirmed in (1885) 37 Hun, 405.

Vermont. — Lane v. Bishop (1893) 65 Vt. 575, 27 Atl. 499.

In the case of Re Kinkead (U. S.) supra, it appeared that the relator and her husband engaged in business as partners. By an act of the legislature in Illinois passed in 1861, full control was given to a married woman of all real and personal property owned by her at the time of her marriage or acquired during coverture. The court said, after considering these statutes: "In other words, she may become a partner with another person, and why not with her husband? I can see nothing in the relation of husband and wife which would prevent the wife from being her husband's partner in business if she could be a partner with any other person. The logical effect of the statutes and decisions thereon in this state tend inevitably to this conclusion, and I can see no sound reason for stopping short of that point. I conclude, therefore, that Mrs. Kinkead could be and was a member of the firm of Kinkead & Company, and that it was a valid partnership at the time it was adjudged bankrupt."

In Bernard & L. Mfg. Co. v. Packard (Fed.) supra, it appeared that a limited partnership was formed by two married women and their respective husbands. The court held that such a partnership was valid and the firm was liable for debts it had incurred.

In Leinkauff v. Frenkle (Ala.) supra, creditors sought to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance of personal property made to the defendant by the firm of Myer & Company. The complainants urged that the firm of Myer & Company, being composed of husband and wife, was incapable of making a valid contract. The court held that it was no defense that one of the partners was a married woman at the time the liability was incurred, as the statute gave a married woman the power to engage in trade or business on her separate account, and therefore she could become a partner with another.

In Schlapback v. Long (1890) 90 Ala. 525, 8 So. 113, it appeared that the defendants were husband and wife and engaged in the hotel business as partners, they were sued by the plaintiff for goods furnished to the partnership. The court held that the partnership was liable, as, under statutory provisions, the wife was expressly authorized to engage in trade on her separate account and may become a partner with another person, the court adding: "As modified by statute, there is nothing in the relation of husband and wife which prevents them from contracting to enter into partnership and constituting a firm."

In Belser v. Tuscumbia Bkg. Co. (1894) 105 Ala. 514, 17 So. 40, the court held that the rule at common law, that husband and wife were incapable of contracting with each other, did not prevail in Alabama, as the statute expressly authorized husband and wife to contract with each other. In that case a deed of assignment for the benefit of the creditors of the partnership, composed of husband and wife, was executed by the wife in the firm name. A creditor whose debt was included in the assignment attempted to obtain priority by garnishment. The court held that, the partnership agreement being valid, the suit for garnishment should be dismissed.

In Butler v. Frank (Ga.) supra, it was held that it is possible for a married woman to enter into a partnership agreement with her husband, and such agreement is valid if the contract is not entered into for the purpose of evading the law. By enabling statutes enacted at different times, married women have been given the power to enter into contractual relations the same as a feme sole, with certain restrictions but none of these restrictions refer to partnership agreements, so a married woman is free to assume such obligations.

In Burney v. Savannah Grocery Co. (1896) 98 Ga. 711, 58 Am. St. Rep. 342, 25 S. E. 915, it appeared that a husband and wife entered into a partnership agreement. The firm was indebted to the plaintiff for goods purchased, and suit was brought. The wife defended on the ground that she could not be a partner with her husband. The court ruled against this contention and held the wife liable, saying: "After a careful examination of all our statutes and many decisions, we have reached the conclusion that there is no law or public policy in Georgia which forbids such a partnership, provided, always, it is bona fide and actual, and not merely colorable. An alleged partnership cannot be used as a mere device for rendering the wife liable for, or subjecting her property to the payment of, debts of her husband. But if they really engage in a business as actual partners, we see no reason why the partnership should not be regarded as a lawful one. The 'Woman's Law' of 1866 went far towards the emancipation of married women. The only restrictions left upon their power to contract were designed for their protection and benefit. In all cases where these restrictions do not apply, they are as free to contract as men; and no one of these restrictions, so far as we have been able to ascertain, prevents a married woman from engaging in a partnership business either with her husband or with another."

See Ellis v. Mills (1896) 99 Ga. 490, 27 S. E. 740, wherein the rule laid down in the Burney Case (Ga.) supra, was followed.

In Schofield v. Jones (1890) 85 Ga. 816, 11 S. E. 1032, it appeared that a husband and wife entered into a partnership agreement for the purpose of conducting a hotel, and gave their joint obligation therefor. It was held that the wife was liable under such agreement, as the statute of Georgia gave her the same power to contract as a feme sole. The court said: "Moreover, there is nothing contrary to public policy in allowing husband and wife to unite their joint credit in procuring the means of supplying joint resources in the shape of a home, or a place of business from which to derive an income for the support of the family. Very often it would contribute to the well-being and prosperity of both, and to the permanent good of the family. No doubt such a power can be abused and misapplied, but this is no reason for not recognizing its existence, or why the law should not tolerate it, if on the whole its results are beneficial rather than pernicious. At all events, we think the power exists at present under our law, and that the trial court erred in charging the jury to the contrary."

In Vizard v. Moody (1904) 119 Ga. 918, 47 S. E. 348, it appeared that husband and wife were members of a partnership formed to purchase property, and gave a deed of trust as security for a sum due. In an action of ejectment under the deed of trust it was held that the wife might be a partner in business with her husband.

In Morrison v. Dickey (1905) 122 Ga. 353, 69 L.R.A. 87, 50 S. E. 175, the rule was declared to be that a partnership agreement between husband and wife was valid where the husband carried on a business with another and the wife was an undisclosed partner. The wife made a gift to her husband, which he assigned to his partner. It was held that such assignment was valid, as the gift by the wife had been made unconditionally, and it could be used as the husband wished, and the debt so paid was one which the wife would have been compelled to pay in accounting of the partnership, as she could sue and be sued as a partner.

In Heyman v. Heyman (1904) 210 Ill. 524, 71 N. E. 591, affirming (1903) 110 Ill. App. 87, it appeared that a wife furnished moneys for the establishment of a business, and her husband carried on the business, the relation between them being that of partners. In an action for an accounting the question arose whether a partnership agreement between husband and wife was valid. The statute of Illinois gave a married woman the same rights as a feme sole, save that she may not enter into or carry on any partnership business "except with the consent of her husband." The court, in holding such an agreement valid, said: "It thus appears that husband and wife may contract with each other without restriction, except that the wife may not enter into or carry on any partnership business 'except with the consent of her husband.' The plain inference is that she may carry on a partnership business, if she has the consent of her husband, and, as she may make contracts with him, there is no reason why she may not make a partnership contract with him, or a contract for a partnership business with him, where she obtains his consent thereto. The very fact that a partnership is formed between husband and wife presupposes that it is done with his consent. In the case at bar, all the evidence upon the subject tends to show that, if there was a partnership between appellant and appellee, it was with the consent of appellant. There being such consent, there is no want of power, under the statutes and decisions in this state, in the husband and wife to form a partnership with each other."

The rule of the common law preventing partnership agreements between husband and wife prevailed in Indiana 'until 1881, when a statute was enacted which abolished all legal disabilities of married women to make contracts, with certain exceptions. In Anderson v. Citizens Nat. Bank (1906) 38 Ind. App. 190, 76 N. E. 811, it appeared that a wife obtained money from a bank to carry on a partnership business with her husband. The court held that the wife was liable for the debt in the same manner as though she were a feme sole, saying: "The statute neither authorizes a married woman to enter into a business partnership with another person, nor does it prohibit her from doing so. And it is held in Burk v. Platt (1882) 88 Ind. 283, that by Burns's Anno. Stat. 1901, § 6967, Rev. Stat. 1881, § 5122, coverture is no bar to a married woman's contracting debts in carrying on any business on her separate account or as partner with another, and that her separate real estate and personal property may be levied upon and sold to satisfy a judgment against her and her copartner for debts contracted in carrying on the partnership business. See Conant v. National State Bank (1889) 121

Ind. 323, 22 N. E. 250. The legislature evidently contemplated that a wife might form a business partnership, not only with a third person, but with her husband, as it is provided by § 6967, supra, that a husband shall not be liable for any debts contracted by his wife in carrying on any business on her separate account, 'or when she is in partnership with any person other than himself.' "

Compare Montgomery v. Sprankle (1869) 31 Ind. 113, wherein it appeared that a husband and wife entered into a partnership agreement, and credit was extended to such firm. The court held that a married woman could not enter into such an agreement, as her contracts during coverture are void, the rule of common law being applied that a feme covert is incapable of binding herself by contract, and a recovery against the wife was denied.

Compare also Haas v. Shaw (1883) 91 Ind. 384, 46 Am. Rep. 607, wherein it was sought to recover for goods sold to a partnership consisting of husband and wife. The wife defended on the ground that she was a married woman and could not enter into such an agreement. The statute under consideration enabled a married woman to bind herself by her executory contracts, in connection with her trade, business, labor, or service, "on her sole and separate account." In dismissing the action against the wife the court said: "Certainly, there is no sentence, clause, or section, from the enacting clause to the final word or syllable of the above-entitled Act of March 25, 1879, which can be said by any fair construction to authorize a married woman to bind herself by a contract of copartnership with her husband or any other person, or to carry on any trade or business, or to perform any labor or service on the joint copartnership."

In Hoaglin v. Henderson (1903) 119 Iowa, 720, 61 L.R.A. 756, 97 Am. St. Rep. 335, 94 N. W. 247, it appeared that the plaintiffs were husband and wife, doing business as partners. They brought the action for the wrongful retention of a draft forwarded to the defendants for merchandise which was never delivered. The provisions of the Iowa Code (§§ 3153, 3164) give to married women the right to acquire, own, and dispose of property in the same manner and to the same extent as their husbands may do. The court, commenting on these sections, said: "These unquestioned powers of a married woman in this state to deal with her husband would seem to cover all the powers and liabilities involved in entering into or continuing the relation of partner with her husband. The essential characteristics of a partnership seem to be joint ownership of property, and authority of each partner to bind the other by his acts with reference to the partnership property, and also to impose upon the other partnership liability. As these relations may be separately sustained between husband and wife, we see no reason why they may not be collectively created by entering into and carrying on the relation involved in the formation of the entity known as a partnership."

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Alexander (1894) 16 Ky. L. Rep. 306, 27 S. W. 981, it was held that a statute empowering a feme covert to trade in the same manner as a feme sole empowered her to enter into a partnership with her husband. The court said: "We perceive no reason why she may not become a joint obligor with her husband. She cannot say to the world, 'I am interested in this business venture with my husband, and my property is therefore pledged to the payment of partnership debts,' and then escape liability on the plea that the peace and quiet of domestic life render it impolitic for husbands and wives to form such business relations. These considerations cannot be allowed to affect strangers, and the property rights of the parties are not here involved."

In Toof v. Brewer (1888) 96 Miss. 19, 3 So. 571, it appeared that husband and wife owned and operated a plantation in Arkansas as partners. A debt was contracted there, and was sued on in Mississippi. The wife defended on the ground that she did not have capacity to enter into a partnership contract. It was held that under the laws of Arkansas she could enter into such a contract, and her personal estate would be liable therefor in Mississippi. The court said: "We find it difficult to conceive of any public policy that would prevent the formation of a partnership between husband and wife in a state in which her individuality is so completely provided for as to her dealings with others. If she may engage in trade, and, as an incident thereto, may enter into partnership with others, why may she not form that relation with her husband? If it be said, as by the supreme court of Massachusetts, that the power is not expressly conferred, the reply is that neither is it as to third persons; and yet it is held that with such third persons she may make such contract. The power springs as an incident from the recognition by law of her separate existence, and from the capacity given her to engage in trade. A married woman could not at common law contract either with her husband or a third person, for her existence apart from his was not recognized. He and she were by that law one, and he was that one. But by the statute her individuality is preserved. She is one, and the husband is one. Each has the capacity to contract. Both may desire to contract. Partnership is a lawful subject-matter of contract, and there is nothing in the law which, either expressly or by necessary implication, forbids them from contracting. If we reflect upon the extent of the changes wrought by the Constitution and statutes, that they withdraw from the husband the ownership, control, disposition, and enjoyment of the wife's estate; that the same are secured to her as though she were a feme sole; that the right to her personal services, and the fruits of her labor, are denied to him, and given to her; that her will is freed from the dominion of his as to all property rights; that she may, without his consent, enter into the closest business relations with third persons,—and if we add to this the declaration of the statute that the changes it has wrought shall not be restrained by the rule of construction that is ordinarily applied to statutes in derogation of the common law,—there seems to be but little force in the suggestion that by implication a disability as to business transactions and contracts, springing from the common-law notion of the unity of the husband and wife, still obtains."

In Jones v. Jones. (1911) 99 Miss. 600, 55 So. 361, it appeared that a partnership was carried on by husband and wife. The husband, prior to his marriage, had been the manager of his wife's plantation. Following their marriage they entered into a partnership agreement. In an action by the wife for an accounting, it was held that, under the provisions of the Mississippi statute, a married woman may lawfully enter into a partnership with her husband, as such statute removes all the disabilities of coverture and a married woman may contract as if she were sole.

Compare Howard v. Stephens (1876) 52 Miss. 239, wherein it was held that a statute giving a married woman power to contract in respect to her separate property did not enable her to enter into a partnership agreement with her husband or another, and she was not liable for firm debts.

In Dunifer v. Jecko (1885) 87 Mo. 282, it appeared that husband and wife carried on a newspaper business under a partnership agreement, and instituted this action to recover a debt due the firm. The defendants claimed a misjoinder of parties, contending that a wife could not enter into such an agreement with her husband. The court held that while such rule existed at common law it had been abrogated by a statute providing that property coming into her possession during coverture shall be and remain her separate property and under her sole control, and the statute gave her the power to contract with her husband.

In Zimmerman v. Erhard (1879) 8 Daly (N. Y.) 311, affirmed in (1880) 83 N. Y. 74, 38 Am. Rep. 396, the rule was established that a husband and wife could contract with each other and therefore they could enter into a partnership agreement. The court said: "It seems evident from the above adjudications that a married woman is invested, by the logical effect of our legislation, in regard to her separate estate and business, with all the attributes and powers of a feme sole, and, so being, any contract made by her relative thereto is valid, including a copartnership agreement with her husband." The enabling statute as passed by the legislature gave a married woman power to carry on business "on her sole and separate account." This was construed to refer to her marital status, and not intended to restrict her business ventures in which she alone would be interested.

In Fairlee v. Bloomington (1884) 14 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 341, it appeared that a husband and his wife had entered into a partnership agreement and had executed the note in suit. It was held that a husband could not enter into a partnership agreement with his wife. The court, in commenting on the Zimmerman Case (N. Y.) supra, held that the reasoning and conclusion that such a partnership was valid were erroneous, and such a rule did not exist. This case was reversed on appeal on another ground, in (1885) 38 Hun, 220, the court remarking, however, that were it necessary to the decision of the case they should probably agree with the doctrine of Zimmerman v. Erhard (1879) 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 11, and Graff v. Kinney (N. Y.) infra, holding that a husband and wife may form a partnership.

In Graff v. Kinney (1885) 15 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 397, 1 How. Pr. N. S. 59, affirmed in (1885) 37 Hun, 405, it was held that a woman might enter into a partnership agreement with her husband, and the opinion in the Fairlee Case, supra, was disapproved and overruled. The statutes gave a married woman the power "to carry on any trade or business," and this was construed to give a married woman the power to enter into such a partnership agreement.

In Jacquín v. Jacquín (1885) 15 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 408, note, it appeared that a husband and his wife had entered into a partnership agreement before marriage, and such relation was continued after marriage. In an action for an accounting it was held that the enabling statutes had not given a married woman the power to enter into a partnership with her husband, and no such right was implied.

In Noel v. Kinney (1887) 106 N. Y. 74, 60 Am. Rep. 423, 12 N. E. 351, it appeared that a wife authorized her husband to contract for fixtures to be placed in houses belonging to her, and the note sued upon was given plaintiff under the name of J. P. Kinney & Company, for such fixtures. It was held that the wife was liable for the debt contracted, even though a form of partnership existed. The court expressly stated, however, that they did not decide the question as to the validity of a partnership agreement.

In Kaufman v. Schoeffel (1885) 37 Hun (N. Y.) 140, it was held that under the statute enabling a married woman to enter into contracts, she could not enter into a partnership agreement with her husband. The enabling Statute of 1860 gives married women the power to "carry on any trade or business and perform any labor or services on her sole and separate account." The court here construed the words "sole and separate account" to refer back to "carry on any trade or business," and therefore a partnership agreement was invalid.

In Hendricks v. Isaacs (1889) 117 N. Y. 411, 6 L.R.A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 524, 22 N. E. 1029, it appeared that a husband made advances to his wife upon her written promise to reimburse him, such writings being the subject of this action. It was held that the contract was void at law, as the common-law doctrine that husband and wife could not contract had never been abrogated by statute. The court said: "She may enter into contracts with third persons for the purchase and sale of property . . . enforceable in a legal action to the same extent as though she was a feme sole. But the disability to deal with her husband, or to make a binding contract with him, remains unchanged."

In Suau v. Caffé (1890) 122 N. Y. 308, 9 L.R.A. 593, 25 N. E. 488, the rule established in the Zimmerman Case (N. Y.) supra, to the effect that married women may enter into partnership agreements with their husbands, was followed and the Hendricks Case (N. Y.) supra, was overruled. The court said: "But a single question is involved in this appeal, which is whether a married woman who contracts a debt with her husband in a business carried on for their joint benefit can avoid liability for it on the ground of coverture. The second section of chapter 90 of the Laws of 1860 provides that 'a married woman may . . . carry on any trade or business . . . on her sole and separate account.' It is urged that this language is not broad enough to authorize married women to engage in business as partners or jointly with others, or at least with their husbands, but that the statute simply confers power on them to contract by themselves and apart from others. This construction is too narrow and fails to express the evident intent of the legislature, which was not to prescribe the mode in which married women should carry on their business, but to free them from the restraints of the common law and permit them to engage in business in their own behalf as free from the control of their husbands as though unmarried. Before this statute, the profits of their business belonged to their husbands, and the words 'sole and separate account' were intended to convey the idea that the beneficial interest of any business in which they might engage belonged to them, and not to their husbands."

In Lane v. Bishop (1893) 65 Vt. 575, 27 Atl. 499, it appeared that the defendants were husband and wife doing business under a partnership agreement, and were sued therein for a partnership debt. The statute granting powers to married women to contract provided as follows: "A married woman may make contracts with any person other than her husband, and bind herself and her separate property in the same manner as if she was unmarried, and may sue and be sued as to all such contracts made by her, either before or after coverture, without her husband being joined in the action as plaintiff or defendant, and execution may issue against her and be levied on her sole and separate goods, chattels, and estate." The court held that under this statute a partnership agreement entered into between husband and wife was valid, and the wife was liable for the firm debts.

b. View that agreement is invalid.

In the following jurisdictions the view has been taken that a married woman has not the power under a married woman's separate property act to enter into a partnership agreement with her husband, and that such agreements when made are invalid.

Arkansas. — Gilkerson-Sloss Commission Co. v. Salinger (1892) 56 Ark. 294, 16 L.R.A. 526, 35 Am. St. Rep. 105, 19 S. W. 747.

Connecticut. — Barlow Bros. Co. v. Parsons (1901) 73 Conn. 696, 49 Atl. 205.

District of Columbia. — Norwood v. Francis (1905) 25 App. D. C. 463, 4 Ann. Cas. 865.

Louisiana. — Squire v. Belden (1831) 2 La. 268.

Maryland. — Bradstreet v. Baer (1874) 41 Md. 19; Mayer v. Soyster (1869) 30 Md. 402.

Massachusetts. — Lord v. Parker (1861) 3 Allen, 127; Edwards v. Stevens (1862) 3 Allen, 315; Bowker v. Bradford (1886) 140 Mass. 521, 5 N. E. 480; Voss v. Sylvester (1909) 203 Mass. 233, 89 N. E. 241.

Michigan. — Artman v. Ferguson (1888) 73 Mich. 146, 2 L.R.A. 343, 16 Am. St. Rep. 572, 40 N. W. 907; Speier v. Opfer (1888) 73 Mich. 35, 2 L.R.A. 345, 16 Am. St. Rep. 556, 40 N. W. 909.

Ohio.—Payne v. Thompson (1886) 44 Ohio St. 192, 5 N. E. 654.

South Carolina. — Gwynn v. Gwynn (1887) 27 S. C. 525, 4 S. E. 229.

Washington. — Board of Trade v. Hayden (1892) 4 Wash. 263, 16 L.R.A. 530, 31 Am. St. Rep. 919, 30 Pac. 87, 32 Pac. 224.

West Virginia. — Carey v. Burruss (1882) 20 W. Va. 571, 43 Am. Rep. 790.

Wisconsin. — Fuller & F. Co. v. McHenry (1892) 83 Wis. 573, 18 L.R.A. 512, 53 N. W. 896.

In Gilkerson-Sloss Commission Co. v. Salinger (Ark.) supra, it appeared that credit was given to a firm consisting of husband and wife, and, the latter being the sole survivor of the partnership, recovery was sought against her. The statute of Arkansas is as follows: "A married woman may bargain, sell, assign, and transfer her separate personal property, and carry on any trade or business, and perform any labor or services on her sole and separate account; and the earnings of any married woman from her trade, business, labor or services, shall be her sole and separate property, and may be used and invested by her in her own name; and she may alone sue or be sued in the courts of this state, on account of the said property, business or services." It was held that under the statute a wife could not contract with her husband, and therefore the partnership agreement was invalid. The court said: "In view of the legal unity and identity of husband and wife at common law, and the wife's incapacity to sue the husband at law, and the rulings of our court upon the incapacity of the wife to contract with her husband, we are of the opinion that the wife, under our statute, cannot form a partnership with her husband. As the credit in this case was given to the firm of which she could not be a member, and as she is sued as surviving partner of that firm, there can be no recovery against her in this action."

20 A.L.R.—83.

In Barlow Bros. Co. v. Parsons (Conn.) supra, it was held that a wife was not liable for debts contracted by a partnership consisting of husband and wife. The statute under consideration provided that a wife, by contract, must agree to accept the provisions of the law of that date before such provisions should become applicable to her property rights. The defendant wife gave her husband permission to use her name in connection with the private banking house which he conducted. The action was to recover for certain deposits made by the plaintiff with the banking house of defendant's husband prior to his death. The court held that inasmuch as the wife had failed to comply with the provisions of the statute as to accepting the provisions of the statute, the partnership agreement was invalid and no liability attached to the defendants.

In Norwood v. Francis (D. C.) supra, it appeared that the defendant was a copartner with her husband and others in a savings bank, which was an unincorporated joint stock company. The plaintiff's testator deposited money in the bank, and on its failure sued defendant as a stockholder therein. It was claimed that the defendant had power to enter into a partnership with her husband under the following statute: "That any married woman may carry on any trade or business, occupation, or profession by herself, or jointly with others, and perform any labor or services on her sole and separate account; and the earnings of any married woman from her trade, business, profession, occupation, labor, or services shall be her sole and separate property, and may be used and invested by her in her own name." The court, in holding that a husband and his wife could not be members of a partnership, said: "While the tendency of legislation has been to remove the disabilities of married women, we think, in view of all the authorities, that such statutes removing such disabilities should not be construed so broadly as to permit a partnership between husband and wife, unless the statute expressly gives the husband and wife power to contract with each other generally. We therefore conclude that the appellee Anna M. Johnson could not become a member of a partnership such as the one in question."

In Squire v. Belden (La.) supra, the action was against a firm consisting of father, husband, and wife. The suit was dismissed as to the wife, the court holding that a wife could not bind herself jointly with her husband for any debt. The court distinguished between legal and commercial partnerships, saying, as to the former, that they are void by statute between husband and wife, and as to the latter existing between husband and wife the court expressed a doubt, saying: "Perhaps a commercial partnership cannot, in this country, exist between husband and wife, even where there is no community of acquits and gains."

In Bradstreet v. Baer (Md.) supra, it was held that a statute empowering a married woman to carry on a trade as a feme sole, with a capital not exceeding $1,000, and making her money and property, to that extent, liable to attachment for any claim or debt incurred by her, was by implication a denial of the power to carry on business in any other mode, and that a feme covert could not enter into a partnership with her husband. The court, in discussing other legislative restrictions, said: "She cannot enter into any contract which will bind her at law, unless it be in writing and executed jointly with her husband. In so far as her disabilities have not been removed by statute, they remain as at common law. There is no statute in existence in this state which either directly, or by implication, authorizes her to form a copartnership. The contract of one partner respecting the partnership business binds all the members of the firm, and if a married woman could enter into a copartnership, the anomaly would be presented of her being bound at law by the acts and contracts of others, when, under the statute, she cannot so bind herself except by her contract in writing, executed jointly with her husband."

In Mayer v. Soyster (1869) 30 Md. 402, a husband and wife were sued as copartners on a debt due plaintiffs. The court, in quashing the attachment, stated the rule of law applicable as follows: "It is well settled that a married woman can in no case be sued upon a mere personal contract made during coverture."

In Lord v. Parker (1861) 3 Allen (Mass.) 127, it appeared that a married woman was a copartner with her husband and others. The firm was sued on two of its promissory notes, and the court held that the feme covert could not be included as a codefendant, as she did not have the power, under the statute, to make a partnership agreement with her husband. In construing the legislative acts enlarging the rights of married women, the court said: "Their leading object is to enable married women to acquire, possess, and manage property, without the intervention of a trustee, free from the interference or control, and without liability for the debts, of their husbands. They are in derogation of the common law, and certainly are not to be extended by construction. And we cannot perceive in them any intention to confer upon a married woman the power to make any contract with her husband, or to convey to him any property, or receive any conveyance from him. The power to form a copartnership includes the power to create a community of property, with a joint power of disposal, and a mutual liability for the contracts and acts of all the partners. To enter into a partnership in business with her husband would subject her property to his control in a manner hardly consistent with the separation which it is the purpose of the statute to secure, and might subject her to an indefinite liability for his engagements. The property invested in such an enterprise would cease to be her 'sole and separate' property. The power to arrange the terms of such a contract would open a wide door to fraud in relation to the property of the husband."

In Edwards v. Stevens (1862) 3 Allen (Mass.) 315, the court followed the rule laid down in the Lord Case (Mass.) supra, saying: "These statutes are in derogation of the common law, and are not to be extended by implication. The express power to contract with her husband is not given in terms, and there is a strong implication from various provisions that it was not contemplated by the legislature. The language of Gen. Stat. chap. 108, § 3, is indeed quite broad, and provides that she may 'carry on any trade or business, and perform any labor or services on her sole and separate account, and sue and be sued in all matters having relation to her separate property, business, trade, services, labor and earnings, in the same manner as if she were sole.' But in order to make a valid contract with her husband, he should also have the power to contract as if he were sole, which is nowhere given him."

In Bowker v. Bradford (1886) 140 Mass. 521, 5 N. E. 480, the question again arose as to the validity of a partnership agreement between husband and wife, and the court followed the rule laid down in the Lord Case (Mass.) supra, holding that a married woman could not be held for the rent of a store where she and her husband carried on a partnership venture.

In Voss v. Sylvester (1909) 203 Mass. 233, 89 N. E. 241, it appeared that a man signed a lease in the name of himself and his wife as partners. In an action on the lease, the husband set up the fact that his wife had not been joined as a defendant. It was held that the nonjoinder was proper, since the partnership agreement was of no force or effect, and the wife could not be sued on the lease.

In Artman v. Ferguson (1888) 73

Mich. 146, 2 L.R.A. 343, 16 Am. St. Rep. 572, 40 N. W. 907, it was held that the statutes of Michigan had not conferred full powers on a feme covert to carry on business or make contracts, but only to contract in regard to her separate property. The court said: "Our statute has not removed all the common-law disabilities of married women. It has not conferred upon her the powers of a feme sole, except in certain directions. It has only provided that her real and personal estate acquired before marriage, and all property, real and personal, to which she may afterwards become entitled in any manner, shall be and remain her estate, and shall not be liable for the debts, obligations, and engagements of her husband, and may be contracted, sold, transferred, mortgaged, conveyed, devised, and bequeathed by her as if she were unmarried; and she may sue and be sued in relation to her sole property as if she were unmarried. How. Stat. §§ 6295-6297. In all other respects she is a feme covert, and subject to all the restraints and disabilities consequent upon that relation. A partnership is a contract of two or more competent persons to place their money, effects, labor, and skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, and to divide the profit and bear the loss in certain proportions. That a married woman may, when she has separate estate, be a copartner with a person other than her husband, is held in many states under the married woman's statutes. But where the statute gives her no power, or only a limited power, to become a partner, the rule of the common law prevails, and she cannot enter a firm. It has been held by a great preponderance of authorities, even under the broadest statutes, that a married woman has no capacity to contract a partnership with her husband, or, in other words, to become a member of a firm in which her husband is a partner, even in those states in which she may embark in another partnership; and though she holds herself out as such partner, and her means give credit to the firm, she is held not liable for the debts, as she cannot, by acts or declarations, remove her own disabilities."

In Speier v. Opfer (1888) 73 Mich. 35, 2 L.R.A. 345, 16 Am. St. Rep. 556, 40 N. W. 909, it appeared that a husband and wife held property jointly, and contracted for the erection of a building upon land which had been deeded to them jointly. The enabling statutes gave married woman the power to contract only in regard to her separate property. The court held that, this property being held jointly with her husband, she could not be sued on the contract.

In Payne v. Thompson (1886) 44 Ohio St. 192, 5 N. E. 654, it appeared that a partnership agreement had been entered into between husband and wife, and suit was brought on debts incurred by such firm. The statute gave married women power to bind themselves in certain respects by their contracts, but no power was given them to engage in business as partners with their husbands, and it was therefore held that the partnership agreement was invalid and that a recovery could not be had against the wife.

In Gwynn v. Gwynn (1887) 27 S. C. 525, 4 S. E. 229, it appeared that a husband and his wife entered into a partnership agreement. It was sought to hold the wife under the agreement. The statute of South Carolina provided that a married woman could "contract and be contracted with as to her separate property in the same manner as if she were unmarried." This statute was construed to apply only to her separate property, and it was held that she could not enter into a partnership agreement, since the property invested was no longer her separate property when she became a copartner with others. The court said: "But if, on the other hand, the alleged contract of partnership could be regarded as an agreement on the part of the wife to put her separate property into the partnership as a part of its capital, the very moment it was so put in, it would at once cease to be her separate property and would become the property of the partnership, and hence any contract subsequently made by the alleged partnership could not be regarded as a contract made by the wife 'as to her separate property,'—the only kind of contract which she has the capacity to make,—and she could not, therefore, be bound thereby. A married woman being thus denied the capacity to assume one of the liabilities necessarily incident to the partnership relation, it would seem to follow necessarily that she has no power to form such a relation."

In Carey v. Burruss (1882) 20 W. Va. 571, 43 Am. Rep. 790, the statutes granting the power to married women to contract were construed as not permitting a feme covert to enter into a partnership agreement with anyone. The court said: "Our Married Women's Law remains unchanged from what it was originally. It went into effect on April 1. 1869, and is to be found in the 66th chapter of our Code, p. 447. No portion of this act, either expressly or by implication, can be construed in any manner to remove the legal incapacity of a married woman to make any contract, while she is living with her husband, except we so construe the first three sections. These are substantially the same as the New York Statutes of 1848 and 1849; and indeed two of these sections are copied from these New York laws, excepting only a proviso, which we have added to the third section, which has no bearing on the question before us. Now the New York cases we have cited above have construed these sections, and have decided that they in no manner removed or affected the legal incapacity of a married woman to make any contract. And if our views as expressed above are correct, they could reach no other conclusion; for these sections could have no possible influence on the capacity of a married woman to make any contract which would be recognized by a law court, unless this effect were to be deduced from their converting, as they do, the equitable separate estate of a married woman into a legal estate. And we have seen that, both on reason and on the weight of the authorities, this conversion of a married woman's separate estate from an equitable to a legal estate has no effect upon her capacity at law to make a contract." It is to be observed that the New York cases referred to were subsequently overruled. See the preceding subdivision of this note.

In Board of Trade v. Hayden (1892) 4 Wash. 263, 16 L.R.A. 530, 31 Am. St. Rep. 919, 30 Pac. 87, 32 Pac. 224, it was sought to hold a wife for the firm debts of a partnership of which she was a member with her husband and others. A statute provided that a married woman could make contracts and incur liabilities as if unmarried, and gave her full power to manage and dispose of her own property. The court construed this to exclude the wife's right to contract with her husband and hence she could not make a partnership agreement. The court, in commenting on the statute, said: "In the foreground of the discussion is placed the proposition that the purpose of the statute is to free the wife from the control and influence of her husband, and to relieve her property from his debts and management; but the next following suggestion, that, unless she become his partner, she will not be wholly free, if yielded to, will place her and her property within the touch of the very dangers which it is sought in the first place to withdraw her from. Her improvident husband, by the most ordinary persuasion, or by his mere declaration, made in her presence, as in the case at bar, could, in spite of her, unless she assumed a hostility which would endanger the continuance of the marriage relation, waste and dissipate her entire estate, and thus the very purpose which it seems to us stands out the most clearly in the act in question, i. e., to secure her protection in the management and enjoyment of her estate, would be defeated."

In Fuller & F. Co. v. McHenry (1892) 83 Wis. 573, 18 L.R.A. 512, 53 N. W. 896, there was involved a statute of Wisconsin authorizing a married woman to make contracts in relation to her separate estate. A wife having attempted to enter into a partnership with her husband, the court held that debts incurred by the firm could not be collected from her, saying: "The guarded terms of this section show that her right to transact business in her own name, beyond the scope of the power implied from the ownership, use, and enjoyment of a separate estate, is denied, except in the particular emergencies specified. The wife has not, therefore, in our judgment, the power to enter into an agreement of partnership with her husband, nor, as for that matter, with anyone else, if she has no separate estate in respect to which she can be considered as a feme sole, so as to bind herself at law." E. C. B.

CITY STREET IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

F. E. PEARSON, Respnt.

California Supreme Court (In Banc)—December 8, 1919

(181 Cal. 640, 185 Pac. 962.)

Bills and notes — absence of consideration — assessment in excess of authority.

1. A note given by a property owner to secure extension of time for payment of an assessment against his property for street improvements which was invalid because in excess of the statutory limit is without consideration and unenforceable.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1326.]

Public improvements — provision for assessments — effect of appeal.

2. Where, by the provisions of the charter and ordinances of a city providing for street improvements, it is made mandatory that, in case the assessment shall exceed 50 per cent of the assessed value of the property, provision must be made for instalment payments, failure to make such provision cannot be cured by appeal to the board of supervisors.

— curative provisions — validity.

3. Provisions cannot be made by municipal ordinance for curing defects in assessments for street improvements which contravene the terms of the city charter.

— curing fundamental defects.

4. Provisions for curing defects in street improvement proceedings do not apply to any of the preliminary steps in the proceedings which the statute requires to be taken to confer jurisdiction upon the body in charge thereof.

Contract — consideration — extension of baseless demand.

5. Extension of time to pay a baseless demand, and forbearance to sue thereon during the time allowed, are not a valid consideration for a contract.

[See 6 R. C. L. 661.]

(Olney and Lawlor, JJ., dissent.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco (Crothers, J.) in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover an amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Adams & Adams, for appellant:

An agreement to forbear to sue to foreclose a lien, in good faith believed by plaintiff to be valid, but which in fact may be invalid, constitutes a sufficient consideration for the execution of the note.

Longridge v. Dorville, 5 Barn. & Ald. 117, 106 Eng. Reprint, 1136; Callisher v. Bischoffsheim, L. R. 5 Q. B. 449, 39 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 181, 18 Week. Rep. 1127; Cook v. Wright, 1 Best. & S. 559, 121 Eng. Reprint, 822, 30 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 321, 4 L. T. N. S. 704; Ockford v. Barelli, 25 L. T. N. S. 504, 20 Week. Rep. 116; Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co. L. R. 32 Ch. Div. 266, 55 L. J. Ch. N. S. 801, 54 L. T. N. S. 582, 34 Week. Rep. 669; Kingsford v. Oxenden, 7 Times L. R. 13; Di Iorio v. Di Brasio, 21 R. I. 208, 42 Atl. 1114; Grandin v. Grandin, 49 N. J. L. 508, 514, 60 Am. Rev. 642, 9 Atl. 756; Prout v. Pittsfield Fire Dist. 154 Mass. 450, 28 N. E. 679; Wahl v. Barnum, 116 N. Y. 87, 5 L.R.A. 623, 22 N. E. 280; Union Bank v. Geary, 5 Pet. 99, 8 L. ed. 60; Morris v. Munroe, 30 Ga. 630; Rue v. Meirs, 43 N. J. Eq. 377, 12 Atl. 369; McKinley v. Watkins, 13 Ill. 140; Fish v. Thomas, 5 Gray, 45, 66 Am. Dec. 348; Wells & Morris v. Brown, 67 Wash. 351, 121 Pac. 828, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 317; Sellars v.

Jones, 164 Ky. 458, 175 S. W. 1002; Blount v. Wheeler, 199 Mass. 330, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1036, 85 N. E. 477; Sheppey v. Stevens, 185 Fed. 147; Mackin v. Dwyer, 205 Mass. 472, 91 N. E. 893; Silver v. Graves, 210 Mass. 26, 95 N. E. 948; Bellows v. Sowles, 55 Vt. 391, 45 Am. Rev. 621; Grochowski v. Grochowski, 77 Neb. 506, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 484, 109 N. W. 742, 112 N. W. 335, 15 Ann. Cas. 300; Moss v. Cohen, 158 N. Y. 240, 53 N. E. 8; Snohomish River Boom Co. v. Great Northern R. Co. 57 Wash. 693, 107 Pac. 848; Lockwood v. Title Ins. Co. 73 Misc. 296, 130 N. Y. Supp. 824; 1 Elliott, Contr. 235; Sharp v. Bowie, 142 Cal. 462, 76 Pac. 62.

The assessment was not void, and the right of the respondent to resist payment was lost by a failure to appeal to the board of supervisors.

Ryan v. Altschul, 103 Cal. 174, 37 Pac. 339; Bates v. Hadamson, 2 Cal. App. 574, 84 Pac. 51; McDonald v. Conniff, 99 Cal. 386, 34 Pac. 71; Kenny v. Kelly, 113 Cal. 366, 45 Pac. 699; Perine v. Lewis, 128 Cal. 366, 45 Pac. 422, 772; City Securities Co. v. Harvey, 176 Cal. 682, 169 Pac. 380.

The note given in payment of the street work was not executed under a mutual mistake of fact.

Barfield v. Price, 40 Cal. 535; Goode now v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 461, 76 Am. Dec. 540; Kenyon v. Welty, 20 Cal. 637, 81

(181 Cal. 640, 185 Pac. 962.)

Am. Dec. 137; Christy v. Sullivan, 50 Cal. 337, 19 Am. Rep. 655; Boggs v. Fowler, 16 Cal. 565, 76 Am. Dec. 561; Kopp v. Gunther, 95 Cal. 63, 30 Pac. 301.

Messrs. Hugo D. Newhouse and Jesse A. Mueller, for respondent:

If an assessment is void, the owner need not appeal to the board of supervisors, but may rely upon such fact when it is attempted to enforce the assessment.

Pacific Paving Co. v. Berso, 12 Cal. App. 362, 107 Pac. 590; Partridge v. Lucas, 99 Cal. 519, 33 Pac. 1082; Donnelly v. Howard, 60 Cal. 291; Ryan v. Altschul, 103 Cal. 174, 37 Pac. 339; DeHaven v. Berendes, 135 Cal. 178, 67 Pac. 786; Capron v. Hitchcock, 98 Cal. 427, 33 Pac. 431.

Where the subject of a contract is not in existence, and there has been a mutual mistake about its existence, the contract made under such mistake of fact is void.

Barfield v. Price, 40 Cal. 535; Iowa Loan & T. Co. v. Schnose, 19 S. D. 248, 103 N. W. 22, 9 Ann. Cas. 255; Stahl v. Schwartz, 67 Wash. 25, 120 Pac. 866; Warder v. Tucker, 7 Mass. 449, 5 Am. Dec. 62.

There was no consideration for the note in suit.

Com. v. Adams, 114 Mass. 323, 19 Am. Rep. 362; People v. Pearne, 118 Cal. 158, 50 Pac. 376; Hatch v. Hanson, 46 Mo. App. 323.

The assessment in controversy was, in its origin, and now is, unlawful.

Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 27 Pac. 735; Re Groome, 94 Cal. 69, 29 Pac. 487; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 941, note 4; Chateau v. Singla, 114 Cal. 91, 33 L.R.A. 750, 55 Am. St. Rep. 63, 45 Pac. 1015; 9 Cyc. 465, 475-480; Morgan v. Menzies, 60 Cal. 341.

Primarily, and independently of any ordinance on the subject, the assessment is void, because in contravention of the negative provisions of subd. 3 of § 8 of chapter 11, article 6, of the city charter, as limited by a proviso engrafted upon it by § 33 of the same chapter.

Baggage & O. Transfer Co. v. Portland, 84 Or. 343, L.R.A.1917F, 1080, 164 Pac. 570; Iowa-Teleph. Co. v. Keokuk, P.U.R.1916B, 141, 226 Fed. 82; Platt v. San Francisco, 158 Cal. 74, 110 Pac. 304; Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 353; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 688; McDonald v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 245; Thomason v. Ruggles, 69 Cal. 465, 11 Pac. 20; Oakland Paving Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 479, 11 Pac. 3; Ewing v. Oroville Min. Co. 56 Cal. 649; Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385; Pacific Electric Co. v. Los Angeles, 118 Fed. 746; Hurford v. Omaha, 4 Neb. 336; Donahue v. Graham, 61 Cal. 276; Wren v. Dixon, 40 Nev. 170, 161 Pac. 722, 167 Pac. 324, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 1064.

The resolution of intention was not in the form prescribed by § 28 of the ordinance, and it, and the subsequent proceedings dependent thereon, are nullities.

Ogden City v. Armstrong, 168 U. S. 224, 234-236, 42 L. ed. 444, 450, 451, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 98; Zeigler v. Hopkins, 117 U. S. 683, 687, 688, 29 L. ed. 1019-1021, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 919; Keese v. Denver, 10 Colo. 112, 15 Pac. 825; Schwiesau v. Mahon, 128 Cal. 114, 60 Pac. 683; Fay v. Reed, 128 Cal. 357, 60 Pac. 927; Turrill v. Grattan, 52 Cal. 97; Wilcox v. Engebretsen, 160 Cal. 288, 116 Pac. 750; Townsend v. Tal-lant, 33 Cal. 45, 54, 91 Am. Dec. 617; Kertchem v. George, 78 Cal. 597, 21 Pac. 372; Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 388, 19 Am. Rep. 658.

The assessment is a unit, and therefore void as an entirety.

Ryan v. Altschul, 103 Cal. 174, 37 Pac. 339; Partridge v. Lucas, 99 Cal. 519, 33 Pac. 1082; Donnelly v. Howard, 60 Cal. 291; Dyer v. Chase, 52 Cal. 440; Kenny v. Kelly, 113 Cal. 364, 45 Pac. 699.

Since the assessment is a unit, and absolutely void as an entirety, it cannot be apportioned.

Hedges v. Dixon County, 150 U. S. 182, 187-192, 37 L. ed. 1044, 1046-1048, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71, affirming 37 Fed. 304; Prickett v. Marceline, 65 Fed. 469, affirmed in 15 C. C. A. 700, 32 U. S. App. 767, 69 Fed. 462; State ex rel. Dexter v. Gordon, 251 Mo. 303, 158 S. W. 683; Harmony v. Truman, 128 C. C. A. 544, 212 Fed. 4, reversing 205 Fed. 549, s. c. 198 Fed. 557.

The assessment, being illegal, because made in violation of law, imposed no obligation, either legal or moral; and therefore the alleged forbearance to enforce the same was no consideration for the note in question.

Woollacott v. Meekin, 151 Cal. 701, 91 Pac. 612; Pacific R. Adv. Co. v. Carr, 29 Cal. App. 722, 157 Pac. 529; Scheeline v. Pezzola, 29 Cal. App. 266, 155 Pac. 127.

Shaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff sued to recover upon a promissory note for $612.77. Defendant answered, alleging want of consideration for the note. The court found that it was wholly without consideration, and gave judgment for the defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff made certain improvements of the street in front of the defendant's property in San Francisco, under a contract with the board of public works, executed in pursuance of the proceedings taken for that purpose. An assessment for the cost thereof was issued to plaintiff. The amount assessed against defendant's property was $1,225.54. Plaintiff demanded payment, and threatened to foreclose the assessment if payment was not made. Defendant asked for an extension of time, and after some negotiation an agreement was reached whereby defendant paid $612.77, being one half of the assessment, and executed to the plaintiff the note in suit, payable in ninety days, for the remaining half. The lien of the assessment was not formally released, but plaintiff agreed not to foreclose during the time covered by the note. Both parties at that time believed that the assessment was valid, and that it constituted a valid lien on defendant's property, and in that belief the note was given and accepted.

Two questions are presented: (1) Was the assessment void? (2) If it was void, was the note based on a lawful and valuable consideration?

1. The proceedings for the street improvement were taken under an ordinance of the board of supervisors of San Francisco, providing the procedure therefor, under the authority of § 33, chapter II., of article 6, added to the city charter by the amendment of 1913. This section authorizes the board of supervisors to adopt an ordinance providing a method of procedure for the improvement of streets, and for an assessment upon private property to defray the expense thereof. It contains the following additional provision: "In such ordinance, if said board deems it expedient, provision may be made for the payment of any assessment levied in pursuance of the provisions thereof in annual instalments covering a term not to exceed ten years upon [such] conditions as to said board may seem reasonable and just, the rate of interest to be paid on such payments not to exceed 7 per cent per annum. In any proceeding for the improvement of streets wherein provision is made for the payment of any assessment in annual instalments, the amount of such assessment shall not be limited by the provisions contained in subd. 3 of § 8 of this chapter." Stat. 1913, p. 1623.

The provisions of subd. 3 of § 8, referred to in the foregoing quotation, are as follows: "No assessment shall be levied upon any property, which, together with all assessments for street improvements that may have been levied upon the same property during the year next preceding, will amount to a sum greater than 50 per centum of the value at which said property was assessed upon the last preceding assessment book of the city and county." Stat. 1899, p. 297.

In pursuance of the authority given by § 33 aforesaid, the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, on October 27, 1913, adopted an ordinance providing a procedure to be followed in San Francisco in making improvements upon streets and assessing the expense thereof upon private property. The proceedings in question were taken under this ordinance, and the question to be determined is whether or not they were valid under the ordinance and the aforesaid provisions of the charter. The proceedings for the street improvement were begun by a resolution of expediency adopted by the board of public works on May 20, 1914. The work was completed on March 11, 1915, and the assessment was issued on May 5, 1915. The assessed value of the property of the defendant for the year 1914, that being the year in which the contract for the improvement was let, was $2,260. One half of this sum, $1,130, was the limit of the amount which the city authorities had power to assess against defendant's property, unless provision was made for the payment thereof in annual instalments, as provided in § 33 aforesaid. The objection to the assessment is that no such provision was made, and that, in consequence thereof, the assessment is void. The plaintiff, in answer to this proposition, contends that this defect in the proceeding is not jurisdictional; that it could have been cured by the appeal to the board of supervisors provided for in § 21 of the ordinance fixing the procedure. For the understanding of this question it will be necessary to state in some detail the provisions of said ordinance.

It is first provided that the board of public works, deeming that public convenience requires a street improvement, the expense of which should be assessed upon private property, shall by resolution declare such expediency, briefly describing the improvement, and cause plans and specifications therefor to be prepared (§ 3); that after such plans and specifications are prepared the board "shall pass a resolution of its intention to recommend to the supervisors that said improvements be ordered to be made," referring therein to the plans and specifications, and fixing a day for taking action upon the matter, of which day notice shall be given (§ 4); that at the time fixed in the notice, if no objections are made, the board of public works shall "pass a resolution recommending to the supervisors that they order such improvements to be made" (§ 7); that the supervisors may, in their discretion, order that not exceeding one half of the expense of the work may be paid out of the city treasury (§ 7); that the improvement so proposed may be ordered by the board of supervisors by ordinance adopted in the manner provided by chapter I., article 2, of the charter (§ 7). When the improvements are thus ordered, bids shall be advertised for, and the contract for the work let to the lowest bidder. Section 16 of the ordinance contains a provision as follows: "No assessment shall be levied upon any property, which, together with all assessments for street improvement that may have been levied upon the same property during the year last preceding, will amount to a sum greater than 50 per centum of the value at which said property was assessed, exclusive of improvements thereon, upon the assessment book of the city and county current at the date of the passage of the resolution of intention, except, however, as in this ordinance hereinafter provided."

Section 18 provides that if, at the time street work is done, none of the methods provided in the ordinance is sufficient to authorize the board of public works to make an assessment to pay for the expense thereof, the board, before it passes "a resolution of its intention to recommend the ordering of said work or improvement," shall establish by resolution a method by means of which such assessment shall be made, and that when the work is done the assessment shall be made according to the method so established. The ordinance provides in the usual manner for the issuance of an assessment and warrant to the contractor for the expense upon the completion of the work to the satisfaction of the board of public works. Section 28 is as follows: "Any assessment imposed under the provisions of this ordinance may be paid in annual instalments, not exceeding 10 in number, whenever the board of public works shall so determine and declare in the resolution of intention or whenever the board of supervisors shall so determine and declare in the ordinance ordering the work, and it shall be mandatory for the board of public works to so determine and declare in every case when the amount of the assessment imposed will exceed one half of the assessed value of the lot or parcel of land against which such assessment is imposed. Such resolution or ordinance shall state the number of instalments in which the assessment may be paid, and the rate of interest to be charged on all deferred payments, which rate of interest shall not exceed 7 per centum per annum."

The ordinance further provides that any person aggrieved by any act of the board of public works in the matter, or who claims that the work has not been properly performed, or having any objection to the correctness or legality of the assessment, shall, within thirty days after the date of the warrant, appeal to the supervisors, and that, upon such appeal, the supervisors may remedy and correct any error in the acts of the board of public works or in the assessment, and cause said board to correct the warrant assessment or diagram in any particular so as to conform to their decision upon the appeal; that the decisions of the supervisors on such appeal "shall be final and conclusive upon all persons entitled to appeal under the provisions of this section as to all errors, informalities, and irregularities which the supervisors might have avoided or have remedied during the progress of the proceedings, or which they can at that time remedy;" and that "no assessment, . . . and no proceedings prior to the assessment, shall be held invalid by any court for any error, informality, or other defect in the same, where the resolution of intention of the board of public works to recommend to the supervisors the ordering of the improvement has been actually published and posted and the notices of improvement posted as in this ordinance provided." Section 21.

The proceedings for this assessment did not conform to the provisions of this ordinance regarding cases in which the assessment amounts to more than half of the assessed value of the property for general taxation for the current year, as was the case here. Neither the resolution of intention of the board of public works to recommend the making of the improvement nor the ordinance of the board of supervisors, ordering the work to be done, nor any resolution, order, or ordinance of either body, declared or provided that the assessment should be paid in instalments, or made any provision on that subject. The consequence was that the entire assessment, under the terms of the ordinance, became due and payable immediately upon the issuance of the warrant, and a suit to foreclose the same could have been begun at the expiration of thirty-five days thereafter. Sections 19 and 22. If the proceedings had been valid, the contractor would have had the right to insist upon this date of maturity.

The above-quoted provision of § 8, chapter II., article 6, of the charter, forbids the making of such an assessment in such a case. Section 33, above quoted, qualifies this prohibition so far as to allow an assessment of that amount to be made under a method of procedure ordained by the board of supervisors, if provision is made in the proceeding for the payment of the assessment in instalments, but not otherwise. The provision for instalment payments can only be made in the manner prescribed in the procedure ordinance. The board of supervisors and the board of public works, in making improvements and levying assessments under the provisions of an ordinance adopted under § 33 aforesaid, are acting as agents under a special power, and they cannot lawfully act at all except as authorized by the terms of the law under which they act. They are as much limited by the terms of the ordinance of the supervisors, providing the procedure, as they would be if they were acting under some street improvement act enacted by the legislature. The ordinance declares that, in order to authorize instalment payments, the board of public works must "so determine and declare in the resolution of intention;" or, as an alternative thereto, the board of supervisors must "so determine and declare in the ordinance ordering the work." It is declared to be mandatory that the resolution thus referred to shall so state whenever "the amount of the assessment imposed will exceed one half of the assessed value of the lot or parcel of land" to be assessed. Section 28. Furthermore, the provisions of § 18, above mentioned, require that the board of public works, if none of the methods provided in the ordinance is sufficient to authorize an assessment to pay for the expenses of an improvement, shall, before it passes the resolution of its intention to recommend the ordering of the work, establish an adequate method for making the assessment. It is difficult to give this section any meaning, unless it was intended to require the board of works to look into the matter at the beginning, and provide for instalments if it found that the assessment was likely to exceed one half of the tax valuation on the properties.

The contention that this departure from the authorized procedure could have been lawfully cured or corrected on appeal to the board of supervisors, had such appeal been taken, cannot be sustained. Section 28 of the procedure ordinance, it will be noted, provides that, in every case where the assessment will exceed one half the tax valuation, "it shall be mandatory" that the board of public works shall first determine, and then declare in its resolution of intention, that payment of the assessments may be made in annual instalments. Section 18 of that ordinance, if we interpret it aright, also requires such preliminary determination. And §§ 8 and 33 of chapter II. of article 6 of the charter withhold entirely from the two boards the power to make such an assessment, unless it is made in the manner to be prescribed by the procedure ordinance which § 33 authorizes the supervisors to adopt. Under that ordinance, the resolution of intention of the board of public works, together with the notices to be given of the time of taking action thereon, comprise the mode, and the only mode, whereby either of said boards can obtain jurisdiction of such a proceeding or power to make any assessment. It is very clear from all these provisions that, in a case where the necessary assessment for the work will exceed one half of the assessed value of the land for the current year, they cannot obtain such jurisdiction or power, except by determining to make the assessment payable in annual instalments, and inserting in the resolution of intention of the board of public works a declaration to that effect. This, of course, could not be done by the supervisors in deciding the appeal. It could not lawfully be done at all after the contract was let, for the contractor would then have a contractual right to immediate payment upon the completion of the work.

Curative provisions in a law of this character may cure any defect that does not go to the jurisdiction of the board over the proceeding. It has been said that they may cure any defect arising from the omission of any step in the proceeding which the legislature might have itself omitted from the law, if it be a thing not essential to due process of law, or necessary to comply with some other constitutional prerequisite. Ramish v. Hartwell, 126 Cal. 443, 58 Pac. 920; Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 359, 80 Pac. 81. As a general proposition this is a correct statement of the law. The difficulty with its application to the present case is that here the charter, with respect to the powers of the board of supervisors to adopt a procedure ordinance, stands in the place of a constitution; indeed, it is more Public improvements—provision for assessments —effect of appeal.

stringent, for its provisions on this subject constitute a specific grant of power, and not a limitation upon powers included in a general grant. The charter says that an assessment for this amount shall not be made, except it be payable in annual instalments. The curative provision of the ordinance, if allowed the effect contended for, would, in effect, declare that a valid assessment for this excessive amount can be made, although payable immediately and not in instalments, provided no objection thereto is made until after the work is done.

—curative provisions—validity. The prohibition of the charter against such assessments would thus be evaded and defeated.

We think the general rule of construction with regard to curative provisions of this character is that they are not to be considered as intended to apply to any one of those preliminary steps in the proceeding —curing fundamental defects. which the statute itself requires to be taken whereby jurisdiction of the proceeding is to be acquired by the local board or body in charge thereof, unless such intent is expressly declared, or appears by necessary implication. Of course, it could in no case excuse or cure a want of due process of law. And where several material acts are prescribed for obtaining jurisdiction, and are adapted to that purpose, it is difficult to perceive how a general curative clause can be held to apply to any of them. For if it could be applied in one case to excuse the want of one of such acts, it could in another case be made to dispense with another, and so all of them would, one by one, be declared unimportant, and a compliance with any one of them would be sufficient in any case. With respect to the curative provision here involved, we think it must be held that it was not intended to allow a disregard of the jurisdictional acts which the ordinance itself expressly declares shall be mandatory. Our conclusion is that the assessment against the property of Pearson was void. This brings us to the second question.

2. There was no dispute or difference between the parties concerning the existence or nonexistence of any fact, nor regarding the validity or invalidity of the claim of the plaintiff. Both parties acted with the belief, or upon the tacit assumption, that it was a valid demand and an enforceable lien upon the property. So far as the evidence shows, neither party knew the amount of the tax valuation for the current year. Even if the claim had constituted a valid lien against the property, it would not have been a personal obligation of the defendant, but a mere lien upon his property, enforceable only by foreclosure. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 254. It does not appear that the plaintiff asserted that Pearson was personally liable for the claim. The asserted lien was not released, and there was no agreement or understanding that it should be released. The fact that the assessment was more than 50 per cent of the tax valuation was a matter which appears of record, and could not be, and was not, disputed by either party. There was therefore no consideration whatever for the note, other than the extension of time to the defendant wherein to pay a claim that he was under no obligation to pay at all, and the corresponding forbearance of plaintiff for ninety days to foreclose the claim of lien which was of no validity, and which, if foreclosed and the land sold thereunder, would have given the purchaser no title thereto.

On behalf of the plaintiff it is contended that a promise given in consideration of an extension of time to pay a demand, and a corresponding forbearance to sue during the time allowed, is based upon a good consideration, even if it appears that the demand was of no legal validity, and there was no doubt or dispute concerning the facts upon which it was founded. In support of this proposition a number of decisions are cited. Upon examination we find that each of them comes within the well-established rule that a promise given in consideration of the settlement or compromise of a dispute or controversy, the event of which is uncertain or doubtful, or even in consideration of the forbearance to sue upon or the extension of time of payment of a lawful demand, is founded upon a sufficient consideration. Of the cases cited, the nearest in analogy to the case at bar is Young v. French, 35 Wis. 111. In that case the defendant was in possession of logs, with power to sell them on commission. His sales depended upon his continued possession. The plaintiff claimed a lien against the logs for a demand against the owner, and threatened to file such lien. Defendant promised plaintiff to pay his demand if he would refrain from filing the lien, which the plaintiff thereupon did; defendant holding possession of the logs by means of his promise. The decision was expressly put on the ground that the defendant had thus retained possession of the logs, and was enabled to exercise his right to sell them on commission, and that plaintiff had relinquished his right to file a claim of lien, and that these respective concessions and benefits were sufficient consideration for the promise. It was said that, under these circumstances, it was immaterial whether the plaintiff's claim to a lien was valid or not.

Bills and notes—absence of consideration—assessment in excess of authority.

The decision was correct, but it is not applicable here. Where there has been a compromise of doubtful claims, or concessions and benefits given and received in good faith, as consideration for a promise, the actual validity of the claims is immaterial; otherwise, as remarked by Mr. Wharton: "There could be no compromise of litigation, since there is no litigation . . . in which one or the other party, if the case be pressed to judgment, does not fail to make out his case."

Wharton, Contr. § 533; McClure v. McClure, 100 Cal. 343, 34 Pac. 822.

But in the same section that author states that "a promise to compromise a claim utterly unfounded will not be regarded as a valuable consideration."

In Elliott on Contracts, vol. 1, § 235, it is said: "If the claim threatened to be enforced is invalid or worthless, a promise not to attempt to enforce or to refrain from making trouble concerning it is not a consideration, recognized by the law as valuable."

In 8 C. J. at page 238, the rule is stated thus: "The actual forbearance or the promise to forbear to prosecute a claim on which one has a right to sue is a sufficient consideration; but such forbearance is no consideration, if it is clear that no action would lie."

Other writers state the same doctrine. 1 Beach, Contr. § 176; Bishop, Contr. § 70; 1 Chitty, Contr. § 39; 1 Parsons, Contr. § 441. An examination of the cases cited by these writers shows that the text is fully supported. There has been no decision of this court precisely on the point involved, but it was presented to the district court of appeal in Pacific R. Adv. Co. v. Carr, 29 Cal. App. 722, 157 Pac. 529. There the plaintiff presented to defendant a claim against a corporation in which the defendant was the principal stockholder. The claim against the corporation was invalid. The defendant agreed to assume the claimed indebtedness and executed a note therefor, and upon its maturity she executed another note in renewal. The action was upon the last note. The court said: "The consideration for her note was the purported obligation of the company upon this contract; but there was no obligation, either express or implied. This being true, it cannot be said there was any consideration for the execution of the note sued upon. Clearly, if suit had been brought upon the contract against the Amritam Company, no recovery could have been had thereon upon a showing of the facts here presented. And if there was nothing upon which to base an action against the Amritam Company, it must follow that plaintiff, in releasing the company from liability which did not exist, suffered no prejudice by reason thereof."

And it was said that, unless there was some uncertainty or doubt concerning the validity of the claim for which the note was given, it did not come within the category of a compromise of a doubtful or disputed claim, and there was no consideration for the new promise. We cite a few of the many cases establishing this doctrine: Nicholson v. Neary, 77 Wash. 294, 137 Pac. 492; Daniel v. Hughes, 196 Ala. 368, 72

So. 23; Ernst Bros. v. Hollis, 86 Ala. 513, 6 So. 85; Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 147, 39 Am. Rep. 355; Foster v. Metts, 55 Miss. 82, 30 Am. Rep. 504.

In this case there was no disputed claim, no compromise of a doubtful right, no release of the lien of the plaintiff, and there was no valid claim against the defendant in existence.

Contract—
consideration—extension of baseless demand.

The claimed lien was wholly without foundation and absolutely void, and it constituted no consideration for a promise to pay the demand or any part thereof.

The judgment is affirmed:

We concur: Lennon, J.; Wilbur, J.; Melvin, J.

We dissent: Olney, J.; Lawlor, J.

ANNOTATION.

Validity of promise based on invalid paving assessment.

The general principles regulating the validity of the compromise and settlement of doubtful and unfounded claims are well stated in the reported case (CITY STREET IMPROV. CO. v. PEARSON, ante, 1317). A disputed or doubtful claim is a good consideration for an executory contract of compromise, while a claim utterly unfounded is not. See also 5 R. C. L. pp. 879 et seq. A question of difficulty arises, however, in determining whether the claim which furnishes the basis of the compromise falls in one class or the other. No cases other than the reported case (CITY STREET IMPROV. CO. v. PEARSON) have been found in which the sufficiency of an invalid paving assessment as a consideration for a compromise was decided. Nor has a case been found in which the sufficiency of such a consideration for a promise, other than by way of compromise, is discussed. As may be observed, in the reported case, the invalid paving assessment is held not to be sufficient consideration to support a compromise. W. A. E.

EVELYN P. FERRY, Appt.,

v.

SPOKANE, PORTLAND, & SEATTLE RAILWAY COMPANY et al.

United States Supreme Court — April 10, 1922.

(— U. S. —, 66 L. ed. —, 42 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358.)

Constitutional law — privileges and immunities — dower right.

1. Dower is not a privilege or immunity of citizenship, either state or Federal, within the meaning of the provision of U. S. Const. article 4, § 2, that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states, or of the declaration of U. S. Const. 14th Amendment, that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1330.]

—equal protection of the law — non-residents — dower.

2. Limiting the dower right of a nonresident to the lands of which the husband died seised, while residents are entitled to dower in any lands of which the husband was seised during coverture, does not deny the equal protection of the laws.

—due process of law — barring dower.

3. The legislature of a state having the power to give or withhold dower, it follows that it has the power to declare the manner in which the dower may be barred, or the grounds upon which it may be forfeited; and, if so, it has the right to provide, so far as any question of due process of law is concerned, that it may be barred as to property of which the husband did not die seised, by the wife's nonresidence in the state.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, affirming a decree of the District Court for the District of Oregon dismissing a bill filed to establish a dower right.; Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Henry L. Brant, Charles Haldane, Francis L. Patton, Jr., James G. Wilson, and George B. Guthrie, for appellant:

The "privileges and immunities" section of art. 4, § 2, of the United States Constitution and of the 14th Amendment thereto, protects citizens of other states in the enjoyment of substantial rights, and is not circumvented by statutes designed to discriminate on the mere basis of non-residence.

Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 3,230; Magill v. Brown, Brightly, N. P. 346, note, Fed. Cas. No. 8,952; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 418, 20 L. ed. 449; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165; Re Stanford, 126 Cal. 122, 45 L.R.A. 788, 58 Pac. 462; Re Mahoney, 133 Cal. 180, 85 Am. St. Rep. 155, 65 Pac. 389; Re Johnson, 139 Cal. 532, 96 Am. St. Rep. 161, 73 Pac. 424; Chalker v. Birmingham & N. W. R. Co. 249 U. S. 522, 63 L. ed. 748, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 366; Travis v. Yale & T. Mfg. Co. 252 U. S. 60, 64 L. ed. 460, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 228; United States v. Wheeler, 254 U. S. 281, 65 L. ed. 270, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133.

"Citizenship" and "residence," while not strictly synonymous under all circumstances, are practically so, so far as they are used in the Oregon statutes and as they apply to the case at bar.

Chalker v. Birmingham & N. W. R. Co. 249 U. S. 522, 63 L. ed. 748, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 366; Travis v. Yale & T. Mfg. Co. 252 U. S. 60, 64 L. ed. 460, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 228.

The right to succeed to property in one state by a citizen residing in another state is protected by art. 4, § 2, of the Federal Constitution, and by the 14th Amendment thereto.

Magill v. Brown, Brightly, N. P. 346, note, Fed. Cas. No. 8,952; Re Stanford, 126 Cal. 112, 45 L.R.A. 788, 58 Pac. 462; Re Mahoney, 133 Cal. 180, 85 Am. St. Rep. 155, 65 Pac. 389; Re Johnson, 139 Cal. 532, 96 Am. St. Rep. 161, 73 Pac. 424.

A state has no right to penalize a person for removing from the state, either by fine, or tax, or the deprivation of any property right based merely on such removal.

Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. 36, 18 L. ed. 745; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Chalker v. Birmingham & N. W. R. Co. and Travis v. Yale & T. Mfg. Co. supra.

The right of dower is just as fundamental and substantial as the right of inheritance or succession to property; and the states may not discriminate against citizens of other states in applying laws of dower, inheritance, or succession.

Magill v. Brown, supra; Re Stanford, 126 Cal. 112, 45 L.R.A. 788, 58 Pac. 462; Re Mahoney, 133 Cal. 180, 85 Am. St. Rep. 155, 65 Pac. 389; Re Johnson, supra.

Messrs. Charles H. Carey, James B. Kerr, and Omar C. Spencer, for appellees:

A woman not a resident of the state is not entitled to dower in the lands therein, of which her husband did not die seised.

Thornburn v. Doscher, 13 Sawy. 60, 32 Fed. 810; Cunningham v. Friendly, 70 Or. 222, 139 Pac. 928, 140 Pac. 989; Woolsey v. Draper, — Or. —, 201 Pac. 730; Pratt v. Tefft, 14 Mich. 191; Ligare v. Semple, 32 Mich. 438; Stringer v. Dean, 61 Mich. 196, 27 N. W. 886; Bennett v. Harms, 51 Wis. 251, 8 N. W. 222; Ekegren v. Marcotte, 159 Wis. 539, 150 N. W. 969; Atkins v. Atkins, 18 Neb. 474, 25 N. W. 724; Miner v. Morgan, 83 Neb. 400, 119 N. W. 781; Burr v. Finch, 91 Neb. 417, 136 N. W. 72; Buffington v. Grosvenor, 46 Kan. 730, 13 L.R.A. 282, 37 Pac. 137.

The right of a state to define marital property rights as between residents and nonresidents is directly recognized by the Supreme Court.

Conner v. Elliott, 18 How. 591, 15 L. ed. 497.

There is a just ground for the distinction between residents and nonresidents in the statute, and therefore § 2 of article 4 of the Federal Constitution does not apply.

LaTourette v. McMaster, 248 U. S. 465, 63 L. ed. 362, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 160; Maxwell v. Bugbee, 250 U. S. 525, 63 L. ed. 1124, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 2; Travis v. Yale & T. Mfg. Co. 252 U. S. 60, 64 L. ed. 460, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 228; Shaffer v. Carter, 252 U. S. 37, 64 L. ed. 445, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221; Anderson v. Durr (U. S. Adv. Ops. 1921-22, p. 18) — U. S. —, 66 L. ed. —, 42 Sup. Ct. Rep. 15.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

By a bill filed in the district court of the United States for the district of Oregon, appellant asserted a dower right in one half part of certain land in possession of the railway company.

The bill was dismissed on motion of the railway company, and the company was awarded judgment for costs. On appeal by the complainant in the suit, the judgment was affirmed. Against the affirmance this appeal is prosecuted.

The law of Oregon provides: "The widow of every deceased person shall be entitled to dower, or the use, during her natural life, of one half of the lands whereof her husband was seised of an estate of inheritance at any time during the marriage, unless she is lawfully barred thereof." § 7286.

"A woman being an alien shall not on that account be barred of her dower; and any woman residing out of the state shall be entitled to dower of the lands of her deceased husband lying in this state of which her husband died seised, and the same may be assigned to her, or recovered by her, in like manner as if she and her deceased husband had been residents within the state at the time of his death." § 7306.

Appellant adduces against the validity of § 7306, the provision of § 2 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States that "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states," and the provisions of the 14th Amendment, which declare that no state shall "make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States," or "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," or "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Dower is not a privilege or immunity of citizenship, either state or Federal, within the meaning of the provisions relied on. At most it is a right which, while it exists, is attached to the marital contract or relation; and it always has been deemed subject to regulation by each state as respects property within its limits. Conner v. Elliott, 18 How. 591, 15 L. ed. 497. Neither § 2 of article 4 nor the 14th Amendment takes from the several states the power to regulate this subject; nor does either make it a privilege or immunity of citizenship. Maxwell v. Bugbee, 250 U. S. 525, 537, 538, 63 L. ed. 1124, 1130, 1131, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 2, and cases cited; United States v. Wheeler, 254 U. S. 281, 296, 65 L. ed. 270, 274, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133.

Constitutional law—privileges and immunities—dower right.

The further contention, based on the 14th Amendment, necessarily is, as counsel urge, that dower is "fundamental and substantial"—"a property right, being, while inchoate, a chose in action, of which no citizen of the United States, wherever he [she] may be resident, can be deprived without 'due process of law,' and as to which every person is entitled to the 'equal protection of the laws,' as provided in the 14th Amendment of the Constitution."

The court of appeals considered this contention, and it is difficult to add anything to its opinion. It pointed out that the Oregon statute was taken from the laws of Michigan, adopted in 1846, and sustained.¹ The example of Michigan was followed in Wisconsin, Kansas, and Nebraska, and sustained by the courts of those states.²

To the decisions of those courts we may add Thorburn v. Doscher, United States district court for Oregon, 13 Sawy. 60, 32 Fed. 810, which sustained the Oregon statute, as did the supreme court of Oregon in Cunningham v. Friendly, 70 Or. 222, 139 Pac. 928, 140 Pac. 989. And we may add also Richards v. Bellingham Bay Land Co. 4 C. C. A. 290, 7 U. S. App. 494, 54 Fed. 209, which decided to be legal a like statute of the state of Washington.

¹ Pratt v. Tefft, 14 Mich. 191; Ligare v. Semple, 32 Mich. 438; Stringer v. Dean, 61 Mich. 203, 27 N. W. 886.

² Bennett v. Harms, 51 Wis. 251, 8 N. W. 222; Ekegren v. Marcotte, 159 Wis. 539, 150 N. W. 969; Atkins v. Atkins, 18 Neb. 474, 25 N. W. 724; Miner v. Morgan, 83 Neb. 400, 119 N. W. 781; Buffington v. Grosvenor, 46 Kan. 730, 13 L.R.A. 282, 27 Pac. 137.

20 A.L.R.—84.

And Blackstone speaks of dower as having become "a great clog to alienation," and "otherwise inconvenient to families." 1 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. 278, in note.

The cases recognize that the limitation of the dower right is to remove an impediment to the transfer of real estate, and to assure titles against absent and probably unknown wives. And such is the purpose of the Oregon statute, and the means of executing the purpose appropriate, and a proper exercise of classification. It satisfies, therefore, the constitutional requirement —equal protection of the law—nonresidents—dower. of the equal protection of the laws; and we proceed to the inquiry whether the statute is otherwise valid.

Appellant's contention is that, though she be living in New York, it is her privilege, under the 14th Amendment, to resist the law of Oregon as a limitation of her dower rights; that is, a limitation of rights in property situated in Oregon. The contention might be tenable if the legislature of a state was required to grant dower rights. As repellent of that proposition, the difference the laws of the states exhibit in the rights that attach to the marriage relation may be adduced. The states greatly differ as to what lands are dowable, and as to what claims are paramount to dower, and, to some extent, how it will be barred. 4 Kent, Com. 35 et seq.

The granting of dower, therefore, is a matter of statutory regulation. It was so decided by the United States district court of Oregon in 1887 (Thorburn v. Doscher, supra), Judge Deady expressing it as follows: "It rests with the legislature to say what interest, if any, married persons shall have in the property of each other, as an incident of the relation between them. It may give or withhold dower altogether. Or it may, for the security of titles and the protection of innocent purchasers, provide that a nonresident woman whose very existence is probably unknown within the state, and is practically disavowed by the husband, shall not be entitled to dower of lands which he has disposed of without her concurrence or consent, and ostensibly as a single man." The law thus declared has been the law of Oregon for sixty-five years.

There is a distinction between dower created by the parties and that given by law, and the latter "it is believed to be the only kind which ever obtained in this country." Randall v. Kreiger, 23 Wall. 137, 148, 23 L. ed. 124, 126. Expressing the power of the legislature over it, the court said: "During the life of the husband the right is a mere expectancy or possibility. In that condition of things, the lawmaking power may deal with it as may be deemed proper. It is not a natural right. It is wholly given by law, and the power that gave it may increase, diminish, or otherwise alter it, or wholly take it away. It is upon the same footing with the expectancy of heirs, apparent or presumptive, before the death of the ancestor. Until that event occurs, the law of descent and distribution may be molded according to the will of the legislature."

The ruling is a deduction or incident of the more general principle expressed in Kerr v. Moon, 9 Wheat. 565, 569, 6 L. ed. 161, 162, "that the title to, and the disposition of, real property, must be exclusively subject to the laws of the country where it is situated." And this was so considered and the case cited in Thomas v. Woods, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1180, 97 C. C. A. 535, 173 Fed. 585, 593, 19 Ann. Cas. 1080, along with a number of other cases, to sustain the court in the declaration and decision that "the right of dower in real property is determined by the laws of the state in which the property is situated."

From these cases it results, as said by the circuit court of appeals, that, "the legislature having this power to give or withhold dower, it follows that it has ^{—due process of law—barring} the power to declare the manner in which the dower right may be barred, or the grounds upon which it may be forfeited, and, if so, it has the right to provide that it may be barred by the wife's nonresidence in the state." [268 Fed. 120.]

The action of the court, affirming the decree of the District Court, is affirmed.

ANNOTATION.

Constitutionality of statutes in relation to dower.

The construction of the statutes, except so far as affected by consideration of constitutional limitations, is not within the scope of the annotation.

In general.

By the great weight of authority the wife's right of dower may, at any time before the husband's death, be enlarged, abridged, or abolished.

United States.—Randall v. Kreiger (1875) 23 Wall. 137, 23 L. ed. 124; Thornburn v. Doscher (1887) 13 Sawy. 60, 32 Fed. 810; Richards v. Bellingham Bay Land Co. (1893) 4 C. C. A. 290, 7 U. S. App. 494, 54 Fed.

209; Ferry v. Spokane, P. & S. R. Co. (1920) 268 Fed. 117.

Alabama.—Boyd v. Harrison (1860) 36 Ala. 533; Ware v. Owens (1868) 42 Ala. 212, 94 Am. Dec. 642.

Illinois.—Sturgis v. Ewing (1856) 18 Ill. 176; Henson v. Moore (1882) 104 Ill. 403; McNeer v. McNeer (1892) 142 Ill. 388, 19 L.R.A. 256, 32 N. E. 681 (overruling Russell v. Rumsey (1864) 35 Ill. 362).

Indiana.—Noel v. Ewing (1857) 9 Ind. 37; Taylor v. Stockwell (1878) 66 Ind. 505; Green v. Estabrook (1906) 168 Ind. 123, 120 Am. St. Rep. 349, 79 N. E. 373.

Iowa. — Lucas v. Sawyer (1864) 17 Iowa, 517.

Kansas. — Buffington v. Grosvenor (1891) 46 Kan. 730, 13 L.R.A. 282, 27 Pac. 137; Hamblin v. Marchant (1918) 103 Kan. 508, 6 A.L.R. 1403, 175 Pac. 678.

Maine. — Barbour v. Barbour (1858) 46 Me. 9; McAllister v. Dexter & P. R. Co. (1910) 106 Me. 371, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 726, 76 Atl. 891, 21 Ann. Cas. 486.

Minnesota. — Morrison v. Rice (1886) 35 Minn. 436, 29 N. W. 168; Griswold v. McGee (1907) 102 Minn. 114, 112 N. W. 1020, 113 N. W. 382, 12 Ann. Cas. 186.

Mississippi. — Magee v. Young (1866) 40 Miss. 164, 90 Am. Dec. 322.

Missouri. — Chouteau v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 122 Mo. 375, 22 S. W. 458, 30 S. W. 299.

Nebraska. — Miner v. Morgan (1909) 83 Neb. 400, 119 N. W. 781.

New York. — Lawrence v. Miller (1848) 1 Sandf. 516; Moore v. New York (1851) 4 Sandf. 456, affirmed in (1853) 8 N. Y. 110, 59 Am. Dec. 473.

Pennsylvania. — Melizet's Appeal (1851) 17 Pa. 449, 55 Am. Dec. 573.

Washington. — Hamilton v. Hirsch (1884) 2 Wash. Terr. 223, 5 Pac. 215.

West Virginia. — Thornburg v. Thornburg (1881) 18 W. Va. 522.

Wisconsin. — Bennett v. Harms (1881) 51 Wis. 251, 8 N. W. 222.

In Randall v. Kreiger (U. S.) supra, upholding a state statute enacted before the husband's death, which had the effect to validate a deed executed under a joint power of attorney from husband and wife, which at the time it was given was not authorized by the law of Minnesota where the real property was situated, the court, as to the right of dower, said: "During the life of the husband the right is a mere expectancy or possibility. In that condition of things, the lawmaking power may deal with it as may be deemed proper. It is not a natural right. It is wholly given by law, and the power that gave it may increase, diminish, or otherwise alter it, or wholly take it away. It is upon the same footing with the expectancy of heirs, apparent or presumptive, before the death of the ancestor. Until that event occurs, the law of descent and distribution may be molded according to the will of the legislature."

The right of dower not existing by virtue of contract, the obligation of a contract is not impaired by the modification of the law which governs it prior to the husband's death. Boyd v. Harrison (Ala.) supra.

So, the interest of a wife under a statute declaring that one half her husband's property shall be set apart to her upon his death may be changed or destroyed by statute before the husband's death. Hamblin v. Marchant (Kan.) supra.

And it is competent for the legislature, before the husband's death, to change the relative rights of husband and wife after marriage, and to substitute for dower inchoate another and larger estate, to be carved out of that of the husband after his death. Noel v. Ewing (Ind.) supra.

So, a statute providing that a wife shall not be entitled to dower if her separate property is equal in value to what would be her portion of her husband's real and personal property is, with reference to the rights of married women whose husbands were living at the date of its enactment, a legitimate exercise of the power of the legislature. Magee v. Young (Miss.) supra.

So, too, it is competent and constitutional for the legislature to provide that in acquiring the estate of a husband in land, subject to public use, the inchoate right of dower therein is suspended during the existence of the public use. Chouteau v. Missouri P. R. Co. (Mo.) supra.

And the legislature has the power to pass an act providing that a wife who voluntarily leaves her husband without such just cause as would entitle her to divorce, and lives separate and apart from him at his death, shall be debarred of her dower inheritance. Thornburg v. Thornburg (W. Va.) supra.

A statutory provision that, in all cases of judicial sales of real estate in which a married woman had an inchoate interest by virtue of her marriage, such interest, if not directed by the judgment to be sold, should be absolutely vested in the wife, in the same manner and to the same extent as upon the death of her husband, whenever, by virtue of such sale, the legal title of the husband should become absolutely vested in the purchaser, was held to apply to all sales upon judgment rendered, after its passage, upon contracts entered into before its passage, and was not in conflict with the provisions of the state and Federal Constitutions, prohibiting the enactment of any statute impairing the obligations of contracts. Accordingly, it was further held that where a husband, before the passage of such law, executed his promissory note, upon which, after the passage of such act, the payee recovered judgment to satisfy which the land was sold on execution, his wife was entitled to the interest given her by the statute in the land sold. Taylor v. Stockwell (1878) 66 Ind. 505.

And in Green v. Estabrook (1906) 168 Ind. 123, 120 Am. St. Rep. 349, 79 N. E. 373, this statute was held not to be invalid as depriving the husband of his property, since it did not attach until all his interest in the premises sold on execution was irretrievably lost. The court declared that the authority of the lawmaking power over the marriage relation and its incidents was clearly sufficient to uphold the statute.

There are a few cases which seem to be opposed to the general rule, and which hold that it is beyond the power of the legislature to change the relative rights of husband and wife to the extent of giving the wife enlarged dower rights, even when no rights of third persons have vested prior to the passage of the act enlarging such dower rights. Sutton v. Askew (1872) 66 N. C. 172, 8 Am. Rep. 500; Wesson v. Johnson (1872) 66 N. C. 189; Jenkins v. Jenkins (1880) 82 N. C. 208.

In Sutton v. Askew (N. C.) supra, holding that an act giving a widow dower in all lands of which her husband was seised during coverture, instead of in the lands only of which the husband died seised, as was the law before the act was passed, could not apply to parties whose marriage was contracted before it took effect, since it was beyond the power of the legislature to increase dower rights springing from former marriages, the court reasoned that thus to increase the dower right would be interfering with the vested right of the husband.

And Sutton v. Askew was followed in Wesson v. Johnson (1872) 66 N. C. 189, in which it was held that the same statute was unconstitutional, so far as it applied to marriages contracted previous to its passage, and that a widow whose marriage took place before its enactment had no interest in land mortgaged by her husband without her joining therein.

A curative act which attempts to legalize a husband's conveyance of his wife's dower rights, under power of attorney given him by the wife for that purpose, is unconstitutional where, by statute, a wife is prohibited from granting her husband power of attorney to alienate her right of dower. Swartz v. Andrews (1908) 137 Iowa, 261, 126 Am. St. Rep. 285, 114 N. W. 888.

The opinion expressed in Williams v. Courtney (1883) 77 Mo. 587, that the legislature has not the power to divest inchoate right of dower, was stated in Chouteau v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 122 Mo. 375, 22 S. W. 458, 30 S. W. 299, to be disapproved and not to be followed.

Discrimination against nonresident.

The decision in the reported case (FERRY v. SPOKANE, P. & S. R. Co. ante, 1326) that a statute limiting the dower rights of a nonresident wife to the land of which her husband died seised, while a resident wife is entitled to dower in any land of which her husband was seised during coverture, is constitutional, is supported by Buffington v. Grosvenor (1891) 46 Kan. 730, 13 L.R.A. 282, 27 Pac. 137, holding that there is no unconstitutional discrimination against a nonresident widow under the Federal Constitution, 14th Amendment, where by statute it is provided that a conveyance by her husband of his property is sufficient to cut off her interest, if she was not then, and never had been, a resident of the state.

So, in Miner v. Morgan (1909) 83 Neb. 400, 119 N. W. 781, it was held that a statute providing that a non-resident widow should have dower only in lands of which her husband died seised, while a resident widow was entitled to dower in lands of which the husband was seised during coverture, was not unconstitutional as denying the equal protection of the laws, or as denying due process of law.

And to the same effect is Bennett v. Harms (1881) 51 Wis. 251, 8 N. W. 222. [Bennett v. Harms was overruled in Ekegren v. Marcotte (1915) 159 Wis. 539, 150 N. W. 969, but only as to the construction placed upon the statute.]

And see also Thornburn v. Doscher (1887) 13 Sawy. 60, 32 Fed. 810; Pratt v. Tefft (1866) 14 Mich. 191; Ligare v. Semple (1875) 32 Mich. 438; Atkins v. Atkins (1885) 18 Neb. 474, 25 N. W. 724, and Cunningham v. Friendly (1914) 70 Or. 222, 139 Pac. 928, 140 Pac. 989, which recognize the constitutionality of such a statute.

The court in the Thornburn case (Fed.) supra, said: "It rests with the legislature to say what interest, if any, married persons shall have in the property of each other, as an incident of the relation between them. It may give or withhold dower altogether, or it may, for the security of titles and the protection of innocent purchasers, provide that a nonresident woman whose very existence is probably unknown within the state, and is practically disavowed by the husband, shall not be entitled to dower of lands which he has disposed of without her concurrence or consent, and ostensibly as a single man."

As affecting rights previously vested by contract or death of husband.

Legislation affecting dower rights will not be upheld if it divests vested rights. M'Cafferty v. M'Cafferty (1846) 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 218; Strong v. Clem (1859) 12 Ind. 37, 74 Am. Dec. 200; Logan v. Walton (1859) 12 Ind. 639; Frantz v. Harrow (1859) 13 Ind.

507; Strong v. Dennis (1859) 13 Ind. 514; Hoskins v. Hutchings (1871) 37 Ind. 324; May v. Fletcher (1872) 40 Ind. 575; Taylor v. Sample (1875) 51 Ind. 423; Parkham v. Vandeventer (1882) 82 Ind. 544; Helphenstine v. Meredith (1882) 84 Ind. 1; Davis v. O'Ferrall (1853) 4 G. Greene (Iowa) 168; Young v. Wolcott (1855) 1 Iowa, 174; Moore v. Kent (1873) 37 Iowa, 20, 18 Am. Rep. 1; Bottomf v. Lewis (1903) 121 Iowa, 37, 95 N. W. 262; Given v. Marr (1847) 27 Me. 212; Curtis v. Hobart (1856) 41 Me. 230; Morrison v. Rice (1886) 35 Minn. 436, 29 N. W. 168; Talbot v. Talbot (1883) 14 R. I. 57.

Thus, so far as the husband and wife, or the widow and heirs, are concerned, the legislature has full control of the subject of dower prior to the husband's death; but such is not the case when the legislation would affect the rights of innocent purchasers. Vested rights and the obligation of contracts cannot be impaired. Davis v. O'Ferrall (1853) 4 G. Greene (Iowa) 168.

So, a statute abolishing dower and substituting fee simple was held in Strong v. Clem (1859) 12 Ind. 37, 74 Am. Dec. 200, to be unconstitutional and void so far as it operated to divest rights vested under a previous conveyance by the husband to a third person, in which the wife did not join although it was effective to destroy the wife's inchoate right of dower. And this case was followed as authority in Logan v. Walton (1859) 12 Ind. 639.

And the rule laid down in Strong v. Clem (Ind.) supra, was applied in Hoskins v. Hutchings (1871) 37 Ind. 324, where a widow claimed one third in fee simple of land mortgaged by her husband alone before the passage of the statute. In reply to this claim the court said that when the mortgage was executed it gave the creditor a valid lien on the land, subject only to the contingent right of the wife to dower, if she should survive her husband; and that it was beyond the power of the legislature to "increase the interest of the wife, and in the same proportion diminish that of the mortgagee, without incurring the charge of having impaired the obligation of the contract. The creditor has here a specific lien upon the mortgaged premises which cannot be taken away from him, without an evident infraction of the Constitution of the United States, and a violation of a plain principle of justice and right."

In Hilton v. Thatcher (1906) 31 Utah, 360, 88 Pac. 20, it was held that a statute that gives a widow an estate in fee in her husband's land, instead of a third interest for life as dower, cannot be made effective retroactively as against a prior purchaser from the husband. [Although the point is not within the scope of the annotation, it may be noted that the court in this case, by holding that the statute did not create a new right, but enlarged the common-law right, held that the widow was entitled to the common-law right of dower as against the prior purchaser, thus avoiding the result reached in Strong v. Clem (Ind.) supra, of holding that the widow had no right at all.]

In M'Cafferty v. M'Cafferty (1846) 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 218, supra, it was held that a statute which gave a wife, divorced for the fault of her husband, dower in the same manner as if he were dead, could not affect a title procured from the husband prior to the enactment of the law. The court said that the purchaser held a vested right in the land conveyed, subject to the contingency of the dower right of the wife should she survive her husband. "To subject these lands by a subsequent law to the right of dower upon the happening of some other event would not only be depriving the owners of a vested right, but it would also be impairing the obligation of the grant or contract under which they hold that right. To do this is beyond the constitutional power of the legislature." And to the same effect is Comly v. Strader (1848) Smith (Ind.) 75.

The legislature cannot enlarge dower rights of a widow as against the rights of one who has contracted for a judgment lien on the property of the husband, in view of the constitutional provision against impairing the obligation of contracts, although the judgment is not actually entered until after the statute is passed. Davidson v. Richardson (1907) 50 Or. 323, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 319, 126 Am. St. Rep. 738, 89 Pac. 742, 91 Pac. 1080.

In Bottorff v. Lewis (1903) 121 Iowa, 27, 95 N. W. 262, it was held that the dower interest of a widow which had become vested upon the death of her husband could not be increased by subsequent legislation to the prejudice of the heirs.

And see Swartz v. Andrews (1908) 137 Iowa, 261, 126 Am. St. Rep. 285, 114 N. W. 888, which held unconstitutional an act which deprived a widow of her vested right of dower.

A statute that provides that the court may authorize the owner of an estate in fee to give security for the annual value of dower assigned to a widow in lieu of an estate out of the rents, issues, and profits, out of which it was assigned, even though the widow be unwilling, is, in so far as it affects dower assigned before its enactment, unconstitutional and void. Talbot v. Talbot (1883) 14 R. I. 57.

J. H. B.

J. T. WILKERSON et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

CITY OF ROME et al.

Georgia Supreme Court — February 18, 1922.

(152 Ga. 762, 110 S. E. 895.)

Constitutional law — requiring Bible to be read in public schools.

1. The ordinance enacted by the city commission of Rome, requiring Headnotes by GILBERT, J.

some portion of the King James version of the Bible of either the Old or New Testament to be read and prayer offered to God in the hearing of the pupils daily during the regular sessions of the school, is not in conflict with either of the following paragraphs of the Constitution of Georgia: (a) Article 1, § 1, ¶ 12, which reads as follows: "All men have the natural and inalienable right to worship God, each according to the dictates of his own conscience, and no human authority should in any case control or interfere with such right of conscience." (b) Article 1, § 1, ¶ 13, which reads as follows: "No inhabitant of this state shall be molested in person or property, or prohibited from holding any public office or trust, on account of his religious opinions; but the right of liberty of conscience shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the state." (c) Article 1, § 1, ¶ 14, which reads as follows: "No money shall ever be taken from the public treasury, directly or indirectly, in aid of any church, sect, or denomination of religionists, or of any sectarian institution."

[See note on this question beginning on page 1351.]

Schools — control — municipal charter.

2. Under the terms of the charter of the city of Rome, the board of education has supervision and control over the public schools of said city, subject to the provisions of the charter and the ordinances lawfully passed by the city commissioners.

Mandamus — to require reading of Bible in school.

3. Mandamus is a proper remedy to require the board of education of the city of Rome to perform the duty imposed by the ordinance of the city of Rome, because mandamus is the only adequate, specific, and complete remedy to enforce such duty. While courts will not undertake to control the exercise of matters intrusted to the discretion of public school officers, nor to compel such officers to do in a specific manner any act which involves discretion and judgment, it will issue to command said officers to act in the exercise of their discretion. [See 18 R. C. L. 124; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 786.]

— absolute writ.

4. The court did not err, for any of the reasons stated, in granting a mandamus absolute.

(Beck, P. J., and Hines, J., dissent.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Floyd County (Wright, J.) to review a judgment in favor of petitioners in a proceeding for a writ of mandamus to compel defendants to put in effect an ordinance requiring religious exercises in the public schools of the plaintiff city. Affirmed.

Statement by Gilbert, J.:

The city of Rome, E. E. Lindsay as chairman of the commission of the city of Rome, and E. E. Lindsay as a citizen of that city filed a petition against the individual members of the board of education of the city, reciting that it is the duty of the board of education, under the charter of the city, to supervise and control the public schools of the city in accordance with the provisions of the charter and ordinances of the city, and to carry into effect all ordinances duly and regularly adopted by the commission of the city of Rome with reference to the government and conduct of the schools, and that said board of education has refused to carry into effect the provisions of an ordinance adopted by the city commission as follows, to wit: "Be it ordained by the board of commissioners of the city of Rome, Georgia, and it is hereby ordained by authority of the same, that the board of education shall require some portion of the King James version of the Bible, of either the Old or New Testament, to be read and prayer offered to God in the hearing of the pupils of the public schools of the city of Rome daily during the regular sessions of these schools and that such time shall be allowed and appointed for these exercises as will admit of their being conducted with order and impressiveness. That these readings and prayers shall be conducted by the principals of said schools, or by persons invited by them for such services, and the selections of Scripture to be read shall be made by the persons conducting the readings, and the readings shall be without comment. Be it further ordained by the authority aforesaid, that exemption from attendance on these readings and prayers shall be granted to any pupil or pupils whose parents or guardians shall present to the superintendent of the schools request in writing for such exemption upon the ground of conscientious objections."

The prayer is that defendants be compelled by the writ of mandamus to perform the duty required of them by the ordinance.

The defendants filed an answer, in which, after denying that they are under any duty to comply with the provisions of the ordinance, they plead:

(a) Under the terms of the charter of the city of Rome they have authority, without interference from the commission of the city of Rome, to prescribe and put into effect the course of instruction in said schools, and that the ordinance is a usurpation of their powers, privileges, and duties in this respect; that the ordinance is of no legal effect, because it deprives them of their legal right to supervise and control the public schools of the city of Rome, by providing that the readings and prayers required shall be conducted by the principals of said schools, or by persons invited by them for such service, and further providing that the selections of the Scripture to be read shall be made by the persons conducting the readings, and by further providing that the prayers offered to God in the hearing of the pupils of the public school shall be such prayers as the person offering should desire to make without regard to their tenor or effect. Defendants say that this puts the supervision and control of the passages of the Bible read, and prayers offered, in the hands of the principals of the schools, and removes any right or control over such principals from the board of education, and to this extent vests in the said principals the power and authority of selecting the course of instructions or readings from the Bible, without regard to the opinion of the board of education, or its right and duty to supervise and control the said schools. The said ordinance further in this endeavors to vest the principals of the schools with the right, duty, and authority to select and invite other persons to read the Bible and offer prayer. Said readings and offering of prayers, if it be a religious exercise, is prohibited by the law in public schools, as stated; and if it be a course of instructions, then the person delivering said course of instructions must of necessity be a teacher, and the absolute right of selecting the teachers for the public schools is vested in the board of education by the charter of the city of Rome, and this ordinance is violative of such provision of the charter. Also, that this proceeding for mandamus is useless and of no effect, for the reason that said ordinance prescribes what shall be done by said principals of the public schools, and if the same is valid and enforceable there is no necessity for the board of education to enforce the same.

(b) That the charter of the city provides a remedy for the failure of the school board to properly perform their duties, such remedy being by removal from office; and therefore mandamus will not lie.

(c) Said ordinance is in violation of article 1, § 1, ¶ 12, of the Constitution of Georgia.

(d) Said ordinance is in violation of article 1, § 1, ¶ 13, of the Constitution of Georgia.

(e) That said ordinance is in violation of the Constitution of the state of Georgia as contained in ¶ 14, § 1, art. 1, in that the reading of the King James version of the Bible, either in its entirety or in part, and prayer, without any restriction on or guide for the person offering the prayer, is in aid of the Protestant sect of the Christian Church. Such version of the Bible is contrary to the beliefs, opinions, and teachings of the Roman Catholic sect of the Christian Church, and the reading of the New Testament therein is contrary to the beliefs and opinions of those holding the Jewish faith, and there are many Roman Catholics in the city of Rome, whose children or dependents attend the public schools, and who pay taxes on their property for the support and maintenance of the public schools, and there are many persons of the Jewish faith whose children or dependents attend the public schools, and who pay taxes for the maintenance of the public schools, besides other probable sects and religions. Furthermore, there are only seven principals of the public schools in the city of Rome, and each and all of them are members of the Protestant sects of the Christian religion. These persons are vested with the right to read such portion of said version of the Bible as they may desire, and to offer such prayers as they see fit, and furthermore to invite persons to perform such acts, without restriction or guide. Such prayers may be highly sectarian, and the defendants have no power under said ordinance to prohibit the same. The defendants officially represent the city of Rome and the people of the city, no matter what their religious views, opinions, or convictions may be. The ordinance in question is violative of the three paragraphs of the Constitution above set out, as well as of the charter of the city of Rome. No matter what may be said or given as a reason for the passage of said ordinance, it was passed for the purpose and has the effect of giving religious instruction to the children attending the public schools in the Protestant branch of the Christian religion; and such persons as would not desire their children or dependents to receive such instructions are simply allowed to have them exempt from such instructions, but nevertheless the money which they pay for taxes is in part used for giving such religious instructions.

Messrs. Willingham, Wright, & Covington for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Max Meyerhardt, Graham Wright, and Maddox & Doyal for defendants in error.

Gilbert, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The portions of the Constitution of this state now under consideration are all found in the Bill of Rights, art. 1, § 1, ¶¶ 12, 13, and 14. These paragraphs, declaring three distinct principles, may be referred to in their order as: (1) Freedom of religious conscience; (2) freedom of civil status; and (3) freedom from taxation for sectarian purposes. The precise question made in this case must not be overlooked. The reasons for the contention that the ordinance is violative of the above-mentioned paragraphs of the Constitution are as follows: First, that the reading of the King James version of the Bible is in aid of the Protestant sect of the Christian religion. Second, that such version is contrary to the beliefs, opinions, and teachings of the Roman Catholic sect of the Christian religion. Third, that it is contrary to the beliefs and opinions of those holding the Jewish faith. Fourth, that there are many persons of the Jewish faith and others not of the Protestant Christian sect who pay taxes for the maintenance of the public schools, and that the principals of the public schools are all of the Protestant sect; and therefore there would be a discrimination and violation of the freedom from taxation clause of the Constitution. It will conduce to a clearer construction by tracing to their origin the paragraphs of the Constitution referred to, and ascertaining the evils intended to be cured by them. The founders and early settlers of America consisted in large part of persons who fled from the religious persecutions of the old world to the shores of the new world in search of religious freedom. In establishing a government for themselves founded upon principles of religious liberty, they were by no means ungodly or insensible to the benefits of Christianity. There is abundant historical evidence, as well as the opinions of eminent statesmen and jurists, for the statement that the pioneers in the formation and conduct of American colonial governments did not have it in mind to bring about a complete separation of church and state. Indeed, as stated in 10 Mich. L. Rev. 164: "It is doubtful if in a single one of the colonies, before the Revolution, there was absolute freedom of belief and worship. . . . Thus, in every one of the American colonies the state already endeavored to interfere in matters religious, and in most of them a state church was established."

The colony of Georgia was not an exception to the general rule. In the charter granted to the "Trustees for Establishing the Colony of Georgia in America," it was declared that "there shall be a liberty of conscience allowed in the worship of God, to all persons . . . resident within our said province, and that all such persons, except papists, shall have a free exercise of religion, so they be contented with the quiet and peaceable enjoyment of the same, not giving offense or scandal to the government." McElreath, Ga. Const. § 235; 1 Jones's History of Georgia, 92.

In the year 1758 the province was divided into districts according to parishes. The parish at Savannah was designated as "Christ Church." The church erected there and the burial place appurtenant thereto were designated as "Parish Church and Cemetery of Christ Church."

It was provided that "Bartholomew Zouberbuhler, clerk, the present minister of Savannah, shall be the rector and incumbent of said church of Christ Church, and he is hereby incorporated and made a body politic and corporate, . . . enabled to sue and be sued, and shall have the cure of souls within said parish, and shall be in the actual possession of the said church with its cemetery and appurtenances, . . . together with the glebe land already granted to him."

And it was further provided that for the purpose of church repairs, care of cemeteries, to pay the salaries of the clerk and sexton, the rector and his church officials were authorized to levy a tax on the estate, real and personal, of all the inhabitants within their respective parishes. While the patronage of the Crown and of the colonial assembly was extended in this special manner in aid of churches professing the Episcopal faith, it was not designed to favor them by an exclusive recognition. Apparently it was intended to place the Episcopal Church on much the same basis as it existed in England. Mr. Jones, in his history, says: "There can be no doubt, however, but that it was the intention of the government, both royal and colonial, to ingraft the Church of England upon the province." 1 Jones, History of Georgia, 527.

We have no reported case arising in the colony of Georgia, involving the freedom of religious conscience clause of the royal charter to Georgia; but in the colony of Massachusetts, where a similar religious-liberty covenant existed, the question did arise. The provision in the colonial statute of Massachusetts was substantially identical with the ordinance of Rome, Georgia, now under consideration, except that the former, in addition to providing for the reading of the Bible and prayer, also provided "that the pupils learn the Ten Commandments and repeat them once a week." In this case, Com. v. Cooke, decided in 1859, reported in 7 Am. Law Reg. O. S. 417, a son of the complainant, eleven years of age, a pupil in a public school, was chastised by the teacher for a refusal to comply with the requirements of the school in the matter. The case arose on the prosecution of the teacher. The court elaborately discussed the question, and, rejecting the contention of the complainant, said in part: "Our schools are the granite foundation on which our republican form of government rests. They were created and are now sustained by our Constitution and laws, and the almost unanimous voice of the people. But a pupil in one of them has religious scruples of conscience, and cannot read or repeat the Commandments, unless from that version of the Bible which his parents may approve. . . . If the plea of conscience and his constitutional rights would protect him from reading the Bible, is it not equally clear that he could not be compelled to hear it read? If, then, these are constitutional rights, secured to the children in our common schools, at any time when one pupil can be found in each public school in the commonwealth with conscientious scruples against reading the Bible, or hearing it read, the Bible may be banished from them, and so the matter of education may be taken from the state government and placed in the hands of a few children. Not Roman Catholic children alone. For if the plea of conscience is good for one form of sectarian religion, it is good for another. The child of a Protestant may say: 'I am a conscientious believer in the doctrine of universal salvation. There are portions of the Bible read in school which it is claimed by others tend to prove a different doctrine; my conscience will not allow me to hear it read, or to read it.' Another objects as a believer in baptism by sprinkling. 'There are passages in the Bible which are believed by some to teach a different doctrine. I cannot read it; conscience is in the way.' Still another objects as a believer in one God. 'The Bible, it is claimed by some, teaches a different doctrine; my conscience will not allow me to read it or to hear it read.' And so every denomination may object for conscience' sake, and war upon the Bible and its use in common schools. Those who drafted and adopted our Constitution could never have intended it to meet such narrow and sectarian views. That section of the Constitution was clearly intended for higher and nobler purposes. It was for the protection of all religions,—the Buddhist and the Brahmin, the Pagan and the Jew, the Christian and the Turk,—that all might enjoy an unrestricted liberty in their religion, and feel an assurance that for their religion alone they should never, by legislative enactments, be subjected to fines, cast into prisons, starved in dungeons, burned at the stake, or made to feel the power of the inquisition."

Antedating the decision of this case, and continuing thereafter under the leadership of Roger Williams of Rhode Island, the movement for the separation of church and state proceeded with ever-increasing volume and strength. It should be clearly understood, however, that this was not a movement for the separation of state from Christianity, but specifically a separation of church and state. Christianity entered into the whole warp and woof of our governmental fabric. Many of the statesmen of this country treated Christianity as a part of the law of the land. In the Declaration of Independence, God, as our creator, was acknowledged as follows: "We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America, in general Congress assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do," etc. "And for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

Edward Thomson, in 20 Case & Comment, 525 et seq., has furnished a most interesting paper on the subject of the relation of religion to our government. He quotes from Coolsey's Constitutional Limitations and Story on the Constitution, showing a construction by these eminent authors with which we find ourselves in accord. He makes the claim that Christianity is the only religion known to our American law; that marriage, usury, the doctrine of charities, and the like, are all derived from the Christian religion. He draws attention to the fact that when our Chief Executive is inaugurated, he is sworn upon the Bible, and he quotes from the last inaugural address of President Cleveland this language: "Above all, I know there is a Supreme Being, whose goodness and mercy have always followed the American people; and I know he will not turn from us now if we humbly and reverently seek his powerful aid."

Similar language is quoted from the addresses of other Presidents, and attention is called to the fact that religious proclamations and national Thanksgiving proclamations have been issued by our Presidents for more than a generation. We will add that General Washington, in his first inaugural address in 1789, said: "It would be peculiarly improper to omit, in this official act, my fervent supplications to that Almighty Being who rules over the universe, who presides in the councils of nations, and whose providential aid can supply every human defect, that his benediction may consecrate to the liberties and happiness of the people of the United States. . . . No people can be bound to acknowledge the invisible hand which conducts the affairs of men more than the people of the United States."

Lincoln, in his famous Gettysburg address, expressed this sentiment: "That this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom."

Daniel Webster, in his great speech in the Girard College Case, said: "The massive cathedral of the Catholic, the Episcopalian church, with its lofty spires pointing heavenward, the plain temple of the Quaker, the log church of the hardy pioneer of the wilderness, the mementoes and memorials around about us, the consecrated graveyards, their tombstones and epitaphs, their silent vaults, their moldering contents, all attest it. The dead prove it as well as the living. The generations that are gone before speak to it and pronounce it from the tomb. We feel it. All, all proclaim that Christianity, general, tolerant Christianity, Christianity independent of sects and parties, that Christianity to which the sword and fagot are unknown, general tolerant Christianity, is the law of the land." 7 Works of Daniel Webster, 176.

Professor Goddard, in 10 Mich. L. Rev. at page 166, said: "In every colony were men who had seen and sorely felt the evils of church control by the state, and to them it must have seemed clear how infinitely the difficulties would be multiplied if the Federal government undertook to interfere in the establishment of any form of religion. At all events, upon the proposition of Charles Pinckney of South Carolina, § 3 of article 6 of the[Federal] Constitution, which provided for the oath to be taken by officers to support the Constitution, closed with that famous clause: 'But no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any officer or public trust under the United States.' The Federal Constitution was afterwards amended, prohibiting any law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Civil Code (1910) § 6684.

The article just referred to denies that this provision of the Federal Constitution can be attributed to atheism, and contends that every one of its members was a believer in God, and most of them were church members, including General Washington. The article further says: "Of all its members Franklin has been regarded as least orthodox. And yet, during its deliberations, when it seemed impossible to harmonize the varying opinions, Franklin offered his celebrated resolution, in which he moved that 'henceforth prayers imploring the assistance of heaven and its blessings upon our deliberations be held in this assembly every morning before we proceed to business, and that one or more of the clergy of the city be requested to officiate in that service.'" In support of this resolution Dr. Franklin, among other things, said: "I have lived, sir, a long time, and, the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth—that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, is it possible that an empire can rise without His aid? We have been assured, sir, in the sacred writings, that 'except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it.' I firmly believe this; and I also believe that, without His concurring aid, we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel." "

Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury, declaring that "no nation can be strong except in the strength of God, or safe except in His defense, the trust of our people in God should be declared on our national coins," ordered the Director of the Mint to prepare a suitable motto. Finally, "In God We Trust" was selected, and for nearly sixty years our national coins have borne that motto. In 1907, during the administration of President Roosevelt, the motto was omitted from the eagle and the double eagle, but, in response to a general demand, the Congress restored it. Catalogue of Coins, Tokens, etc., Treasury Dept. 1914, p. 16. The Constitutions of every state in the Union contain provisions similar to those found in the Constitution of Georgia, and practically all of them, though varying in language, contain the three elements of religious freedom of conscience, freedom of the civil status on account of religion, and freedom from taxation for sectarian purposes.

All of these draw their inspiration from a common source. It is confidently asserted that those cases not in accord with the view which we take have fallen into their error by overlooking the source of their constitutional provisions; to wit, § 16 of the Virginia Bill of Rights of 1776, and the famous Virginia Religious Liberties Statute of 1785, written by Thomas Jefferson. The Virginia Bill of Rights did not include a freedom from taxation clause. The freedom from taxation portion of the Jefferson statute is as follows: "No man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship place or ministry whatsoever."

Considering the words of this statute, it is clear that it intended to prohibit the creation of any state religion or the support of any particular Christian sect. This was so important, in the view of Mr. Jefferson, that he caused it to be written on his epitaph as one of three chief achievements; the other two being the Declaration of Independence and the founding of the University of Virginia. This statute, as written by Mr. Jefferson, was pressed to its adoption by James Madison, and the immediate cause of its passage throws tremendous light upon its meaning. As stated by Mr. Schofield, 2 Constitutional Law, 463: "The immediate cause of that statute was a bill introduced in the Virginia legislature in 1784 to lay a tax for the benefit of the clergy of all Christian sects in Virginia, leaving the taxpayer free to designate on the collector's warrant the particular sect the taxpayer wanted to give his money to."

And further: "Jefferson's statute was not aimed at the Christian religion; it draws a clear line between the clergy and religion; it divorced the church from the state, but not the state, i. e., the people, from the Christian religion."

The first Constitution of Georgia, that of 1777, provided as follows: "All persons whatever shall have the free exercise of their religion; provided it be not repugnant to the peace and safety of the state; and shall not, unless by consent, support any teacher or teachers except those of their own profession." Article 56.

This provision, it will be observed, was not antagonistic to the proposed Virginia Statute of 1784, and did not prohibit all taxation for sectarian purposes. In the Constitution of 1789 the religious liberty provision did not, in substance, differ from that of 1777. In the Constitution of 1798 a similar provision, but not differing in substance from the two previous ones, appears. In the Constitution of 1861, after declaring in the second paragraph that "God has ordained that men shall live under government," it was declared in ¶ 7: "No religious test shall be required for the tenure of any office; and no religion shall be established by law; and no citizen shall be deprived of any right or privilege by reason of his religious belief."

In the Constitution of 1865 the provision of the immediately previous Constitution was in substance repeated, and so it was in the Constitution of 1868. That brings us to the Constitution of 1877, with which we are now dealing, and which was the first to contain the freedom from taxation clause. From an examination of all of them and of their origin, we think it clearly appears that the framers of our constitutions have never intended to declare the policy of this state to be unreligious or unchristian. They did intend, in the Constitution of 1877, to prohibit taxation for the support of any church, denomination, or sectarian institution maintained as a state institution. Indeed, the protection afforded by the Constitution is a protection to individuals, and not to churches; and this theory is in accord with the ablest thinkers on the subject. It is not specifically contended here that the religious beliefs of any individual, certainly not of any adult citizen, are interfered with in an unconstitutional way by the ordinance in question. It is contended that the enforcement of the ordinance would be to instruct the school children in the teachings of the Bible in a manner contrary to the beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church and of those of the Jewish faith. But assuming, for the sake of argument, that the contention is broad enough to include individual members of the church, we think that certainly as to ¶¶ 12 and 13 of the Constitution, relating to religious freedom of conscience and freedom of civil status, there can be no merit in the contention. It would require a strained and unreasonable construction to find anything in the ordinance which interferes with the natural and inalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of one's own conscience. The mere listening to the reading of an extract from the Bible and a brief prayer at the opening of school exercises would seem far remote from such interference. It would be equally difficult to find anything in the ordinance which could in any way molest any inhabitant of this state in person or property, or prohibit him from holding any public office or trust, on account of religious opinions. Finally, when it is noted that pupils whose parents or guardians so request may, under the terms of the ordinance, be excused from attendance on Bible reading and prayers, the whole contention of plaintiffs in error as to ¶¶ 12 and 13 must crumble into nothingness. As to the freedom from taxation clause, paragraph 14, the privilege of the pupil to be excused has no relation. It stands upon quite another basis.

Our Constitution, article 1, § 1, ¶ 14 (Civ. Code 1910, § 6370), declares as follows: "No money shall ever be taken from the public treasury, directly or indirectly, in aid of any church, sect, or denomination of religionists, or of any sectarian institution."

It is this section of the Constitution upon which plaintiffs in error must chiefly depend. Fortunately the meaning of paragraph 14 has already been construed by this court. In the case of First M. E. Church v. Atlanta, 76 Ga. 181, the constitutionality of a statute of the general assembly was attacked on the ground that it was violative of the paragraph of the Constitution now under consideration. The act of the general assembly (Acts 1880-81, p. 359) was one giving to the city of Atlanta authority to grade, pave, and otherwise improve its streets, and to assess the cost thereof against abutting real estate. The city paved streets on each side of the First Methodist Church on Houston, Peachtree, and Pryor streets, and issued a fi. fa. against the church for the amount of the assessment. The trustees of the church filed a petition to enjoin the sale by the city marshal, contending that such property, under the Constitution, was exempted from taxation, and that this was a species of taxation, and that the property of the church was exempt therefrom. The legal question there considered was different from the question now before us, but the interpretation by the court at that time is important. In the opinion the court calls attention to the fact that "no civil officer, from the governor down to the bailiff of a district, no juror or witness, is qualified to enter upon his office, or give testimony in any matter, without taking an oath or equivalent affirmation, to the observance of which he solemnly and reverently appeals to the Supreme Being for help and guidance."

Reference is also made to the fact that "desecration of the Lord's Day is prohibited in various ways and under heavy penalties; worldly affairs, as a general thing, except in cases of necessity, cannot be transacted on Sunday," etc.; that places of religious worship and church services are protected from intrusion. And we will add that in the preamble to the Constitution of Georgia are found these words: "We, the people of Georgia, relying upon the protection . . . of Almighty God, do ordain and establish this Constitution."

In reference to the constitutional provision, article 1, § 1, ¶ 14, the court said: "The manifest object of the provision was to prevent any appropriation or subsidy that might look even remotely to the establishment of a state religion, and thereby prevent the full enjoyment of that freedom of worship secured by the same instrument to every inhabitant of the state. Judge Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 470, 471, has dealt directly with this subject, and has expressed reasons so sound and convincing as to entitle them to the careful study of all who are in pursuit of truth and correct principle, and what was said by him so fully conveys our own views that we offer no apology for transferring it at length to this opinion: 'But while thus careful to establish, protect, and defend religious freedom and equality,' says this eminent author, 'the American Constitutions contain no provisions which prohibit the authorities from such solemn recognition of a superintending Providence in public transactions and exercises as the general religious sentiment of mankind inspires, and as seems meet and proper in finite and dependent beings. Whatever may be the shades of religious belief, all must acknowledge the fitness of recognizing in important human affairs the superintending care and control of the great Governor of the universe, and of acknowledging with thanksgiving His boundless favors, or bowing with contrition when visited with the penalties of His broken laws. No principle of constitutional law is violated when thanksgiving or fast days are appointed; when chaplains are designated for the Army and Navy; when legislative sessions are opened with prayer or the reading of the Scriptures, or when religious teaching is encouraged by a general exemption of the houses of religious worship from taxation for the support of state governments. Undoubtedly the spirit of the Constitution will require, in all these cases, that care be taken to avoid discrimination in favor of or against any one religious denomination or sect; but the power to do any one of these things does not become unconstitutional simply because of its susceptibility to abuse.' Our Constitution, while it takes away the temptation and power to make such discrimination either in favor of or against any one religious denomination or sect, leaves it open to the legislature to encourage religious instruction by exempting from taxation for the support of the state government 'places of religious worship.' Code, § 5182 [1910, § 6554]."

Similar questions have been before the courts of many states. For a consideration of divergent views reference is made to the following as representative, but not as exhaustive. As holding the majority view of the question to the effect that reading extracts from the Bible and prayers in public schools did not offend the constitutional provision against the appropriation of public moneys in aid of sectarian institutions or denominations of religionists, the following cases contain able and comprehensive discussions of the question: Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School Dist. 120 Ky. 608, 69 L.R.A. 592, 117 Am. St. Rep. 599, 87 S. W. 792, 9 Ann. Cas. 36; Pfeiffer v. Board of Education, 118 Mich. 560, 42 L.R.A. 536, 77 N. W. 250; Church v. Bullock, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 100 S. W. 1025; id. 104 Tex. 1, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 860, 109 S. W. 115; Moore v. Monroe, 64 Iowa, 367, 52 Am. Rep. 444, 20 N. W. 475; Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 379, 61 Am. Dec. 256; Spiller v. Woburn, 12 Allen, 127. As entertaining the minority view that such religious readings and prayers are unconstitutional, the following cases are cited for able and elaborate discussion: State ex rel. Freeman v. Scheve, 65 Neb. 853, 59 L.R.A. 927, 91 N. W. 846, 93 N. W. 169; State ex rel. Weiss v. District

Bd. 76 Wis. 177, 7 L.R.A. 330, 20 Am. St. Rep. 41, 44 N. W. 967; People ex rel. Ring v. Board of Education, 245 Ill. 334, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 442, 92 N. E. 251, 19 Ann. Cas. 220. The case of Herold v. School Directors, 136 La. 1034, L.R.A. 1915D, 941, 68 So. 116, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 806, is in line with the majority in so far as it affects those of the Roman Catholic belief, but with the minority in so far as those of the Jewish faith are concerned. From the opinion we quote as follows: "It is generally accepted that the Old Testament was originally written in Hebrew, and that the New Testament was originally written in Greek. The first complete English translation is said to have appeared about the year 1383. The Geneva Bible, embracing the New and Old Testaments, was translated into English at Geneva in 1560, and in London in 1576; it was the first to omit the Apocrypha. There is the King James version, or translation, of the year 1604; the Douai version or translation of the New Testament at Rheims in 1582; and the Old Testament at Douai in 1609. There is Luther's Bible, 1521; and then there is the Rabbinical Bible. There is also the Koran, often called the Mohammedan Bible. There are doubtless differences in the several translations of the Bible just referred to. But it is not within the province of the court in this case to point out these differences, or to give them consideration. The court recognizes the difference between the Rabbinical Bible and the Christian Bible, in that the latter adds to the former the New Testament Scriptures, which are the bases of the Christian religion. There may be other differences, such as the inclusion in the one, and the exclusion from the other, of the Apocrypha. But this difference is immaterial in the matter before the court. Christians make daily use of the Old Testament Scriptures, and the differences between the Rabbinical and Christian editions are not known to the ordinary lay reader beyond the fact that the Christian Bible contains the New Testament. The same condition of mind exists with reference to the Douai and the King James translations. There are said to be some differences and some errors in translation, but they are not known to the ordinary lay reader; and the court is not called upon to point out these differences. They are both Christian Bibles, or the Bibles of the Christians."

In that case it was also held that a requirement that extracts from the New Testament be read in public schools was a discrimination against Jews, because: "He denies that the New Testament is the Word of God, and he denies our Savior. He does not deny most of the moral teachings of Jesus Christ, but he denies His divinity and His resurrection."

In our opinion the ordinance in question is no more a discrimination under the Constitution against those of the Jewish faith than those of the Roman Catholic belief. The mere reading of extracts from the New Testament or the Bible in the public schools cannot, in any legitimate sense, be considered as an appropriation of public moneys to the support or establishment of a system of religion or a sectarian institution. It is true that the teachers of the public schools are paid from the proceeds of public taxation, and that an insignificant fraction of their time would be consumed in the reading. If the theory contended for could once be established, it might easily be carried to an absurd extent. For instance, it might, as an inference from such a ruling, be contended that the inclusion in the school curriculum of books containing denials of the teachings of Darwin, Brahma, Buddha, or Confucius, and the like, would be teaching sectarian doctrines, and therefore in conflict with the Constitution of Georgia. We quite agree with the supreme court of Louisiana that "the court will not concern itself with the differences or alleged errors in the different translations of the Christian Bible or Bible of the Christians."

In the case of Pfeiffer v. Board of Education, 118 Mich. 560, 42 L.R.A. 536, 77 N. W. 250, the question was substantially the same as the one with which we are now dealing. In the opinion it was said: "It is not to be inferred that . . . the convention intended to prohibit in the public schools all mention of a subject [morality and religion] that schools were to be established to foster,—particularly as the provision, when traced to its historic origin [the Virginia Constitution and statute of Jefferson], is shown to have been aimed at quite another evil."

The court decided that the reading of extracts from the Bible is not in violation of any constitutional provision. Paraphrasing the language used in Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 379, 61 Am. Dec. 256, we will say that no theological doctrines are required to be taught. The creed of no sect must be affirmed or denied. There is no necessary interference, by way of instruction, with the views of the scholars, whether derived from parental or sacerdotal authority. "Reading the Bible is no more an interference with religious belief than would reading the mythology of Greece or Rome be regarded as interfering with religious belief or an affirmation of the pagan creeds. A chapter in the Koran might be read, yet it would not be an affirmation of the truth of Mohammedanism, or an interference with religious faith." No one is required to believe, or punished for disbelief, either in its inspiration or want of inspiration, in the fidelity of the translation or its accuracy, or in any set of doctrines deducible or not deducible therefrom. The plaintiffs, in the trial court admitted that the reading of the King James version of the Bible was contrary to the beliefs, opinions, and teachings of the Roman Catholic Church, and that the reading of the New Testament is likewise contrary to the beliefs of those citizens holding the Jewish faith. This can have no effect on the meaning of the Constitution, which, as we hold, fails to show any violation of constitutional rights.

The case of People ex rel. Ring v. Board of Education, 245 Ill. 334, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 442, 92 N. E. 251, 19 Ann. Cas. 220, goes to greatest extremes in taking a contrary view of the question, and for that reason it is selected for discussion. An analysis and criticism of this case by a leading member of the bar of Illinois, a professor in Northwestern University (Illinois) is of peculiar value and should carry more weight for that reason. Such we find in Mr. Schofield's work on Constitutional Law, edited and published after his death by the law faculty of Northwestern University. That the analysis was thorough is shown by the fact that it, together with marginal notes of authorities, comprises pages 459 to 509, inclusive. In that case there was a majority opinion concurred in by five justices, and a dissenting opinion by two justices. It cites as authority the cases of State ex rel. Freeman v. Scheve, 65 Neb. 853, 59 L.R.A. 927, 91 N. W. 846, 93 N. W. 169; State ex rel. Weiss v. District Bd. 76 Wis. 177, 7 L.R.A. 330, 20 Am. St. Rep. 41, 44 N. W. 967, and we think Mr. Schofield is sustained in his statement that neither of these cases is sufficient to support the majority opinion in its entirety, because they hold, at most, that Bible reading may be so conducted in the public schools as to discriminate against those of the Roman Catholic faith, and therefore he concludes that the majority opinion "makes Illinois the only state in the Union which puts the constitutional padlock on the Bible in the public schools." He shows the origin of the Illinois constitutional provisions to be the same as that to which we have traced the Georgia provisions, and thus accounts for the fundamental error in the majority opinion. In reference to the source of these constitutional provisions, he makes the following comment: "Mr. Justice Story concisely expresses, in his work on the Constitution, the effect of the guaranties of religious liberty, as they appear in the Virginia Constitution of 1776 and in the Virginia Statute of 1785, in the Illinois Bill of Rights, and in the 1st Amendment to the Federal Constitution, as limitations on the power of organized government."

And quotes from 2 Story on the Constitution, § 1877: "The real object was . . . to exclude all rivalry among Christian sects, and to prevent any [governmental] ecclesiastical establishment, which should give to a hierarchy the exclusive patronage of . . . the government."

He asserts that the proposition ultimately rests, not on the ground that reading the Bible in the public schools molests a person in the exercise of religious professions, worship, or opinion, but on the ground that reading the Bible in the public schools molests the taxpayer without any regard to his religion or want of religion.

"Reading the Bible in the public schools, even as a mode of worship, does not transform the teachers into an order of clergy to attend upon the offices of religion; nor does it transform the appropriation to pay the salaries of the teachers into an appropriation to help support the clergy of any sect; nor does it transform the school houses into churches or places of worship; nor does it confine the occupation of teaching in the public schools to the members of any sect."

And further: "The truth is, none of the original religious-liberty guaranties, as they appear in the Virginia Constitution and statute and in the Illinois Bill of Rights, either the one for freedom of religious profession, worship, and opinion, or the one for freedom from civil and political disabilities on account of religion, or the one for freedom from taxation to help support any church establishment, ever had any serious application or force as limitations on the power of the legislature to provide public schools and prescribe the public school curriculum."

In regard to the objection that the King James version of the Bible is opposed to the Roman Catholic belief, he says: "The answer is, the objection only shows, at the most, that the King James Bible is non-Roman Catholic, not that it is, of itself and necessarily in a constitutional sense, anti-Roman Catholic."

In regard to the objection on the part of those of the Jewish faith, he says: "The case of a Jew complaining to a court of reading the Bible or instruction in the Christian religion in the public schools raises the question whether the Constitution vests in a Jew, not as a Jew, but as a taxpayer, a constitutional right to command . . . courts to exclude reading the Bible or instruction in the Christian religion from the public school curriculum altogether, merely because it is the Bible or the Christian religion. The answer is, the Constitution does nothing of the kind. The Jew may complain to a court as a taxpayer just exactly when, and only when, a Christian may complain to a court as a taxpayer, i. e., when the legislature authorizes such reading of the Bible or such instruction in the Christian religion in the public schools as gives one Christian sect a preference over others."

The analysis clearly shows the unsoundness of the conclusion reached by the majority of the court in that case, and the absence of authority to sustain it.

The weight of authority among American courts is in accord with the view taken by this court in the case of First M. E. Church v. Atlanta, 76 Ga. 181, to the general effect that the constitutional provisions like article 1, § 1, ¶ 14, of the Constitution of Georgia, were intended to forbid the levy of direct taxation to support the establishment of a state religion, or to forbid any preference or discrimination between religious sects or creeds. The reading of the Scriptures in the public schools does not convert the school into a sectarian institution. The case of First M. E. Church v. Atlanta, supra, was subsequently reviewed and overruled; but there was no modification or change in the construction given to the meaning of article 1, § 1, ¶ 14, of the Georgia Constitution. Atlanta v. First Presby. Church, 86 Ga. 730, 12 L.R.A. 852, 13 S. E. 252. Courts are not concerned with the wisdom of legislation. It is the duty of the court to decide in a proper case whether legislation is in conflict with the Constitution; but in all cases the conflict must be clear and manifest before the court will declare the same void. All doubts must be resolved in favor of the constitutionality, certainly with regard to the Constitution of this state. Construing ¶ 14 of article 1, § 1, in connection with ¶¶ 12 and 13 of the same article of the Constitution of Georgia, as we do, in harmony with the previous expression of this court and with the weight of authority throughout the American Union, we hold that the ordinance of the city of Rome, requiring the board of education to have, through the principals and others, the reading of extracts from the Bible and prayers in the public schools of Rome, is not in conflict with the Constitution of this state for any reason assigned.

Constitutional law—requiring Bible to be read in public schools.

2. The act of the general assembly approved August 19, 1918 (Acts 1918, pp. 813 to 885), providing a new charter for the city of Rome and establishing government by city commissioners in § 83 provided for the establishment of a system of public schools, and further that "the said commission is empowered to maintain and is authorized and empowered to provide by ordinance, in their discretion, for appropriate agencies to regulate, supervise, and carry on said system of public schools, and to render same efficient."

In § 84 it provided that a board of education to consist of five members, "be and the same is hereby established." In § 86 it was provided that said board of education and the individual members thereof shall be amenable to the said city commission, and may be removed from office upon trial and conviction, and that the city commission shall elect the successor of the member or members so removed. In § 87 it was provided that the board of education "shall have supervision and control over said [system of] public schools in accordance with the provisions of this charter and the ordinances of said city." Section 92 of the act provides that it shall be the duty of the board of education to make reports to the city commission, at such times as they may be called upon to do so, of all matters pertaining to said public schools; and further provides that all books, papers, bills, and vouchers of the board shall at all times be open to inspection and examination by the commission or such other agency as they may employ for that purpose. Section 93 provides for a board of visitors for the public schools, and provides that such board of visitors shall make a report to the city commission and the board of education of their work, with such recommendations as they may deem proper concerning the further management of the schools; and § 94 provides: "That the said city commission are authorized and empowered to pass such further ordinances and resolutions, not in conflict with this act, as they may deem for the best interest of said public schools, and further define the duties of said board of education."

All of the sections of the charter of the city of Rome relating to the public school system must be construed together; and, thus construed; we think it is clear that it was the intention of the general assembly to make the board of education amenable to the city commission as expressed by ordinance in all matters not contrary to the charter of the city of Rome or the laws and Constitution of this state. As we view the provisions of the charter, we find no conflict between the provision in § 87 to the effect that the board of education shall have supervision and control over the public schools in accordance with the provisions of the charter and the ordinances of the city, and the other provisions of the charter establishing the board of education; therefore we think the contention made by the plaintiffs in error, that, under the terms of the charter of the city of Rome, the board of education have authority, without interference from the commission of the city, to prescribe and put into effect the course of instructions, and that the ordinance is a usurpation of their privileges and duties in this respect, is without merit. While the board of education is an important agency of the municipal government, and invested with wide discretion and power, it is not independent of the municipal government, but is made subject to and dependent upon the municipal government in all respects within the lawful powers of the latter as above expressed.

3. Mandamus is the proper remedy to require the board of education of the city of Rome to perform the duty imposed by law, where it is the only adequate and specific remedy at law. Mattox v. Board of Education, 148 Ga. 577, 581, 5 A.L.R. 568, 97 S. E. 532. In the present case it is the only adequate, specific, and complete remedy to enforce the terms of the city ordinance in question. Section 86 of the charter of the city, empowering the commissioners to remove the board of education, is not adequate and complete, since the successors of the officers removed would have it in their power to also refuse compli-

Schools—control—municipal charter.

Mandamus
—to require reading of Bible in school.

ance, and so would their successors, and so on ad infinitum, thus bringing about delay and no certainty as to bringing about obedience to the terms of the ordinance. While courts will not undertake to control the exercise of matters intrusted to the discretion of public school officers, or to compel such officers to do in a specified manner any act which involves discretion and judgment, mandamus will issue to command said officers to act or to set them in motion. Richmond County v. Steed, 150 Ga. 229, 103 S. E. 253. Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur, except Beck, P. J., and Hines, J., who dissent.

Beck, P. J., dissents from the judgment in this case on the ground that the court will not undertake, by writ of mandamus and proceedings ancillary thereto, to compel the observance of the ordinance in question.

Hines, J., dissenting:

I dissent from the opinion of the majority in this case. I do so with considerable misgiving, as I am without the aid and comfort of a single one of my associates; but, being committed with my whole soul to the doctrine of religious freedom, including freedom from molestation in matters of conscience, I feel in duty bound to give vent to my inability to agree to the conclusion reached by my able associates.

The ordinance of the city of Rome provides that "the board of education shall require some portion of the King James version of the Bible, of either the Old or New Testament, to be read and prayer offered to God in the hearing of the pupils of the public schools of the city of Rome daily during the regular sessions of these schools; . . . that these readings and prayers shall be conducted by the principals of said schools, or by persons invited by them for such services, and the selections of Scripture to be read shall be made by the persons conducting the readings, and the readings shall be without comment."

This ordinance further provides that "exemption from attendance on these readings and prayers shall be granted to any pupil or pupils whose parents or guardians shall present to the superintendent of the schools request in writing for such exemption upon the ground of conscientious objections."

This ordinance is attacked on the ground that it conflicts with these provisions of the state Constitution:

(a) "All men have the natural and inalienable right to worship God, each according to the dictates of his own conscience, and no human authority should in any case control or interfere with such right of conscience." Article 1, § 1, ¶ 12.

(b) "No inhabitant of this state shall be molested in person or property, or prohibited from holding any public office or trust, on account of his religious opinions; but the right of liberty of conscience shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the state." Paragraph 13.

(c) "No money shall ever be taken from the public treasury, directly or indirectly, in aid of any church, sect, or denomination of religionists, or of any sectarian institution." Paragraph 14.

This ordinance violates the rights secured by all the above constitutional provisions, and therefore is unconstitutional and void. The first provision declares the natural and inalienable right of the individual to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience; and guarantees and safeguards this sacred right of conscience by declaring that no human authority, not even the board of commissioners of the city of Rome, shall in any case control or interfere with such right of conscience. Yet this ordinance provides a system of worshipping God, consisting of reading the King James version of the Scriptures and prayers, and names the principals of the Rome schools, or the persons selected by them, as the ministers of the system. This ordinance establishes a system of worship for the schools of Rome, and thus in this case controls or interferes with the individual worship of God. Roger Williams said: "No one should be bound to worship, or to maintain a worship, against his own consent." Religious freedom includes the right not to worship God at all. All the pupils of the Rome public schools, unless their parents or guardians, in writing, request that they be excused, are bound to attend these religious exercises. The unexcused children are bound to attend and listen to this worship. It will not do to say that parents or guardians, having conscientious objections to the Rome system of worship, can exempt their children or wards from attendance thereon, and that this exception saves the constitutionality of this ordinance. The exemption of certain classes from the operation of an unconstitutional enactment will not save its face.

The second provision of the state Constitution, above set out, provides that "no inhabitant of this state shall be molested in person or property . . . on account of his religious opinions." Does this ordinance conflict with this provision? Is the language, "molested in person," confined to deprivation of personal liberty and to the infliction of stripes or punishment, because of one's religious beliefs? It seems to me that this language has a much broader significance. It treats the person as made up of body, mind, and spirit. To "molest" is to vex, worry, or disturb. Anything which vexes, worries, or disturbs a person in body, mind, or soul falls within the meaning of this language.

The religious opinions of the Catholics proscribe the King James version of the Scriptures. The beliefs of the Jews condemn the teachings of the New Testament, which constitutes a part of this version of the Bible. Various branches of the Protestant Church base their peculiar tenets upon certain texts of the New Testament found in this version. The reading of this version offends and molests the Catholics and the Jews. The reading of certain texts of this version will molest certain sects of Protestants. The system of worship provided for in this ordinance will offend the deists, atheists, and agnostics. This molestation of these various sects will or may come from the enforcement of this ordinance, and on account of their religious beliefs; and falls within the condemnation of this provision of our state Constitution. Parents and guardians who may be deists, atheists, or agnostics, and even Christians with strong convictions, may be loath to disclose their objection to this worship, for fear they might be subjected to criticism, if they were to request in writing that their children or wards be excused from attendance.

Finally, this ordinance falls within the spirit, if not within the letter, of the provision of our state Constitution which declares that "no money shall ever be taken from the public treasury, directly or indirectly, in aid of any church, sect, or denomination of religionists, or of any sectarian institution."

We cannot disguise the fact that making the reading of the King James version of the Bible a part of the worship of the public schools puts municipal approval upon that version, and thus discriminates in favor of and aids the Protestant sects of the Christian religion. So the selection of the Douai Bible would put the stamp of municipal approval on it, and thus discriminate in favor of and aid the Catholics. The public schools are supported by taxation. Members of all denominations of religionists contribute to the funds by which they are supported. No public funds can be lawfully taken from the public treasury and used in any manner which aids any sect or denomination. The use of such funds in running public schools, in which a curriculum exists, and which aids any sect, is forbidden by this provision.

I recognize the perils of the public schools to morals and religion, due to the lack of moral instruction; and the importance of supplying the teaching of morals and religion. Yet this must be accomplished by methods which keep the state and church separate, which protect the natural and inalienable right of any individual to worship, or not to worship, God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and under which no aid is given to any sect or denomination.

ANNOTATION.

Sectarianism in schools.

Since the preparation of the note appended to Knowlton v. Baumhover, 5 A.L.R. 866, to which the present discussion is supplemental, but few cases have passed on the question of sectarianism in the schools.

The reported case (WILKERSON v. ROME, ante, 1334) holds that a city ordinance requiring some portion of the King James version of the Bible to be read and prayer to be offered daily in the public schools does not infringe a constitutional provision securing to every person the right to worship according to the dictates of his own conscience, a provision that no person shall be molested in person or property on account of his religious opinions, or a provision that "no money shall ever be taken from the public treasury, directly or indirectly, in aid of any church, sect, or denomination of religionists, or of any sectarian institution."

The case of Hardwick v. Fruitridge School Dist. (1921) — Cal. App. —, 205 Pac. 49, bears collaterally on the question under discussion. In that case a regulation of the school board, requiring dancing as a part of the curriculum, was held to be invalid at the suit of taxpayers, who asserted that their religious convictions were offended by the requirement that their children should be instructed in dancing. Holding that it was not necessary that the complainants should show that they were members of a religious sect which was opposed to dancing, the court stated the general doctrine of the toleration and equality of all forms of religious worship, and added: "The principles above stated are not alone applicable to religious organizations or to persons actively affiliated with such organizations. They apply as well to any person having religious convictions, irrespective of whether he is a member of any church or other religious society. Manifestly, a person may have religious views or principles of his own, different, perhaps, on doctrinal matters, from those of any church organization or any other person. He may have a way, peculiar to himself, of worshiping the Supreme Being, and there is no logical ground for holding that, in thus worshiping his Maker, he is not equally entitled with every other person or church society to the protection of the constitutional guaranties to which we have above adverted, assuming, of course, that his mode of worshiping is not offensive or detrimental to the peace and safety of society. In this connection we may call attention to the argument of counsel for the respondents, as if a fatal defect in the complaint was thus pointed out, that, so far as it appears from that pleading, the 'religious principles' of the appellant may be personal to himself. A man's religion is always 'personal to himself,' whether he be a member of a church or not. Whom could a man's religion concern but himself? True, if a member of a church organization, he will, of course, as he should, endeavor, in the very best way of which he is capable, to spread and disseminate the principles of the religion of which he is a devotee, and so assist in upbuilding and fortifying the spiritual standard of the world; yet, in the last analysis, his religion is his, and is, of course, personal to himself, as it is to every other person who professes it."

The case of Roman Catholic Separate Schools v. Quebec Bank [1920] 1 A. C. (Eng.) 230, grew out of the separate school system of Ontario, discussed in the note in 5 A.L.R. at pages 895 et seq. It appeared that certain Roman Catholic schools were not conducted in accordance with the regulations of the Education Department. The provincial legislature authorized commissioners to take over and manage these schools. This act of the legislature was later declared to be invalid in Roman Catholic Separate Schools v. Ottawa [1917] 1 A. C. (Eng.) 76, 32 D. L. R. 10, set out in 5 A.L.R., at page 904. An act of the legislature thereafter made the expenditures of the commissioners in their management of the schools a charge on the schools, and this act the court held to be valid. W. A. S.

KATHERINE C. ORTH, Admr., etc., of A. B. Orth, Deceased, Substituted as Plaintiff,

v.

BOARD OF PUBLIC EDUCATION of the School District of Pittsburgh, Appt.

Pennsylvania Supreme Court — January 3, 1922.

(272 Pa. 411, 116 Atl. 366.)

Architect — compensation — effect of failure to let contract.

1. Under a contract by architects to prepare plans for a building and supervise its construction for a certain percentage of the cost, payable 3 per cent when plans are adopted and remainder during progress of work and at completion of the building, with right of owner to terminate the contract on certain contingencies upon paying the percentages then due, the architects are entitled only to 3 per cent for preparation of the plans if the contract for the building is not let because of increased cost due to war conditions and the architects' contract is terminated, plus the fixed percentage on all work completed.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1356.]

Contract — construction — meaning to all words.

2. All the words of a contract are to be given an appropriate meaning, whenever it is reasonably possible to do so.

[See 6 R. C. L. 837, 838.]

Architect — basis for estimating percentage.

3. In estimating the percentage of the cost price to which the architect of a building is entitled for preparation of the plans, it should not be reckoned on the excessive cost shown by bids which were all rejected because of the greatly increased cost of construction due to war conditions, but the architect's own estimate of the cost which accompanies his plan should be adopted.

Evidence — threat during negotiations.

4. In an action for compensation due under a contract to furnish plans for a building, evidence is not admissible of a threat made by plaintiff's counsel to defendant during negotiations for settlement of the controversy.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Allegheny County (Reid, J.) in favor of plaintiffs, a firm of architects, in an action brought to recover compensation alleged to be due under a contract to furnish plans for a building. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. J. Rodgers McCrury for appellant.

Messrs. W. K. Johnson, C. Elmer Brown, Ernest C. Irwin, and Watson & Freeman, for appellee:

The intention of the parties when the contract in question was made was to erect the school building. It was clearly not intended that the school board would abandon that erection. There is, indeed, no covenant in the contract that the school board would proceed with the work, but such covenant is always implied.

Loehr v. Dickson, 141 Wis. 332, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 495, 124 N. W. 293; Manning v. Galland-Henning Pneumatic Malting Drum Mfg. Co. 141 Wis. 199, 124 N. W. 291, 18 Ann. Cas. 976; Elliot Nat. Bank v. Beal, 141 Mass. 569, 6 N. E. 742.

Defendant cannot plead its own wrong or fault, and claim that through that wrong it had escaped full payment for work fully performed.

United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 338, 28 L. ed. 168, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 81; Patterson v. Meyerhofer, 204 N. Y. 96, 97 N. E. 472; Gay v. Blanchard, 32 La. Ann. 497; Burton v. Shotwell, 13 Bush, 271; Levy & H. Motor Co. v. City Motor Cab Co. 174 Ill. App. 20.

By refusing to accept bids submitted in December, 1916, and thereupon abandoning the construction of the building, defendant cannot escape payment of the 1 per cent (1%) due to the architect at the time the contract is awarded.

Cann v. Church of the Redeemer, 111 Mo. App. 164, 85 S. W. 994; Crescent Hill Presby. Church v. McDonald, 144 Ky. 655, 139 S. W. 849; Sauer v. School Dist. 243 Pa. 294, 90 Atl. 150; Lambert v. Sanford, 55 Conn. 437, 12 Atl. 519; Harlow v. Beaver Falls, 188 Pa. 263, 41 Atl. 533.

Under the law and the facts of the case, plaintiff was entitled to recover his full 6 per cent, less his cost of completing his contract.

Harlow v. Beaver Falls, supra; Sauer v. School Dist. 243 Pa. 294, 90 Atl. 150; Newman v. Rutter, 8 Watts, 51; Patterson v. Meyerhofer, 204 N. Y. 96, 97 N. E. 472; Anvil Min. Co. v. Humble, 153 U. S. 540, 38 L. ed. 814, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876, 18 Mor. Min.

Rep. 98; Cann v. Church of the Redeemer, 111 Mo. App. 164; Crescent Hill Presby. Church v. McDonald, 144 Ky. 655, 139 S. W. 849; Dinsmore v. Livingston County, 60 Mo. 241; Williams v. Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. 112 Mo. 463, 34 Am. St. Rep. 403, 20 S. W. 631, s. c. 153 Mo. 487, 54 S. W. 689; Blaine v. Publishers George Knapp & Co. 140 Mo. 241, 41 S. W. 787; Kinneker v. Philadelphia Ball Club, 92 Mo. App. 669; Eldridge v. Fuhr, 59 Mo. App. 44; Shipman v. State, 42 Wis. 377.

Simpson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, a firm of architects, who recovered upon a contract for preparing plans and specifications and superintending the construction of a high school building in the city of Pittsburgh; the paragraph relied on being as follows:

"7. The board shall pay the architect as and in full compensation for his services hereunder, 6 per cent upon the entire cost of the building; payments to be made as follows:

"One per centum when the final preliminary study is adopted.

"Two per centum when the working drawings and specifications are completed and adopted.

"One per centum when the contract is awarded.

"One per centum in monthly instalments, prorated in accordance with the monthly certificate for payment to the contractor or contractors.

"One per centum upon the completion and acceptance of the building."

If this paragraph was the only one to be considered, it would be difficult, perhaps, unless we overruled Harlow v. Beaver Falls, 188 Pa. 263, 41 Atl. 533, and Sauer v. School Dist. 243 Pa. 294, 90 Atl. 150, to do other than affirm the judgment; since here, as in those cases, the compensation is specified to be a certain percentage "upon the entire cost of the building;" the later provisions, relating to the instalments, apparently fixing only the times for payment, and not altering the duty to ultimately allow the entire "6 per cent." Other paragraphs in the present contract, however, compel a different conclusion from the one reached in those cases.

It further provides that plaintiffs shall prepare "preliminary plans, revisions, and changes therein, with such estimates of cost of construction as may be required," shall thereafter "promptly prepare full specifications and such further plans" as may be needed; "shall have supervision of the construction of the building;" that the board reserves the right to terminate the contract if the architect dies, or upon "fifteen days' written notice," without the happening of this contingency, in either of which latter events plaintiffs "shall be entitled as full compensation to the percentages then due."

Evidently knowing of the limitations placed by law upon the expenditure of public funds, and that the members of the board would be guilty of a breach of duty if they erected the building at a cost largely in excess of its actual value to the district, plaintiffs inserted in the specifications, which they prepared, the usual provision that the board reserved the right to reject any and all bids. They also, in accordance with the contract, advised the board that the cost of completing the building would be $643,025; and this, with certain additions afterwards made by consent of the board, indicated a total cost of $833,530.96.

When the bids were received and opened, it was discovered that—owing to the greatly increased cost of labor and materials, due to the World War—the lowest amount for which anyone would do the work and the additions above referred to was the sum of $1,234,499.89. This was not only greatly in excess of the estimates made by plaintiffs, but, as the court below says, was "far beyond the funds available, or, in any event, a sum which the board did not deem it prudent to expend," and hence, acting in good faith and in accordance with its duty, it rejected all the bids. So far as appears, plaintiffs made no objection to this. The cost of labor and materials having continued to advance, it was decided to abandon the project until matters in the building trades became more nearly normal; and this had not occurred when one of the architects died, and the contract with the firm was rescinded, in accordance with the foregoing provisions of the contract.

The court below held that plaintiffs were entitled to recover 6 per cent of whatever sum the jury found would have been the cost of the building if it had been constructed at the time the bids were received and rejected, less the sum of $23,677.94, which had been paid on account, and also whatever plaintiffs would have had to expend in superintending the work (which was estimated to be $7,000), and that the jury might find the cost of the building would have been the lowest bid above set forth; on this basis the verdict was rendered.

Three questions are raised on the appeal: (1) Were plaintiffs entitled to 6 per cent upon the full cost of the building, though it had not been erected? (2) Was this percentage to be reckoned upon what the cost would have been had the work been done at the time the bids were received and rejected? (3) Was it competent to prove that the contract with plaintiffs was canceled because of their threat to bring suit if they were not paid? Each of these questions must be determined in favor of appellant.

It is certain plaintiffs must have anticipated the possibility the school would not be erected. This necessarily follows from the provision above referred to, and by the insertion in the specifications of the clause authorizing the board to reject any and all bids. It is certain, also, that the words, they "shall be entitled, as full compensation, to the percentages then due," in the clause relating to cancelation of the contract, can mean only the particular percentages applicable to the situation existing at the time of cancelation. If it was meant, as appellees contend, that the percentage referred to was the single percentage of 6 per cent, which was provided for superintendence as well as for drawing the plans and specifications, not only was the plural form improper, but the words "percentage then due" were unnecessary and meaningless, for precisely the same result would be reached if they had been omitted. It is an unbending rule, however, that all

Contract—
construction—meaning to all words.

the words of a contract are to be given an appropriate meaning whenever it is reasonably possible so to do, as in the present case it is (Wager v. Wager, 1 Serg. & R. 374; Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Ryan, 227 Pa. 245, 75 Atl. 1073; Vulcanite Pav. Co. v. Philadelphia, 239 Pa. 524, 86 Pa. 1086); and hence the words "percentages then due" must be

Architect—compensation—effect of failure to let contract.

given here their usual meaning, and this compels the conclusion that, if the building was not erected, only 3 per cent was to be paid for the preliminary study and the preparation of working drawings and specifications. There was, however, some work actually done, and for this plaintiffs are entitled to 6 per cent of its actual cost; we say 6 per cent instead of 5, because there was a "completion and acceptance of the building," so far as concerns this particular work.

It was also erroneous to estimate the 3 per cent on the excessive cost, arising out of the unusual conditions prevailing when the bids were received. As already pointed out, 1 per cent was due when "the final preliminary study is adopted," and an additional 2 per cent when "the working drawings and specifications are completed and adopted." There was then no other "cost of the building" except the "estimates of cost of construction," calculated by plaintiffs themselves, and hence the 3 per cent, if then paid, as the contract provided it should be, necessarily would have had to be computed thereon. Appellee's contention that these "estimates of cost presented to board, were but rough estimates largely based upon data deceived from defendants' superintendent of buildings," is of no moment. They were none the less plaintiff's estimates, prepared for the purpose of enabling the board to determine whether or not it would ask for bids, and must be held binding, therefore, in case of a decision, in good faith, not to proceed. The same conclusion, however, is reached from another standpoint.

The contract calls for the 6 per cent to be estimated on the "entire cost of the building," of which, strictly speaking, there was none, since the building was not constructed. Hence it is necessary to determine, according to equitable principles, what the parties contemplated should be paid in the event of this contingency. Appellee contends that the words "percentages then due" necessarily refer to the time of cancelation, and this is, of course, true; but they do not refer to the "cost" on which those percentages are to be calculated. Clearly they were to be compensation for the work actually done, not for that which might be done, and equally clearly they were to be measured by the value of the work at the time it was done, not at some later time, when the basis might be either more or less, and certainly not when an unexpected contingency greatly changed the status. In the present instance, this period of time was before the great increase in the cost of labor and materials, and not afterwards. This conclusion does not militate against the —basis for estimating percentage.

fact that, if the work had been done, the actual cost would have been the basis; for then there would have been an "entire cost of the building," and the different parts of the contract, "preliminary study," the preparation of "the working drawings and specifications," the additional drawings which, appellee testified, always have to be made during the progress of the work, and the supervision of the work itself, would have furnished together, and not separately, the 6 per cent payable on that "entire cost."

Perhaps everyone would admit that if, by reason of the draft, it had been almost impossible to obtain labor and materials for building purposes, so that the lowest bid had been $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 instead of $1,234,499.89, these percentages could not have been charged on the larger figure; yet the difference is one of degree only and not in kind, and, under the ruling of the court below, the cost, determined even by such an excessive bid, if fairly made, might have furnished the proper basis.

It follows that, so far as the present record discloses, the jury should have been told that the 3 per cent was to be calculated on the $643,025 "estimate of cost of construction" prepared by plaintiffs and accepted by defendant, plus the additions of $190,515.96 made by consent of the board.

The error, which underlies the court's conclusion on this point, consists in supposing that the method, which is usually adopted in applying the appropriate legal rule to the facts of a particular case, is the rule itself. This mistake is not an uncommon one, for a statement of the means nearly always adopted to reach a particular end, if repeated often enough, will cause many to unthinkingly conclude it is the only method to attain the end, and hence is, in effect, the end itself. A striking instance of this is found in the cognate case of Kountz v. Kirkpatrick, 72 Pa. 376, 13 Am. Rep. 687, where the court below was reversed for holding that the measure of damages for the failure to deliver stock was the difference between the market price and the contract price, at the time and place of delivery; whereas, the true measure is the difference between the value of the article and the contract price, at that time and place; the "value" being nearly always determined by the "market price," but not permissible there because of the unusual circumstances appearing in the evidence.

We are also of opinion that evidence of the alleged threat made by plaintiff's counsel to defendant's when they were negotiating for a settlement of the controversy, should not have been admitted; it could not aid the jury in determining any of the questions to be decided by them. If for no other reason, it was inadmissible because defendant had the right to cancel the contract, and hence its reasons for so doing were wholly immaterial. Scott v. Pittsburgh, 266 Pa. 52, 109 Atl. 603; Roush v. Herbick, 269 Pa. 145, 112 Atl. 136.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and a venire facias de novo is awarded.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Evidence—threat during negotiations.

ANNOTATION.

Construction of contract for compensation of architect.

I. Amount of compensation:

- a. In general, 1357.
- b. Where construction is abandoned or employment terminated, 1357.
- c. Basis on which percentage is to be computed, 1358.

I.—continued.

- d. Additional compensation, 1310.
- e. Reduced compensation, 1361.
- II. Time when compensation payable, 1361.
- III. Who liable for compensation, 1362.
- IV. Entire and divisible contracts, 1362.

I. Amount of compensation.a. In general.

As a general rule, where the contract contains an express stipulation as to the amount of compensation for architectural services, or the manner of determining the same, such stipulation is conclusive, and measures the amount of recovery for performance, regardless of doubtful inferences from other provisions.

California. — Havens v. Donahue (1896) 111 Cal. 297, 43 Pac. 962.

Georgia. — Lambright v. Everett (1917) 21 Ga. App. 488, 94 S. E. 593.

Illinois.—Chicago v. Hunt (1906) 130 Ill. App. 462, affirmed in (1907) 227 Ill. 130, 81 N. E. 243 (superintending engineer); Atchison v. McKinnie (1908) 233 Ill. 106, 84 N. E. 208.

Indiana. — Weatherhogg v. Jasper County (1901) 158 Ind. 14, 62 N. E. 477.

Kentucky. — McDonald Bros. v. Whitley County Ct. (1887) 8 Ky. L. Rep. 874; O'Kain v. Davis (1919) 186 Ky. 184, 216 S. W. 354.

Maryland.—Harrison v. McLaughlin (1908) 108 Md. 427, 70 Atl. 424.

Massachusetts. — Perkins v. Hanks (1905) 188 Mass. 120, 74 N. E. 314.

Minnesota.—Irwin v. Gould Elevator Co. (1909) 107 Minn. 233, 119 N. W. 1065. And see Marcotte v. Beaupre (1870) 15 Minn. 152, Gil. 117.

New Jersey.—See Hoisting Machinery Co. v. Goeller Iron Works (1913) 84 N. J. L. 504, 87 Atl. 331.

New York. — Davis v. New York Steam Co. (1898) 33 App. Div. 401, 54 N. Y. Supp. 78.

Pennsylvania. — Osterling v. Carpenter (1911) 230 Pa. 153, 79 Atl. 405; Osterling v. First Nat. Bank (1918) 262 Pac. 448, 105 Atl. 633.

Texas.—See Vaky v. Phelps (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 194 S. W. 601.

Utah. — See Headlund v. Daniels (1917) 50 Utah, 381, 167 Pac. 1170.

Canada.—Bond v. Colonial Invest. & Loan Co. (1908) 11 Ont. Week. Rep. 617. And see Schwab v. Shragge

(1906) — Manitoba, —, 3 West. L. R. 463.

Thus, in Perkins v. Hanks (Mass.) supra, in applying the rule that an express provision must control an implication of a different rate arising from another provision of the contract, it was held that where a contract for preparation of plans, after adjusting existing accounts, stipulated for further services, and that the architect's commission thereon at 5 per cent was not to exceed the value of $350, and provided that it was "further mutually understood and agreed that the equity" of certain lands "is given as security for a further payment" of $250, "which sums shall, when paid, be considered to be full payment" for the plans, the explicit agreement must control, and that the architect could recover only the agreed price of $250.

b. Where construction is abandoned or employment terminated.

In O'Kain v. Davis (1919) 186 Ky. 184, 216 S. W. 354, where an architect's contract provided that he should prepare preliminary plans, working drawings, specifications, and furnish services during erection of a proposed building for 5 per cent of the contract price, payable 3½ per cent on awarding of the contract and 1½ per cent on completion and acceptance of the building, but that, in the event the employer failed to erect the building within a certain time, the architect should receive $250 "for preliminary services rendered in connection with his contract," it was held that the contract provided for payment on one basis in the event a contract was awarded for the construction of the building, but on the basis prescribed by the proviso in the event the building was not erected, and therefore that since the employer had abandoned the project without having let a contract for construction, recovery was limited to $250, although the architect, pursuant to instructions, had prepared not only preliminary plans, but complete working drawings, plans, and specifications.

And it has been held that where, by the contract, the architect is to furnish all necessary general drawings, specifications, and details for the construction of a building for a specified percentage of the total cost, he cannot be limited to commissions upon the cost of construction as far as the building has proceeded at the time his employment is terminated, since at such time he has fully performed his contract, and the completion of the building is material only as fixing the amount to be paid for the services rendered under the contract. Havens v. Donohue (1896) 111 Cal. 297, 43 Pac. 962. But compare Shipman v. State (1877) 42 Wis. 377, wherein it was held that an architect having a contract to make plans and specifications and superintend construction for "5 per cent on the cost of construction," could, upon being lawfully discharged during the construction of the building, recover only the contract price for his plans and specifications and services as superintendent of construction up to the time of his discharge, and upon quantum meruit for the plans and specifications of that portion of the work which he did not superintend, the employer having exceeded his statutory authority in making a single entire contract with the architect. And see Hand v. Agen (1897) 96 Wis. 493, 71 N. W. 899, wherein an architect was allowed to recover the customary architect's fee of 2½ per cent for the making of plans and specifications under a contract to draw plans and specifications and superintend construction for 4 per cent where the building was never erected. See also Gouinlock v. Maclean (1918) 14 Ont. Week. N. 142, wherein the contract called for 5 per cent on the cost, but in which it was held, the building having been taken out of the architect's hands when partially completed, that he was entitled to 5 per cent on the work done before his supervision was terminated and 2½ per cent on the balance of the cost.

In the reported case (ORTH v. BOARD OF PUBLIC EDUCATION, ante, 1352), where the contract entitled the architect superintending construction to 6 per cent "upon the entire cost of the building," with payments of certain percentages to be made at various stages of the construction, and reserving the right to the owner to terminate the contract of employment, in which event the architect "shall be entitled as full compensation to the percentages then due," it was held that the architect, upon termination of his contract in accordance with the terms of the contract, could recover only the percentages then due according to the amount of work already done.

And see School Comrs. v. Lafond (1911) Rap. Jud. Quebec 23 B. R. 193, as set out infra, I. c.

c. Basis on which percentage is to be computed.

In Weatherhogg v. Jasper County (1901) 158 Ind. 14, 62 N. W. 477, where the contract provided for the drawing of plans and specifications for a building that should not exceed a certain sum in cost, and should, if required, make changes or draw new plans without additional expense, and that the compensation for drawing of plans and specifications and superintending of construction should be a certain per cent of the "total cost of the fully completed building," and the employers ordered changes and additions which made the building cost much more than the specified sum, it was held that the provision limiting the cost to a certain sum was a mere statement of the basis upon which the architect should work in the preparation of the initial plans and specifications, and did not set up a limit to his compensation, and consequently that he could recover upon the basis of the actual cost, the employer having ordered the changes which increased the cost. So, in Harrison v. McLaughlin (1908) 108 Md. 427, 70 Atl. 424, it was held that where the architect's commission was to be a specified percentage of the "total cost of the building," he was entitled to such per cent, although the contract provided that the entire cost should not be estimated to exceed a considerably smaller but estimated sum than the actual "total cost," it appearing that the employer had ordered changes which materially increased the cost.

And in Osterling v. Carpenter (1911) 230 Pa. 153, 79 Atl. 405, where the architect for a tomb was to be paid 5 per cent on the total cost of materials and labor, and the tomb actually erected cost $40,000, it was held that the architect was entitled to recover 5 per cent on that sum, although the parties had originally intended a $75,000 tomb, and plans therefore had been started which, at the request of the employer, and without objection on the part of the architect, had been altered so as to call for the $40,000 tomb.

Where the compensation of an architect is a specified per cent of the "estimated cost," and the contract itself does not fix the same, it has been held that such "estimated cost" is the reasonable cost of buildings erected in accordance with the plans and specifications, and not necessarily the amount of some actual estimate made by a builder, or an estimate agreed upon by the parties, or an estimate or bid accepted by the employer. Lambert v. Sanford (1887) 55 Conn. 437, 12 Atl. 519.

And in Israels v. Macdonald (1907) 123 App. Div. 63, 107 N. Y. Supp. 826, appeal dismissed in (1908) 193 N. Y. 598, 86 N. E. 1126, where the compensation for making plans and specifications was to be 3 per cent on the cost of the building, it was held that the "actual cost" must govern, that being provable, and not the estimate of the plaintiff, or of experts, or the amount named in papers filed with the building department. So, in Lawton v. Roseno (1908) 125 App. Div. 628, 110 N. Y. Supp. 14, it was held, construing a provision for payment to an architect of a percentage of the cost of the work for which he had prepared plans and specifications, that the plaintiff must prove the actual cost, and that recovery could not be based on the testimony of experts as to what was the reasonable cost of the finished work. And again in School Comrs. v. Lafond (1911) Rap. Jud. Quebec 23 B. R. 193, where the plaintiff contracted to furnish architectural services for a fixed percentage of the cost, it was held that such percentage must be figured on the actual cost, and not on the cost as estimated at the time. And the work having been stopped, such actual cost was held to be the amount for which the contractor had offered to complete the building.

Where the contract for construction names a certain sum, with a proviso for an increase under certain circumstances, which conditions are met, the "contract price," in an agreement to pay a certain per cent of that price for superintending the work, includes the additional compensation earned by the contractor in meeting the specified conditions. Chicago v. Hunt (1907) 227 Ill. 130, 81 N. E. 243, affirming (1906) 130 Ill. App. 462.

And in Osterling v. Allegheny County (1922) — Pa. —, 116 Atl. 385, construing a contract to furnish the plans and specifications for additions and alterations of a courthouse for a commission of 5 per cent upon "the cost of the work," which commission was to include general supervisions, drawings, plans, specifications, and contracts, and such duties as are usual and customary among architects, and any charges for preliminary plans and studies, it was held that superintending the removal of the old buildings from the land on which the addition was to be erected was part of the architect's work, so that he was entitled to receive 5 per cent on the cost thereof as his commission. It was further held in this case that the cost of testing the steel used in the building at a testing laboratory was a part of the cost of the work within the meaning of the architect's contract.

But it has been held that payment to an architect of more than the agreed price does not necessarily require payment of a percentage on the actual cost of the work as finally, completed. Thus in Dick v. Jullien (1922) 279 Fed. 993, where an architect was employed to supervise repairs to a building at a cost not to exceed $45,000, and was to receive 10 per cent of that amount for his services, it was held that the fact that more than $4,500, had been paid him did not preclude the owner from setting up the contract in an action for additional compensation, but was merely evidential as bearing upon the existence of the alleged contract.

In the reported case (ORTH v. BOARD OF PUBLIC EDUCATION, ante, 1352), where the architect's commission was to be "6 per cent upon the entire cost of the building," 3 per cent to be payable when the drawings and specifications were adopted, it was held that the 3 per cent was to be computed on the basis of the architect's own estimate of the cost of construction made before increase of building costs, on account of which construction was abandoned and the architect's employment terminated as permitted by the contract, and not on the amount the building would have cost, although that would have been the basis if the building had been completed.

In Spencer v. New York (1917) 179 App. Div. 69, 166 N. Y. Supp. 177, under a contract providing for furnishing plans and specifications and supervising the construction of certain buildings for 5 per cent of the actual cost of the work, to be paid "2½ per cent upon the estimated cost of the work after the plans and specifications had been approved, and 2½ per cent upon the estimates of the contractor, as certified by the architect, which, together with the 2½ per cent herewith authorized to be paid for preparing the plans, specifications, and estimates, shall equal a total of 5 per cent on the actual cost," it was held that the architects were entitled to 5 per cent on the buildings completed and 2½ per cent on buildings not erected, but for which plans, etc., had been made pursuant to the contract.

d. Additional compensation.

The question of extra compensation has been raised in a few instances.

Thus, in Osterling v. First Nat. Bank (1918) 262 Pa. 448, 105 Atl. 633, where the plaintiff contracted to furnish the plans, specifications, and detailed drawings, and to supervise the work, prepare contracts, and perform the usual and customary services of an architect for a commission of 5 per cent upon the cost of the work, and the contract was let upon the original plans, etc., for $59,000, but the actual cost, because of changes being made from time to time for which he prepared revised drawings, was increased to about $115,000, upon which sum he was paid his commission, it was held that he could not recover additional compensation for having prepared the revised drawings. In this connection the court said: "Osterling [the architect] 'proposed and agreed to furnish all necessary plans and specifications to erect the building.' This contemplated not only the plans which he had already prepared, but included any and 'all' plans which in the process of erection might be called for. As an architect he was doubtless familiar with the fact that most owners in the course of building make changes in both plans and specifications, and he is fairly to be presumed to have contemplated just that in his letter of September 3, 1913. He stated in this letter that the cost would be $58,000, and, in point of fact, his estimate of the cost was nearly verified, as the original building contract was for $59,000. The changes made during the process of building increased the total cost, as we have seen, to $114,000. He was paid 5 per cent on this amount as his compensation. If he regarded the work of preparing the drawings as work outside of his contract, he should not have accepted the percentage on the total cost. He surely cannot claim both the percentage on the total cost and extra compensation for preparing the drawings which increased the total cost, but he must be held to his contract, which is clearly expressed." Nor under such a contract can the architect recover extra compensation for services as an arbitrator between the contractor and owner, where, in the building contract prepared by him, he inserted the usual clause that such disputes should be referred to him for final decision, since such services, by his own interpretation, fall within that part of the contract by which he agreed to perform the "usual and customary services of an architect." Ibid. Likewise, it was held in this case that the architect's compensation could not be increased by adding to the actual cost of the work the value of material taken from an old building and used in the new, the building contract and specifications having provided for such use. It was also held that no additional compensation could be recovered because of the fact that there was a delay in completing the construction, upon which question the court said: "The claim for compensation for delay is also without merit. The contract under which he claims fixes no time within which his services were to be completed. The building actually cost almost double the amount originally contemplated, and his commissions were correspondingly increased. This was adequate compensation for the delay incident to the construction of the enlarged building, but this is not the reason for our refusal to allow his claim. He was not entitled to make it under the contract which he himself prepared."

In McDonald Bros. v. Whitley County Ct. (1887) 8 Ky. L. Rep. 874, where architects, without limit or conditions as to time for construction of a building, contracted to superintend the construction for a specified sum, it was held that they could only recover such sum for their work, although the building contract, to their knowledge at the time of the execution of the contract for supervision of construction, contained a provision that if any charges were made by the architects for supervision of work extending over a longer time than that agreed upon for the completion of the work under the building contract, such charges should be deducted from the amount of the contract price. It also appeared that the original contractor abandoned the work, and that the contract was let to a second contractor, who refused to agree to the provision for deductions for architect's charges, but it seems probable that this fact did not affect the conclusion reached by the court, since their decision apparently was based on the fact that, as the architect's contract was for a definite sum without limit or condition as to time, he could not maintain that the provisions of the building contract modified the same.
20 A.L.R.—86.

And see Chicago v. Hunt (1907) 227 Ill. 130, 81 N. E. 243, affirming (1906) 130 Ill. App. 462, as set out supra, I. 2.

e. Reduced compensation.

In Irwin v. Gould Elevator Co. (1909) 107 Minn. 233, 119 N. W. 1065, under a contract which provided that an architect and supervising engineer for services in furnishing plans and specifications for a grain elevator and superintending construction should receive 7 per cent on a certain sum, and should not be held responsible for delays, however caused, but that if he failed to have the elevator completed on a date named, he should receive only 6 per cent, it was held that the plaintiff was only entitled to 6 per cent where the elevator was not completed on the specified date, even though there had been no lack of diligence on his part; it being said that the proviso as to delays had no reference to the amount of commissions, and that the proviso reducing the commissions to 6 per cent applied in case of delay from any cause, and even though all the parties had proceeded with due diligence and in good faith.

II. Time when compensation payable.

In Davis v. New York Steam Co. (1898) 33 App. Div. 401, 54 N. Y. Supp. 78, where an architect offered to prepare plans and specifications and superintend construction for 3 per cent on total cost of the work, with "payments to be made on monthly estimates," which offer was accepted "conditioned on this agreement terminating in twenty-four months," to which condition the architect agreed, it was held that the contract fixed the time of payment, and that the architect was entitled to payment each month for twenty-four months, of 3 per cent on the estimated cost of work performed during each such month. In reaching this conclusion the court overruled the contention that the architect could recover, as per custom among architects on completion of the plans and specifications, 2 per cent of the total estimated cost, and that the provision as to payment on monthly estimates related only to the supervision, saying that, in view of the express provisions of the contract, it was impossible to split the plaintiff's services.

When the time for payment of compensation for architectural services is not stipulated, but the amount is to be determined by the total cost of construction, the employer, in the absence of a showing of a controlling custom, is liable only upon the basis of completed work. See Fitzhugh v. Mason (1905) 2 Cal. App. 220, 83 Pac. 282.

III. Who liable for compensation.

It has been held that where an owner hires an architect to superintend construction, and the contract is silent as to who shall pay the commissions, the owner, and not the builder, is liable, unless it appears that there is a custom which renders the latter liable, or that he has received the money from the owner to the plaintiff's use. Locke v. Morter (1885) 2 Times L. R. (Eng.) 121.

IV. Entire and divisible contracts.

Where architects are employed to prepare plans and specifications and to superintend construction for a specified per cent of the contract price, that is, one sum for the entire services, the contract is entire, and not divisible—at least, where it contains nothing evidencing a contrary intent upon the part of the parties thereto. Spalding County v. Cham- berlin (1908) 130 Ga. 649, 61 S. E. 533, holding that no recovery can be had under such a contract for the mere preparing of plans and specifications, where no excuse is offered for not having superintended construction.

But where the contract, which is the basis of the demand, provides for separate items, and the price is apportioned to each item, the contract is severable, and the architect may recover for one or more items, though he cannot recover for others. Audubon Bldg. Co. v. F. M. Andrews Co. (1911) 111 C. C. A. 92, 187 Fed. 254; Gauntt v. Chehalis County (1913) 72 Wash. 106, 129 Pac. 888. And see Hutchinson v. Conway (1900) 34 N. S. 554. In Audubon Bldg. Co. v. F. M. Andrews & Co. (Fed.) supra, where the contract was to furnish preliminary sketches for a specified per cent of the cost of the building, payable on acceptance, to furnish working drawings and specifications for a specified per cent payable on completion, and to supervise the construction of the building for a specified per cent payable pro rata with the architect's certificates issued during the progress of the work, it was held that the contract was severable, so that the architect could recover for working plans and specifications furnished, although he could not recover for supervision of construction, because of the fact that he had acted in derogation of the duties owed his employer. In Gauntt v. Chehalis County (Wash.) supra, the plaintiff contracted to prepare plans and specifications for a courthouse for 2½ per cent of the cost of the proposed building, which was to be $100,000, and to superintend construction for an additional 2½ per cent, but in case the contract was not let the compensation was to be $1,000 only for plans and specifications, which, however, was to be applied as part payment in the event of the building going ahead at some future time. The architect was held entitled to no compensation beyond the $1,000, no contract for construction based on his plans ever having been let.

G. J. C.

NETTIE B. VEYSEY, Respt.,
v.

S. MORIYAMA, Appt.

California Supreme Court (Dept. No. 2)—February 1, 1921.

(184 Cal. 802, 195 Pac. 662.)

Landlord and tenant — evidence — loss of water for irrigation — effect of remaining in possession.

1. A tenant of land requiring irrigation cannot remain in possession and claim exemption from paying rent on the theory of a partial eviction because of breach by the lessor of his covenant to pay the assessments on the water stock, so that the stock is sold and the tenant loses the benefit of the water.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1369.]

— what is constructive eviction.

2. Any disturbance of the tenant's possession by the landlord, where the premises are rendered unfit or unsuitable for occupancy, in whole or in substantial part for the purpose for which they were leased, amounts to a constructive eviction if the tenant so elects and surrenders his possession.

[See 16 R. C. L. 686; see also notes in 4 A.L.R. 1461; 13 A.L.R. 818.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Imperial County (Cole, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought for unlawful detainer of land after defendant's default in payment of rent. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. James L. Allen, for appellant:

Defendant was entitled to the enjoyment of the premises as leased.

Standart v. Round Valley Water Co. 77 Cal. 399, 19 Pac. 689; Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 727, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 359, 93 Pac. 858; Clark v. Koesheyan, 26 Cal. App. 305, 146 Pac. 904; McDowell v. Hyman, 117 Cal. 67, 48 Pac. 984; Christopher v. Austin, 11 N. Y. 216; Royce v. Guggenheim, 106 Mass. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 322; Coburn v. Morrill, 117 Mass. 262, 19 Am. Rep. 415; Leishman v. White, 1 Allen, 489; Salmon v. Smith, 1 Wms' Saund. 204, note 2, 85 Eng. Reprint, 207; Levitzky v. Canning, 33 Cal. 306; Agar v. Winslow, 123 Cal. 593, 69 Am. St. Rep. 84, 56 Pac. 422; Jones, Land. & T. § 354; 1 Taylor, Land. & T. § 309; Agoure v. Lewis, 15 Cal. App. 71, 113 Pac. 882.

A constructive eviction excludes the tenant from liability for rent falling due.

Frepons v. Grostein, 12 Idaho, 671, 87 Pac. 1004; McCall v. New York L. Ins. Co. 201 Mass. 223, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 38, 87 N. E. 582; Lester v. Griffin, 57 Misc. 628, 108 N. Y. Supp. 580; Donovan v. Koehler, 119 App. Div. 51, 103 N. Y. Supp. 935; Kaiser v. Marks, 115 N. Y. Supp. 120.

It is not necessary that there should be an actual ouster to constitute an eviction, but any act of the lessors which results in depriving lessees of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises and the appurtenances thereto constitutes an eviction.

Agar v. Winslow, 123 Cal. 587, 69 Am. St. Rep. 84, 56 Pac. 422; Levitzky v. Canning, 33 Cal. 299; Camarillo v. Fenlon, 49 Cal. 202; Skaggs v. Emerson, 50 Cal. 3; Kelley v. Long, 18 Cal. App. 159, 122 Pac. 832; Doran v. Chase, 2 W. N. C. 609; Edmison v. Lowry, 3 S. D. 77, 17 L.R.A. 275, 44 Am. St. Rep. 774, 52 N. W. 583; Marchant v. Hayes, 117 Cal. 669, 49 Pac. 840; Garberino v. Roberts, 109 Cal. 125, 41 Pac. 857; First Nat. Bank v. Perris Irrig. Dist. 107 Cal. 55, 40 Pac. 45.

Messrs. Conkling & Brown for respondent.

Sloane, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for unlawful detainer of land after default of defendant in payment of rent.

Defendant at the time the action was brought was in possession of the land in question consisting of 640 acres of farm land in the county of Imperial, under a three-year lease which by its terms had yet over two years to run. Two instalments of rent aggregating the sum of $5,500 were delinquent at the time of filing suit.

The only defense offered is a plea of eviction from a substantial part of the land and a resultant release of defendant from liability to pay rent. This claim of eviction rests upon the following circumstances: The land covered by the lease was dependent for its use and value upon the necessary water for irrigation. There was appurtenant to this land 460 shares of water stock in the Imperial Water Company No. 8, the water company furnishing water for irrigation to this part of the Imperial valley. By the terms of the lease it is provided that the lessee "shall have the right to use the water on said land, provided that he shall pay for all water ordered, and used by him as it becomes due and payable," and that the lessor "agrees to pay all assessments levied against the water stock located on said land as the same becomes due and payable, in order that the party of the second part (the lessee) shall have unrestricted use of the proportion of water to which said stock is entitled." The lessor, soon after the execution of the lease, defaulted in the payment of an assessment on this water stock, and in consequence thereof the water company caused ten shares of the stock to be sold under the assessment. It is alleged in the answer that from the date of such sale defendant "has been unable to procure any water on the shares so sold," and that the lessors have ever since failed to "replace said water stock on said land, so that defendant might have the free and unrestricted use of the proportion of the water to which such stock was entitled, or to place sufficient water stock on said land to irrigate same," and that defendant "has been deprived of the unrestricted use of the water to which such stock was entitled." It is further alleged that, because of these conditions, the defendant has been evicted from the portion of the land upon which said stock was located.

There is no allegation showing what part or how much of the land was affected by the sale of this water stock, or what was the extent or amount of damage resulting to defendant.

The defendant remained in the actual occupancy of the whole tract, and planted and harvested a crop from the whole of it. The evidence discloses that there was a partial failure of the crop on a fraction of this land said to have been served by this withdrawn water stock. The evidence is conflicting as to whether or not there was an actual shortage of or insufficiency of water for the proper irrigation of the tract. The trial court found that this state of facts did not constitute an eviction.

Although not pleaded, it appears in evidence and is found by the court that defendant expended $391 in purchasing water stock to replace that sold under assessment against the lessors, and $220 of assessment on water stock appurtenant to the land, and that the water stock and water supply were thus restored by defendant himself prior to the commencement of these proceedings.

Defendant is relying in this case on a constructive eviction. It is not contended that he was at any time actually ousted from possession of any part of this land, or that he was not at all times, from the beginning of the lease until some time after this suit was begun, occupying and farming the whole of it. His interest under his lease in the water stock was not in the possession of the stock itself, but in the right to a supply of water incident to such stock, and while, if he was sufficiently deprived of his water supply to materially affect the purposes of his lease hold, he might be justified in treating such breach of the covenants of the lease as an eviction, and thereupon terminating his occupancy of the part of the premises affected, or even all of them, yet he could not remain in the use and occupation of the whole of this property and claim exemption from paying rent on the ground of a constructive eviction.

There are cases in the decisions where a tenant who has been actually and forcibly ousted of possession of a part of the rented premises has been permitted to hold the remainder of the leasehold without paying rent, as where, in a house consisting of several rooms, the landlord had wrongfully taken possession of part of them, it has been held that the tenant could not be required while this partial eviction continued either to vacate the remainder of the house or pay rent for the part he occupied. Such is the application of Christopher v. Austin, 11 N. Y. 216, Colburn v. Morrill, 117 Mass. 262, 19 Am. Rep. 415, and other like decisions cited by appellant.

The general rule, however, relating to a constructive eviction is that any disturbance of the tenant's possession by the landlord whereby the premises are rendered unfit or unsuitable for occupancy, in whole or in substantial part, for the purposes for which they were leased, amounts to a constructive eviction, if the tenant so elects and surrenders his possession. 16 R. C. L. p. 686. There can be no constructive eviction if the tenant continue in the possession of the whole, however much he may be disturbed in the beneficial enjoyment. 16 R. C. L. pp. 686, 687; Keating v. Springer, 146 Ill. 481, 22 L.R.A. 544, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175, 34 N. E. 805; De Witt v. Pierson, 112 Mass. 8, 17 Am. Rep. 58; Boreel v. Law- ton, 90 N. Y. 293, 43 Am. Rep. 170. For instance, the failure of the landlord to heat a leased building as agreed under the lease may constitute an eviction, but the tenant must abandon the possession. He cannot remain in possession and enjoy without paying the rent such supply of heat as is furnished, although so inadequate as to have warranted an abandonment of the lease had the tenant so elected. 16 R. C. L. p. 692; note in 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1218; Minneapolis Co-op. Co. v. Williamson, 51 Minn. 53, 38 Am. St. Rep. 473, 52 N. W. 986; Berlinger v. Macdonald, 149 App. Div. 5, 133 N. Y. Supp. 522; Koehler v. Scheider (Com. Pl.) 15 Daly, 198, 4 N. Y. Supp. 611; Siebold v. Heyman (Sup.) 120 N. Y. Supp. 105.

So, in this case, conceding that a failure of the water supply on 10 out of 460 shares of water stock on a total acreage of 640 acres is sufficient to constitute a constructive eviction, the tenant cannot avoid his covenant to pay rent while he remains in possession of the entire premises and continues to cultivate the whole thereof and enjoy the benefits of the remaining water supply. He has ample remedy under such circumstances in recouping the damages he may sustain against the accruing rentals. New York v. Mabie, 13 N. Y. 151, 64 Am. Dec. 538; McCoy v. Oldham, 1 Ind. App. 372, 50 Am. St. Rep. 208, 27 N. E. 647.

The evidence discloses that defendant harvested $25,000 worth of produce from this tract of land during the one cropping season he was in possession. If he had lost the entire use of the proportion of the land served with water from the 10 shares of stock sold from the total 460 shares, his proportionate loss would have been less than $600.

The finding of the trial court that the failure of the lessors to protect these shares did not amount to an eviction was justified under the evidence.

Although there was no pleading to support a judgment for damages,

Landlord and tenant—evidence —loss of water for irrigation—effect of remaining in possession.

—what is constructive eviction.

the court allowed the sum of $611 to defendant as a set-off against the rent due, as compensation for the amount expended by defendant for replacing the forfeited shares and for payment of water assessments, giving judgment for the balance claimed on the unpaid instalments of rent.

The defendant surrendered possession of the premises during the pendency of the action. This action was maintained by the assignee and grantee of the original lessors, but there is nothing in the issues presented making that circumstance material.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: Lennon, J.

Wilbur, J.:

I concur. The trial court found that there was no insufficiency or shortage of water for the proper irrigation of the tract, and, as the finding of the court is supported by sufficient evidence, it follows that there was no eviction from any substantial part of the premises. For that reason I concur in the judgment.

Petition for rehearing denied March 3, 1921.

NOTE.

The rights and remedies of a tenant who remains in possession of all or part of the premises against the landlord for interfering with his possession or enjoyment, are the subject of the annotation following TOY v. OLINGER, post, 1369.

CHARLES TOY, Respt., v. J. B. OLINGER, Appt.

Wisconsin Supreme Court—February 8, 1921.

(173 Wis. 277, 181 N. W. 295.)

Landlord and tenant — onion odors — waiver.

1. A tenant of a moving picture theater waives any right which might arise from the fact that the landlord permits odors of onions to escape into the theater from the basement, if the tenant could have discovered the condition before taking possession, and paid rent unqualifiedly for a considerable period after learning of it.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1369.]

— discordant music in adjoining tenement — liability.

2. To render the lessor of a moving picture theater liable to the lessee for losses caused by discordant music produced by a tenant of other portions of the building, the landlord must be shown to be in some way responsible for it.

[See 16 R. C. L. 694; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 594; see also note in 4 A.L.R. 1464.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County (Fairchild, J.) in favor of plaintiff, and dismissing defendant's counterclaim, in an action brought to recover a balance alleged to be due for rent of a portion of plaintiff's building. Affirmed.

Statement by Eschweiler, J.:

Action to recover a balance due for rent on a certain portion of plaintiff's building in Milwaukee, occupied by defendant for a moving picture theater. The written lease provided for a term commencing January 1, 1917, terminating December 31, 1919, and at an annual rental of $4,000 for two years, and then $5,000. Rent was duly paid until August 1, 1917. February 18, 1918, the usual form of notice to pay the rent then due, or vacate, was served. Pursuant to such notice the premises were vacated by defendant March 1st. This action was then brought for the rent due up to March 1st.

Defendant counterclaimed for damages, alleging a breach of the covenant for the quiet use and enjoyment of the premises, in that they were rendered untenable for moving picture purposes by reason of noxious odors arising from the basement of the building, and further from noise and disturbance, permitted to be carried on in another portion of the building in premises adjoining defendant's, by another tenant of plaintiff, conducting a café in which there was music furnished to his patrons, all of these things being to the great annoyance and disturbance of defendant's patrons. Defendant maintained that such situations continued by plaintiff or permitted by him were sufficient in fact and in law to amount to his constructive eviction, either total or partial, thereby relieving him from the obligation to pay rent during such period, and further entitling him to damages from the resulting financial harm.

The plaintiff conducted a restaurant in another portion of the same building. In connection therewith he had in the basement of the building, for a long time prior to the making of the lease with defendant and thereafter, stored and cut up onions. Within two weeks after taking possession defendant discovered that the odor from the onions permeated his premises, and from then on he complained of such condition at times to the plaintiff, and attempted himself to remedy the same by changes in ventilation and other methods. In March he rented the theater to other tenants. These tenants occupied it for seven or eight weeks, and then vacated. He then opened the theater himself for a period of three or four weeks, and then closed it, opening again at the end of October for one week. It then remained closed until March 1st, when he vacated.

Sometime in the spring of 1917 another portion of plaintiff's building was leased to a third person for café purposes. Immediately after taking possession this tenant commenced, and thereafter continued, to furnish music to his patrons. Defendant complained to plaintiff that this music interfered with the renting of the theater and drove away patronage.

By letter of September 17, 1917, the plaintiff notified defendant he would not give up the use of his basement for the purposes above indicated. On November 5, 1917, by letter, plaintiff notified defendant that the rent then unpaid was over $1,300, and such default was considered a violation of the lease. Thereafter defendant paid $100 in December, and the same amount in January, 1918. Defendant testified that his net loss in this particular enterprise was between $7,000 and $8,000.

At the conclusion of the trial before a jury the court granted plaintiff's motion for judgment for the amount of the unpaid rent, and dismissed defendant's counterclaim, and directed judgment in accordance therewith. From such judgment defendant has appealed.

Messrs. Cochems, Wolfe, & Kolin-ski, for appellant:

Defendant should not be compelled to pay rent where he remains in possession of the premises under his lease in reliance upon the landlord's promise that the beneficial use and enjoyment thereof will be restored to him by acts on the landlord's part, which will cause a cessation of the nuisances theretofore in existence.

24 Cyc. 1057; Manning v. Galland-Henning Pneumatic Malting Drum Mfg. Co. 141 Wis. 199, 124 N. W. 291, 18 Ann. Cas. 976; Eldred v. Leahy, 31 Wis. 546; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 298; Kuschinsky v. Flanigan, 170 Mich. 245, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 480, 136 N. W. 362, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1228; Silber v. Larkin, 94 Wis. 9, 68 N. W. 406; Wade v. Herndl, 127 Wis. 544, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 855, 107 N. W. 4, 7 Ann. Cas. 591; Northwestern Realty Co. v. Hardy, 160 Wis. 324, 151 N. W. 791; Jones, Land. & T. § 368; Pridgeon v. Excelsior Boat Club, 66 Mich. 326, 33 N. W. 502; Kitchen Bros. Hotel Co. v. Philbin, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 340, 96 N. W. 487; Hall v. Irvin, 78 App. Div. 107, 79 N. Y. Supp. 614.

Messrs. Stover & Stover, for respondent:

Defendant, by remaining in, waived his right to claim a constructive eviction.

24 Cyc. 1159; Kerr, Real Prop. 1082; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 479, note; Buchanan v. Orange, 118 Va. 511, L.R.A.1916E, 739, 88 S. E. 52, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 391; Wurz v. Watts, 73 Misc. 262, 132 N. Y. Supp. 685; Russell v. Olson, 22 N. D. 410, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1217, 133 N. W. 1030, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1069; Minneapolis Co-operative Co. v. Williamson, 51 Minn. 53, 38 Am. St. Rep. 473, 52 N. W. 986; Bass v. Rollins, 63 Minn. 226, 65 N. W. 348; Berlinger v. Macdonald, 149 App. Div. 5, 133 N. Y. Supp. 522; Koehler v. Scheider, 15 Daly, 198, 4 N. Y. Supp. 611; Jackson v. Paterno, 58 Misc. 201, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1073, affirmed in 128 App. Div. 474, 112 N. Y. Supp. 924; Siebold v. Heyman, 120 N. Y. Supp. 105; Feist v. Peters, 120 N. Y. Supp. 805; Merida Realty Co. v. Coffin, 123 N. Y. Supp. 120.

Eschweiler, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

So far as the defendant's claim to defeat the payment of rent during the period of his occupancy of the premises or as a basis for damages is predicated upon the fact that another tenant of plaintiff furnished to his patrons a certain class of music which at times was quite out of harmony with the music being played in defendant's theater, no sufficient showing of responsibility on the part of the plaintiff for such situation has been presented so as to make plaintiff in any wise liable.

Landlord and tenant—dis-cordant music in adjoining tenement—liability.

The odor with which nature has so bountifully endowed the onion had been escaping from the basement into the theater premises prior to defendant's taking possession thereof, as could then have been discovered by him. He first discovered it in about two weeks after taking possession on January 1st. In spite of that condition, so early brought to his attention, he continued to pay rent on said premises according to the lease and at the specified rate until August 1st. During this period he leased to others the same premises at a greater rental rate than that which he was paying, and after such subtenants gave up their lease, finding it an unprofitable venture, he used the theater himself. After he had stopped paying the rent in August he again opened the theater in October for a week, and then remained in possession thereof until the notice to vacate was served on him. On November 5th he was notified that his failure to pay rent was being considered a violation of the lease. He nevertheless elected to remain there, and did pay, after such notice, two instalments on the rent in December and January, of $100 each.

Under the facts and circumstances the trial court was correct in holding that there was no constructive eviction, either partial or whole, by the landlord of the defendant as tenant. His remaining in possession, his ^{—onion odors—}unqualified payment ^{—waiver.} of rent up till the 1st of August, 1917, must be considered to have been a waiver of any rights he then might have had to treat this condition, if chargeable to plaintiff, as a breach of the covenant of the lease.

Neither is there satisfactory proof that the substantial failure of defendant's business venture was the result of these odors escaping into his theater premises.

It follows that the trial court was right in dismissing defendant's counterclaim and directing judgment for the amount of the unpaid rent.

Judgment affirmed.

ANNOTATION.

Rights and remedies of tenant who remains in possession of all or part of the premises against landlord for interfering with his possession or enjoyment.I. Introductory, 1369.*II. Rights in general:

- a. To claim constructive eviction, 1370.
- b. To claim partial actual eviction:
 - 1. In general, 1372.
 - 2. Liability upon a quantum meruit, 1378.
- c. To claim breach of covenant, 1379.
- d. To claim trespass or tort, 1382.

III. Form of remedy:

- a. In general, 1383.
- b. Set-off or counterclaim, 1384.
- c. Action for damages, 1387.
- d. Injunction:
 - 1. In general, 1390.
 - 2. Damages in lieu of injunction, 1393.

IV. Causes of complaint:

- a. In general, 1394.
- b. Infestation of premises by vermin during the tenancy, 1394.
- c. Use to which other portions of leased premises are put:

I. Introductory.

Where the landlord interferes with the tenant's beneficial enjoyment of the leased premises to an extent causing injury and damage to the tenant, but not amounting to an actual eviction partial or otherwise, several courses of procedure are open to the tenant. If the conduct of the landlord has the effect of destroying, in part at least, the beneficial use of the premises by the tenant, the latter may vacate the premises and assert the claim of constructive eviction in avoidance of further liability under the lease. But it is to be noted that, in order to assert constructive eviction, the tenant must abandon the premises (see II. a).

It does not follow, however, that the tenant loses all remedy by remaining in possession of the leased premises. The landlord's conduct may be such as to amount to an actual partial eviction in which case the entire rent is suspended (see II. b). Frequently he may treat the wrongful interference

IV. c—continued.

- 1. By lessor, 1395.
- 2. By third person or other tenant with authority of landlord, 1395.
- d. Use to which adjoining premises are put by or under authority of landlord, 1399.
- e. Obstruction to access, air, or light:
 - 1. Means of access, 1400.
 - 2. Light and air, 1405.
- f. Active interference by lessor with lessee's possession or use of the leased premises, 1406.
- g. Existence of infectious disease, 1408.
- h. Failure to repair, 1409.
- i. Failure to heat, 1410.
- j. Failure to furnish power or water, 1412.
- k. Failure to furnish elevator or telephone service, 1414.
- l. Miscellaneous, 1414.

with his beneficial enjoyment or use of the premises as constituting a breach of covenant (see II. c), and he may usually treat the acts of his landlord as constituting a tort or trespass (see II. d). In either event he may maintain an independent action (see III. c), or, if the local practice in regard to recoupment, set-off, or counterclaim permits, he may avail himself of his right in that form against the landlord's action for rent (see III. b).

It is a matter of importance, in the first instance, for the tenant to determine whether it is advisable to treat the wrongful conduct of the landlord as a constructive eviction and abandon the premises, or to retain possession and rely upon the acts complained of to reduce or offset the rent. From a practical standpoint, in making the choice, the fact is to be taken into consideration that, without apparent exception, any wrongful act of the landlord which would amount to a constructive eviction if the premises were abandoned will also support the alternative remedy to which reference has been made; but there may be wrongful acts by the landlord which would support that remedy that could not be relied upon as a constructive eviction. In this connection it is to be noted that the question as to what constitutes a constructive eviction is not within the scope of this annotation.

II. Rights in general.

a. To claim constructive eviction.

The great weight of authority is to the effect that, in order for the lessee to rely upon constructive eviction as a ground for avoiding payment of the rent contracted for, he must surrender or abandon the leased premises. Without being exhaustive, the following cases illustrate this rule.

Alabama. — Paterson v. Bridges (1917) 16 Ala. App. 54, 75 So. 260; Crossthwaite v. Caldwell (1894) 106 Ala. 295, 18 So. 47.

California. — VEYSEY v. MORIYAMA (reported herewith) ante, 1363; Billicke v. Janss (1910) 14 Cal. App. 342, 112 Pac. 201.

Illinois. — Patterson v. Graham (1892) 140 Ill. 531, 30 N. E. 460; Keating v. Springer (1893) 146 Ill. 481, 22 L.R.A. 544, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175, 34 N. E. 805; Barrett v. Boddie (1895) 158 Ill. 479, 49 Am. St. Rep. 172, 42 N. E. 143; Leiferman v. Osten (1897) 167 Ill. 93, 39 L.R.A. 156, 47 N. E. 203; Kistler v. Wilson (1898) 77 Ill. App. 149; Dennick v. Ekdahl (1902) 102 Ill. App. 199; Fred K. Higbie Co. v. Charles Weeghman Co. (1906) 126 Ill. App. 97; Sloss v. Brockman (1912) 171 Ill. App. 465; Carey v. Tremont (1912) 171 Ill. App. 604; Saunders v. Fox (1913) 178 Ill. App. 309; Meyers v. Johnson (1914) 186 Ill. App. 37; Furman v. Wiczorkowski (1916) 202 Ill. App. 347.

Indiana. — Talbott v. English (1900) 156 Ind. 299, 59 N. E. 857.

Iowa. — Filkins v. Steele (1904) 124 Iowa, 742, 100 N. W. 851.

Massachusetts. — Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Ripley (1866) 13 Allen, 421; International Trust Co. v. Schumann (1893) 158 Mass. 287, 33 N. E. 509; Taylor v. Finnigan (1905) 189 Mass. 568, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 973, 76 N. E. 203;

Callahan v. Goldman (1913) 216 Mass. 238, 103 N. E. 689.

Michigan. — Beecher v. Duffield (1893) 97 Mich. 423, 56 N. W. 777.

Missouri. — Jackson v. Eddy (1848) 12 Mo. 209; Griffin v. Freeborn (1914) 181 Mo. App. 203, 168 S. W. 219.

New York. — Edgerton v. Page (1859) 20 N. Y. 281; Boreel v. Lawton (1882) 90 N. Y. 293, 43 Am. Rep. 170; Wyckoff v. Frommer (1895) 12 Misc. 149, 33 N. Y. Supp. 11; Seaboard Realty Co. v. Fuller (1900) 33 Misc. 109, 67 N. Y. Supp. 146; Beakes v. Haas (1901) 36 Misc. 796, 74 N. Y. Supp. 843; Thomson v. Ludlum (1901) 36 Misc. 801, 74 N. Y. Supp. 875; Olson v. Schevlovitz (1904) 91 App. Div. 405, 86 N. Y. Supp. 834; Butler v. Carillo (1904) 88 N. Y. Supp. 941; Kinney v. Libbey (1907) 54 Misc. 595, 104 N. Y. Supp. 863; Jackson v. Paterno (1908) 58 Misc. 201, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1073, affirmed in (1908) 128 App. Div. 474, 112 N. Y. Supp. 924; Lawrence v. Katcher (1909) 117 N. Y. Supp. 105; Siebold v. Heyman (1909) 120 N. Y. Supp. 105; Merida Realty Co. v. Coffin (1910) 123 N. Y. Supp. 120; Herrmann v. Chase (1913) 140 N. Y. Supp. 371; Carolina T. Paterno Corp. v. Grossman (1919) 175 N. Y. Supp. 510; Cram v. Dresser (1848) 2 Sandf. 120.

Oregon. — Perry v. Fletcher (1919) 93 Or. 43, 182 Pac. 143.

Pennsylvania. — Harper & Bros. Co. v. Jackson (1913) 240 Pa. 312, 87 Atl. 430.

Tennessee. — Weinstein v. Barrasso (1918) 139 Tenn. 593, L.R.A.1918D, 1174, 202 S. W. 920.

Washington. — Weinstein v. Lomer (1891) 3 Wash. 401, 28 Pac. 760; Hockersmith v. Sullivan (1912) 71 Wash. 244, 128 Pac. 222; Tennes v. American Bldg. Co. (1913) 72 Wash. 644, 131 Pac. 201.

Wisconsin. — TOY v. OLINGER (reported herewith) ante, 1366.

To constitute an eviction there must be either an actual expulsion of the tenant, or some act of a permanent character, by the landlord with the intention and effect of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the demised premises, or some part of them, to which he yields, abandoning the possession within a reasonable time. The intent with which the act is done may be inferred from the act itself. Voss v. Sylvester (1909) 203 Mass. 233, 89 N. E. 241.

In Keating v. Springer (1893) 146 Ill. 481, 22 L.R.A. 544, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175, 34 N. E. 805, involving a case of alleged eviction on the ground of interference with the means of securing light which the tenant was entitled to under his lease, the court said: "To evict a tenant, according to the original signification of the word, is to deprive him of the possession of the land. But the landlord, without being guilty of actual physical disturbance of the tenant's possession, may yet do such acts as will justify or warrant the tenant in leaving the premises. The latter may abandon the premises in consequence of such acts, or he may continue to occupy them. If he abandons them, then the circumstances which justify such abandonment, taken in connection with the act of abandonment itself, will support a plea of eviction, as against an action for rent. If, however, the tenant makes no surrender of the possession, but continues to occupy the premises after the commission of the acts which would justify him in abandoning them, he will be deemed to have waived his right to abandon, and he cannot sustain a plea of eviction by showing that there were circumstances which would have justified him in leaving the premises. Hence, it has been held that there cannot be a constructive eviction without a surrender of possession. It would be unjust to permit the tenant to remain in possession, and then escape the payment of rent by pleading a state of facts which, though conferring a right to abandon, had been unaccompanied by the exercise of that right."

In Garrett v. Conner (1910) 155 Ill. App. 161, it was held that the lessee who remained in possession of the leased premises could not, in an action by the lessor for the rent, assert as a defense thereto his partial eviction from the premises, on the ground that during the continuance of the lease the lessor, who owned the property adjoining the building in which the leased premises were located, began the erection of a building thereon, and during the construction of this building holes were cut in the walls of the building in which the leased rooms were located, the hallway became loaded with brick and mortar, interfering with the ingress to and egress from the rooms, and the litter created thereby was more or less ground and tracked into the rooms occupied by the lessee.

In Leary v. Meier (1881) 78 Ind. 393, the trial court was asked and refused to instruct the jury that an eviction of the tenant by a landlord of rented premises suspends the rent, that the modern doctrine as to what constitutes an eviction is that actual physical expulsion is not necessary, but an interference with the tenant's beneficial enjoyment of the rented premises will amount to an eviction in law, and when such is the case the rent is suspended. On appeal the court said that this instruction was properly refused, because it was not applicable to the case made by the evidence, since the rent was payable in advance, and the lessor was undertaking to forfeit the lease because of the refusal of the lessee to pay rent which had accrued prior to the time of the act which the lessee claimed constituted an eviction. It was, however, said, in considering the question, that, as the lessee retained possession of the premises and refused to surrender them, the most that he might claim from an interference with the beneficial enjoyment was a deduction from the rent equal to the damages sustained.

In Mortimer v. Brunner (1860) 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 653, the court said that the proposition that there can be retention of demised premises, and an eviction, is logically and legally contradictory. The position has not the slightest warrant in law, principle, sense, or decision.

In Goldberg v. Lloyd (1908) 110 N. Y. Supp. 530, the tenant abandoned the premises sometime after the matters which he complained of and relied upon as a ground for constructive eviction, and his right to do so was denied. The court said: "Assuming, without deciding, that the plaintiff was required to make such repairs, and to see to it that the front door was kept closed, his failure to do so need not be considered, in view of the uncontradicted evidence that the particular matter just mentioned had been remedied, or did not exist when the defendant vacated the premises. The defendant, by thus remaining upon the premises, waived whatever right he may have had, by reason of these matters, to claim a constructive eviction."

Any right to claim a constructive eviction, due to bad odors in and dampness of a leased apartment was waived by the tenant remaining in possession for some months after this condition arose. Heilbrun v. Aaronson (1909) 116 N. Y. Supp. 1096.

In Larsen v. New York (1912) 76 Misc. 569, 137 N. Y. Supp. 144, the court said that the lessee could not go on occupying the premises and refuse to pay rent because possession of a portion thereof was interfered with.

In International Trust Co. v. Schumann (1893) 158 Mass. 287, 33 N. E. 509, the court said: The tenant, "having remained in possession until the end of the term demised, now alleges as an eviction the fact that during the term his landlord entered on the premises under claim of right to repossess them for breach of covenants by the tenant, and brought a process to eject the tenant, on which final judgment for the tenant was rendered; and he further alleges as breaches of the implied covenant for the quiet enjoyment the same entry and suit, and the fact that the landlord, knowing that the premises were of value to the tenant only for his business of common victualer and seller of liquors, caused the license commissioners to refuse him a liquor license, and also caused his license as a common victualer to be taken from him wrongfully and without right. None of these acts were an eviction of the tenant, or an ouster equivalent to an eviction, for the reason that he remained in the occupation of the premises until the end of his term, and for the same reason, if for no others, none of them worked a breach of the implied covenant for quiet enjoyment. The entry was a formal one, not interrupting the tenant's occupation, and doing him no damage. The process was not a malicious suit, and for it his costs, as the prevailing party, are the only remedy. Assuming that the entry and suit were an unjustifiable attempt to oust the tenant, which, if he had yielded, would have been an eviction and a breach of the covenant, as he did not yield, and was never ousted, the entry was, at most, a mere trespass, for which he might recover nominal damages in a suitable action, but not in his present suit, which, by his declaration, he has elected to treat as an action of contract for breach of covenant. The alleged acts of the landlord with reference to the tenant's licenses from public authorities had no tendency to interrupt, and did not interrupt the tenant's possession."

In this regard it has been pointed out that a deduction of the entire rent of a building during the period of interruption cannot be allowed, although the act of the plaintiffs may have been such as to give defendant a right to treat it as an eviction, if he did not choose so to treat it, but remained in possession, and had some use of the building more or less beneficial. Goebel v. Hough (1879) 26 Minn. 252, 2 N. W. 847.

b. To claim partial actual eviction.

1. In general.

It may be observed that any discussion in this subdivision of the distinction between actual and constructive eviction has reference to a partial actual eviction, the tenant retaining possession of at least a portion of the premises.

Where the acts or conduct of the landlord are such as to deprive the lessee of the beneficial enjoyment and use of some portion of the leased premises, he may retain possession of the remainder of the premises, and use and enjoy the same, without rendering himself liable for any part of the rental; since an actual eviction from a portion of the premises suspends the rent as to the whole.

Alabama.—Rice v. Dudley (1880) 65 Ala. 68.

Arkansas.—Collins v. Karatopsky (1880) 36 Ark. 316.

California.—Skaggs v. Emerson (1875) 50 Cal. 6; McAlester v. Landers (1886) 70 Cal. 80, 11 Pac. 505.

Colorado.—Gray v. Linton (1906) 38 Colo. 175, 88 Pac. 749.

Illinois.—Halligan v. Wade (1859) 21 Ill. 470, 74 Am. Dec. 108; Smith v. Wise (1871) 58 Ill. 141; Hayner v. Smith (1872) 63 Ill. 430, 14 Am. Rep. 124; Lynch v. Baldwin (1873) 69 Ill. 210; Keating v. Springer (1893) 146 Ill. 481, 22 L.R.A. 544, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175, 34 N. E. 805; Barrett v. Boddie (1895) 158 Ill. 479, 49 Am. St. Rep. 172, 42 N. E. 143.

Massachusetts.—Shumway v. Collins (1856) 6 Gray, 227; Fuller v. Ruby (1858) 10 Gray, 285; Leishman v. White (1861) 1 Allen, 489; Colburn v. Morrill (1875) 117 Mass. 262, 19 Am. Rep. 415.

Michigan.—Kuschinsky v. Flanagan (1917) 170 Mich. 245, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 430, 136 N. W. 362, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1228.

New Jersey.—Morris v. Kettle (1894) 57 N. J. L. 218, 30 Atl. 879.

New York.—Christopher v. Austin (1854) 11 N. Y. 216; Hamilton v. Graybill (1897) 19 Misc. 521, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1079; Brown v. Wakeman (1891) 42 N. Y. S. R. 677, 16 N. Y. Supp. 846, affirmed in (1892) 45 N. Y. S. R. 671, 18 N. Y. Supp. 363; Cushman v. Thompson (1908) 58 Misc. 539, 109 N. Y. Supp. 757; Lawrence v. Edwin A. Denham Co. (1908) 58 Misc. 543, 109 N. Y. Supp. 752; Fifth Ave. Bldg. Co. v. Kernochan (1917) 221 N. Y. 370, 117 N. E. 579; Schulte Realty Co. v. Pulvino (1919) 179 N. Y. Supp. 371; Kiddie Art Novelty Co. v. Paneth, Falk & Weinhandler (1921) 187 N. Y. Supp. 242; Kerrigan v. May (1921) 188 N. Y. Supp. 774; Moffat v. Strong (1861) 9 Bosw. 57; Pendleton v. Dyett (1825) 4 Cow. 581; Vermilya v. Austin (1853) 2 E. D. Smith, 203; Campbell v. Shields (1855) 11 How. Pr. 565; Peck v. Hiler (1856) 14 How. Pr. 155; Johnson v. Oppenheim

(1872) 43 How. Pr. 433; People ex rel. Murphy v. Gedney (1877) 10 Hun, 151.

Ohio.—Frankel v. Steman (1915) 92 Ohio St. 197, 110 N. E. 747; Crown Mfg. Co. v. Gay (1885) 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 420.

Oklahoma.—Holden v. Tidwell (1913) 37 Okla. 555, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 369, 133 Pac. 54, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 394.

Pennsylvania.—Hoeveler v. Fleming (1879) 91 Pa. 322; McSorley v. Allen (1908) 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 271; Wolf v. Weiner (1868) 2 Brewst. 524.

South Dakota.—Edmison v. Lowry (1892) 3 S. D. 77, 17 L.R.A. 275, 44 Am. St. Rep. 774, 52 N. W. 583.

Vermont.—Rosenberg v. Taft (1920) — Vt. —, 111 Atl. 583.

Virginia.—Tunis v. Graudy (1872) 22 Gratt. 109; Miller v. Southern R. Co. (1921) — Va. —, 108 S. E. 838.

Wisconsin.—Wade v. Herndl (1906) 127 Wis. 544, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 855, 107 N. W. 4, 7 Ann. Cas. 591.

England.—See Upton v. Townend (1855) 17 C. B. 30, 139 Eng. Reprint, 976, 25 L. J. C. P. N. S. 44, 1 Jur. N. S. 1089, 4 Week. Rep. 56; Morrison v. Chadwick (1849) 7 C. B. 266, 137 Eng. Reprint, 107, 6 Dowl. & R. 567, 18 L. J. C. P. N. S. 189.

It has been said that it is extremely difficult to define with technical accuracy what is an eviction. The word "eviction" was formerly used to denote an expulsion by the assertion of a paramount title, or by process of law. But that sort of an eviction is not necessary to constitute a suspension of the rent, because it is now well settled that, if the tenant loses the benefit of the enjoyment of any portion of the demised premises, by the act of the landlord, the rent is thereby suspended. Upton v. Townend (Eng.) supra.

Under the modern doctrine as to what constitutes an eviction, an actual physical expulsion is not necessary, but any interference with the tenant's beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises will amount to an eviction in law. Hoeveler v. Fleming (Pa.) supra.

Any act of the lessor depriving a tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of the leased premises, which amounts to a substantial interference, constitutes an eviction. Kelley v. Long (1912) 18 Cal. App. 159, 122 Pac. 832. But this rule does not apply when the deprivation is of an insignificant or inconsequential portion of the premises. In the latter case the tenant is only entitled to reduction of the rent to the extent of the deprivation. Ibid.

In Holden v. Tidwell (1913) 37 Okla. 553, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 369, 133 Pac. 54, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 394, the court said: "Originally an eviction was understood to be a dispossession of the tenant by some act of his landlord, or the failure of his title. Of late years it has come to include any wrongful act of his landlord which may result in an interference with the tenant's possession in whole or in part. The act may be one of omission as well as one of commission. The rent is suspended by an eviction, because it is plainly unjust that the landlord should be permitted to collect it, while by his own act he deprives the tenant of the possession which is the consideration for it. But the landlord is not responsible for the actions of others lawfully done on their own premises. He is liable only for his own acts and for such acts of others as it was his duty to protect his tenant from."

In Dolph v. Barry (1912) 165 Mo. App. 659, 148 S. W. 196, the court said that an actual eviction exists where the lessor wrongfully enters upon the premises demised and by affirmative acts deprives the lessee of the beneficial use thereof, either in whole or in part. A constructive eviction may be found, even though no actual entry upon the premises is made by the lessor, when it appears that he, or one acting under his authority, does some act amounting to intentional, injurious interference by the landlord with the tenant's possession, and which deprives the tenant of the means or the power of beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises, or any part thereof, or materially impairs his beneficial enjoyment. A mere trespass on the part of the landlord will not suffice, but, to constitute an eviction by construction of law, the wrongful conduct of the landlord must be sufficient, through affirmative act or omission of duty, to render the premises untenable for the purpose for which the tenant leased them, or, at least, seriously interfere with their permanent use.

In McSorley v. Allen (1908) 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 271, Morrison, J., said that physical expulsion is not now necessary to constitute an eviction. Any act of the landlord which deprives the tenant of that beneficial enjoyment of the premises to which he is entitled under a lease will amount in law to an eviction, and suspend the rent. This language is quoted with approval in Gibson v. Earling (1912) 48 Pa. Super. Ct. 566.

Upon this point in Schulte Realty Co. v. Pulvino (1919) 179 N. Y. Supp. 371, the court said: "A constructive eviction arises where a landlord, while not actually depriving the tenant of possession of any part of the premises leased, has done or suffered some act by which the premises are rendered untenable, and has thereby caused a failure of consideration for the tenant's promise to pay rent. In the present case, however, there is no claim that the landlord's act in making or authorizing alterations has rendered the premises actually untenable. As a matter of fact, the tenant can still use the premises as a barber shop, and his only claim is that they have been rendered less convenient for that purpose. It is plain, therefore, that, if the landlord has interfered with the tenant's legal rights, the tenant must be permitted to urge the breach of the landlord's obligation, either as a defense or as a counterclaim to the landlord's claim for rent, or the tenant has no means of enforcing the landlord's obligation. The demise to the tenant undoubtedly included right of access to his premises, right to light and ventilation, and any act of the landlord which physically interfered with these rights of the tenant constitutes, in my opinion, an invasion of the demised premises and a partial eviction of the tenant therefrom. . . . If the demise includes a right to light and air, and the landlord physically interferes with such light and air, his act must logically constitute an eviction of the tenant from the beneficial enjoyment of part of the demise."

In Shumway v. Collins (1856) 6 Gray (Mass.) 227, the court said: "The only remaining ground on which the plaintiffs relied to maintain their suit was that the right of the defendant to occupy the premises was terminated by a failure to pay rent, and by a notice to quit, given according to the provisions of the statutes before cited. But we think the plaintiffs fail to bring their case within any of those provisions. It is clear that the defendant was not a mere tenant at will. He occupied the premises by virtue of a written lease, which was, as has been already shown, valid between him and the plaintiffs. The only question, therefore, is whether he is liable to this process, under Stat. 1847, chap. 267, § 1, for the reason that he has neglected or refused to pay rent according to the terms of this written lease. Clearly he is not. By the wrongful act of the plaintiffs, he has been evicted from a part of the premises demised to him. This has been found by the jury, under instructions to which no exception is taken. We do not deem it necessary to determine whether, according to the ruling of the judge at the trial, and in conformity with many of the authorities, an eviction extinguishes all claim for rent (Bacon, Abr. Rent L.; Morrison v. Chadwick (1849) 7 C. B. 283, 137 Eng. Reprint, 107, 6 Dowl. & L. 567, 18 L. J. C. P. N. S. 189; Upton v. Townend (1855) 17 C. B. 30, 139 Eng. Reprint, 976, 25 L. J. C. P. N. S. 44, 1 Jur. N. S. 1089, 4 Week. Rep. 56; Christopher v. Austin (1854) 11 N. Y. 216; Smith, Land. & T. 202); or whether, as has been sometimes said, after an eviction, a tenant is liable on a quantum meruit, for use and occupation of such part of the premises as was actually occupied by him subsequent to the eviction (Stokes v. Cooper (1813) 3 Campb. (Eng.) 514, note; Smith v. Raleigh (1814) 3 Campb. (Eng.) 513, 14 Revised Rep. 829; Grand Canal Co. v. Fitzsimons (1828) 1 Hud. & B. L. R. (Ir.) 449; Smith, Land. & T. 307). The decision of this case does not depend on the determination of that question. All the authorities concur in declaring that a lessee is not liable to pay the rent stipulated by his lease, after an eviction by his landlord. The agreement in a lease to pay rent is entire, in consideration of the demise of the whole estate; and it cannot be severed or apportioned by an eviction of part of the premises by the tortious act of the landlord. After the eviction, therefore, in the present case, there was no wrongful refusal or neglect by the defendant to pay rent, according to the terms of the written lease under which he held the premises in the controversy. To any claim for rent under this lease, the eviction of the plaintiffs was a legal and sufficient answer. The defendant, after his eviction from a part of the premises by the plaintiffs, had a right to continue in the occupation of the residue, though not bound to do so; and while he so occupied he was in, not as a tenant at will, but under his written lease. The plaintiffs could not, by their own wrongful act, change the tenure by which the defendant occupied the residue of the premises."

In Kuschinsky v. Flanigan (1912) 170 Mich. 245, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 430, 136 N. W. 362, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1228, an action to recover unpaid rent, the defense was the partial eviction of the lessee, due to the act of the lessor in constructing an outside stairway attached to a portion of the leased premises, to permit access to an adjoining apartment, causing the tenants of the apartment to pass to the street over the leased premises, and, as a result of remodeling, the tenant's back yard was filled with building material and rubbish. The court referred with approval to Morris v. Kettle (1894) 57 N. J. L. 218, 30 Atl. 879, and said, in applying the rules of law therein stated to the admitted facts in the case: "It at once becomes apparent that the defendant did not waive his right to insist upon a partial eviction by remaining in possession of the remainder of the premises, and paying rent therefor, for several months after the acts complained of were committed." In the Michigan case the defendant vacated the premises a month and a half before the lease expired, and tendered a half month's rent then due, but the plaintiff refused to accept it, and sued to recover two months' rent.

In Moffat v. Strong (1891) 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 57, it was held to constitute an actual eviction where the tenant of premises, including a building the wall of which rested partially upon the adjoining premises, was required to remove the portion encroaching and rebuild it upon the leased premises; the lessor, after notice from the tenant of the demand upon him to remove the encroachment, having taken no measures to protect the lessee.

In Epstein v. Dunbar (1915) 221 Mass. 579, 109 N. E. 730, where the lessor cut off the original means of access to the leased premises and substituted a means of access through a third person's property, and this was subsequently cut off by such third person, the court said that these facts showed a partial eviction, since the premises were no longer suitable for the purpose for which they were hired, but the lease was not thereby necessarily terminated, and it was not essential that the tenants should abandon the entire premises before seeking relief in equity.

But an interruption of a tenant's enjoyment or beneficial use of the leased premises by the landlord is not necessarily an eviction of him, and nothing less than an eviction will suspend rent either in whole or in part. Fuller v. Ruby (1858) 10 Gray (Mass.) 285. And see Kelley v. Long (1912) 18 Cal. App. 159, 122 Pac. 832, supra.

In Delmar Invest. Co. v. Blumenfeld (1906) 118 Mo. App. 308, 94 S. W. 823, not in point as to facts, the court said that it never has been held that every breach by the landlord of a covenant contained in the lease, which to any degree impairs the tenant's use of the leasehold, is an eviction. The law is the other way. Many breaches fall short of warranting an abandonment to the tenant, who must look to an action on his covenant for damages.

Unless the premises are rendered useless to the tenant by the positive act of the landlord, or unless the tenant has been deprived, in whole or in part, of the possession and enjoyment of the demised premises, actually or constructively, by the landlord, no defense exists to the right to recover rent because of eviction. Keating v. Springer (1893) 146 Ill. 481, 22 L.R.A. 544, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175, 34 N. E. 805; Barrett v. Boddie (1895) 158 Ill. 479, 49 Am. St. Rep. 172, 42 N. E. 143.

In Blaustein v. Pincus (1913) 47 Mont. 202, 131 Pac. 1064, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 405; after the lessee vacated the premises, he brought an action for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment on the ground that the lessor constructed, upon premises adjoining the leased premises, a garage which was leased for a public purpose, the operation of which caused such noise, confusion, and odors as to render the lessee's use of the premises as a rooming house impossible, and recovered substantial damages.

In Baumgardner v. Consolidated Copying Co. (1892) 44 Ill. App. 74, it is held not to constitute an eviction for a landlord to neglect to remove from the demised premises chattels belonging to him, and not included in the lease.

Under the defense of eviction the effect of the eviction, if established, is to relieve the lessee of the payment of any rent during its continuance, whether the eviction is actual or constructive; but at this point the similarity between the two kinds of eviction ceases, for, if actual eviction is established, the lessee may defeat all recovery of rent although he retains possession of a portion of the leased premises; while, as heretofore pointed out, it is a condition of the right to claim a constructive eviction that the lessee shall vacate the premises.

In Lawrence v. Katcher (1909) 117 N. Y. Supp. 876, the court said: "The law recognizes two classes of eviction: First, where by the act of the landlords, or title paramount, the tenant has been actually physically deprived of a material portion of the premises demised. This is termed 'an actual eviction.' Upon such eviction, the liability of the tenant to pay rent is suspended until the premises are restored to the tenant. The tenant may, in such cases, continue in possession of the remainder of the premises, yet not be held to pay rent. Second, where the landlords have been guilty of such sins of omission or commission, in relation to their duty towards the premises, as to deprive the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment thereof. The character of the enjoyment to which the tenant is entitled depends upon the character of the building and the purpose for which it is maintained and let. This class of eviction is known in law as a 'constructive eviction.' There can be no constructive eviction without an actual abandonment by the tenant of the premises demised. . . . As long as the tenant continues in possession of the premises, he is liable to pay all the rent which has accrued during his occupancy."

Most, if not all, the cases considering the question as to when the acts complained of constitute an actual partial, and when a constructive, eviction, apparently apply as a test the fact as to whether the act complained of results in a deprivation of some right or appurtenance to the premises to which the tenant was entitled, or whether it constitutes merely an interference with the beneficial enjoyment of the premises by the tenant; if the former, the act constitutes an actual eviction; if the latter, it may constitute a constructive eviction, although all wrongful acts of the lessor interfering with the enjoyment of the premises by the lessee do not amount to a constructive eviction.

In Seigel v. Neary (1902) 38 Misc. 297, 77 N. Y. Supp. 854, the court said: "The fundamental distinction between a constructive eviction and an actual eviction should be borne in mind. When the landlord suffers acts to be done which make it necessary for the tenant to remove, or does or permits any intentional or injurious interference, either by himself or those acting under his authority, which deprives the tenant of the means or the power of beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises, or materially impairs such enjoyment, such acts are considered as tantamount to constructive eviction. But, in order to make a constructive eviction available as a defense, there must be an abandonment of the premises. . . . An actual eviction consists in the deprivation by the landlord of the tenant, from the whole or some portion of the demised premises, and where there has been an actual eviction from a part of the demised premises, the tenant may retain possession of what he has, the entire rent being suspended until full possession has been restored. The act of the landlord in depriving the tenant of a portion of the demised premises, being a wilful one, and done in defiance of the tenant and his rights under the lease, is in the nature of a trespass."

20 A.L.R.—87.

In Jackson v. Paterno (1908) 58 Misc. 201, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1073, supra, the court said that an actual eviction exists where the physical expulsion of the tenant is effected. A constructive eviction exists where the physical expulsion of the tenant is not effected, but the acts of the landlord, paramount title, or process of law so interfere with the beneficial enjoyment of the premises demised as to necessitate the abandonment of the premises.

In Hamilton v. Graybill (1907) 19 Misc. 521, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1079, the distinction is drawn between an actual eviction and a constructive eviction, and it is pointed out that if the eviction had been constructive the tenant would have had to surrender possession of the premises, but that this is not necessary as to an actual eviction. The court said that, considering these entrances as appurtenances to the demised rooms, it could not say that the tenant should, at the instance of the landlord, do without the use of either one of the entrances, without assuming to make for the parties a contract which differs materially in respect to the subject thereof from the one which relates to themselves. From the use of one of such appurtenances the tenants were actually and physically ousted and kept expelled. The case at bar, therefore, was not one of a constructive eviction, merely, from the office rooms let to the respondent, in which event the eviction would not be available as a defense to a demand for the rent without an abandonment of the demised premises before the rent accrued, but one of an actual eviction from a part of such premises, which, though the tenant continued to occupy the remainder, has the effect of suspending the entire rent so long as the eviction endures, the same as if the eviction was from the whole of the premises demised.

As will be seen by a reference to the cases hereinafter referred to in IV., in the practical application of the rules of law pertinent to the subject, it is not, in all cases, clear whether the particular breach complained of constitutes an actual partial eviction, or a constructive eviction.

2. Liability upon a quantum meruit.

In Shumway v. Collins (1856) 6 Gray (Mass.) 227, the question was raised as to whether the tenant might be held on a quantum meruit for the reasonable rental value of that portion of the leased premises he continued to occupy after an actual eviction from a part of the premises, but it was pointed out that a decision of that case did not require an answer to the question. Upon the same point, however, in Leishman v. White (1861) 1 Allen (Mass.) 489, the court said: "Nor can an action for use and occupation of the premises be maintained against the defendant. The lease is not terminated by the unlawful eviction of the lessee. He still continues to occupy that part of the estate from which he has not been evicted, under and by virtue of the demise under seal. No implied promise arises to pay for such occupation and enjoyment. The case, therefore, stands thus: To the claim on the covenant, the answer is the eviction; to the demand for use and occupation, the answer is that the defendant holds under his lease; so that in neither aspect of the case can the plaintiff maintain his action."

Upon the same point, in Christopher v. Austin (1854) 11 N. Y. 216, the court said: "It is not contended by the plaintiff's counsel that although such an eviction would be a bar to an action on the agreement to pay rent, yet that it is no bar to an action under the statute to recover a reasonable sum for the use and occupation, if the tenant continue to occupy a portion of the premises after such eviction from a part. There is no reason for such a distinction, nor can it be sustained by authority. The rule is that if the landlord enter wrongfully upon, or prevent the tenant from the enjoyment of a part of, the demised premises, the whole rent is suspended till the possession is restored. It would be a palpable evasion of the rule and of the penalty the law imposes upon the landlord for a wrongful eviction, to hold that he may recover for use and occupation on a quantum meruit, when he is not permitted to recover on the agreement itself."

In Dolph v. Barry (1912) 165 Mo. App. 659, 148 S. W. 196, the court said: "There can be no doubt that in a case where an actual eviction appears—as where the lessor himself, or through someone authorized by him, actually enters upon the demised premises and appropriates a portion thereof to his own use, or deprives the tenant of the benefits of any portion thereof—there is a total suspension of the whole grant, even though but a portion of the premises is thus appropriated by the landlord, until the tenant is restored to the whole possession. . . . This rule obtains in such cases notwithstanding the fact that the tenant may continue the occupancy of a portion of the leased property. Such eviction presents a tortious aspect involved in the wrongful trespass of the landlord. Because of this, the reason of the rule is said to be that, as the estate created by the lease is an entire one, for which one consideration is given, the landlord may not evict the tenant from a portion of the demised premises, and then be permitted to apportion his own wrong by insisting upon a part of the rent; for to hold otherwise, it is said, would be to encourage landlords to evict their own tenants (whose possession they are rather bound to protect) when such eviction would inure to the pecuniary advantage of such landlords."

According to the late Illinois case of Selz v. Stafford (1918) 284 Ill. 610, 120 N. E. 462, even though there is an actual partial eviction, the tenant is nevertheless liable for the pro rata value of the rental of the premises of which he retains the possession and use. In this regard the case is apparently out of harmony with Hayner v. Smith (1872) 63 Ill. 430, 14 Am. Rep. 124, and Lynch v. Baldwin (1873) 69 Ill. 210. In the Selz Case, however, an actual eviction could hardly be claimed, since the complaint of the lessee was that the lessor, without authority under the lease and against the protest of the lessee, permitted a business to be carried on in a portion of the building not covered by the lease, which he well knew to be hurtful to the business for which the property to the complaining lessee had been leased.

c. To claim breach of covenant.

Although, as already stated, a tenant who remains in possession may not defend an action for rent upon the ground of constructive eviction, nevertheless, if the landlord's conduct has been such as to amount to a breach of covenant, the lessee, although remaining in possession, may treat the wrongful disturbance of or interference with his beneficial use and enjoyment of the possession of the demised premises as a breach of covenant.

United States.—Owens v. Wright (1883) 5 McCrary, 642, 18 Fed. 865; Wait v. O'Neil (1896) 34 L.R.A. 550, 22 C. C. A. 248, 76 Fed. 408.

California.—Levitzky v. Canning (1867) 33 Cal. 299; McAlester v. Landers (1886) 70 Cal. 79, 11 Pac. 505; McDowell v. Hyman (1897) 117 Cal. 67, 48 Pac. 984; Agoure v. Lewis (1910) 15 Cal. App. 71, 113 Pac. 882.

Colorado.—Gray v. Linton (1906) 38 Colo. 175, 88 Pac. 749.

Georgia.—Adair v. Allen (1916) 18 Ga. App. 636, 89 S. E. 1099.

Illinois.—Chicago Legal News Co. v. Browne (1882) 103 Ill. 317; Keating v. Springer (1893) 146 Ill. 481, 22 L.R.A. 544, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175, 34 N. E. 805; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wood (1901) 189 Ill. 352, 59 N. E.

619; Rubens v. Hill (1904) 213 Ill. 523, 72 N. E. 1127; White v. Y. M. C. A. (1908) 233 Ill. 526, 84 N. E. 658; Selz v. Stafford (1918) 284 Ill. 610, 120 N. E. 462; Harmony Co. v. Rauch (1896) 62 Ill. App. 97; Garrett v. Conner (1910) 155 Ill. App. 161; Globe Asso. v. Brega (1914) 190 Ill. App. 60. Indiana.—Leary v. Meier (1881) 78 Ind. 398.

Iowa.—Boyer v. Commercial Bldg. Invest. Co. (1900) 110 Iowa, 49, 81 N. W. 720.

Massachusetts.—Dexter v. Manley (1849) 4 Cush. 14; Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Ripley (1866) 13 Allen, 421; Brown v. Holyoke Water Power Co. (1890) 152 Mass. 463, 23 Am. St. Rep. 844, 25 N. E. 966; Case v. Minot (1893) 158 Mass. 577, 22 L.R.A. 536, 33 N. E. 700; Kansas Invest. Co. v. Carter (1894) 160 Mass. 421, 36 N. E. 63.

Michigan.—Ives v. Williams (1883) 50 Mich. 100, 15 N. W. 33.

Minnesota.—Collins v. Lewis (1893) 53 Minn. 78, 19 L.R.A. 822, 54 N. W. 1056.

Missouri.—Riley v. Pettis County (1888) 96 Mo. 318, 9 S. W. 906; Morse v. Maddox (1853) 17 Mo. 569, subsequent appeals in (1854) 19 Mo. 451, and (1855) 21 Mo. 524; B. Roth Tool Co. v. Champ Spring Co. (1907) 122 Mo. App. 603, 99 S. W. 827.

Montana.—See Blaustein v. Pincus (1913) 47 Mont. 202, 131 Pac. 1064, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 405.

Nebraska.—Kitchen Bros. Hotel Co. v. Philbin (1902) 2 Neb. (Unof.) 340, 96 N. W. 487.

New Jersey.—Whitcomb v. Brant (1908) 76 N. J. L. 201, 68 Atl. 1102; Metropole Constr. Co. v. Hartigan (1912) 83 N. J. L. 409, 85 Atl. 313.

New York.—Hirsch v. Olmesdahl (1902) 38 Misc. 757, 78 N. Y. Supp. 832; Williams v. Getman (1906) 114 App. Div. 282, 99 N. Y. Supp. 977; Thomson v. Ludlum (1901) 36 Misc. 801, 74 N. Y. Supp. 875; Borchardt v. Parker (1908) 108 N. Y. Supp. 585; Egan v. Browne (1908) 128 App. Div. 184, 112 N. Y. Supp. 689; Wurz v. Watts (1911) 73 Misc. 262, 132 N. Y. Supp. 685; Coleman Constr. Co. v. Boomgaarden (1918) 170 N. Y. Supp.

25; Paddell v. Janes (1915) 90 Misc. 146, 152 N. Y. Supp. 948; Jacob New Realty Co. v. Noxall Shirt Co. (1918) 104 Misc. 82, 171 N. Y. Supp. 376; Cox v. Cryder (1915) 168 App. Div. 624, 154 N. Y. Supp. 452; Green v. Brenner (1918) 169 N. Y. Supp. 682; Schulte Realty Co. v. Pulvino (1919) 179 N. Y. Supp. 371.

North Carolina. — See Huggins v. Waters (1911) 154 N. C. 443, 70 S. E. 842.

Ohio.—Frankel v. Steman (1915) 92 Ohio St. 197, 110 N. E. 747.

Pennsylvania. — Depuy v. Silver (1843) 1 Clark, 385; Schienze v. Eckels (1910) 227 Pa. 305, 76 Atl. 15.

Virginia.—Hubble v. Cole (1891) 88 Va. 236, 13 L.R.A. 311, 29 Am. St. Rep. 716, 13 S. E. 441.

Washington.—Matzger v. Arcade Bldg. & Realty Co. (1918) 102 Wash. 423, 173 Pac. 47.

England.—See Upton v. Townsend (1855) 1 Jur. N. S. 1089, 17 C. B. 30, 139 Eng. Reprint, 976, 25 L. J. C. P. N. S. 44, 4 Week. Rep. 56; Tebb v. Cave [1900] 1 Ch. 642, 69 L. J. Ch. N. S. 282, 48 Week. Rep. 318, 82 L. T. N. S. 115; Malzy v. Eicholz (1916) 115 L. T. N. S. 9, [1916] 2 K. B. 308, 10 B. R. C. 231, 85 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1132, 32 Times L. R. 506, 60 Sol. Jo. 511; Sanderson v. Berwick-upon-Tweed (1884) L. R. 13 Q. B. Div. 547, 53 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 559, 51 L. T. N. S. 495, 33 Week. Rep. 67, 49 J. P. 6.

It will be observed that the principle presupposes that there has been an actionable breach of a covenant, and therefore will not apply to an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, in a jurisdiction where the view prevails that that covenant is not breached if the tenant remains in possession.

In Sanderson v. Berwick-upon-Tweed (Eng.) supra, the rule is thus stated: "Where the ordinary and lawful enjoyment of the demised land is substantially interfered with by the acts of the lessor, or those lawfully claiming under him, the covenant appears to us to be broken, although neither the title to the land nor the possession of the land may be otherwise affected."

In Delmar Invest. Co. v. Blumenfeld

(1906) 118 Mo. App. 308, 94 S. W. 823, the court said that every breach of covenant in a lease which impairs the tenant's use of the leasehold is not an eviction, but that where the interference falls short of an eviction, warranting an abandonment of the premises by the tenant, he may have recourse to an action on his covenant for damages.

And it has been held that where the lessee continues in the occupation of the leased premises he cannot assert an eviction by the landlord, and the latter is therefore entitled to collect the whole of the rent for the premises, subject, however, to any counterclaim for damages that the lessee may show by reason of the landlord's failure to keep his covenant, or by reason of any other legitimate claim that the lessee may set up as a set-off, or by way of recoupment; and the mere fact that the lessee entered into possession of the premises, and continued such possession, and paid all rents and other charges during the term of the lease, does not, as a matter of law, constitute a waiver by him of his right to recoup. Selz v. Stafford (1918) 284 Ill. 610, 120 N. E. 462.

The question also received very able consideration by the court in Wurz v. Watts (1911) 73 Misc. 262, 132 N. Y. Supp. 685, which sustained the right of a barber to counterclaim damage in an action by the landlord to recover rent, where the counterclaim was based upon the failure of the landlord to furnish heat and hot water according to agreement, the contention of the landlord being that the remedy of the tenant was to surrender the premises and claim constructive eviction. In denying this contention, the court considered many of the principal New York cases upon the subject. Upon this point it is said: "The question is thus presented as to what is the status of this case at bar and what are the rights of the parties. It was held in the case of West Side Sav. Bank v. Newton (1879) 76 N. Y. 616, that where the use of water was a privilege or easement which constituted a part of the demised premises, and plaintiff caused the water to be shut off, it could not recover rent beyond the time the premises were actually occupied. Defendant, having left the premises when the water was shut off, differentiates that case somewhat from the one at bar. My attention is not called to any case exactly similar to this one, but there are very numerous cases in the books in which the landlord has made a breach of his contract to make repairs, and I think those cases are practically analogous to this one. . . . In the case at bar it appears that the tenant has himself furnished such heat as he has had, and has himself procured the necessary water, and apparently he has acted under the 'second' provision stated by Underhill, and quoted above. It is held in numerous cases in this state that where a landlord has agreed to make repairs,—which seems to me to be analogous to the case at bar,—and does not do so, the tenant, upon his refusal, may make them and charge the expense to the landlord, or he may remove from the premises and sue for damages. . . . It seems to me that in the case at bar it is fair to consider that, under all the circumstances, there has been no eviction, but there has obviously been a breach of the contract, which has affected the rental value of the premises in question, and that defendant is entitled to recoup therefor."

In Collins v. Lewis (1893) 53 Minn. 78, 19 L.R.A. 822, 54 N. W. 1056, the landlord was held liable to the tenant for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment, the claim for damages being asserted as a counterclaim in an action by the landlord to recover rent, the breach being based upon a trespass upon the leased premises by a third party, acting under a contract with the landlord. The court said: "It is obvious that under a claim of title the landlord has interfered with the tenant's possession of the demised premises, and has prevented him from having the use and enjoyment of a part thereof. This amounted to a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and when such a condition exists, and an action is brought to recover for rent subsequently falling due, the tenant may counterclaim and recover his damages."

In Kansas Invest. Co. v. Carter (1894) 160 Mass. 421, 36 N. E. 63, a breach of express covenant of quiet enjoyment was held to depend upon the question whether, a building upon the leased premises having been declared unsafe, the landlord must necessarily, for reasons of safety, tear it down, or whether it might be made safe and secure without disturbing the possession of the lessee. If the building was unnecessarily taken down, then the landlord would be liable for breach of the covenant.

In Jaeger v. Mansions Consolidated (1903) 87 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 690, 19 Times L. R. 145, the liability of the landlord for breach of covenant was held to depend upon the finding of fact as to whether he authorized tenants of apartments in the same building as the plaintiff to use their apartments for immoral purposes. The case was presented by an application by the tenant for a declaration that the defendants were bound by the covenant for quiet enjoyment with plaintiff's assignor, and for an injunction restraining defendants from permitting any of the other flats in the building to be used so as to interfere with the quiet enjoyment by the plaintiff of his flat, and he also claimed damages.

In Malzy v. Eichholz (1916) 115 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 9, 10 B. R. C. 231, Lord Cozens-Hardy said: "I apprehend that there is no authority and no principle for holding a landlord liable under a covenant for quiet enjoyment—that is to say, that he has done anything which renders himself liable to damages under the covenant in respect of quiet enjoyment—merely because he knows of what is being done, and merely because he does not take any steps to prevent what is being done. There must be something much more than that. There must be something which can fairly amount to his doing the act complained of, or allowing the act complained of, either by actual participation by himself or his agents, or by what Lord Collins called active participation in that which was complained of."

And see also TOY v. OLINGER (reported herewith) ante, 1366, which holds that the tenant cannot diminish the amount of rental which the landlord is entitled to recover, by showing acts of a tenant of an adjoining apartment, which injured his business, without showing a responsibility of the landlord therefor.

It has been held that a trespass by the landlord does not necessarily amount to a breach of covenant.

Thus, in Avery v. Dougherty (1885) 102 Ind. 443, 52 Am. Rep. 680, 2 N. E. 123, the court said: "The only remaining general question is whether the facts pleaded constitute a breach of covenant or a trespass. It is quite well settled that it is not every entry of the landlord, although wrongful, that constitutes a breach of covenant; a landlord may be a trespasser without breaking the covenant. An English writer says: 'Generally speaking, a covenant for quiet enjoyment, or a bond for the performance of such a covenant, extends to secure the enjoyment against lawful interruptions only, although the word "lawful" be not contained in the covenant, the law having provided an action of trespass as the means of redressing an unlawful entry or disturbance. An early case to the contrary has long since been virtually, if not expressly, overruled.' 2 Platt, Leases, 312. This however, is the rule only where a stranger enters. Where the lessor enters the rule is somewhat different. The author from whom we have quoted says: 'But a disturbance of the lessee by the lessor himself is not regarded with the same lenity as an eviction by a stranger, it being clear that the lessor exposes himself to an action on his covenant, although he enter wrongfully, notwithstanding the covenant provides against lawful evictions only; for, in such case, the court will not consider the word "lawful," or drive the plaintiff to his action of trespass, when by the general implied covenant in law the lessor has engaged not to avoid his own deed, either by a rightful or tortious entry. Indeed, it would hardly be consistent with reason to allow the lessor to defeat the tenancy by pleading his own wrong.' 2 Platt, Leases, 313. Although the law is more strict against the lessor than a stranger, still, a mere entry, though wrongful and unlawful, will not constitute a breach of covenant. It is necessary that something more than an entry and injury be shown, for these are the elements of a trespass. It must also be shown that the entry was an assertion of right or title—in other words, was in the nature of a total or partial eviction. . . . The authorities to which we have referred lead to the conclusion that the answer states facts constituting a trespass, and not a breach of covenant, for the reason that it does not show an entry under an assumption of title."

d. To claim trespass or tort.

Where the landlord commits a trespass upon the leased premises, even though it does not amount to an eviction, he may be held liable to the tenant for the latter's damage caused by the trespass.

Alabama. — Harden v. Conwell (1920) 205 Ala. 191, 87 So. 673.

California. — Parish v. Studebaker (1920) — Cal. App. —, 195 Pac. 721; Plotnik v. Rosenberg (1921) — Cal. App. —, 203 Pac. 438.

Georgia. — Shores v. Brooks (1888) 81 Ga. 468, 12 Am. St. Rep. 332, 8 S. E. 429.

Illinois. — Northern Trust Co. v. Palmer (1898) 171 Ill. 383, 49 N. E. 553; Guinee v. Prouty (1912) 175 Ill. App. 617; Goodman v. Weinberger (1914) 185 Ill. App. 167; Vondra v. Felcman (1916) 202 Ill. App. 136.

Indiana. — Froot v. Hardin (1877) 56 Ind. 165, 26 Am. Rep. 18.

Iowa. — See Clark v. Strohbeen (1921) 190 Iowa, 989, 13 A.L.R. 1419, 181 N. W. 430.

Louisiana. — Woods v. Monteleone (1907) 118 La. 1005, 43 So. 657.

Maine. — Brock v. Berry (1850) 31 Me. 293; Bryant v. Sparrow (1873) 62 Me. 546.

Maryland. — Stanton v. Lapp (1910) 113 Md. 324, 77 Atl. 672.

Massachusetts. — Dickinson v. Goodspeed (1851) 8 Cush. 119.

Michigan. — Conlon v. McGraw (1887) 66 Mich. 194, 33 N. W. 388; Meney v. Lamphere (1905) 139 Mich. 429, 102 N. W. 974.

Missouri. — Barnard v. Weaver (1920) — Mo. App. —, 224 S. W. 152.

Montana. — Winterscheid v. Reichle (1912) 45 Mont. 238, 122 Pac. 740.

New Hampshire. — Evans v. Watkins (1912) 76 N. H. 433, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 404, 83 Atl. 915.

New Jersey. — Panglorne v. Weiss (1914) 86 N. J. L. 286, 90 Atl. 1024.

New Mexico. — De Palma v. Weinman (1909) 15 N. M. 68, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 423, 103 Pac. 782.

New York. — Domhoff v. Stier (1913) 157 App. Div. 204, 141 N. Y. Supp. 825; Collers Photo Supply Co. v. Davidson (1918) 170 N. Y. Supp. 938; Aguglia v. Bausch & L. Optical Co. (1918) 172 N. Y. Supp. 666.

North Carolina. — Krider v. Ramsay (1878) 79 N. C. 354.

Ohio. — Wilber v. Paine (1824) 1 Ohio, 251.

Texas. — Jenner v. Carpenter (1898) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 48 S. W. 46.

Wisconsin. — Jolly v. Single (1862) 16 Wis. 280.

And the landlord may be held liable to the tenant, in an action of trespass on the case, for loss accruing from an unlawful entry upon the leased premises in making repairs upon a building located thereon. Northern Trust Co. v. Palmer (1898) 171 Ill. 383, 49 N. E. 553.

Upon this point, in Wood v. Monteleone (1907) 118 La. 1005, 43 So. 657, the court said: "The execution of the alterations required the actual entry of the workmen engaged in making them into plaintiff's premises, as we have said, not only to her great inconvenience and discomfort, but to her pecuniary loss. The entry was an invasion of her rights of lawful and peaceable possession. The defendant, so far from causing his lessee to be maintained in the peaceable possession of the thing leased, as it was his legal duty to do under article 2692, Civ. Code, actively violated the rights which the plaintiff had acquired touching the possession of the property, not only as against the invasion thereof by the general public, but as against the defendant himself. Having no legal right to enter the premises for the purposes he did, he stood, relatively to that fact and act, as any other member of the public would have stood, doing the same act. His ownership of the building gave him no vantage ground in that respect. On the contrary, his legal obligations as lessor made it more imperative upon him to respect her rights than would have been expected or exacted from a stranger. The entry as made upon the premises was not made in the interest of the plaintiff, or in the performance of any duty imposed upon him as lessor, in the exercise of any right reserved to himself, either by law or by contract, for the benefit of the party leasing the premises below, but for his own advantage and purposes."

In Conlon v. McGraw (1887) 66 Mich. 194, 33 N. W. 388, the act of the defendant in entering that portion of a building not leased to the plaintiff, and tearing it down to the extent of practically destroying the beneficial use of the premises, was held to constitute a trespass entitling the plaintiff to recover in an action in trespass on the case.

In Kelly v. Easton (1922) — Idaho, —, — A.L.R. —, 207 Pac. 129, the doctrine is asserted that "if the landlord interrupt the enjoyment of the leased premises by permitting his cattle to enter and destroy the tenant's crop, he should be liable for all the damage occasioned by such trespass."

III. Form of remedy.

a. In general.

As heretofore noted, where the beneficial enjoyment of the leased premises is substantially interfered with by or under the authority of the lessor, several different remedies are open to the lessee, dependent, however, upon the circumstances of the case, for these remedies are not necessarily correlative. A claim of actual partial eviction may, in some cases, be based upon acts which would amount to a breach of express or implied covenants, but a breach of covenant does not necessarily constitute such an eviction; and even if the lessee might claim an eviction for breach of covenant, he is not necessarily limited to this remedy, but may assert the breach in recoupment or counterclaim, or rely upon it for the recovery of damages in an action against the lessor. In this regard it is to be noted that, if an eviction were successfully asserted, it would constitute a complete defense to the right of the lessor to recover any rental during the time of the eviction; at least, where the eviction was due to the acts, conduct, or negligence of the lessor, or through his sufferance. On the other hand, where the breach of the covenant is asserted in recoupment or counterclaim, the lessor is entitled to recover the difference, if any, between the agreed rental and the damages shown, or the fair rental in view of the breach complained of. In relying upon a breach of the covenant to constitute an actual partial eviction, however, the lessee takes the risk of an adverse determination of the claim of eviction, even though he establishes the breach. But this risk, apparently, may be obviated by relying upon the defense of eviction and also upon a recoupment or counterclaim. This is also true where, having abandoned the premises, he asserts a constructive eviction.

b. Set-off or counterclaim.

In an action by the lessor to recover the rental of premises, the lessee is entitled to offset, counterclaim, or recoup damages accruing to him by reason of the interference with, or deprivation by the lessor, or someone acting under his authority, of, the beneficial enjoyment by the lessee of the leased premises, and this right is not lost by the latter remaining in possession of the premises.

Arkansas.—Smith v. Glover (1918) 135 Ark. 531, 205 S. W. 891.

California.—McAlester v. Landers (1886) 70 Cal. 79, 11 Pac. 505; Parish v. Studebaker (1920) — Cal. App. —, 195 Pac. 721.

Illinois.—Wade v. Halligan (1855) 16 Ill. 507; Chicago Legal News Co. v. Browne (1882) 103 Ill. 317; Keating v. Springer (1893) 146 Ill. 481, 22

L.R.A. 544, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175, 34 N. E. 805; Rubens v. Hill (1904) 213 Ill. 523, 72 N. E. 1127; Selz v. Stafford (1918) 284 Ill. 610, 120 N. E. 462; Harmony Co. v. Rauch (1896) 62 Ill. App. 97; Strum v. Berry (1914) 185 Ill. App. 113; Garrett v. Conner (1910) 155 Ill. App. 161; Globe Asso. v. Brega (1914) 190 Ill. App. 60.

Indiana.—Leavy v. Meier (1881) 78 Ind. 393.

Iowa. — Jones v. De Moss (1911) 151 Iowa, 112, 130 N. W. 914.

Massachusetts. — Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Ripley (1866) 13 Allen, 421.

Minnesota. — Goebel v. Hough (1879) 26 Minn. 252, 2 N. W. 847.

Missouri.—Thayer-Moore Brokerage Co. v. Campbell (1912) 164 Mo. App. 8, 147 S. W. 545; Barnard v. Weaver (1920) — Mo. App. —, 224 S. W. 152.

New York. — Ludlow v. McCarthy (1896) 5 App. Div. 517, 38 N. Y. Supp. 1075; Hirsch v. Ohmesdahl (1902) 38 Misc. 757, 78 N. Y. Supp. 832; Borchardt v. Parker (1908) 108 N. Y. Supp. 585; Wurz v. Watts (1911) 73 Misc. 262, 132 N. Y. Supp. 685; Hett v. Lange (1910) 139 App. Div. 743, 124 N. Y. Supp. 573; Cox v. Cryder (1915) 168 App. Div. 625, 154 N. Y. Supp. 452; Jacob New Realty Co. v. Noxall Shirt Co. (1918) 105 Misc. 82, 171 N. Y. Supp. 376; Schlechter v. Jones (1919) 173 N. Y. Supp. 499.

Pennsylvania. — Depuy v. Silver (1843) 1 Clark, 385.

It has been asserted that the statute allowing counterclaims is a remedial statute, and should be construed liberally; thus construed, the provision describing one class of causes of action that may be the subject of counterclaim, as those connected with the cause of action, includes a cause of action in the tenant against his landlord for wrongfully interfering with his enjoyment of leased premises, when he is sued by the landlord for rent for a period including the time of such interference. Goebel v. Hough (Minn.) supra.

If, through any wrongful act of the lessor, or failure to perform anything required of him by the lease, the beneficial enjoyment of the tenant is diminished, he is still bound for the rent if he continues to occupy the premises, and, if he does not abandon them, his obligation to pay the rent therefor remains; but he may show as a matter of defense in what manner such beneficial enjoyment of the premises was diminished by such act, or omission to act, by the lessor, and recoup against the rent damages, if any, he may show he has sustained by reason of the wrong complained of. Chicago Legal News Co. v. Browne (Ill.) supra; Keating v. Springer (1893) 146 Ill. 481, 22 L.R.A. 544, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175, 34 N. E. 805; Rubens v. Hill (1904) 213 Ill. 523, 72 N. E. 1127.

In Selz v. Stafford (1918) 284 Ill. 610, 120 N. E. 462, the court said: "Any acts of trespass of the landlord, or other acts which are unwarranted or negligently performed and occasion damage to the tenant in respect to the premises leased, may be recouped by the tenant in an action for rent. Lynch v. Baldwin (1873) 69 Ill. 210; Keating v. Springer (1893) 146 Ill. 481, 22 L.R.A. 544, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175, 34 N. E. 805. The tenant may also recoup in such an action his damages for a partial eviction of the premises, or for any acts that amount to an eviction of a part of the premises. Halligan v. Wade (1859) 21 Ill. 470, 74 Am. Dec. 108. It is at all times to be understood, however, that no wrongful act of the landlord debars him from a recovery of the rent for the premises, if the tenant continues to occupy the premises. In such a case the tenant can only recoup such damage as he sustained from the unlawful acts of the landlord which cause damage to the tenant in respect to the premises leased. He may recoup for a partial eviction of the premises, but he cannot successfully claim an eviction as to the whole of the premises so long as he remains in possession of the same."

In Wade v. Halligan (1855) 16 Ill. 507, a distress proceeding by a landlord against his tenant, the court said: "The main question is as to the materiality of the evidence, and this involves the question of the right to set up, as a defense to the payment of rent, that the party was disturbed in his quiet and peaceable possession, was evicted from part of the premises, and injured, and the value of the rent so diminished. We are of opinion he has a right to show such facts in defense, upon this inquiry and assessment, in cases where the lease provided for his protection, expressed or implied. It is a legitimate inquiry, as well as payment under the general issue, as to the amount of rent due, and could be made and tried in the action of replevin of the distress. For it was one of the peculiarities of a common-law distress that the tenant was forced to his replevin, in order to compel the landlord to prove his demand for rent, and enable the tenant to show payment, eviction, disturbance, or injury from the landlord's breach of the covenant in the lease."

As to recouping damages for any loss or injury sustained by the tenant, in Lynch v. Baldwin (Ill.) supra, the court said: "We have no doubt that it may be done, as they grow out of the same transaction. The object of this inquiry is to ascertain the amount of rent due; and if the acts of the landlord impaired the value of the use of the premises, then the tenant should not pay the same rent as if the landlord had done no act to reduce such value. It is not like a demand growing out of or owing on some other account, which, by the repeated decisions of this court, cannot be set off or recouped in a proceeding of this character; but damages growing out of a breach of the terms of the lease by the landlord may."

In Hett v. Lange (1910) 139 App. Div. 743, 124 N. Y. Supp. 573, in sustaining the right of a tenant, in a dispossession proceeding by the landlord, to counterclaim damages based upon the failure of the latter to furnish a water supply as required by the lease, the court said: A counterclaim may be interposed in summary proceedings in like manner as though the claim for rent in such proceedings was the subject of an action. . . . And, although the tenant may not have an affirmative judgment on his counterclaim, he can have his damages set off to the extent of the landlord's claim, . . . and when such damages have been ascertained, set off, and the amount of unpaid rent determined, the tenant may pay the same into court at any time before the warrant is issued, and upon so doing the landlord's right to dispossess terminates, and the proceeding must be dismissed."

In Cox v. Cryder (1915) 168 App. Div. 624, 154 N. Y. Supp. 452, the court said that where, upon ascertaining defects in the premises which amounted to a breach by the landlord of his covenant, the lessee remained in possession, the remedy for such breach, not amounting to an eviction, was to counterclaim for damages, or to bring an action therefor.

In Wurz v. Watts (1911) 73 Misc. 262, 132 N. Y. Supp. 685, it is held that a barber is entitled to counterclaim damage in an action by the landlord to recover rent, the counterclaim being based upon the failure of the landlord to furnish heat and water according to the agreement.

In Metropole Constr. Co. v. Hartigan (1912) 83 N. J. L. 409, 85 Atl. 313, a tenant is held entitled to recoup damages for breach of covenant by the landlord in failing to furnish telephone service.

In Leary v. Meier (1881) 78 Ind. 393, where the tenant alleged an eviction, the court said that, where the lessee retains possession of the premises and refuses to surrender them, the most that he can claim from the interference with his beneficial enjoyment is a deduction from the rent equal to the damage sustained.

In Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Ripley (1866) 13 Allen (Mass.) 421, it was held, where a lessor interfered with the lessee's enjoyment of the use of the premises by building a high board fence around the boundary line so as to cut off access to the premises except over the land of a third person, that this would not constitute an eviction where the lessee retained possession of the land; but that he was only liable for use and occupation for such sum as his beneficial enjoyment of the estate was worth under the circumstances.

In Strum v. Berry (1914) 185 Ill. App. 113, the abstract of the decision is to the effect that, if the acts of the landlord tend merely to diminish the beneficial enjoyment of the premises, the tenant remains bound for the rent if he continues to occupy the same, although he may show, as a matter of defense in an action for the rent, how much the beneficial enjoyment was diminished by the acts of the landlord, and recoup for whatever damages he may be able to show he has suffered thereby.

In Garrett v. Conner (1910) 155 Ill. App. 161, the court said that a tenant might recoup damages in an action for rent, which were the difference between the rental value for which the premises were contracted at the time of the lease and the rental value in the condition in which they were placed by the action of the landlord, the decrease, if any, in the rental value of the premises, being the true measure of damages. And that, as long as the lessee continued in the use and occupation of the premises, he could not offset, as against the rent contracted to be paid, any damages by reason of inconvenience to him in the use and occupation, and any act of the landlord which merely tended to diminish the beneficial enjoyment of the premises could not be offset as against the rent contracted to be paid.

In Baumgardner v. Consolidated Copying Co. (1892) 44 Ill. App. 74, it is held that a tenant may offset in an action for rent the damage accruing to him by reason of the failure of the landlord to remove from the demised premises chattels belonging to him, and not included in the lease.

A case of interest upon this point is Avery v. Dougherty (1885) 102 Ind. 443, 52 Am. Rep. 680, 2 N. E. 123, wherein it is held that, under the practice of that state, the right to offset or counterclaim damages for wrongful disturbance by the landlord of the tenant's possession depends upon whether it is pleaded as defense founded on a breach of covenant or arising out of a trespass. If the former, it might be asserted as a defense, but not, if the latter; since a tort cannot be made to constitute a defense by way of set-off or counterclaim. But to make these defenses available as an offset, counterclaim, or recoupment, they must be expressly pleaded.

Thus, in Jackson v. Paterno (1908) 128 App. Div. 474, 112 N. Y. Supp. 924, it was pointed out that the question of the right of the tenant to recoup damages for failure to heat the premises was not before the court, because the only defense was eviction, based upon the claim that the apartment without heat was of no value to the tenant.

So, in Thomson v. Ludlum (1901) 36 Misc. 801, 74 N. Y. Supp. 875, the tenant sought to avoid payment of rent on the ground of constructive eviction, due to the failure of the landlord properly to heat the leased premises according to contract, and to operate the elevator; inasmuch as the tenant had remained in possession, it was held that there was no eviction, either actual or constructive. The court said that if any reference to these matters of complaint was admissible, it could only be by proving a counterclaim to the landlord's demand; but there was no counterclaim pleaded, either before or during the trial, and the plaintiff in no manner acquiesced in treating the alleged defense as a counterclaim.

In Green v. Brenner (1918) 169 N. Y. Supp. 682, in a summary proceeding to dispossess a tenant for nonpayment of rent, the tenant interposed as a defense, and proved on the trial, that the landlord agreed to furnish sufficient heat for warmth at all times between certain months, and hot and cold water, and that he had sustained damages by reason of the landlord's breach of this agreement; he did not, however, plead this as a counterclaim, and it was held to be no defense, although it was conceded that, had he so pleaded it, he would have been entitled to counterclaim damages because thereof.

So, it has been held that, where an adjoining property owner lawfully removed a party wall between the demised premises and the adjoining building, this did not constitute an eviction from any portion of the leased premises, entitling the lessee to an apportionment of the rent. The holding also seems to be based upon the ground that the defendant pleaded the general issue in an action to recover the rent, and that under this plea he could not show a partial eviction; the pleading under the circumstances should have been that of a partial failure of consideration. Manville v. Gay (1853) 1 Wis. 250, 60 Am. Dec. 379. The court said: "We do not think that the testimony offered to prove the removal of the stairs tended to show an eviction of the defendant from any portion of the premises demised, so as to entitle him to have the rent apportioned. But, if it was, it is doubtful whether the testimony was admissible under the plea. When a defendant has been prevented from occupying the demised premises, he is not obliged to pay any rent, because the consideration for the agreement to pay the rent has wholly failed. So, for the same reason, when the tenant has been evicted from the entire premises, he is not obliged to pay rent after the eviction. And, after an eviction from a portion of the premises demised, he would be liable only to pay rent for that portion which he continued to occupy; and it would seem, for the same reason, that the consideration for his agreement to pay the rent has in part failed. . . . But a partial failure of consideration cannot be given in evidence under the general issue."

c. Action for damages.

The lessee whose beneficial use and enjoyment of the leased premises are interfered with or destroyed, in whole or in part, by the lessor, or others acting under his authority, may maintain an action against the lessor to recover the damages occasioned him by the acts complained of, notwithstanding his continued occupancy of the premises.

Alabama. — Abrams v. Watson (1877) 59 Ala. 524; Harden v. Conwell (1920) 205 Ala. 191, 87 So. 673.

Arkansas. — Lacy v. Morton (1905) 76 Ark. 603, 89 S. W. 842.

California. — McDowell v. Hyman (1897) 117 Cal. 67, 48 Pac. 984; Agoure v. Lewis (1910) 15 Cal. 71, 113

Pac. 882; Bowles v. Hickson (1913) 22 Cal. App. 264, 133 Pac. 1149.

Delaware.—Morris v. Hazel (1910) 1 Boyce, 324, 77 Atl. 766.

Idaho.—Frepons v. Grostein (1906) 12 Idaho, 671, 87 Pac. 1004.

Illinois.—Northern Trust Co. v. Palmer (1898) 171 Ill. 383, 49 N. E. 553; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wood (1901) 189 Ill. 352, 59 N. E. 619; Selz v. Stafford (1918) 284 Ill. 610, 120 N. E. 462.

Iowa.—Boyer v. Commercial Bldg. Invest. Co. (1900) 110 Iowa, 491, 81 N. W. 720.

Louisiana.—Wood v. Monteleone (1907) 118 La. 1005, 43 So. 657.

Massachusetts.—Dexter v. Manley (1849) 4 Cush. 14; Brown v. Holyoke Water Power Co. (1890) 152 Mass. 463, 23 Am. St. Rep. 844, 25 N. E. 966; Smith v. Faxon (1892) 156 Mass. 589, 81 N. E. 687.

Michigan.—Ives v. Williams (1883) 50 Mich. 100, 15 N. W. 33; Prochaska v. Fox (1904) 137 Mich. 519, 100 N. W. 746.

Missouri.—Morse v. Maddox (1853) 17 Mo. 569, subsequent appeals in (1854) 19 Mo. 451, and (1855) 21 Mo. 524; Dolph v. Barry (1912) 165 Mo. App. 659, 148 S. W. 196; B. Roth Tool Co. v. Champ Spring Co. (1907) 122 Mo. App. 603, 99 S. W. 827.

Montana.—Blaustein v. Pincus (1913) 47 Mont. 202, 131 Pac. 1064, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 405.

New Jersey.—Whitcomb v. Brant (1908) 76 N. J. L. 201, 68 Atl. 1102; Ackerman v. Ellis (1911) 81 N. J. L. 1, 79 Atl. 883.

New Mexico.—De Palma v. Weinman (1909) 15 N. M. 68, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 423, 103 Pac. 782.

New York.—Paltey v. Egan (1910) 200 N. Y. 83, 93 N. E. 267; Williams v. Getman (1906) 114 App. Div. 282, 99 N. Y. Supp. 977; Egan v. Browne (1908) 128 App. Div. 184, 112 N. Y. Supp. 689; Paddell v. Janes (1915) 90 Misc. 146, 152 N. Y. Supp. 948; Cox v. Cryder (1915) 168 App. Div. 624, 154 N. Y. Supp. 452; Aguglie v. Bausch & L. Optical Co. (1918) 172 N. Y. Supp. 666; MacGlashan v. Marvin (1918) 185 App. Div. 157, 173 N. Y. Supp. 603; Sidney B. Bowman Auto Co. v. Strath- more Leasing Co. (1922) 201 App. Div. 360, 194 N. Y. Supp. 390.

Pennsylvania.—Schienze v. Eckels (1910) 227 Pa. 305, 76 Atl. 15.

Virginia.—Hubble v. Cole (1891) 88 Va. 236, 13 L.R.A. 311, 29 Am. St. Rep. 716, 13 S. E. 441.

Washington.—Matzger v. Arcade Bldg. & Realty Co. (1918) 102 Wash. 423, 173 Pac. 47; Barnes v. Bickle (1920) 111 Wash. 133, 189 Pac. 998; Alexis v. Pittinger (1922) — Wash. —, — A.L.R. —, 206 Pac. 370.

England.—See Malzy v. Eicholz (1916) 115 L. T. N. S. 9 [1916] 2 K. B. 308, 10 B. R. C. 231, 85 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1132, 32 Times L. R. 506, 60 Sol. Jo. 511; Odell v. Cleveland House (1910) 102 L. T. N. S. 602, 26 Times L. R. 410; Alston v. Grant (1854) 3 El. & Bl. 128, 118 Eng. Reprint, 1089, 2 C. L. R. 933, 23 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 163, 18 Jur. 332, 2 Week. Rep. 161.

Canada.—Brown v. Garson (1913) 42 N. S. 354; Vidal v. Cauchon (1910) Rap. Jud. Quebec 41 C. S. 1.

In J. B. Sanborn Co. v. Marquette Bldg. Co. (1900) 86 Ill. App. 681, the court said: "The action, so far as it can be sustained, is not based upon any breach of covenants of the lease, or upon any contractual ground whatever, but upon an unwarranted interference with the possession of appellant. Inasmuch as the evidence fails to disclose any act upon the part of the Central Chicago Building Company, the Marquette Building Company, or Owen F. Aldis, which could be construed as an interference with the possession of appellant, and as no action upon contractual obligation is here involved, the ruling of the court, in directing a verdict of not guilty as to these appellees, was proper. But while the court was warranted in thus directing a verdict for the three appellees named, it was error to direct a like verdict for appellees Charles and Jeannette Schonlau, for the evidence shows that they did cause the acts to be done by which the appellant claims to have been injured. Nor does the right to a recovery depend alone upon the right of the Schonlaus to make alterations in the building, or to change it in part into a hotel. Although the contract of leasing, to which the Schonlaus became party, imposed no limitation upon the lessors by which they were precluded from using a part of the premises for a hotel, and making such changes as were incident thereto and necessary, yet a recovery might be had for any wrongful invasion or interference with appellant's rights in the premises, done in the course of reconstruction of the building."

In Conlon v. McGraw (1887) 66 Mich. 194, 33 N. W. 388, the court said: "The declaration does not count upon an eviction or ouster from the tenancy, or the destruction of the leasehold. We think the last count substantially avers a destruction of the leasehold; and, although the plaintiffs saw fit to remain in the building instead of vacating the same, the testimony tends to show that there was no profit in their business after the removal of this front, and therefore no value in their holding. The defendant undoubtedly had a legal right to make any change or alteration he saw fit, in his portion of the building, which did not tend to impair or destroy the value of plaintiffs' leasehold; but he had no right to injure them in the possession or enjoyment of their property. If he did, it was a wrong for which they must have a remedy and a right of action. And it seems to me that it must be considered as a permanent wrong and a single one. The act of the defendant was equivalent to an eviction, and such was the manifest intention of it. The plaintiffs were obstructed in the beneficial use of the whole property held by them."

In Aguglie v. Bausch & L. Optical Co. (1918) 172 N. Y. Supp. 666, the court said. "An action by a tenant against a landlord may be based upon contract, negligence, nuisance, or wilful injury. This case is of the latter class, and in such cases all the damages which are the direct and proximate consequences of the wilful act may be recovered. Damages to health and incidental expenses are no exceptions, provided a direct and proximate connection can be shown. In an action on a lease such damages, in the absence of an appropriate covenant, would be too remote, and not in the contemplation of the parties (Chadwick v. Woodward (1883) 13 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 441, affirmed in (1884) 12 Daly, 399); but not so where the action is for a wilful wrong. The gist of the plaintiff's cause of action is that the defendant wilfully turned off the water in his tenement, which act made the plaintiff sick and caused him other damages. A landlord may not wilfully injure his tenant, any more than he may inflict such injury upon a third person."

In Selz v. Stafford (1918) 284 Ill. 610, 120 N. E. 462, the court said that the lessee had his option, either to recoup damages for wrongful injury to the leased premises by the lessor, or to maintain an independent action to recover the damages thereby caused him.

And it has been held that the landlord, by taking possession of or using a portion of the leased premises, is liable to the tenant for the reasonable value of such use. Efron v. Stees (1911) 113 Minn. 242, 129 N. W. 374. The court said: "The lessor acquired no more right to occupy the room in which the stairway was situated, for storage purposes, than to occupy the front room. The lease makes no provision for the occupancy found to have taken place, and appellant acquired no right to occupy the rear room, or any part of it, by reason of his right of access to the basement. That instrument furnishes no remedy for such occupancy, and hence an action will lie on the implied contract to pay the reasonable value."

The breach of an agreement to keep demised premises in repair may give rise to a cause of action for damages, and it has also been held that it may go to the covenant of quiet enjoyment, and if it breaches this covenant it may justify the lessee in claiming an eviction. Dolph v. Barry (1912) 165 Mo. App. 659, 148 S. W. 196.

The liability of the lessor may be based upon acts of the landlord upon portions of the premises other than those leased to the plaintiff. For example, the landlord is liable for the damages caused the tenant of the first floor of a building, by so negligently repairing and altering other floors as to injure the tenant's goods on the first floor. Odell v. Cleveland House (1910) 102 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 602, 26 Times L. R. 410; Smith v. Faxon (1892) 156 Mass. 589, 31 N. E. 687. In the latter case the action by the tenant was in tort.

The fact that the relation of landlord and tenant is contractual, and the damages claimed have arisen by reason of the existence of the contract, does not preclude recovery of the damages sustained by the tenant in an action ex delicto, where they result from a trespass by the landlord upon the leased premises. Wood v. Monteleone (1907) 118 La. 1005, 43 So. 657.

An action in case may be maintained by a tenant against the landlord to recover damages for an unwarranted interference with the possession and enjoyment of the leasehold. Chapman v. Kirby (1868) 49 Ill. 211; J. B. Sanborn Co. v. Marquette Bldg. Co. (1900) 86 Ill. App. 681; Northern Trust Co. v. Palmer (1898) 171 Ill. 383, 49 N. E. 553; Ives v. Williams (1883) 50 Mich. 100, 15 N. W. 33, subsequent appeal in (1884) 53 Mich. 636, 19 N. W. 562.

In Stanton v. Lapp (1910) 113 Md. 324, 77 Atl. 672, the owner of leased premises was held liable in an action trespass quare clausum fregit for the damages to a tenant due to his entering upon the leased land and excavating thereon, rendering dangerous the access on approach to the rear of the building upon the leased premises used for business purposes, to the extent of practically destroying the tenant's trade by way of the rear of the building. And an action in trespass quare clausum fregit was also sustained against a landlord, in favor of his tenant, in Morris v. Hazel (1910) 1 Boyce (Del.) 324, 77 Atl. 766.

d. Injunction.

1. In general.

If the tenant has no adequate remedy at law to recover damage for an interference by the lessor with the leased premises, or for a deprivation of some right or privilege appurtenant thereto, he is entitled to the aid of equity to enjoin the act or conduct complained of.

Arkansas.—Fletcher v. Pfeifer (1912) 103 Ark. 318, 146 S. W. 864.

Georgia.—Anthony Shoals Power Co. v. Fortson (1912) 138 Ga. 460, 75 S. E. 606.

Illinois.—White v. Y. M. C. A. (1908) 233 Ill. 526, 84 N. E. 658.

Louisiana.—Hirsh v. Valloft (1907) 121 La. 66, 46 So. 103.

Maryland.—Belvedere Hotel Co. v. Williams (1921) 137 Md. 665, 14 A.L.R. 622, 113 Atl. 335.

Massachusetts.—Nelson Theatre Co. v. Nelson (1913) 216 Mass. 30, 102 N. E. 926.

Michigan.—Minnis v. Newbro Gallogly Co. (1913) 174 Mich. 635, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1110, 140 N. W. 980.

Missouri.—Sultzman v. Branham (1908) 128 Mo. App. 696, 108 S. W. 1074.

Montana.—Wheeler v. McIntyre (1918) 55 Mont. 295, 175 Pac. 892.

New Jersey.—McGann v. LaBrecque Co. (1919) 90 N. J. Eq. 526, 107 Atl. 175.

New York.—Cooley v. Cummings (1888) 49 Hun, 608, 16 N. Y. S. R. 947, 1 N. Y. Supp. 631; Horton v. Carhart (1888) 14 N. Y. S. R. 546; Stevens v. Salomon (1902) 39 Misc. 159, 79 N. Y. Supp. 136; Stevens v. Taylor (1906) 111 App. Div. 561, 97 N. Y. Supp. 925; Harry Angelo Co. v. Improved Property Holding Co. (1910) 137 App. Div. 308, 122 N. Y. Supp. 199.

Vermont.—Rosenberg v. Taft (1920) — Vt. —, 111 Atl. 582.

Wisconsin.—Shaft v. Carey (1900) 107 Wis. 273, 83 N. W. 288.

Canada.—Tamblyn v. Austin (1920) 48 Ont. L. Rep. 97, 54 D. L. R. 663.

Injunction will issue to enjoin the landlord from entering upon the leased premises and forcibly interfering with the tenant's possession, where such conduct of the landlord has been frequently repeated. Nelson Theatre Co. v. Nelson (Mass.) supra.

In Cooley v. Cummings (N. Y.) supra, in sustaining the right of a lessee of a portion of a building to restrain the interference by the landlord with his access to toilet and water supply in another section of the building, the right of access being secured to the lessee by the terms of the lease, the court said: "No doubt whatever exists that the demise embraces the use of the Croton water and of the water-closets in the fifth story, or of the existence of a passageway leading from the premises of the plaintiff to the water-closet and Croton water privilege, or of the construction of the barrier across the passageway, preventing its use. Indeed, the erection of the gate proves that access could be had in that way. And these facts, when considered with the further allegation made, namely, that the gate wholly barred the plaintiff from the use of the water-closet and the Croton water, it becomes clear that a cause of action was stated. We are dealing now with the written instrument, and allegations of fact connected with it, and we are not permitted, therefore, to wander into the field of presumption and suppositions, but are confined to the limits just mentioned; non constat but that on the trial it would appear that the plaintiffs were not, as alleged, confined within the limits expressed, and that there were other modes of access to the water-closet on the third floor, and to the fifth floor, which they would have the right to employ. But that would necessarily be a matter of proof, to be given upon the trial. Under the allegations, as indicated, it would be improper to assume that other modes of access were given plaintiffs which they might have employed without inconvenience. The suggestion, therefore, that the complaint did not contain facts constituting a cause of action, is not sustained, nor is the proposition that the complaint does not contain facts calling for equitable intervention a good one. It certainly is not necessary to cite authorities to show that the continuous interference of a landlord with the rights of his lessee presents a subject for equitable cognizance."

Where the only means of heating a dwelling house or an apartment was by a furnace situated in a portion of the premises not included in the lease, the tenant is entitled to an injunction to restrain the landlord from interfering with his use of the furnace, since this right passed to the tenant under the lease of the premises with the appurtenances thereto. Stevens v. Taylor (1906) 111 App. Div. 561, 97 N. Y. Supp. 925.

In Anthony Shoals Power Co. v. Fortson (1912) 138 Ga. 460, 75 S. E. 606, it is held that if the landlord undertakes to repudiate his lease by interfering with the tenant's possession to the extent of preventing him from exercising his privileges under the contract, and the tenant's damages are incapable of ascertainment, equity will enjoin such wrongful acts.

In Horton v. Carhart (1888) 14 N. Y. S. R. 546, the landlord was enjoined from trespassing upon a portion of the leased land and tilling the soil, on the ground that this unlawful conduct threatened irreparable injury to the tenant.

And see Minnis v. Newbro-Gallogly Co. (1913) 174 Mich. 635, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1110, 140 N. W. 980, holding that a tenant is entitled to an injunction restraining threatened action by the landlord which will result in destroying the leased premises.

In Rosenberg v. Taft (1920) — Vt. —, 111 Atl. 582, a tenant whose beneficial enjoyment of the leased premises was being substantially interfered with by the landlord was granted injunctive relief and an accounting was ordered to be taken as to his damages.

In Belvedere Hotel Co. v. Williams (1921) 137 Md. 665, 14 A.L.R. 622, 113 Atl. 335, an injunction was issued restraining a hotel company from permitting the continuance of the operation of a barber shop on property constituting an adjunct to the hotel property, where the hotel company had previously leased another portion of the property for a barber shop, under circumstances held to give the lessee of the latter lease the exclusive right to operate a barber shop in the hotel property.

In enjoining a similar interference with a tenant's enjoyment of the exclusive right to sell liquors and cigars in a portion of premises, the balance of which was leased for hotel purposes es, the court in Shaft v. Carey (1900) 107 Wis. 273, 83 N. W. 288, said: "It is evident from the terms of the lease that the proximity of the room leased to plaintiff to the adjoining rooms of the hotel was a matter of importance to the parties, and bore a direct relation to the value of the leasehold. When the lease was renewed in 1898, the plaintiff was entitled to the enjoyment of his leasehold interest with the appurtenances of ingress and egress as they then existed. In other words, when a person leases a room in a building, with doors and passageways so connected with other rooms as to be essential to the use and enjoyment of the one leased, the law implies a covenant that such use shall not be interfered with during the continuance of such term. The appurtenances of ingress and egress essential to use, and reasonably within the contemplation of the parties at the time of the leasing, are as much a part of the estate conveyed as the room itself, and any interference therewith is an invasion of the rights of the lessees for which the law affords a remedy. . . . If the door and passageway in question existed at the time the lease was renewed, and were essential to the proper use and enjoyment of the estate conveyed, the right to such use was more than a mere privilege or easement. It becomes a part and parcel of the leasehold interest, binding upon the lessor or his grantees."

In Harry Angelo Co. v. Improved Property Holding Co. (1910) 137 App. Div. 308, 122 N. Y. Supp. 199, a tenant was held entitled to an injunction restraining the landlord from violating a covenant in the lease to the effect that he would not lease any part of the building in which was located the leased apartment, to any firm or person handling a similar line of goods to that of the said lessee.

Compare with Anderson v. Bloomheart (1917) 101 Kan. 691, L.R.A. 1918B, 473, 168 Pac. 900, where injunction was denied the tenant upon the ground that the interference sought to be enjoined was not a matter which the tenant had the right to complain of.

Where the obstruction of a passageway used in connection with the leased premises is in derogation of the tenant's easement and rights under the lease, and will cause great and irreparable damage, it will be enjoined. Sultzman v. Branham (1908) 128 Mo. App. 696, 108 S. W. 1074.

It has been held that the attempt of the lessor of a building divided into different apartments to impose an additional burden upon a portion thereof by utilizing a cesspool under the floor, for the convenience of other apartments he was constructing, is unwarranted and will be enjoined. Hirsh v. Valloft (1907) 121 La. 66, 46 So. 103.

In Stevens v. Salomon (1902) 39 Misc. 159, 79 N. Y. Supp. 132, it was held that the tenant had such an interest in the light and air from the yard in the rear of the leased premises as to be entitled to enjoin the construction of a three-story construction in such yard, and where the landlord had completed the structure before the decree, a mandatory injunction would issue directing him to remove that part of the extension above the level of the tenant's rear windows. This relief was given, although it was assumed that the tenant was not entitled to the use of the yard wherein the extension was being made.

In Stahl & Jaeger v. Satenstein (1922) 233 N. Y. 196, — A.L.R. —, 135 N. E. 242, a tenant was held entitled to enjoin the act of the landlord in painting or permitting to be painted on the outside walls of that portion of the building occupied by the tenant, signs advertising some business other than that which the plaintiff was engaged in, although the plaintiff had himself covenanted with the landlord not to paint any signs on the outside walls of the portion of the building he occupied.

In Tamblyn v. Austin (1920) 48 Ont. L. Rep. 97, 54 D. L. R. 663, a tenant was held entitled to restrain the landlord from using the exterior of one of the walls of the demised premises as a support for an outside stairway as a means of access to a floor over the portion leased to the plaintiff.

In Wheeler v. McIntyre (1918) 55

Mont. 295, 175 Pac. 892, an injunction was issued in behalf of a tenant restraining the landlord from removing a building from the leased premises, the removal of which would be destructive of his estate. And in McGann v. La Brecque Co. (1919) 90 N. J. Eq. 526, 107 Atl. 175, a tenant was held entitled to enjoin a landlord from interfering by summary proceedings with his possession of the leased premises, provided he established his right to the possession and it further appeared that he would sustain damages to an extent not determinable.

However, in Fletcher v. Pfeifer (1912) 103 Ark. 318, 146 S. W. 864, it was held that even conceding that a landlord would be liable to a tenant for undermining or excavating under the walls of the leased premises, although by a system of underpinning, no damage resulted to the tenant, yet, under such circumstances, the tenant was not entitled to an injunction to restrain such action upon the part of the landlord, since the injury to him, even if regarded as a continuous trespass, was not irreparable.

In Fuller v. Rose (1905) 110 Mo. App. 344, 85 S. W. 931, an injunction sought by a tenant to restrain the landlord from having a sign printed on the exterior of one of the walls of the leased premises was denied, it appearing that the landlord had the right to use the outside walls, providing he did not use the same to the detriment of the tenant. The court pointed out that "the landlord . . . is required, in the use made by him of the wall, not to inflict damage upon his tenants. He covenanted to give them uninterrupted and peaceable possession of the respective premises, and therefore would have no right to place such advertising or other matter on the outside of his building as would tend to injure the business of any of his tenants. No such injury is proven or even claimed by plaintiffs. Esthetics lie beyond the cognizance of either equity or law in such cases. Damage of a more substantial nature must be involved. Offended taste will not support a cause of action."

In White v. Y. M. C. A. (1908) 233 20 A.L.R.—88.

Ill. 526, 84 N. E. 658, the court dissolved an injunction issued by the trial court, restraining the lessor of premises to be used for a restaurant from bringing an action to recover the rent, the lessee urging as a ground for the injunction that he suffered irreparable injury on account of the heat, odors, and other things affecting the patronage of the restaurant, resulting from failure of the lessor properly to ventilate the premises. The court said that if such damages are to be set off or recouped from the rent they are as easily ascertainable at law as in equity, and that hence equity had no jurisdiction; that the point was also made that the only ground on which the lessee could suffer irreparable injury would be removal from the premises, and this could not be irreparable injury unless the premises were of value to him; and the court said that, unless the agreement to ventilate was an agreement precedent, the default of the defendant only related to a part of the consideration, and the complainant, having continued to occupy the premises, could not refuse to pay rent because of the breach of the agreement.

In Epstein v. Dunbar (1915) 221 Mass. 579, 109 N. E. 730, the court entertained a bill by a tenant to have an entrance theretofore closed restored, and a doorway and a partition wall reopened, and to enjoin the lessors from evicting the tenant, and also retained the bill for the assessment of damages.

2. Damages in lieu of injunction.

It has been held that where air and light for demised premises depended to an appreciable extent upon a well or open space, and its use to secure light and air were necessary to the beneficial enjoyment of the leased premises, to prevent the substantial interference therewith by the lessor the lessee is entitled to injunctive relief, and where, before the final termination of the action, the lease expires, in lieu of injunctive relief, damages may be assessed in favor of the lessee. Case v. Minot (1893) 158 Mass. 577, 22 L.R.A. 536, 33 N. E. 700.

In Epstein v. Dunbar (1915) 221 Mass. 579, 109 N. E. 730, there was a substantial interference with the substituted means of access to the apartment of the lessee, the court said if the lessor had control of the substituted access injunctive relief would be proper, but that, in view of the fact that the lessor did not have such control, damages would be given in lieu thereof.

So, in Hessler v. Schafer (1897) 20 Misc. 645, 46 N. Y. Supp. 1076, the tenant who retained possession of the leased premises was held entitled to enjoin the lessor from adding additional stories to the leased premises, and where, before the termination of the injunction suit, such additional stories had been constructed, the tenant was held entitled to recover whatever damages he suffered by interference with his business through the erection of such stories; it also appearing that those additional stories were used in a business competing with that of the tenant, he was held entitled to an injunction requiring the landlord, as nearly as possible, to replace the tenant's signs and remove his own signs advertising a competing business; and he was also enjoined from using, or permitting the use of, such additional stories for a business competing with that of the tenant.

IV. Causes of complaint.

a. In general.

This division of the annotation is concerned only with cases in which the conduct of the landlord is complained of as an interference with the beneficial enjoyment of the leased premises; and is not concerned with cases where such conduct is made the ground of a claim as for independent wrong, e. g., an action for personal injuries or injury to property.

It may be said that any interference by the landlord with the tenant's beneficial use and enjoyment of the leased premises and the appurtenances, or any breach of agreement or covenant, constitutes an actionable wrong, entitling the tenant to compensation for the loss or injury. The question as to what amounts to a constructive eviction if the tenant abandons the premises is, of course, excluded by the scope of the annotation, although some of the cases of that kind are referred to incidentally. It would seem clear, however, that any conduct on the part of the landlord that would have supported a claim of constructive eviction if the tenant had abandoned the premises would afford him a ground of complaint available in proper form if he retains possession.

b. Infestation of premises by vermin during tenancy.

In Lumpkin v. Provident Loan Soc. (1915) 15 Ga. App. 816, 84 S. E. 216, where the lessee undertook to avoid payment of rent on the ground that the premises were infested with rats subsequently to his entering into possession thereof, the court, in denying his right to make this defense, said: "The evidence showed, however, that he leased this office with full knowledge of its condition and arrangement, and remained there for more than a year without suffering any discomfort. And he cannot now complain of defects which were in existence, and known to him, at the time of the lease."

The presence of rats in great numbers in a building rented by several tenants, control of a portion of which is retained by the landlord, may constitute such a nuisance as to justify a tenant in abandoning the premises on the theory of a constructive eviction. Barnard Realty Co. v. Bonwit (1913) 155 App. Div. 182, 133 N. Y. Supp. 1050; Batterman v. Levenson (1917) 102 Misc. 92, 168 N. Y. Supp. 197. And the same has been held true as to bedbugs. Streep v. Simpson (1913) 80 Misc. 666, 141 N. Y. Supp. 263. It is to be noted, however, that in these cases the basis of the decision was the abandonment of the premises by the tenant on the theory of a constructive eviction, a class of cases not within the scope of this annotation.

c. Use to which other portions of leased premises are put.

1. By lessor.

It has been held that, without reference to the question whether the interference with the possession of the lessee amounted to an eviction, an unwarranted interference with the beneficial enjoyment of the premises by the lessee will constitute a ground of action against the lessor. J. B. Sanborn Co. v. Marquette Bldg. Co. (1900) 86 Ill. App. 681. In this case the interference complained of was by obstructing or blocking the entrances to the block in which the lessee had office quarters, and in also encumbering and blocking the passageway, due to repair work. The lessee finally removed from the premises, but, as indicated, the case was disposed of upon the theory of an eviction.

In Morris v. Hazel (1910) 1 Boyce (Del.) 324, 77 Atl. 766, a landlord was held liable in trespass quare clausum fregit, for unlawfully entering upon the demised land and improperly trimming fruit trees. The jury were, however, told that if it was a custom that landlords might enter upon leased premises and trim fruit trees growing thereon, where the tenant failed to do so, then the landlord would not be liable, providing he did no more than the customary trimming.

In Efron v. Stees (1911) 113 Minn. 242, 129 N. W. 374, a lessee is held entitled to recover of the lessor the reasonable value of the use of a portion of the leased premises in which the lessor stored some of his goods.

An action may be maintained by a tenant to recover damages from the landlord for the wrongful interference with the plaintiff's peaceable enjoyment of the leased premises by remodeling other portions of the building, causing jarring and vibrations in plaintiff's portion, and the ceilings and walls to crack and become loosened, and part thereof to fall, and water and other substances to come through the ceilings upon the personal property and chattels of the plaintiff therein. Sidney B. Bowman Auto.

Co. v. Strathmore Leasing Co. (1922) 201 App. Div. 360, 194 N. Y. Supp. 390.

The rule that a covenant of quiet enjoyment, either express or implied, means that the tenant shall not be evicted or disturbed in his possession of demised premises, or some part thereof, does not extend to the wrongful act of a stranger or the lawful act of the landlord in making a different lawful and proper use of the property not demised; hence, where the premises, a portion of which are leased for offices, are subsequently leased for hotel purposes, this fact does not entitle a lessee of offices to claim damage for breach of covenant by the lessor, although the effect of the operation of the hotel was to make the offices less suitable for the business of the lessee. Tucker v. DuPuy (1904) 210 Pa. 461, 60 Atl. 4.

But in Aldin v. Clark [1894] 2 Ch. (Eng.) 437, Stirling, J., said that, "where a landlord demises part of his property for carrying on a particular business, he is bound to abstain from doing anything on the remaining portion which would render the demised premises unfit for carrying on such business in the way in which it is ordinarily carried on, but that this obligation does not extend to special branches of the business which call for extraordinary protection."

And it has been held that where a tenant leased the room adjoining the office of a hotel owned by the lessor, and was given the exclusive privilege of selling liquors and cigars in the hotel block, he is entitled to restrain the landlord from selling similar articles in an annexed hotel adjoining the office, on the opposite side from the lessee's saloon. Shaft v. Carey (1900) 107 Wis. 273, 83 N. W. 288. And see supra, III. d.

2. By third person or other tenant with authority of landlord.

In Agoure v. Lewis (1910) 15 Cal. App. 71, 113 Pac. 882, the landlord is held liable to a tenant in an action to recover damages for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment for injury by the live stock of another tenant, who, however, had a right of pasturage superior to the complaining tenant.

In Selz v. Stafford (1918) 284 Ill. 610, 120 N. E. 462, the court said: "Where premises are leased for a hotel, and the landlord permits in the same building another business to be carried on that is well known by him to be hurtful to the business of a hotel, and has the same carried on contrary to the protests of his tenant, whether such business be the saloon business or any other business, in the absence of permission to carry on such business by the terms of the lease or otherwise, the landlord will be liable to the tenant for any damages so caused the tenant, by recoupment, when sued for rent."

So, in Halligan v. Wade (1859) 21 Ill. 470, 74 Am. Dec. 108, an action to recover rent during the time the tenant was in possession, after the acts complained of, the court said: "It was insisted . . . that a distinction existed between leasing the reserved portions of the premises for lawful or unlawful purposes. And that, as these leases were made for the purpose of carrying on lawful pursuits, the law gave defendant no right to complain. But it is believed that such a distinction does not exist. Suppose in this case the landlord had converted the rooms under this hotel into pigsties and horse and cattle stables, can anyone doubt that such an act would have been equally destructive to the business of the tenant as would almost any species of unlawful business that could be tolerated in any city, and yet they would be appropriated to lawful purposes. And it may be, and doubtless was, equally destructive to the business of keeping a hotel that those rooms were appropriated to the keeping of a low, noisy, and disorderly liquor saloon, and a tin shop. We think the evidence justified the jury in finding that there was such an eviction, or what had the effect of such an eviction, as released the defendant from the payment of this rent." Not inconsistent with the foregoing is Chicago Legal News Co. v. Browne (1882) 103 Ill.

317, holding that the rent is not suspended by the breach by the landlord of his agreement that he would not let any portion of the block of which certain of the leased premises was a part, for the sale of intoxicating liquors, and that for any damage to the lessee by reason of the breach of this agreement he is entitled to have the same offset against the rent, in diminution thereof. The court said that the lessee did not leave the demised premises, but remained therein and enjoyed them for the full term. "We fail to perceive that the performance of the agreement supposed, not to lease any other part of the building for a saloon, was a condition precedent to a right of recovery of rent, as the instruction makes it. The agreement was not made such a condition in terms. It did not go to the whole of the consideration, in which case such an agreement had been read as a condition. It should be taken to be but a stipulation, the breach of which only gave an action for damages to the lessee. . . . It is but the amount of the damages from the violation of the agreement which the defendant would be entitled to have. As it might have been much less than the rent it would be improper to instruct that there could be no recovery of rent for the time a part of the premises was leased contrary to the agreement. The rule is well settled that the wrongful act of the landlord does not debar him from a recovery of rent, unless the tenant, by such act, has been deprived, in whole or in part, of the possession, either actually or constructively, or the premises rendered useless."

And see Wade v. Herndl (1906) 127 Wis. 544, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 855, 107 N. W. 4, 7 Ann. Cas. 591, holding that the lessee of an upper story of a building for a studio is evicted where the landlord leases the lower floor of the building to be used by an automobile company for the storage and sale of automobiles, where, as a necessary part of such business, engines are tested, and the testing causes such a vibration of the floor of the upper story as to prevent the lessee from properly carrying on her work as a dressmaker, and damages and destroys her paintings. Compare with TOY v. OLINGER (reported herewith) ante, 1366, being a decision by the same court.

In Cushman v. Thompson (1908) 58 Misc. 539, 109 N. Y. Supp. 757, the answer of the defendant to an action to recover rent due under a lease, held a good defense on the ground of eviction, contained allegations to the effect that the lessor rented other apartments in the premises to occupants for immoral and illegal purposes and for the resort of bad characters, men and women, and that the lessee notified the lessor of the immoral and illegal use of the premises, and requested him to take the necessary proceedings to evict such disorderly occupants, and that he unlawfully neglected to institute such proceedings or to cause such persons to be removed therefrom, but, on the contrary, suffered and permitted them to continue to occupy a portion of said premises for immoral purposes. This case cites as authority Dyett v. Pendleton (1826) 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 727, wherein it appeared that the lessee actually abandoned the premises. In the Thompson Case it does not appear whether or not the tenant vacated the premises.

The landlord is not liable for injury to a tenant by the manner in which a tenant of another portion uses his part, unless such use is with the consent and authority of the landlord. Thus, in Malzy v. Eichholz [1916] 2 K. B. 308, 10 B. R. C. 231, 85 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1132, 32 Times L. R. 506, 60 Sol. Jo. 511, 115 L. T. (Eng.) 9, a tenant was denied the right to recover damages for injury to his restaurant business by the conducting, by the tenant of an adjoining apartment of the same premises, of a fraudulent auction room in such a way as to constitute a nuisance. The right of recovery was based upon the ground of a breach of an express covenant of quiet enjoyment, and also that the acts complained of amounted to a derogation from the plaintiff's grant. It was held that in either case authorization or participation by the landlord in the wrongful acts was essential to his liability; that it could not be based upon mere rental of the premises for use of an auction room, since such a use might or might not involve or create a nuisance.

In the foregoing case the court distinguishes Jaeger v. Mansions Consolidated (1903) 87 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 690, 19 Times L. R. 145, on the ground that in the latter case there was evidence tending to show that the landlord authorized tenants of apartments in the same building to use their apartments for immoral purposes. The case was presented upon an application by the tenant for a declaration that the defendants were bound by his covenant for quiet enjoyment with plaintiff's assignor, and for an injunction restraining defendants from permitting any of the other flats in the building to be used so as to interfere with the quiet enjoyment by the plaintiff of his flat.

And see TOY v. OLINGER (reported herewith) ante, 1366, which denied the right of a tenant to recoup damages where based upon an injury to his business conducted in the leased building, due to the acts of a tenant of another portion of the building, the responsibility of the landlord for the acts of the latter tenant not being shown.

So, in Bilicke v. Janss (1910) 14 Cal. App. 342, 112 Pac. 201, it is held that a landlord is not liable to the tenant for disturbance to the business of the tenant due to the fact that a portion of the building in which the leased premises were located at the time of the lease in question was leased for use as a butcher shop, and that this use resulted in filling the leased premises with a stench and foul odors and offensive smoke, due, it was claimed, to a defective vent pipe, which, however, was not shown to have been defective by reason of any fault of the landlord. In this case the tenant sought to recoup damages in an action by the landlord for the rent. In denying the right to recover under the circumstances, the court said: "Not only was there no covenant on the part of the landlord that the premises were fit and suitable for the purpose for which they were leased, but the storeroom was in use as a butcher shop and meat market, at the time the lease was executed to Raymond, and he must be deemed to have accepted the lease with full knowledge of the conditions existing by reason of conducting a meat market and butcher shop in close proximity to the premises so leased by him. The lease imposed no duty upon the landlord to heat and maintain either the leased or other premises in a condition fit and suitable for carrying on the business of a physician's institute. On the contrary, it is expressly provided that, in so far as other tenants and occupants of the building were concerned, the landlord should not be accountable for any damages sustained by the lessee by reason of the acts of such other tenant and occupant. Hence the finding that the leased premises were rendered unfit for the purposes for which they were leased did not in itself constitute an ouster. . . . Clearly, the landlord was not responsible for the acts of the tenant in smoking meat upon his own premises. If such acts of the butcher tenant constituted a substantial grievance, redress should have been had against the offending tenant, and not against the landlord."

In Kent v. Ward (1908) 111 N. Y. Supp. 743, it is held that, where the tenant knew of the location of a restaurant directly beneath the apartment leased by him prior to the execution of the lease, he cannot complain of the noisome odors or music, and charge responsibility to his landlord instead of the offending tenant; nor, assuming that these facts disclosed a constructive eviction by the landlord, could he remain in possession for some time, and until a convenient season for moving, and then assert his right to abandon the premises.

In DeWitt v. Pearson (1873) 112 Mass. 8, 17 Am. Rep. 58, the lessee claimed a suspension of rent on the ground of eviction based upon the rental by the landlord to disorderly tenants of an adjoining portion of the leased premises. This contention was denied, on the ground that there had been no eviction from the premises, the defendant remaining in full occupation. Hence, there was no question for the jury as to the beneficial value of the premises to the defendant, and it was immaterial whether he had used due diligence in endeavoring to obtain other lodgings, since the doctrine of recoupment of damages, as established in that commonwealth, had no application.

It has also been held that a tenant in possession of a portion of the leased premises is not entitled to recoup, in an action by the landlord for rent, damages on account of a nuisance created and maintained by a cotenant on that portion of the premises in exclusive possession of such cotenant. Adair v. Allen (1916) 18 Ga. App. 636, 89 S. E. 1099.

In this connection, it is of interest to compare the foregoing decisions with the leading cases involving similar facts, with the exception that, in the cases to be referred to, the tenant abandoned the premises. As heretofore pointed out, cases of the latter character are not within the scope of this annotation, and the few referred to are merely for the purpose of comparison.

In Dyett v. Pendleton (1826) 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 727, the tenant vacated the premises, and hence the case is not strictly within the scope of the annotation; it was held, however, that he was justified in regarding the act of the landlord to constitute an eviction, where the landlord, who had retained the possession of a portion of the premises, brought into the rooms thus retained prostitutes and licentious women, and men who made loud noises and indulged in indecent conduct to such an extent as to bring the place into odium and bad repute. The doctrine is here stated that actual entry and physical eviction are not necessary to exonerate the tenant from the payment of rent. It is sufficient if there had been an obstruction to the beneficial enjoyment and a substantial diminution of the consideration of the contract by the act of the landlord, although those facts do not amount to a physical eviction. In the same case Colden, senator, took the position that no eviction had been shown, but that the facts relied upon did show an injury and loss of possession, which were not consequential and such as would support an action on the case for damages.

It has been held that if the unlawful conduct of other tenants amounts to a nuisance, and this nuisance is established or maintained with the consent and connivance of the landlord, and as a consequence a tenant is materially disturbed and interfered with, in his possession or enjoyment of the leased premises, he has a right to treat it as a constructive eviction. Paterson v. Bridges (1917) 16 Ala. App. 54, 75 So. 260.

In Gray v. Gaff (1880) 8 Mo. App. 329, the tenant, on the theory that he had been constructively evicted from the leased premises, abandoned the same, and it was held that the fact that the landlord, in violation of an oral promise not made a part of the lease, leased another portion of the premises for a restaurant, and the smoke and fumes from the restaurant made it unhealthy for the lessee to continue to occupy the premises leased to him for a livery stable, did not entitle him to regard the act of the landlord as a constructive eviction.

In Seaboard Realty Co. v. Fuller (1900) 33 Misc. 109, 67 N. Y. Supp. 146, 8 N. Y. Anno. Cas. 418, it is held that a tenant of a portion of an apartment house is not at liberty to abandon his apartment and cancel his liability under a lease, because his nervous sensibilities may be excited, or his rest disturbed, by the noise and prattle of children in another apartment in the same building. The court said that leases would not be worth the paper upon which they are written, if the engagements of parties could be set at naught upon such slight, trivial pretexts. To constitute a constructive eviction, there must be an intentional and injurious interference by the landlord, which deprives the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises, or materially impairs such beneficial enjoyment. An eviction depends upon the materiality of the deprivation. If trifling, and producing no substantial discomfort, or serious inconvenience, it will be disregarded, and will not afford cause for the termination of the relation of landlord and tenant. It is further held in this case that, even if the right to abandon the premises had existed, it was waived because of delay in exercising it.

And see also Sexton v. Juilliard (1904) 46 Misc. 68, 91 N. Y. Supp. 348, which holds that constructive eviction is not established merely on the ground of annoyance by another tenant in the same apartment house playing upon musical instruments, although it was in the power of the lessor to have required the other tenant to desist and refrain from such musical exercises.

d. Use to which adjoining premises are put by or under authority of landlord.

The owner of land in possession of his tenant is liable to the latter for a nuisance created by him upon adjacent land, which affects injuriously the tenant's leasehold interest. Alston v. Grant (1854) 3 El. & Bl. 128, 118 Eng. Reprint, 1089, 2 C. L. R. 933, 23 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 163, 18 Jur. 332, 2 Week. Rep. 161.

In Odell v. Cleveland House (1910; K. B. Div.) 102 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 602, 26 Times L. R. 410, the owner of premises, a portion of which was leased to the plaintiff, was held liable to the latter for damage to his goods by the act of the owner in employing a third party to tear down other portions of the premises to an extent to constitute a nuisance.

In Smith v. Faxon (1892) 156 Mass. 589, 31 N. E. 687, the landlord was held liable to the tenant for injury to the latter's goods due to flooding, caused by an excavation made by the landlord upon property immediately adjoining the leased property, and which he failed to cover and protect from a heavy rainstorm.

In Ackerman v. Ellis (1911) 81 N. J. L. 1, 79 Atl. 883, the landlord was held liable for injury to the tenant by a nuisance maintained by the former near the line of the leased premises. The nuisance was alleged to have been caused by the landlord planting in a careless, negligent, and improper manner, a row of poisonous or noxious trees, so close to the property line of the tenant that the roots, branches, limbs, and leaves grew, hung over, and fell upon the demised premises, rendering them barren and unfit for use.

It has been held that the landlord owes the duty not to disturb the tenant in his possession and enjoyment of the premises which he has leased to him, by conducting such building operations and excavations upon the adjoining premises as to injure the demised premises, and for his violation of this obligation he may be held liable, independently of any negligence. Paltey v. Egan (1915) 200 N. Y. 83, 93 N. E. 267.

So, in De Palma v. Weinman (1909) 15 N. M. 68, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 423, 103 Pac. 782, a landlord was held liable in an action against him by the tenant for trespass based upon an injury to the tenant's goods by the wrongful excavation by a third person on premises adjacent to the leased premises, where the latter acted under a contract with the landlord. The court said: "The party wall agreement amounted to a license or permission to another party to enter the leased premises and to excavate under the wall of the leased building in such a manner as to greatly endanger the goods and fixtures of his tenants, a fact which (the landlord) must have known; and it seems to us that, under the doctrine that he who commands or approves is equally guilty with him who performs the act, he was guilty of a trespass in conjunction with Barrett, with whom he contracted, permitting him to do the actual wrong."

And in Freperis v. Grostein (1906) 12 Idaho, 671, 87 Pac. 1004, a landlord was held liable for injury to the property and business of a tenant, due to excavating upon premises adjoining the leased premises, and to the erection of a building therein.

In Schneider v. Reeves (1915) 98 Neb. 629, 154 N. W. 210, the landlord was held liable in an action for damages to a tenant for loss to the latter due to the landlord leasing premises adjoining the demised premises to a third person, who closed a road across the premises he leased, the use of which was essential to the full enjoyment by the plaintiff of the premises he leased. The landlord was held liable upon the ground that in making the subsequent lease, he did not reserve this roadway for the benefit of his tenant.

In Bowles v. Hickson (1913) 22 Cal. App. 264, 133 Pac. 1149, a landlord was held liable for an injury to the tenant's property, due to the negligence of the former in starting a fire upon the premises adjacent to the demised premises. The landlord was held liable notwithstanding an agreement by the tenant, in effect, that the landlord should not be responsible for any injury, by fire or otherwise, to the tenant's property.

e. Obstruction to access, air, or light.

1. Means of access.

An obstruction caused by the lessor to the means of access of the lessee to the leased premises, of a substantial character, has been held to constitute such a breach of the express or implied covenants of the lease as to render the lessor liable thereon.

United States. — Wait v. O'Neil (1896) 34 L.R.A. 550, 22 C. C. A. 248, 47 U. S. App. 19, 76 Fed. 408.

California. — McDowell v. Hyman (1897) 117 Cal. 67, 48 Pac. 984.

Illinois. — J. B. Sanborn Co. v. Marquette Bldg. Co. (1900) 86 Ill. App. 681.

Massachusetts. — Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Ripley (1866) 95 Mass. 421; Epstein v. Dunbar (1915) 221 Mass. 579, 109 N. E. 730.

Michigan. — Pridgeon v. Excelsior Boat Club (1887) 66 Mich. 326, 33 N. W. 502.

Nebraska. — Kitchen Bros. Hotel Co.

v. Philbin (1902) 2 Neb. (Unof.) 340, 96 N. W. 487.

New York. — Hamilton v. Graybill (1897) 19 Misc. 521, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1079; Hall v. Irvin (1903) 78 App. Div. 107, 79 N. Y. Supp. 614; Lawrence v. Edwin A. Denham Co. (1908) 58 Misc. 543, 109 N. Y. Supp. 752.

Ohio. — Frankel v. Steman (1915) 92 Ohio St. 197, 110 N. E. 747.

South Dakota.—Edmison v. Lowry (1892) 3 S. D. 77, 17 L.R.A. 275, 44 Am. St. Rep. 774, 52 N. W. 583.

A mere temporary inconvenience caused by a lessor, not by depriving his tenant of a right of way, but in rendering his access less convenient than it was, is not a breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment. A temporary inconvenience which does not interfere with the estate, or title, or possession is not a breach of covenant. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. v. Anderson [1898] 2 Ch. (Eng.) 394, 78 L. T. N. S. 821, 14 Times L. R. 489.

Obstructing and blocking the entrance to an office building is a breach of covenant rendering the lessor liable to the lessee for such damage as the latter may thereby sustain. J. B. Sanborn Co. v. Marquette Bldg. Co. (Ill.) supra.

The act of the landlord in building a high board fence around the boundary line of the leased premises, thereby cutting off access to the premises except over the land of a third person, renders him liable to the lessee. Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Ripley (Mass.) supra.

In Depuy v. Silver (1843) 1 Clark (Pa.) 385, where the tenant retained possession of the premises during the entire term, and the lease called for the free use of a good road for carts and to the water of a well in the vicinity, it was held that he was entitled to set up by way of set-off a breach of contract based upon the failure to give him the privilege of a good road and the use of the well.

In Kitchen Bros. Hotel Co. v. Philbin (1902) 2 Neb. (Unof.) 340, 96 N. W. 487, the lessee was held entitled to counterclaim for damage due to the act of the lessor in obstructing a hallway by a wooden partition, and thus depriving the lessee of the use thereof, and of the back door opening into the hallway which led to the hotel rotunda, which was in a portion of the same building, the part occupied by the lessee being used for a ticket broker's office, and it appearing that a large portion of his business came from patrons of the hotel, who entered his office from the rotunda by this door and hallway. The court said: The "covenant for quiet enjoyment of the leased premises was implied from the demise. . . . Hence, any interference with the effective use of the part of the building demised which would amount to an eviction in whole or in part, as a breach of such covenant, would be available to the lessee by way of counterclaim when sued on his covenant to pay rent. The use of the back door and hallway was clearly included in the lease. . . . Considering the nature of defendant's business, which would make an office in the hotel building desirable because of its accessibility to travelers, patrons of the hotel, the fact that so large a part of defendant's business came from patrons of the hotel who entered his office from the hotel rotunda, and the fact that the room in question had been used for many years preceding as a ticket office, and had been reached from the rotunda by the hallway and door in question, it is evident that the use of the back door by defendant's customers was in contemplation of the parties quite as much as the use of the front door, and that this door and hallway were reasonably necessary to the effective use of the part of the building demised. This being so, the obstruction thereof by the lessor, so as to prevent the use by the lessee and his customers, was an eviction, which the lessee might treat as total or partial at his election. . . . The lessor could not insist that the lessee treat it as a total eviction; the latter might properly elect to remain and to sue for his damages upon the covenant for his quiet enjoyment."

It has been held that a covenant to pay rent for property abutting upon a body of water is not enforceable where the lessor so interferes with the access to the land by water as to preclude a beneficial use of the premises. Wait v. O'Neil (1896) 34 L.R.A. 550, 22 C. C. A. 248, 47 U. S. App. 19, 76 Fed. 408.

So, in Seigel v. Neary (1902) 38 Misc. 297, 77 N. Y. Supp. 854, it is assumed, apparently upon the concession of counsel on both sides, that where, at the time a portion of premises was leased for saloon purposes, a door opened from the saloon into the hallway by which the tenant to the apartment of which the saloon formed a part entered the apartment, that the closing of this door by the landlord constituted an actual eviction, which suspended the payment of rent, although the tenant remained in possession.

Hamilton v. Graybill (1897) 19 Misc. 521, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1079, also holds that there had been an actual eviction from the premises, which suspended the duty to pay rent, although the tenant remained in possession, where, the leased premises being a part of an office building having two entrances, one to the general office and one to the private office, the landlord closed the entrance to the private office, making the only access to the offices by way of the entrance to the general office and through that to the private office. The court said that "the maintenance of the separate entrance to the private office may have been unnecessary, in the sense that it was not the only means of access, but it remains that, in view of the use to which the occupancy of the rooms was limited by the terms of the demise, the entrance was necessary to the full enjoyment of such use."

In Kerrigan v. May (1921) 188 N. Y. Supp. 774, it was held to constitute a partial actual eviction where the landlord, who had been using a workroom jointly with a tenant of the ground floor, removed from this workroom all the property of the tenant, and placed it in the tenant's sales room, and, at the same time, placed locks on certain doors, thereby depriving the tenant of access to and the use of the workroom and of inside access to the hallway, where the toilet and the stairs to the upper floors were located.

In Hall v. Irvin (1903) 78 App. Div. 107, 79 N. Y. Supp. 614, the tenant of rooms in an office building was held entitled to defend a dispossessory action to recover possession of the rooms by showing that, owing to repairs and alterations made in the building, the entrance, hallway, stairs, elevators, floors, and lavatories, he was, as to them, put out of possession, and thus evicted from a material part of the premises; and therefore the rent during such period was not payable, and hence the dispossess proceeding could not be maintained. It was held that it was a question for the jury whether the interference complained of was of substantial character, and that if they found in favor of the tenant upon that question, it constituted an eviction, which suspended the rent, although the tenant remained in possession.

In Lawrence v. Edwin A. Denham Co. (1908) 58 Misc. 543, 109 N. Y. Supp. 752, a tenant of the second floor of a building, under a lease without conditions of any kind as to ingress and egress, was held to be partially evicted by the act of the landlord in depriving the tenant of an entrance to the building which the business affairs of the tenant required in the use of the premises. This was regarded as an actual eviction, as distinguished from a constructive eviction, and hence to suspend the rent and constitute a defense to an action, therefor, although the tenant remained in possession.

In J. B. Sanborn Co. v. Marquette Bldg. Co. (1900) 86 Ill. App. 681, the lessor was held liable to the lessee for damages due to his obstructing or blocking the entrance to the block in which the lessee had office quarters, and in also encumbering and blocking the passageway, while doing repair work.

Remodeling and obstructing the general entrance to a building a portion of which is under lease, which substantially interferes with the enjoyment of the leased premises, constitutes an actual eviction suspending the rent. Frankel v. Steman (1915) 92 Ohio St. 197, 110 N. E. 747.

The act of the landlord in obstructing the street in front of premises leased for a business purpose, and the taking possession of the same by depositing lumber and other building material thereon, constitutes an actual eviction of the lessee from an important part of the property leased, and during the continuance suspends the rent. Edmison v. Lowry (1892) 3 S. D. 77, 17 L.R.A. 275, 44 Am. St. Rep. 774, 52 N. W. 583.

In Pridgeon v. Excelsior Boat Club (1887) 66 Mich. 326, 33 N. W. 502, it is held that rent is suspended by the act of the lessor of a water lot with the liberties and privileges belonging to the premises, in causing his propeller to be moored at the docks on either side of the slip in front of defendant's premises, completely shutting off ingress and egress to the same, thereby depriving the lessee of the particular and only use for which the premises were rented. The court said that in a case like the present, the technical rule which requires the elements either of absolute expulsion from the property by the landlord, or abandonment by the tenant, to be included in the act of eviction, does not and ought not to be applied. A party should be held evicted, when the act of the landlord is of such a character as to deprive the tenant, or has the effect of depriving him, of the beneficial use and enjoyment of the whole or any part of the demised premises, to the extent he is thus deprived.

It has been held that whether the interferences with the enjoyment of the premises of the tenant, such as doors, halls, stairs, floors, elevators, the use of wash basins, and closets, are so material and substantial in character as to amount to an eviction, is properly a question for the jury, as well as the question of how far they affect in a substantial way the tenant's enjoyment of the premises, and that if it is found in the tenant's favor upon this point an actual eviction may be based thereon. Hall v. Irvin (1903) 78 App. Div. 107, 79 N. Y. Supp. 614. Upon this point the court, after remarking that the lease would entitle the tenant to whatever was attached to or used with the premises as incident thereto and convenient or essential to the beneficial use and enjoyment thereof, said: "There seems to be no necessity for arguing this general proposition, it being conceded that a tenant is entitled to have access through the door, halls, stairs, floors, and elevators, and the use of the wash basins and closet in order to enjoy the rooms he occupies, and these elements are factors in determining the sum to be paid as rent under the lease. If the tenant, deprived of such appurtenances, had moved out pending the repairs, and had then been sued for the rent, could it be held as a matter of law that he was liable therefor? The answer would depend on whether or not those appurtenances were a material and integral part of the demised premises, and whether the loss or deprivation to the tenant was substantial for a sufficiently long period of time, so as to constitute an eviction. If immaterial and temporary, the tenant could not retain possession and refuse to pay the rent. Upon the evidence we think that conflicting views might be taken as to whether the alterations were so material and substantial in character as to amount to an eviction, or whether they were of such an immaterial and temporary kind as not to affect injuriously the enjoyment of the demised premises. Unless the former conclusion had no basis for support in the evidence, there was properly a question for the jury. . . . It was testified that during the period access to the building and elevator and stairs was so interfered with that dangerous conditions existed down to the latter part of January; that the closet and wash basins were removed during the time, and not replaced till the latter part of January, and that the closet on the floor below was insanitary, owing to use by the workmen. The extent of the repairs, the time consumed in making them, how far they affected in a substantial way the tenant's enjoyment of the premises, were all elements to be considered by the jury upon the question of facts presented as to whether or not the defendant's act constituted an eviction. The evidence bearing upon this subject, we think, supports the jury's verdict that they did."

It has been held that where the landlord closed an entrance from one street and opened it upon another, and thereafter closed it, forcing the lessee to use an inadequate rear entrance in his business, it constituted a partial eviction. Epstein v. Dunbar (1915) 221 Mass. 559, 109 N. E. 730.

However, in Carey v. Tremont (1912) 171 Ill. App. 604, the tenant claimed to have been evicted by the refusal of the landlord to permit the reconstruction of a brick oven which collapsed during the term of the lease, and also because, in constructing a sidewalk in front of the premises, certain land owned by the city, on which there was a stairway leading to the basement, could not again be used for such stairway, thus cutting off the means of access to the basement; the tenant, however, remained in possession of the premises for a considerable period of time following the event, and it is held that eviction was not shown, and the rule is stated that the tenant must have abandoned the premises, or surrendered the same, in order to claim an eviction.

A mere temporary obstruction of an important means of access to the leased apartments and of the view through such access will not entitle the tenant to rescind the contract. North P. S. S. Co. v. Terminal Invest. Co. (1919) 43 Cal. App. 182, 185 Pac. 205. In the foregoing case the trial court found that the continued existence of the open space and the right of way, and unobstructed view by passers-by, through and across the space, was a material part of the consideration for the obligation of the tenant, and constituted a material inducement to him to enter into the lease; but nevertheless, having found that the obstruction had continued only for a period not exceeding twenty-one days, that it did not work a failure of any material or substantial part of the consideration to the tenant for the lease, and since he had sustained no substantial or material injury or damage by reason of the obstruction, a judgment was entered in favor of the landlord.

Where the landlord was compelled by municipal authorities to remove a stoop appurtenant to demised premises, which encroached on the sidewalk, this did not constitute a wrongful act entitling the lessee to claim a partial eviction, it appearing that as a matter of fact the change increased the rental value of the premises. Duhain v. Mermod, J. & K. Jewelry Co. (1914) 211 N. Y. 364, 105 N. E. 657, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 404.

The tenant of a lower floor, who is also given the use of a portion of the garret, cannot claim an eviction based upon the fact that the means of access to the garret are changed by the landlord during the term. Giesen v. Metzler (1917) 178 App. Div. 858, 166 N. Y. Supp. 114.

In Pearce v. Hoyt (1909) 136 Mo. App. 590, 118 S. W. 656, it is held that a tenant has no ground for complaint merely because a door to a stairway leading to his apartment was locked, it appearing that the door was locked by a subtenant of the lessee. The court said: "The rule invoked by defendant, 'that the tenant whose occupancy is prevented by a wrongdoer is not compelled to proceed against him, but may take his action against his lessor on his covenant to deliver possession,' . . . has no application here for the reason that no facts or circumstances have been adduced by defendant to support the conclusion that he was deprived of the stairway either by plaintiff or by the adjoining proprietor. He has proved nothing but the fact that, a year after he leased the premises, he found the street doors locked. This fact alone does not warrant the inference that he was excluded from the use of the stairway by plaintiff, the adjoining proprietor, or even by a wrongdoer."

Merely depriving a tenant of a portion of the easement for an alleyway, even though regarded as a partial eviction, cannot be taken advantage of by an assignee of the tenant, who subsequently accepts the premises and pays a rental therefor prescribed by the lease without objection. Duncan v. Granas (1915) 166 Cal. 41, 134 Pac. 979.

2. Light and air.

An obstruction by the lessor of the light or air of the lessee, if constituting a material deprivation of the latter's beneficial use of the leased premises, constitutes a breach of the covenants of the lease which will render the lessor liable.

Illinois. — Keating v. Springer (1893) 146 Ill. 481, 22 L.R.A. 545, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175, 34 N. E. 805.

New York.—Schulte Realty Co. v. Pulvino (1919) 179 N. Y. Supp. 371.

Oregon. — Hotel Marion Co. v. Waters (1915) 77 Or. 426, 150 Pac. 865.

Pennsylvania.—Schienze v. Eckels (1910) 227 Pa. 305, 76 Atl. 15.

Washington. — Matzger v. Arcade Bldg. & Realty Co. (1918) 102 Wash. 423, 173 Pac. 47.

England. — Tebb v. Cave [1900] 1 Ch. 642, 69 L. J. Ch. N. S. 282, 82 L. T. N. S. 115, 48 Week. Rep. 318.

Canada. — Vidal v. Cauchon (1910) Rap. Jud. Quebec 41 C. S. 1.

In Keating v. Springer (Ill.) supra, it is held that, if interference by the lessor with the means for securing light resulted in damage to the tenant, he may recoup the same in reduction of the amount of recovery, and that he was not precluded from showing such damage by his failure to surrender possession at an earlier date.

So, in Schulte Realty Co. v. Pulvino (N. Y.) supra, it is held that erecting a wall, thereby closing a window, and erecting a floor above an air shaft, thereby interfering with the light and ventilation, constitute an eviction of the tenant from the beneficial enjoyment of part of the demise, which will suspend the rent.

Adolphi v. Inglima (1911) 130 N. Y. Supp. 130, holds that where the leased apartment was very narrow, and the only light and ventilation from the rear were from two small windows, and the landlord erected an obstruction in the rear so that a large portion of one window was entirely cut off from the premises, and that window sealed, it constituted a partial eviction.

But in Cochran v. Scherer (1922) 117 Misc. 765, 192 N. Y. Supp. 199, it is held that a tenant cannot remain in possession of the leased premises and recover damages on the claim of a breach of warranty, or on the ground of fraud and rescission, where the basis of either claim is that the landlord represented that no building would be erected upon a vacant lot adjoining the leased premises, and subsequently there was a building erected upon this lot that cut off the tenant's view from his apartment, and also interfered with the light and air, making artificial light necessary.

In Matzger v. Arcade Bldg. & Realty Co. (Wash.) supra, the lessee of a portion of a building for business purposes was held entitled to recover damages accruing to him by reason of the interference by the lessor with the access of light and ventilation of the storeroom occupied by the lessee, this interference being by the construction of a bridge connecting the building occupied by the lessee with another building, also owned by the lessor. The lessee remained in possession of the premises until the termination of the lease, but was held entitled to recover damages based upon the diminished value of the use of the demised premises.

In New York State Invest. Co. v. Wolf (1914) 84 Misc. 66, 145 N. Y. Supp. 945, it was apparently assumed that the tenant would be entitled to treat as a constructive eviction the act of the landlord in erecting a pole in front of the leased premises, upon which there was placed an electric light, which during warm weather, when the tenant's shades were up, shone into his sleeping chambers to such an extent as seriously to interfere with his slumbers. The case, however, turned upon the point as to whether or not the tenant had waived his right to claim an eviction.

An eviction cannot lawfully be claimed because of the loss of light through windows, due to the act of the adjoining owner in closing the windows in a party wall, and such act presents no legal excuse for the nonpayment of rent. Holden v. Tidwell (1913) 37 Okla. 553, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 369, 133 Pac. 54, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 394.

In Solomon v. Fantozzi (1904) 43 Misc. 61, 86 N. Y. Supp. 754, a tenant sought to defeat liability for rent accruing while in possession of the leased premises, on the ground of a constructive eviction, due to cutting off or deprivation of light and air, by the act of the landlord in building upon adjoining premises. The case was disposed of upon the ground that the light and air were not necessarily involved in the beneficial use of the premises by the lessee, and upon this ground relief was denied without considering the question of the right to claim a constructive eviction, although retaining possession of the leased premises.

The implied warranty of quiet enjoyment and possession arising from a lease of property for hotel purposes is not breached by the act of an adjoining owner in erecting a building upon the adjoining property, and using the party wall, although he uses the same under a contract with the landlord, and the effect of such use is to cut off the light and air from that side of the hotel property. McMullen v. Moffitt (1896) 68 Ill. App. 160.

It constitutes a breach of an express covenant for quiet enjoyment for the landlord to erect, upon adjoining premises, a block so much higher than the leased premises as to cause smoke to be driven down the tenant's chimney, substantially affecting the enjoyment of the premises. Tebb v. Cave [1900] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 642, 69 L. J. Ch. N. S. 282, 82 L. T. N. S. 115, 48 Week. Rep. 318.

In Vidal v. Cauchon (1910) Rap. Jud. Quebec (Can.) 41 C. S. 1, where a building erected by the landlord upon premises adjoining the leased premises so interfered with the tenant's light and view as materially to alter and change the conditions existing at the time of the lease, the tenant was held entitled to rescind the lease and recover damages.

f. Active interference by lessor with lessee's possession or use of the leased premises.

It has been asserted that the landlord, without being guilty of actual disturbance of the tenant's possession, may yet do such acts as will justify the tenant in leaving the premises, or, if he does not leave, give an action for damages. Boyer v. Commercial Bldg. Invest. Co. (1900) 110 Iowa, 491, 81 N. W. 720, citing Keating v. Springer (1893) 146 Ill. 481, 22 L.R.A. 544, 37 Am. St. Rep. 175, 34 N. E. 805.

Thus, the owner of leased premises is liable to the tenant for damages due to entering upon the leased land and excavating thereon, rendering dangerous the access and approach to the rear of the building used for business purposes. Stanton v. Lapp (1910) 113 Md. 324, 77 Atl. 672.

So, in Ives v. Williams (1883) 50 Mich. 100, 15 N. W. 33, subsequent appeal in (1884) 53 Mich. 636, 19 N. W. 562, the landlord was held liable to a tenant for injury to the latter by interfering with his possession and occupation of the leased premises by putting in an elevator in another portion of the premises.

The act of the landlord in putting a water pipe through one corner of the building on the leased premises, and a pump and sink in an upper room thereof, may amount to a mere trespass, or it may amount to an eviction, the question being one for the jury. Lynch v. Baldwin (1873) 69 Ill. 210.

In Northern Trust Co. v. Palmer (1898) 171 Ill. 383, 49 N. E. 553, a landlord was held liable for the act of workmen in entering upon the leased premises and tearing down a wall of the building occupied by the tenant, for the purpose of erecting a new one.

In Briggs v. Hall (1833) 4 Leigh (Va.) 484, 26 Am. Dec. 326, where a farm was let for a definite period of time, and the landlord entered upon a portion thereof within this time, and carried away hay without the consent and against the will of the tenant, who, however, continued to occupy the farm during the balance of the term, the former was held to have lost the benefit of the entire contract, and hence not to be entitled to recover any part of the rent.

Whether the conduct of a person, acting under the authority of the lessor, in taking possession of a building on the leased premises and using it, constitutes a mere trespass or an eviction is a question for the jury. Hayner v. Smith (1872) 63 Ill. 430, 14 Am. Rep. 124.

The lessor is liable for disturbing the lessee in the enjoyment of the leased premises, where, in order to induce her to vacate the premises she is occupying as a rooming house, he threatens to throw her out and to excavate under the leased premises, and his employees pile lumber and other material around the building, so as to make it unsightly, and in other ways so annoy the lessee and her roomers that it breaks up and destroys her business. Gray v. Linton (1906) 38 Colo. 175, 88 Pac. 749.

The landlord is liable in damages for disturbing the tenant in his possession of land leased for agricultural purposes, by tearing down fences and laying out streets across the premises. Thayer-Moore Brokerage Co. v. Campbell (1912) 164 Mo. App. 8, 147 S. W. 545.

In Collins v. Lewis (1893) 53 Minn. 78, 19 L.R.A. 822, 54 N. W. 1056, it is held that where, under claim of right, the landlord has interfered with the tenant's possession of the demised premises, and has prevented him from having the use and enjoyment of a part thereof, this amounts to a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment.

In West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Morrison, A. & A. Co. (1896) 160 Ill. 288, 43 N. E. 393, a judgment for substantial damages was awarded against a landlord for wilfully, wantonly, and maliciously trespassing upon the leased premises. And see, to the same effect, Jenner v. Carpenter (1898) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 48 S. W. 86.

In Ives v. Williams (1883) 50 Mich. 100, 15 N. W. 33, the right to maintain an action for damages to recover from the lessor for injury to the lessee's business, by interfering with his occupation of the premises, is sustained, although based upon the operation of an elevator in connection with the work of installing it in another part of the building than that occupied by the tenant.

In Goebel v. Hough (1879) 26 Minn. 252, 2 N. W. 847, the lessees were held entitled to counterclaim damages due to the interference by the landlord with their enjoyment of the leased premises, by entering thereon and making repairs without authority. The court said: "The most important question concerns the rule of damages upon the counterclaim, if it is established. Defendant's right to recover the actual damage to stock, for loss of rent of the room above, and for what they necessarily expended in restoring the room, sign, and awning to their former condition, cannot be questioned. . . . If no damages are claimed for injury to the business, but only for interference with the use of the store, and for loss of time of defendants and their employees, defendants must show to what extent they lost the use of the store, and the time of themselves and employees, and to that extent, only, can they in such case recover for these items. On the other hand, if damages are claimed on the basis of injury to the value of the business, then loss of use of the store, and of the time of defendants and their employees, are improper as distinct items of damage, for they are included in the estimation of injury to the value of the business."

In Conlon v. McGraw (1887) 66 Mich. 194, 33 N. W. 388, the lessee was held entitled to recover damages in an action in trespass on the case, for injury to his leasehold interest in a certain brick building owned by the defendant, the injury having been caused by third persons, acting for the defendant, taking out the doors and windows and the front to a portion of the premises. The portion interfered with, however, was not occupied by the plaintiff. Under these circumstances the contention was made that the wrong complained of was not the abuse of the lessee's property, but a misuse of the defendant's property, which, even though a wrong to him, was not a trespass, but a continual nuisance made by the landlord upon his own premises; that the lessor did not touch the plaintiff's leasehold, but, by removing portions of his own building not rented by him, damaged the tenant's possession and business—consequently, no damages could be recovered accruing from the injury based upon any loss to his business. The court, however, said that the evidence showed a destruction of the leasehold, thereby ruining the premises so far as any valuable occupation thereof by the tenant was concerned.

In McDowell v. Hyman (1897) 117 Cal. 67, 48 Pac. 984, a landlord is held liable to a tenant of several floors of the building for damage due to repairing other floors. The court said: "The landlords, as the owners of the second floor, had an undoubted right to repair, alter, and improve that portion of their premises, but in so doing they were bound by their implied agreement to so conduct their operations as not to dispossess, or render uninhabitable the portion of the building they had demised to others, and if they failed in this duty they were liable to their tenants, irrespective of the question of negligence. As against third parties, they could take down the outer or inner walls of the building at will, subject only to such negligence and consequent injury as might render them liable to parties injured thereby; but as against their tenant, they could not do the same thing, even in a most careful manner, if the result destroyed the quiet enjoyment of such tenant."

In Kansas Invest. Co. v. Carter (1894) 160 Mass. 421, 36 N. E. 63, the liability of a landlord for disturbing the tenant in the possession of the leased premises, by tearing down a building thereon, was held to depend upon the question as to whether or not it was necessary for the landlord, for reasons of safety, to tear it down, or whether it might be made safe and secure without disturbing the possession of the lessee.

In Kiernan v. Bush Temple of Music Co. (1907) 229 Ill. 494, 82 N. E. 410, the court said that, if the tenant could under any circumstances resort to a court of equity to set off against the rent damages sustained by reason of a violation of covenants, it would be necessary for the averments of the bill to show that his possession was disturbed by someone other than the public authorities under their police powers.

And see Arafe v. Howe (1917) 228 Mass. 46, 116 N. E. 971, wherein, in an equity action, it was held that if the tenant established his claim that the interference complained of, being a structure in the basement of the leased premises, was erected or maintained by the express or implied authority of the landlord, damages might be assessed in the tenant's favor.

The fact that the lessor gave to contractors who were to excavate for the lessor upon adjoining premises, a permit to go upon the leased premises, did not entitle the lessee to avoid payment of rent on the ground of eviction, since such a permit by the lessor did not authorize the contractors to enter upon the leased premises without the consent of the lessee, and hence, if they entered thereon, they were trespassers, and the lessor was not responsible for their conduct. McKenzie v. Hatton (1894) 141 N. Y. 6, 35 N. E. 929.

Where a wrongful entry by the landlord, at the most, constitutes a mere trespass for which the tenant may recover nominal damages in a suitable action, he cannot recover damages for a breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment. International Trust Co. v. Schmann (1893) 158 Mass. 287, 33 N. E. 509.

g. Existence of infectious disease.

Where there was no infectious disease in any portion of the premises part of which was leased to the defendant, at the time he took possession of the premises, and he remained in possession, the fact that, after the lease was executed and the defendant had taken possession, persons on another floor of the building were stricken with smallpox, is no defense to an action for the rent. Walker v. Newman (1909) 146 Ill. App. 450.

The question whether such a condition would sustain an action or counterclaim based upon death or illness is beyond the scope of the annotation (see IV. a, supra).

h. Failure to repair.

Where based upon a covenant to keep the leased premises in repair, it is held in Myers v. Burns (1866) 35 N. Y. 269, that, where smoke and gas in the rooms in a hotel are due to defective flues, the lessee is entitled to counterclaim, as damage, loss due to such smoke and gas.

Bergman v. Papia (1908) 58 Misc. 533, 109 N. Y. Supp. 856, holds to amount to a partial actual eviction the fact that the walls of the leased apartment were cracked by the operation of cars in a barn in adjacent premises, causing the walls to fall and render the premises in part uninhabitable, where the landlord refused to allow the railway company at fault in the matter to enter upon the premises in order to repair the walls.

In Dolph v. Barry (1912) 165 Mo. App. 659, 148 S. W. 196, a lessee of several floors of a building sublet certain of the floors, and subsequently was obliged to abandon the floors personally occupied because they became untenable, due to the failure of the landlord to repair the premises according to his covenant. In an action by the landlord to recover the rent from the tenant, these facts were set up as an offset to the claim of the landlord, and the tenant was held entitled to an apportionment of rent.

In Graecen v. Barker (1911) 130 N. Y. Supp. 141, it is apparently assumed, the question not being raised, that constructive eviction may be based upon unendurable noises due to defective water pipes. The real question in this case was whether or not the fact that the lessee retained possession of the premises while an attempt was being made to repair the pipes constituted a waiver of the objection, and it is held that under the circumstances it did not.

However, in Taylor v. Finnigan (1905) 189 Mass. 568, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 973, 76 N. E. 203, in holding that an express covenant of quiet enjoyment was not breached by the failure of the landlord to supply additional exits to a building not leased for any particular purpose, but used by the tenant for a theater until he was compelled to discontinue such use for the failure to supply additional exits, as required by public officials, the court said: "Having remained in occupation of the estate, the defendant's obligation under his covenant to pay rent is absolute, except so far as it may have been suspended by a breach on the part of the plaintiff of his covenant that, if the lessee pays the rent, he 'shall peaceably hold and enjoy the said rented premises without hindrance or interruption by the said lessor, or any person or persons whomsoever.' The lessor, however, did not engage to make even ordinary repairs, or to maintain the property in suitable condition for use and habitation as it was in at the date of the lease; and if the construction of additional exits was called for to make the building safe for the use of those attending the theatrical performances, and such alterations rightfully could be classed as repairs, the plaintiff was under no obligation to make them, as this burden was cast upon the lessee, and a failure to do so did not constitute a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment."

In Roth v. Adams (1904) 185 Mass. 341, 70 N. E. 445, the court remarked that even if the jury found that certain buildings adjoining the leased premises remained in the possession of the lessor, and that she permitted them to fall into a state of decay to the personal annoyance of the lessee, this did not necessarily prove such an interference with the occupancy of the demised premises as to amount either to an eviction or a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment; at least, where the tenant still continued in possession and use of them.

1. Failure to heat.

The breach by the landlord of an express covenant to heat the leased premises will entitle the lessee to maintain an action for damages for breach of the covenant, or to counterclaim or recoup such damages in an action by the landlord for the rent. Harmony Co. v. Rauch (1896) 62 Ill. App. 97; Globe Asso. v. Brega (1914) 190 Ill. App. 60; Thomson v. Ludlum (1902) 36 Misc. 801, 74 N. Y. Supp. 875; Borchardt v. Parker (1908) 108 N. Y. Supp. 585; Wurz v. Watts (1911) 73 Misc. 262, 132 N. Y. Supp. 685; Jacob New Realty Co. v. Noxall Shirt Co. (1918) 104 Misc. 82, 171 N. Y. Supp. 376; McSorley v. Allen (1908) 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 271.

The tenant is entitled to recoup the cost of heating the leased premises in an action to recover the rent, or he may sue upon the lessor's covenant to heat the same, where the lessor breaches it. Globe Asso. v. Brega (Ill.) supra.

In an action by the landlord to recover rent, the lessee is entitled to recoup damages based upon the breach by the landlord of his covenant to heat the leased premises. Jacob New Realty Co. v. Noxall Shirt Co. (N. Y.) supra.

The failure of the landlord to furnish heat and water may be relied upon to reduce the rent, although the lessee retains possession of the premises, and the default does not constitute an eviction. Wurz v. Watts (1911) 73 Misc. 262, 132 N. Y. Supp. 685.

In Borchardt v. Parker (1908) 108 N. Y. Supp. 585, it is also held that the fact that the tenant retained possession of the leased premises is no bar to her counterclaim for damages by reason of the landlord's breach of covenant to heat the apartment when necessary for comfort.

Harmony Co. v. Rauch (Ill.) supra, also holds that in an action to recover rent the lessee is entitled to recoup whatever damages he may have sustained on account of a breach by the lessor of his agreement to heat the leased premises.

So, in McSorley v. Allen (Pa.) supra, in holding that where the landlord neglected and refused to furnish heat and light which his covenant required him to furnish, and the premises were thereby rendered unfit for occupancy, the tenant was not required first to pay the rent, and then to sue for damages suffered by the landlord's breach of his covenant, the court said that physical expulsion is not now considered necessary to constitute an eviction. Any act of a landlord which deprives his tenant of that beneficial enjoyment of the premises to which he is entitled under a lease will amount in law to an eviction, and suspend the rent.

It has been held that where the lease is silent as to the heating of the premises, being apartments in an apartment house, but the only mode of heating would be by a central plant operated by the landlord, the tenant is entitled to surrender the premises if the heat is not furnished, on the ground that he is not receiving what he contracted for; but, if he retains possession of the premises, he is not entitled to recover damages for breach of any implied covenant to heat, although damages might be recovered under such circumstances for breach of an express covenant. Jackson v. Paterno (1908) 128 App. Div. 474, 112 N. Y. Supp. 924.

It has been held that even though an apartment was not in fit condition for residence purposes, and that for this reason the tenant might have refused to take possession of it, or having taken possession, might have abandoned the same where the defect was a failure to heat; yet, having retained possession through the entire term, there was no implied covenant to heat, upon the breach of which the tenant could rely to support an action for damages. Ibid. The court said: "Considering the nature of the apartment, the method provided for heating it, and the use to which the apartment was restricted, it was rented as an apartment convenient for use as a dwelling for the family of the tenant. In this climate, during the winter months, an apartment without artificial heat of some kind cannot be occupied as a family dwelling. The premises were rented for a purpose which required that the apartment should be artificially heated. Unless the temperature, therefore, was maintained so that the apartment could be occupied for the purpose for which it was rented, they were not the premises that were leased and which the tenant was bound to occupy. It would seem, therefore, that after the lease was signed, and before the tenant had taken possession, if he had discovered that the heating appliances were insufficient to keep the apartment in such a condition that it could be occupied by the family, that he would have been justified in refusing to occupy the premises, and could have defended an action under the covenant to pay rent on the ground that the landlord had never furnished him with such an apartment as was contemplated by the lease. And so, after the apartment had been occupied, but upon the arrival of cold weather, if it was found that the heating apparatus was incapable of keeping the apartment at a temperature sufficiently high to enable it to be occupied by his family as a living apartment, the tenant would have been justified in surrendering possession, and could have defended an action for the rent on that ground. Plaintiff, however, retained possession of the premises as a residence for his family, and, although constantly complaining of the temperature maintained by the defendant, he continued to occupy them. If there had been a covenant to furnish heat, which defendant had broken, the plaintiff could have maintained an action for any damages that he had sustained (Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Durant Land Improv. Co. (1894) 144 N. Y. 34, 39 N. E. 7), but it seems to me that there was no such implied covenant for a breach of which an action for damages would lie. As before stated, the lease is entirely silent as to heating the apartment. What the landlord did was to lease an apartment to the plaintiff to use as a residence for himself and his family. He made no agreement as to the temperature of the apartment; there was no undertaking on the part of the landlord to supply heat, or to keep the apartment at any particular temperature. If the defendant failed to comply with his lease and furnish to the plaintiff the apartment that he had leased to him, the tenant was under no obligation to occupy the apartment, but, having continued to occupy it during the whole of the term for which it was leased, he was bound to pay the rent reserved, and in the absence of a covenant of the landlord to supply sufficient heat to maintain a particular temperature, it seems to me that no action for damages would lie because the temperature was not that desired by the tenant. The obligation of the landlord of an apartment of this character, where the landlord retains possession of a large part of the building which is to be used in common by the tenants, undoubtedly imposes upon the landlord the duty of maintaining in good order and condition the portion of the building which the tenant has a right to use. For a violation of this duty, the landlord would be responsible to the tenant for any damage that was sustained by him. If the halls, stairways, or elevators of the building were not maintained by the landlord in a proper condition for use, or if the walls or roof of the building were allowed from lack of repair to leak so that the tenant's property was injured, there would undoubtedly be an action for damages against the landlord—not, as I understand, upon the breach of an implied covenant, but because the landlord had failed to perform a duty which he assumed when he leased the apartment, and was liable for the damage that resulted. But there was no evidence that this heating apparatus was not sufficient to heat the apartment. All that appears is that, for some unexplained reason, the temperature of the apartment was not maintained so as to make it a comfortable residence for the plaintiff's family during some portion of the winter; but, having continued to occupy the premises, he became liable for the rent, and for the mere discomfort which resulted from an insufficient temperature there was no cause of action. If we assume, however, that there was a cause of action, and that the landlord was liable for any damages that resulted from his failure to maintain the temperature so that the apartment was what he rented,—an apartment suitable for occupation as a strictly private dwelling apartment,—there was no damage proved. The evidence that an apartment of that kind, without heat, was of no value, would not be a defense by the tenant to an action for rent, and would not justify a counterclaim, an action for damages, or an action to recover back the rent paid, as the tenant occupied the premises for the occupation of which he covenanted to pay the rent. All that was attempted to be proved was that an unheated apartment of this kind, with no method of heating it, was of no value. The defendant offered some evidence to show that this apartment could have been heated by gas stoves or gas heaters at an expense not exceeding $5 a month. But as the tenant made no attempt to supply this deficiency of heat, and was, therefore, put to no expense in consequence thereof, he was not entitled to recover for an expenditure which he did not make, assuming that he might have made it, and so supplied the deficiency. As to the illness of his child, the evidence was not sufficient to justify a finding that this illness was caused by the low temperature, nor is there any evidence to show that the plaintiff had been put to any expense in consequence of it. The utmost that can be said in this case is that for some portion of this winter the premises were not maintained in the condition contemplated by the lease, which would have justified the tenant in treating it as a constructive eviction and surrendering the premises. But, in the absence of some covenant of the landlord to supply heat to the premises, an action for damages would not lie."

Where the only complaint of the lessee was the failure of the lessor properly to heat the premises in January, he cannot avoid payment of rent by abandoning the premises the following May. California Bldg. Co. v. Drury (1918) 103 Wash. 577, 175 Pac. 302.

In Truman v. Reiss (1912) 175 Ill. App. 351, in holding that a tenant is not entitled to recoup damages for failure of the landlord comfortably to heat the premises during the time that he remains in occupation thereof, the view is stated that, as long as a tenant continues in the use and occupation of the premises, he cannot offset, as against the rent contracted to be paid, any damages by reason of the inconvenience to him of such use and occupation; and any conduct of the landlord which merely tends to diminish the beneficial enjoyment of the premises cannot be offset as against the rent contracted to be paid.

j. Failure to furnish power or water.

Where the interference with the lessee's manufacturing business upon the leased premises was due to the failure of the landlord to furnish steam power to run the lessee's machinery, he is entitled to counterclaim his damages in an action by the landlord for rent. Hirsch v. Olmesdahl (1902) 38 Misc. 757, 78 N. Y. Supp. 832.

In Brown v. Holyoke Water Power Co. (1890) 152 Mass. 463, 23 Am. St. Rep. 844, 25 N. E. 966, it appeared that the plaintiff hired of the defendant a room in which were shafting and a pulley, connected by a belt with another part of the defendant's premises, in such a way as to furnish power for the running of machinery in the room leased. The room and power were let together in one contract, and the room was so situated with reference to the source of power, and so connected with it, that the right to the power, furnished through the belt in the ordinary way, was appurtenant to the room. Under these circumstances it was held that the act of the landlord in throwing off the belt and keeping it off, with a view to stop the tenant's business, and force him to vacate the room, was a breach of the landlord's covenant of quiet enjoyment, and an eviction of the tenant from an important part of the premises, entitling the latter to recover such damages as he suffered from the unlawful act.

In Dexter v. Manley (1849) 4 Cush. (Mass.) 14, a lease of real estate, consisting of a factory, water power, tools, machinery, apparatus, etc., for the purpose of carrying on certain manufactories, contained a reservation in favor of the lessor, of the use of a saw. The lessee, claiming that the lessor so used this saw as to diminish the power necessary for the operation of his machinery, thereby rendering the use of the premises less beneficial to him than he was entitled to under the lease, brought an action to recover damage for breach of covenant, and his right to do so was sustained.

In Morse v. Maddox (1853) 17 Mo. 569, subsequent appeals in (1854) 19 Mo. 451, and (1855) 21 Mo. 524, the landlord was held liable to an action for breach of agreement, where he purposely closed the head gate which controlled the water supply of the lessee's manufacturing plant with water privileges, the effect of closing the head gate being to deprive the leased premises of water power.

In B. Roth Tool Co. v. Champ Spring Co. (1907) 122 Mo. App. 603, 99 S. W. 827, an action was sustained where it was sought to recover damages for the wrongful act of the landlord in turning off the steam from the premises, and declining further to provide it.

In Egan v. Browne (1908) 128 App. Div. 184, 112 N. Y. Supp. 689, it is held that a tenant is entitled to recover damages as for a tort based upon the act of the landlord in wantonly, wilfully, and maliciously depriving and cutting off from the lessee's premises and business all the steam power and live steam absolutely necessary for carrying on his laundry business, thereby breaking up and ruining the same. In so holding the court said: "It was held in Denison v. Ford (1882) 10 Daly (N. Y.) 412, that when a tenant is evicted he cannot sue the landlord for tort, so as to change the rule as to the measure of damages, but only for a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment, which, if not expressed, is implied in leases. But in the later case of Snow v. Pulitzer (1894) 142 N. Y. 263, 36 N. E. 1059, the tenant was allowed to pass the covenant by, and recover as for a tort. In that way he recovered for the breaking up of his business and the loss of property caused thereby. In the present case the tenants hired a floor in a building which was furnished with steam power for business purposes by the landlord, and the lease was, in terms, not only of such floor, but of the steam power to run the plaintiffs' business. The complaint alleges that the defendants, the subsequent grantees of the lessor, 'unlawfully evicted the plaintiffs from the said premises, and the use and enjoyment thereof, by wantonly, wilfully, and maliciously depriving and cutting off from the plaintiffs' premises and business all the steam power and live steam absolutely necessary for carrying on said laundry business;' and it is alleged that the plaintiffs' business was thereby broken up and ruined, and they were unable to get another place equipped to carry on their business. The case seems to be the same as that of Snow v. Pulitzer, for the wrongful trespass of removing the support of a side wall, which caused it to fall, as was the fact in that case, and the wrongful trespass of disconnecting the shafts in the demised premises from the steam plant in the present case, are the same in principle and cannot be distinguished. Each was a trespass which destroyed the beneficial use for which the premises were leased."

In Wurz v. Watts (1911) 73 Misc. 262, 132 N. Y. Supp. 685, a landlord is held liable to a tenant for a failure to furnish heat and water according to agreement.

In Hett v. Lange (1910) 139 App. Div. 743, 124 N. Y. Supp. 573, it is held that a tenant is entitled to counterclaim damages growing out of the failure of the landlord to furnish a water supply according to agreement.

As against a demurrer a petition is sufficient by which it is sought to recover damages in behalf of the plaintiff, the lessee, due to the unlawful shutting off of steam from his apartment by the lessor, where such steam was necessary to furnish power to machinery on the leased premises, operated by the lessee. B. Roth Tool Co. v. Champ Spring Co. (1907) 122 Mo. App. 603, 99 S. W. 827.

In Kiddie Art Novelty Co. v. Paneth, F. & W. Co. (1921) 187 N. Y. Supp.

242, it is conceded that a partial eviction will suspend payment of rent, but it is held that an interruption in water supply every half hour did not constitute a partial eviction within this rule, it appearing that the defendant was a manufacturer of articles, and that it did not appear that he was unable to store sufficient water to last during the period of interruption.

k. Failure to furnish elevator or telephone service.

It has been held that failure of the lessor of premises, leased for residence purposes, to furnish necessary elevator service, may render him liable to the lessee in damages, although it would not sustain a claim of eviction. Thomson v. Ludlum (1902) 36 Misc. 801, 74 N. Y. Supp. 875.

And the elevator service may become so erratic and unfit as to constitute constructive eviction as to a tenant who relied upon such service to carry on his business in an upper story. Lawrence v. Katcher (1909) 117 N. Y. Supp. 876, supra.

In Metropole Constr. Co. v. Hartigan (1912) 83 N. J. L. 409, 85 Atl. 313, it is held that the continued possession by the tenant of premises was inconsistent with the claim of eviction based upon the breach by the landlord of his contract to furnish telephone service. The view, as expressed by the court, is that such a breach would not constitute constructive eviction, even if the lessee had vacated the premises, but that his remedy was by recouping damages for breach of covenant.

In Metropole Constr. Co. v. Hartigan (N. J.) supra, it is held that a breach by a landlord of his agreement to furnish telephone service constitutes a breach of covenant.

l. Miscellaneous.

It has been held that the fact that the lessor, after the execution of the lease, submitted to a decree in a pending proceeding to condemn a stream of water flowing through the leased premises, does not give the lessee a cause of action against the lessor on the theory of a partial eviction by the loss of the use of the water, since this proceeding could not affect the lessee's right to the use of the water he acquired by and through the lease; hence, any claim he might have for the diversion of the water would be against the plaintiff in the condemnation proceeding, and not against the lessor. Sullivan v. Beardsley (1880) 55 Cal. 608.

In VEYSEY v. MORIYAMA (reported herewith) ante, 1363, it is held that it does not amount to a constructive eviction for the lessor of land for farming purposes, under a lease carrying with it as appurtenant to the premises certain shares of water stock, giving the lessee the right to use the water for irrigation purposes, to permit a portion of the shares of stock to be sold under an assessment, although the effect is substantially to decrease the amount of water to which the tenant is entitled, and hence to effect the purposes of his leasehold, the lessee, however, remaining in possession. Under these circumstances the court said: "So, in this case, conceding that a failure of the water supply on 10 out of 460 shares of water stock on a total acreage of 640 acres is sufficient to constitute a constructive eviction, the tenant cannot avoid his covenant to pay rent while he remains in possession of the entire premises, and continues to cultivate the whole thereof, and enjoy the benefits of the remaining water supply. He has ample remedy, under such circumstances, in recouping the damages he may sustain against the accruing rentals. New York v. Mabie (1855) 13 N. Y. 151, 64 Am. Dec. 538; McCoy v. Oldham (1890) 1 Ind. App. 372, 50 Am. St. Rep. 208, 27 N. E. 647."

In Williams v. Getman (1906) 114 App. Div. 282, 99 N. Y. Supp. 977, the lessee of the third floor of a building, to be used as a skating rink, was enjoined by the lessees of the first and second floors from using the third floor for a rink, on the ground that such use constituted a nuisance because of the noise occasioned thereby; the lessor was given notice of this action during its pendency, but did not make any dissent, and the defense made by the lessee was ineffectual. Under these circumstances, it was held that the lessee was entitled to maintain an action against the lessor for damages due to being thus precluded from using the leased premises for the purpose for which they were leased. The court said: "The plaintiffs rented the hall for a particular business, fitted it up for that business, and were carrying on the business in a proper manner, with no more noise than is necessary and usual in that business. At the instigation of the lessor, they were perpetually enjoined from carrying on that business on the pretense that Weed and Willoughby were prior tenants of the floors below, and that the business carried on above was detrimental to their business, and an improper use of the hall. The fact that rent was paid for some months after the perpetual injunction was granted does not change the situation. The plaintiffs were deprived of the real benefit which they had intended to derive from the lease, and the defendant is responsible for such interference with their business."

A landlord's refusal to allow an undertenant to enter upon the premises, under threats of suit, whereby the lessee is deprived of underletting, is an interruption of the renter's right which amounts to an eviction. Doran v. Chase (1876) 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 609.

In Levitzky v. Canning (1867) 33 Cal. 299, it was held to constitute a breach of the express covenant for the quiet enjoyment, for the landlord publicly to give out and pretend that the tenant had no right to the possession of the leased premises, and to bring actions to recover possession upon the pretense that the lease had expired, when in consequence the tenant was put to great expense in defending the actions, and his tenants quit the premises, and he was unable to obtain others. The court said that these acts were as much a molestation, disturbance, and invasion of the plaintiff's possession as a taking by the shoulders and a forcible eviction of the plaintiff's tenants would have been. The character of the act must be determined by the results which follow it, and, in view of the results which are alleged to have followed the acts of the defendant, there can be no question that he disturbed and interrupted the possession of the plaintiff to his injury, which is precisely what he had covenanted not to do.

It has been held that where the lessor interferes with the cultivation of the leased land by the lessee, by procuring an injunction restraining such cultivation, the lessee may maintain an action to recover the damage accruing to him therefrom, based upon a breach of the covenants of the lease, even though he might have an action upon the injunction bond. Hubble v. Cole (1891) 88 Va. 236, 13 L.R.A. 311, 29 Am. St. Rep. 716, 13 S. E. 441.

So, a covenant in effect that the lessee is to enjoy the premises without any manner of let, suit, trouble, or hindrance from the landlord is breached by the act of the landlord in vexatiously, and without reasonable cause, bringing different actions of ejectment against the tenant, and the tenant is entitled to recover damages for a breach of the covenant, although remaining in possession of the leased premises. Paddell v. Janes (1915) 90 Misc. 146, 152 N. Y. Supp. 948.

In Prochaska v. Fox (1904) 137 Mich. 519, 100 N. W. 746, the sublessee of the bar privileges upon grounds leased for the display of fireworks for a period of two weeks was restrained by the lessee, by injunction, from selling intoxicating liquors upon the grounds. After this injunction was served the sublessee ceased to use the premises, and brought an action to recover for injury to his business on the theory of an eviction, and his right to recover was denied. The court said that clearly he could not recover the whole amount, for he had used the premises nearly half the time granted by the lease; that if the lessee had broken his covenant or agreement for quiet enjoyment with the sublessee, or if the latter had been evicted by paramount title, the declaration should have been special, and the measure of the damages would have been the value of the use of the land less the rent.

In McDowell v. Hyman (1897) 117 Cal. 67, 48 Pac. 984, it is held that a tenant is entitled to recover damages from the landlord for disturbance of her possession of an upper floor of a building, by the acts of the landlord in repairing the lower floors, interfering thereby with the use by the lessee of the upper floor for the business in which she was engaged, in cutting off the water supply, injuring the furniture by dust and lime, and interfering with the ingress and egress to this floor. The court said: "The landlords, as the owners of the second floor, had an undoubted right to repair, alter, and improve that portion of their premises, but in so doing they were bound by the implied agreement to so conduct their operations as not to dispossess, or render uninhabitable the portion of the building they had demised to others, and, if they failed in this duty, they were liable to their tenant, irrespective of the question of negligence. As against third parties, they could take down the outer or inner walls of the building at will, subject only to such negligence and consequent injury as might render them liable to parties injured thereby; but as against a tenant they could not do the same thing, even in the most careful manner, if the result destroyed the enjoyment of such tenant."

A lessee of premises a portion of which was then under lease, who is required to pay damages to the prior lessee for going upon this portion of the premises, is entitled to recoup such damages against the landlord, in an action by the latter to recover the rent. McAlester v. Landers (1886) 70 Cal. 79, 11 Pac. 505.

In Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wood (1901) 189 Ill. 352, 59 N. E. 619, it is held that a lessee can recover damages of the lessor due to the breach of a provision in a lease, by which a railroad company, in leasing land for a hotel, agreed to stop its trains so that the passengers might patronize this hotel.

It has been held that, where the landlord does not remove his goods from the leased premises, the tenant may remove them and hold the landlord for the expense thus caused.

Baumgardner v. Consolidated Copying Co. (1892) 44 Ill. App. 74.

In Whitcomb v. Brant (1908) 76 N. J. L. 201, 68 Atl. 1102, on subsequent appeal in (1908) 76 N. J. L. 246, 69 Atl. 1086, it is held that where the lessor wrongfully refused to consent to proposed improvements by the lessee, which were provided for in the lease, this constituted a breach of contract which conferred upon the lessee a right of action for damages.

But the lessee cannot base an eviction upon the refusal of the lessor to permit the reconstruction of an oven in the rear of the building, even though it is claimed that this oven is essential for the proper operation of the only business which can be run in the leased premises. Carey v. Tremont (1912) 171 Ill. App. 604.

In Whitcomb v. Brant (1908) 76 N. J. L. 201, 68 Atl. 1102, the lease contained a provision that the lessee might make alterations and improvements to the premises subject to the approval of the plans by the lessor, who refused his consent to proposed improvements by the lessee, which the latter claimed were necessary in order for him to use the premises for a restaurant, this being the purpose for which it was leased; it was held that the lessor's refusal to consent did not entitle the lessee to remain in possession and enjoy the premises without payment of any rent, but that, if this refusal constituted a breach, it merely conferred a right of action for damages against the lessor.

In McAlester v. Landers (1886) 70 Cal. 79, 11 Pac. 505, the landlord leased premises a portion of which he had already leased to another, and the second lessee was held liable in damages for going upon this portion of the leased premises. He subsequently refused to pay further rent to the landlord until it offset the amount of the damages which he had been required to pay, and, in an action by the landlord to recover the accrued rental, it was held that the tenant was entitled to offset against the rent, the amount that he had been compelled to pay in damages. A. G. S.

EDGELEY CO-OPERATIVE GRAIN COMPANY, Respt.,
v.

S. H. SPITZER, Appt.

North Dakota Supreme Court — October 17, 1921.

(— N. D. —, 184 N. W. 880.)

Gaming — sale for future delivery — hedge.

1. The sale by a producer for future delivery of his prospective crop at the market price at the time of contract, in order to realize the price for his crop when mature, is a hedge and is not illegal as a gambling transaction, although, because of crop failure, grain must be purchased to fill the contract or a loss settled in cash.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1422.]

— hedging operation.

2. In an action brought to recover on a promissory note in the sum of $4,000, the defense of no consideration was pleaded and relied on. In that connection it was claimed the note was given for losses sustained in a gambling transaction, to wit, the buying and selling of grain options. The evidence shows that the loss was occasioned by what is termed a "hedging" transaction, conducted by the Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company (of which the plaintiff is the successor, and now the owner of the note) for the defendant and at his request.

[See 6 R. C. L. 780 et seq.; 12 R. C. L. 752; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 204.]

Appeal — absence of error.

3. At the close of the testimony the court directed a verdict in plaintiff's favor, and it is held, for reasons stated in the opinion, that in this there was no error.

Headnotes 1-3 by GRACE, Ch. J.

New trial — denial — unnecessary.

4. Defendant claims there is conflicting testimony with reference to the proper application of a certain sum of money, in amount $1,710, which he claims he ordered to be applied on the note. The judgment has been directed to be modified, plaintiff having consented, so that any benefit he would have received if the money had been applied on the note, instead of otherwise, viz., on an account, was secured to him, and a new trial is therefore unnecessary. For reasons stated in the opinion, nothing would be gained by a new trial.

[See 2 R. C. L. 286.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for La Moure County (Graham, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. John W. Carr, for appellant:

The question of whether or not the note was given in payment of a gambling transaction, and therefore uncollectable, should have been submitted to the jury.

John Miller Co. v. Klovstad, 14 N. D. 435, 105 N. W. 164; Dows v. Glaspel, 4 N. D. 251, 60 N. W. 60; Beidler & R. Lumber Co. v. Coe Commission Co. 13 N. D. 639, 102 N. W. 880; Mohr v. Miesen, 47 Minn. 228, 49 N. W. 862; Embrey v. Jemison, 131 U. S. 338, 23 L. ed. 175, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 776.

The question of whether the creditor applied a payment otherwise than as directed by the debtor is one for the jury.

Root v. Kelley, 39 Misc. 530, 80 N. Y. Supp. 482; 30 Cyc. 1296.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Lynch, for respondent:

The court did not err in directing a verdict for the plaintiff on all the issues of the case.

Buchanan Elevator Co. v. Lees, 37 N. D. 27, 163 N. W. 264; John Miller Co. v. Klovstad, 14 N. D. 435, 105 N. W. 164; Bibb v. Allen, 149 U. S. 481, 37 L. ed. 819, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 950; Clews v. Jamieson, 182 U. S. 461, 45 L. ed. 1183, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 845; Board of Trade v. Christie Grain & Stock Co. 198 U. S. 236, 49 L. ed. 1031, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 637; Van Dusen-Harrington Co. v. Jungeblut, 75 Minn. 298, 74 Am. St. Rep. 463, 77 N. W. 970; Wall v. Schneider, 59 Wis. 352, 48 Am. Rep. 520, 18 N. W. 443; Hill v. Levy, 2 N. B. N. Rep. 180, 98 Fed. 94; Parker v. Moore, 125 Fed. 807; Ponder v. Jerome Hill Cotton Co. 40 C. C. A. 416, 100 Fed. 373.

The contracts were in accordance with the customs and usage of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, and there was no evidence that delivery could not be legally exacted in any of the transactions involved.

Barnes v. Smith, 159 Mass. 344, 84 N. E. 403; Board of Trade v. L. A. Kinsey, 130 Fed. 507, 64 C. C. A. 669, 69 L.R.A. 59; John Miller Co. v. Klovstad, 14 N. D. 435, 105 N. W. 164; Board of Trade v. Christie Grain & Stock Co. 198 U. S. 236, 49 L. ed. 1031, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 637.

If an order to sell for future delivery is a gambling deal merely because the seller contemplates that he will later on buy the grain to fill the order, then "hedging" is impossible, and practically every trade on all the boards of trade in the country is illegal.

Ponder v. Jerome Hill Cotton Co. supra; Clews v. Jamieson, 182 U. S. 461, 45 L. ed. 1183, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 845.

The burden of proof is upon the defendant to prove that the contracts were illegal. The law presumes that they are legitimate transactions.

John Miller Co. v. Klovstad, 14 N. D. 435, 105 N. W. 164; Board of Trade v. Christie Grain & Stock Co. 198 U. S. 236, 49 L. ed. 1031, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 637; Clews v. Jamieson, 182 U. S. 461, 45 L. ed. 1183, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 845; Bibb v. Allen, 149 U. S. 481, 37 L. ed. 819, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 950.

Grace, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover on a promissory note in the sum of $4,000, with interest thereon from the 20th day of April, 1917, to date of maturity, at the rate of 7 per cent per annum until due, and 10 per cent per annum thereafter. The issues of fact were presented to a jury.

At the close of the testimony the court directed a verdict in plaintiff's favor for the amount of the note and interest. Judgment was entered on the verdict, and this appeal is from the judgment.

The complaint states a cause of action in the ordinary form on a promissory note. The answer admits the execution and delivery of the note to the payee. It denies that it was executed or delivered for value received or any legal consideration, and further denies any indebtedness to the plaintiff in any sum whatsoever. In the answer it is further alleged that the sole and only consideration for the execution and delivery of said note by defendant was in substance as follows: That during the months of March and April, 1917, and subsequently thereto, this defendant, acting through the said Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company, as his agent, engaged in the purchase and sale of grain options and in gambling and speculating upon the prices of grain upon various boards of trade, selected by said Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company, and during said periods this defendant, acting through said Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company, as his agent, bought and sold grain options, solely as gambling and speculative operations, it being at all times fully understood by the said Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company, by this defendant, and by all others connected with said transactions, that said transactions were purely and solely gambling and speculative operations; and it was never understood by said Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company, or by this defendant, or by anyone else connected therewith, that any actual grain was to be bought or sold, received or delivered, by defendant. And defendant alleges that neither this defendant nor Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company, nor any other party connected with the transaction mentioned above, actually intended that there should be any actual transfer, delivery, or receipt of the commodities covered by said options.

The answer is of too great length to be set out in full. The principal defense set forth in the answer is that the entire transaction with reference to the sale and purchase of 10,000 bushels of rye, the facts in reference to which will hereafter be set forth, was one of speculation and gambling. The defendant pleads a counterclaim in the sum of $1,800, the alleged value of the number of bushels of rye delivered by him to the Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company in the fall of 1917, and further claims that it agreed to give credit on the note for that amount, which it failed to do. A reply was interposed to the answer, averring payment to defendant of the amount of the actual rye delivered in the fall of 1917.

The material facts in the case are substantially as follows: The price of rye in March, 1917, was about $1.49 per bushel. At that time Ernest Steel was the agent of the Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company at Edgeley, North Dakota. During the month of March, and until April 20, 1917, the Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company sold in the manner hereinafter described for defendant 10,000 bushels of rye at the market price of about $1.49 per bushel. Between the time when defendant had, through the said elevator company, sold the rye, and the 20th day of April, 1917, rye on the market had advanced in price to such an extent that a loss of about $4,000 had occurred on the transaction, and at that time for this amount the note in suit was taken. After the giving of the note, rye still continued to advance. The defendant in the month of July, 1917, through the elevator company, purchased 10,000 bushels of rye at $2.05 per bushel. The loss on the entire transaction up to the time of the purchase last mentioned was approximately $5,505.

The defendant owns and operates a farm of about 1,000 acres in the vicinity of Edgeley. He also owns about 1,000 acres of land in Canada. Formerly he was engaged in the real estate business and had also seven years' experience as a grain buyer. He was a stockholder in the Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company, which was later reorganized into the Edgeley Co-operative Grain Company, now the owner and holder of the note in suit.

In the fall of 1916, he sowed 800 acres of winter rye on his La Moure county, North Dakota, farm. In the spring of 1917 he endeavored to contract with the Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company his prospective rye crop, which he estimated at about 12,000 bushels. Steel, the agent of the said elevator company, stated that he could not at that time contract to buy the rye, but that it might be handled as a "hedge."

The defendant desired to sell September rye. There were then no dealings in September rye, and the commission firm informed said elevator company to this effect. Steel again took the matter up with the commission firm, and they finally suggested that what is termed a trial sale for July might be undertaken, and, if that went through, the sale could be later transferred to September, when defendant could make actual delivery of the rye. Steel informed the defendant of this, and such a sale was made at $1.49 per bushel. At this time he authorized the sale of 1,000 bushels, later of 4,000, and later still of 5,000 bushels, and sales thus authorized were made.

In the fall of 1917, the defendant delivered to the Pomona Valley Farmers' Elevator Company approximately 2,513 bushels of rye. On the 20th day of October, 1917, this was sold at $1.67 per bushel, amounting to a total of $4,196.85. Prior to the time the defendant delivered to the elevator company the above-mentioned number of bushels of actual rye, he agreed with it that it should pay him $1 per bushel for each bushel of rye hauled to the elevator, as he claimed it was necessary for him to have this amount to pay the threshing expenses, etc., the balance of the selling price of the rye so delivered to be applied on the loss to which reference has heretofore been made. The elevator company did make certain advances to the defendant, which, with interest, together with a note to the Nortonville Bank of $150, aggregated $2,486.85. This amount, deducted from the $4,196.85, the selling price of the actual rye, left remaining $1,710, $1,505 of which was indorsed by the elevator company on the loss account which had occurred from the time of the execution and delivery of the note of $4,000 until the transaction was finally closed in July by the purchasing on the market of the 10,000 bushels. The remaining $205 was indorsed by the elevator company on the note.

The defendant's testimony in substance is that he directed the $1,710 to be applied upon the $4,000 note, while Steel testified in substance that it was to be applied first upon the loss account due to the rye transaction, and the balance on the note. The defendant testified in substance that he gave the plaintiff no direction to apply any of the money on the loss account, and that he knew of no charge or account against him except that represented by the note.

Defendant attempts to show that the loss at the date of execution and delivery of the note was $3,000, while the testimony of Steel is that the losses equal the amount of the note. The testimony of each shows that the total loss was $5,505, $25 of which was commission charged by the Tenney Company.

The testimony of the defendant is to the effect that the whole rye transaction except where the actual rye was delivered was a speculation. It will serve no useful purpose to set forth any of the evidence in detail. There is only one assignment of error, which may be divided into two important contentions:

(1) That the court erred in granting plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict made at the close of the trial, and in not submitting the issues to the jury.

Gambling—hedging
operation.

(2) That there was a direct conflict in the evidence on a number of material issues, and for this reason it is claimed that the facts of the case should have been submitted to the jury for determination. It is the defendant's contention that the entire transaction with reference to the 10,000 bushels of rye was purely a gambling transaction, and that for this reason there was no consideration for the note. His contention in this regard is entirely without merit. The testimony clearly shows that he expected that, if his rye crop was normal, he would have about 12,000 bushels. At the time of the transaction rye was about $1.49 per bushel. The defendant expected rye to be a lesser price in the fall, when the rye crop would be ready for sale; hence he desired to contract the sale of it. About the time the transaction took place, the elevator company declined to contract for purchase of the prospective crop of rye.

The elevator company would, however, undertake to handle the transaction as a "hedge." The term "hedge" is well understood in connection with transactions on the grain market, and that term needs no further elucidation. If the transaction could be handled as a hedge, it would result in procuring for the defendant a price for his prospective crop of rye, at the time of marketing thereof, of not less than the amount for which the 10,000 bushels were sold on the market by the elevator company for defendant. In other words, the 10,000 bushels would represent a sale of defendant's prospective crop of rye which was then in existence, but which had yet not matured. When consummated, the transaction would be what is denominated a "hedge."

The elevator company was at all times acting for the defendant in the hedging transactions. Defendant had the prospective crop of rye which, if normal, would exceed the number of bushels sold on the market for him by the elevator company, and which, we think, the record clearly shows was intended to be delivered to fulfil the contract of the sale of the 10,000 bushels above referred to. If this be true, and we think it is, the transaction was not a gambling one, but purely a hedging transaction, which is not unlawful, and does not partake of the nature of gambling.

—sale for future delivery—
hedge.

It is not difficult to perceive that defendant authorized the sale of the 10,000 bushels so that he would be assured of a good price for his crop of rye when it was ready to market, and that he expected to have more than that amount of actual rye at the maturity of his crop. He evidently expected that rye would be a great deal lower in price at marketing time than it was in March, the time of the transaction, and by selling the 10,000 bushels, and by being able to transfer the same on the market from July to September, the time would then have arrived when he could deliver an amount of rye equal to that which he had sold; and if at the time of the delivery the market price of rye was only $.75 per bushel, it is not difficult to see that he would have gained about $.75 per bushel by the transaction. But, unfortunately for defendant, and contrary to his expectations, rye was not a lower price at the time he expected to market same, but continued to advance over the price for which he had sold the 10,000 bushels until it reached $2.05 per bushel, when defendant desired, no doubt, to terminate the loss, and procured the elevator company to purchase 10,000 bushels on the market, at which time his loss had reached $5,505. His prospective crop of rye did not materialize as he expected, and hence he could not deliver a sufficient number of bushels to cover the sale of the 10,000 bushels which he had made, and hence the only thing he could do to stop his loss was to buy rye in amount equivalent to the number of bushels which he sold. This he did.

It must also be noticed that the elevator company never received any benefit or profit from the transaction, and, as the transaction was handled, there was no way in which it could make a profit on it. Certainly it is unbelievable that it would entail a great loss on itself without expectation or any possibility of profit to it. It is clear that it was handling the matter for the defendant as a "hedge," and not otherwise.

Other transactions of the defendant on the grain market which occurred prior to the one in question, and which are claimed to have been speculation, need no consideration here, as they have no bearing on the issues here involved.

As to defendant's second contention that there was a conflict of evidence on material issues which should have been submitted to a jury, it is only necessary to say that such conflict, if any, related only to the alleged direction of defendant to the elevator company relative to the application of a portion of the money received for the rye actually delivered to the elevator company. A certain amount of this money the elevator company applied upon defendant's account with it, and the balance upon the note as above stated. The defendant's contention is that he directed such money to be applied upon the note, and because the issues in this regard were not submitted to the jury, he contends there should be a new trial. Assuming, however, that the defendant is correct in his contention, and assuming further that this is the only relief a new trial would give defendant, and we think this assumption is true, we are clearly of the opinion that, in the circumstances of this case, that would not be sufficient reason for granting a new trial. Instead thereof, this court could, with consent of plaintiff, order the judgment modified so that the defendant would obtain benefit equal to that which he claims he would have received had the money been indorsed on the note instead of applied to the payment of the account.

The note bore 7 per cent interest before and 10 per cent after maturity. The account drew the legal rate of 6 per cent per annum. And assuming, but not deciding, that defendant directed the $1,710, the balance of the price of rye sold to the elevator company, after deducting the amount it advanced him for expenses to which reference heretofore has been made, to be applied on the note, it is clear that he would be entitled only to a credit of the difference between the interest at the rate the note bore, and interest at the legal rate on the amount paid since the date of payment, and if the judgment is so modified there would be no issue remaining for a new trial. The plaintiff, on oral argument, consented that this modification might be made. Plainly, under the evidence the defendant is entitled to no other relief. The judgment is therefore directed to be modified as above denial—indicated, and so unnecessary. modified it is affirmed. Respondent is entitled to his costs and disbursements on appeal.

Bronson, Birdzell, and Robinson, JJ., concur.

Christianson, J., concurring:

I agree with Mr. Chief Justice Grace that the only question for the jury in this case was whether the defendant directed the plaintiff to apply the $1,710 upon the note. Upon all other issues of fact there was no conflict in the evidence, and no room for different conclusions to be drawn by reasonable men. Furthermore the evidence was such that it is manifest that there could be no different result upon another trial.

In other words the disposition made of the case in the opinion prepared by the chief justice is the most favorable to the defendant that could possibly be made upon another trial. And upon the oral argument plaintiff's counsel stated that, in event this court should hold that the question as to the proper application of the $1,710 was one for, and should not have been withdrawn from, the jury, that then the plaintiff, in order to terminate the litigation, would and did consent that the issue might be determined against it, and the judgment modified accordingly by this court. Hence I concur in the disposition made of this cause in the opinion written by the chief justice.

ANNOTATION.

Nature and validity of "hedging" transactions on the commodity market.

- I. Nature, 1422.
- II. Validity, 1424.

I. Nature.

"Hedging" and "hedging" contracts have been defined and explained in several cases.

Perhaps the most complete and elaborate explanation is the following, contained in the report of the master which forms part of the statement of facts in Board of Trade v. L. A. Kinsey

Co. (1904) 69 L.R.A. 59, 64 C. C. A. 669, 130 Fed. 507, affirmed in (1905) 198 U. S. 236, 49 L. ed. 1031, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 637: "The principals who are engaged in hedging transactions are, generally speaking, either grain merchants, millers, or manufacturers of grain products. The method of such principals is this: When they have bought grain in the country, or in city warehouses, which they propose to hold for future sales to domestic or foreign purchasers, they at once sell in the pits of the complainant association an equal amount of grain; or, on the other hand, if they have sold to domestic or foreign purchasers grain or grain products for future delivery, they at once buy in the pits of the complainant association an equal amount of grain for future delivery at times corresponding with the times of their selling contracts. And thus, when they have contracts of purchase, they have contracts of sale, for future delivery in the pits, practically even with their purchases; and, if they have contracts of sale with domestic or foreign purchasers, they have contracts of purchase, for future delivery in the pits, practically even with such contracts of sale. The object of such hedging is to insure against loss by fluctuation in the market in the commodity which the principal is carrying, or which he has sold in advance of purchase and manufacture upon a time contract. A hedge must always be against a cash commodity. . . . The system of 'hedging' in the pits has a commercial influence which is favorable both to the interest of the producer and the consumer, in that the large cash grain houses, which conduct transactions in complainant's exchange hall, by reason of the risk to them from market fluctuations being decreased through 'hedges,' are able to take, and do take, a smaller margin of profit, and thus they pay to the producer a higher price and sell to the consumer at a lower price. The person taking the side of such hedging contract opposite of that to such grain house is the person who assumes the risk."

In Board of Trade v. Christie Grain & Stock Co. (1905) 198 U. S. 236, 49 L. ed. 1031, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 637, the court said: "Hedging . . . is a means by which collectors and exporters of grain or other products, and manufacturers who make contracts in advance for the sale of their goods, secure themselves against the fluctuations of the market by counter contracts for the purchase or sale, as the case may be, of an equal quantity of the product, or of the material of manufacture. It is none the less a serious business contract for a legitimate and useful purpose that it may be offset before the time of delivery in case delivery should not be needed or desired."

And this statement is quoted and apparently approved in Cleage v. Laidley (1906) 79 C. C. A. 284, 149 Fed. 346, and in Nash-Wright Co. v. Wright (1910) 156 Ill. App. 243, although the transactions which the courts were then considering were not "hedges."

In MacKay Teleg.-Cable Co. v. Bain (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 163 S. W. 98, the court said: "By 'hedging' contracts, as we understand them, is meant that, where a party buys a given number of bales of cotton at the price current on the date of purchase, and sells an equal number of bales for future delivery, or 'futures,' he thereby protects himself against loss due to fluctuation in the market; for if the price of cotton goes down he gains on futures, and if prices advance he loses on futures, but, in either event, he is secure in the profits he has gained on the price of the cotton at the time he purchased it. In common parlance, he sells futures to hedge against loss in the purchase of spots."

And in Bolting v. Schoener (1920) 144 Minn. 425, 175 N. W. 901, "hedging" as applied to grain transactions is explained as follows: "The price of grain varies from day to day, and the country buyer who pays the market price at the time he receives the grain stands to lose if the price should fall before the grain arrives at the place where he sells it. To guard against such loss a practice has grown up known as 'hedging.' Under this practice, in theory at least, when a buyer purchases grain in the country he also sells on the board of trade, for future delivery, a sufficient quantity to cover such purchase, so that whether the price goes up or down his gain on one transaction will offset his loss on the other. As sales for future delivery in the terminal markets are made for delivery on the last day of either May, July, September, or December, a country buyer, who is 'hedging,' usually sells his grain when it arrives at the terminal market and then closes his previous sale for future delivery by buying back an equal quantity on the board of trade. One board of trade transaction thus cancels the other, and the gain or loss balances approximately the loss or gain on the actual grain bought, shipped, and sold, leaving the dealer his regular profit."

In John Miller Co. v. Klovstad (1905) 14 N. D. 435, 105 N. W. 164, the court, in discussing an agreement between a broker and the proprietor of a grain elevator by which the former was to loan the latter funds with which to purchase grain to be shipped to the broker and by him sold on commission, said: "It was talked over and understood that the speculative feature of the business, by reason of fluctuations of the market, should be obviated by a system of 'hedging,' which means that the defendant would, for all grain purchased by him, sell, or, in other words, obtain a contract through his said brokers to sell, a like amount to arrive or for future delivery. Selling to arrive and selling for future delivery have a well-defined meaning upon the board of trade and in the business world; the former expression meaning that the vendor has fourteen days in which to make delivery of the warehouse receipts, and the latter expression meaning that he has any day during some specified month in the future in which to make such delivery. This system of 'hedging' eliminates the risk of loss which otherwise might occur by a decline in the market price during the time necessarily consumed in transporting the grain to market. Of course, in order to make the 'hedge' perfect, the grain sold to arrive or for future delivery should at all times just equal the amount of grain purchased by defendant and unsold. As soon as the grain shipped arrives at its destination and is sold, the 'hedge' must be taken down; or, in other words, an equal amount of grain must be purchased for delivery at the same time as the grain which was sold for such future delivery is to be delivered, and thus one is made to balance or offset the other. Such 'hedging' transactions are consummated through the broker upon the board of trade, upon instructions from the principal; and, when the shipment of grain against which there is a 'hedge' arrives and is sold, the custom, under the undisputed evidence, is for the broker to remove the 'hedge' if the shipment is not accompanied with instructions to the contrary; but, if the shipment is accompanied with instructions to sell on arrival, such instructions, under the universal custom, are equivalent to specific instructions to the broker not to apply such shipment on the outstanding sales for future delivery."

II. Validity.

"Hedging" transactions, as thus defined, have been sanctioned by the courts and their validity upheld or assumed in a number of cases, as against the objection that they are gambling transactions. See the following cases: Board of Trade v. Christie Grain & Stock Co. (1905) 198 U. S. 249, 49 L. ed. 1031, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 637; L. A. Kinsey Co. v. Board of Trade (1905) 198 U. S. 236, 49 L. ed. 1031, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 637, affirming (1904) 69 L.R.A. 59, 64 C. C. A. 669, 130 Fed. 507; Cleage v. Laidley (1906) 79 C. C. A. 284, 149 Fed. 352; Sampson v. Camperdown Cotton Mills (1897) 82 Fed. 833; Medlin Mill. Co. v. Moffatt Commission Co. (1915) 218 Fed. 686; Lamson Bros. & Co. v. Turner (1921) 277 Fed. 680; Nash-Wright Co. v. Wright (1910) 156 Ill. App. 243; State v. Clayton (1905) 138 N. C. 732, 50 S. E. 866; John Miller Co. v. Klovstad (1905) 14 N. D. 435, 105 N. W. 164; MacKay Teleg.-Cable Co. v. Bain (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 163 S. W. 98. And see the reported case (EDGELEY CO-OP. GRAIN CO. v. SPITZER, ante, 1417.)

Apparently, however, the courts do not mean to intimate that one may insure or protect an actual business transaction against fluctuations in the market by transactions in futures which do not measure up to the rule of the particular jurisdiction as to intention as regards delivery, as distinguished from settlement of price differences; but merely that the fact that the transactions in futures were engaged in for the purpose of insurance and protection, rather than speculation, is a circumstance of considerable significance as tending to show that the parties—or one of them, if his intention alone would satisfy the local criterion—entertained the intention as to delivery essential to the validity of future transactions. The point is illustrated by State v. Clayton (1905) 138 N. C. 732, 50 S. E. 866, where the court, discussing a statute which condemns transactions in futures which are to be settled merely on the basis of price differences, without intention to deliver or accept the commodity, said that when a purchase for future delivery upon margin is by manufacturers or wholesale merchants of the necessary commodities required in the ordinary course of their business, it is more reasonable to believe that such purchases are bona fide, and in such cases and as to such necessary articles the purchase upon margin is not made prima facie evidence of a gambling contract; but in the case at bar, as the court said, it was relieved from any difficulty as to the nature of the transaction by the finding in the special verdict that there was no intention to require actual delivery, but, on the contrary, an agreement that on a future date the loser should pay the winning party the difference between the market price on that day and the contract price; and the court accordingly upheld a conviction of a wholesale merchant for purchasing pork for future delivery upon a margin, although the purchase was to protect his contract with customers who had purchased pork from him for actual delivery at a future date; in other words, as the court said, “defendant had sold pork in the ordinary course of his business, to customers, to be delivered at future dates, and, to protect himself from loss by a rise in the price of such pork before the delivery dates, he had bought 5,000 pounds of pork on margin.” The court said in effect that in view of the special finding the contract was a gambling contract, and the statute does not exempt the defendant from punishment therefor because he is a wholesale merchant and deals in such commodities in his ordinary business.

20 A.L.R.—90.

So, in John Miller Co. v. Klovstad (1905) 14 N. D. 435, 105 N. W. 164, infra, the court said that if there was no intention to deliver actual grain on “hedges,” but they were intended to be merely speculative and gambling transactions, they would be so invalid as not to support an action by the broker against the principal for losses resulting therefrom.

In Board of Trade v. Christie Grain & Stock Co. (1905) 198 U. S. 236, 49 L. ed. 1031, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 637, supra, Justice Holmes, in vindicating the right of the Chicago Board of Trade to the protection of its quotations, speaks, by way of illustration, of “hedging” as “a serious business contract for a legitimate and useful purpose.” And in Board of Trade v. L. A. Kinsey Co. (involving the same question as in the Christie Case and affirmed by the same opinion of the supreme court) the circuit court of appeals said: “If we felt called upon by the necessities of this decision to give a definite opinion of hedging, the record might well lead us to find that hedging is a manufacturer’s or merchant’s insurance against price fluctuation of materials, and no more damnable than insurances of property and life, which in one sense are wagers that the property will not be destroyed during the term, and that the life will not fail in less than the expectancy in the actuaries’ tables.”

In Lamson Bros. & Co. v. Turner (1921) 277 Fed. 680, holding that the transactions in futures there involved were not gambling transactions according to the rule in Illinois, by the law of which they were governed, the court, in reply to the argument that the contracts of most of the customers of the plaintiff were speculative and resulted in no deliveries, said what others intended, and what others did, does not determine the bankrupt’s intention, and added: “As against these circumstances are the facts that the bankrupt was a milling company, known to plaintiff to be a dealer and shipper of grain; that hedging by such dealers is a common and lawful practice."

In Medlin Mill. Co. v. Moffatt Commission Co. (1915) 218 Fed. 686, an action by a milling corporation to recover against brokers for funds which it alleged had been diverted by its officers, with the collusion of the defendants, for speculation on the rise and fall of future prices of grain, the court said: "Of course, grain may be bought in good faith for future delivery; and if so bought in good faith, hedging will be permitted to secure those who make contracts in advance against the fluctuations of the market even though it be expected that such purchases will be satisfied by set-off, instead of the actual delivery of the grain. . . . The Medlin Mill Company had the undoubted right to buy grain for future delivery, and to hedge such bona fide contracts when necessary to protect itself against the fluctuations of the market. It had no right under its charter to gamble in futures, as that term is used and understood in this discussion."

MacKay Teleg.-Cable Co. v. Bain (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 163 S. W. 98, was an action for damages from an alleged erroneous transmission of a telegraphic message, in which it was urged as a defense that the transactions sought to be furthered and concluded by the message were illegal gambling transactions. The facts and the conclusion of the court are set forth in the opinion as follows: "The plaintiffs were engaged in buying and selling cotton in Houston, Texas. Cunningham & Henshaw were cotton buyers, doing business in Liverpool, England, and had an agent and representative in Dallas, Texas. Frequently plaintiffs, after they had bought cotton, would sell the same to Cunningham & Henshaw through their Dallas agent. The price of cotton thus sold by plaintiffs was fixed by the price at which futures could be sold in Liverpool, with an agreed number of cents per 100 pounds added, and the amount thus arrived at would be the price Cunningham & Henshaw would pay plaintiffs. It was usual, when plaintiffs had on hand a number of bales of cotton which they desired to sell to Cunningham & Henshaw, to report by telegraph the number of bales to be sold; and if they desired the price to be then fixed they would add in the message, 'Cover and report early.' Upon receipt of such a telegram, the Dallas agent of Cunningham & Henshaw would, by cablegram, sell in Liverpool an equal number of bales, and the price for which the futures were sold, with certain points added, would fix the price. This character of transaction is what is generally known as 'hedging.' . . . It appears from the evidence that on September 22, 1911, plaintiffs had on hand 800 bales of cotton, which they desired to sell to Cunningham & Henshaw in accordance with the existing agreement, and, in pursuance thereof, plaintiffs on said day delivered to the defendant Telegraph-Cable Company, at its office in the city of Houston, for transmission and delivery to said Cunningham & Henshaw at their Dallas office, a message in the following language: 'Bought 800 bales, cover and report early.' This message was changed in transmission, so that when it was delivered to the addressee it read as follows: 'Bought 800 bales, come and report early.' . . . Appellant contends that, as the dealings in futures where there is no intention of making actual delivery are against public policy and illegal, one who negligently prevents the consummation of such illegal act cannot be held liable for any damages that may result from the failure of the illegal transaction to result in profit. . . . Articles 536 and 539 of the Penal Code prohibit the dealing in futures in this state; and under this statute a purchase of cotton to be delivered in future, when it was not the bona fide intention of the purchaser at the time of the transaction that the cotton should be delivered, is expressly prohibited. But it is only to such transactions as are to be performed within this state that the statute applies; for, by article 543, Penal Code, it is expressly provided that it may be shown in defense of any prosecution for violation of this law that the transaction out of which such prosecution arose was a hedging contract between the parties in this state and a party or parties without this state. . . . These ‘hedging’ contracts are not permitted by law to be made within this state, but are excepted by article 543 where the transaction is between a party in this state and a party without this state; hence, as we construe the law, it was not illegal for Cunningham & Henshaw, doing business in this state, to hedge against loss on cotton bought by them in this state by the sale of futures in Liverpool; and, this being true, the act of appellees in advising them by telegram to cover was not in furtherance of a transaction denounced by our laws. It cannot be said to be in violation of public policy, because the legislature has declared the public policy of this state in that regard by expressly exempting from prosecution parties engaged in such transactions.”

In John Miller Co. v. Klovstad (1905) 14 N. D. 435, 105 N. W. 164, upholding the validity of a hedging transaction, the court said: “The argument . . . that the parties in fact settled such ‘hedge’ contracts by purchasing a like amount of grain for December delivery and making one contract offset the other, instead of producing the actual wheat, is unsound. . . . The test is, Did the parties have the legal right to demand and receive or deliver the actual wheat, or did they contemplate and agree that no actual wheat should be delivered? What the parties may have done, or what they may have contemplated doing, in the matter of delivery of actual grain, is not controlling, but, rather, what they believed and contemplated they had a legal right to do under the contract in this regard is the test. Any other rule would greatly hamper the millions of legitimate transactions taking place every week in the business world, and would do away with the great convenience of the clearing houses. The essence of a gambling transaction is that the particular transaction shall contemplate no delivery, without reference to the making of any other deal. If the sales were to be mere bets on the market price, there was no occasion for a counter transaction, but all that would remain to be done would be for the parties to settle according to the price at the time specified in the contract. If an order to sell for future delivery is a gambling deal merely because the seller contemplates that he will later on buy the grain to fill the order, then ‘hedging’ is impossible, and practically every trade on all the boards of trade in the country is illegal.”

And in Sampson v. Camperdown Cotton Mills (1897) 82 Fed. 833, it was held that a series of transactions by which a cotton manufacturing company purchased cotton futures with the intention of disposing of them as spot cotton was purchased from time to time for use in the mill, the purpose being to fix the cost of the cotton as a basis of the price for advance sales of the finished goods, were valid so as to support a mortgage given to secure moneys borrowed for the purpose of carrying on such transactions, provided they were entered into bona fide and were not a mere cover for speculation in the rise and fall of cotton on the exchange, with an intent to settle by payment of differences.

“Hedging” is not made invalid by the mere fact that the party may contemplate closing his “hedge” by offset instead of by actual receipt on delivery of the commodity itself. Thus, in State v. Clayton (1905) 138 N. C. 732, 50 S. E. 866, supra, the court held that when “a person engaged in business buys or sells ‘futures’ with a view not to take, but to avoid, risks in his business by reason of possible fluctuations in the commodities which he must need in the ordinary course of that business, and he retains bona fide the right to call for delivery, and there is no intention not to exact delivery, this is a valid contract, though he may think it probable that he will not need to call for delivery if it shall turn out (as he may expect) that he can buy these commodities from time to time nearer home, and thus save freight, being secured against loss by his purchase of futures. The difference is that in this last case the party will need actual delivery from someone, of the very articles and quantity bought at 'futures' for the ordinary purposes of his business, that there is, therefore, no gambling feature in the dealing, and though he may expect, indeed think it probable, that he may secure the actual delivery from time to time from others, there is no intention that he will not, in any event, call for delivery upon his purchase of 'futures;' but, on the contrary, there is the positive intention to call for such delivery if he cannot get the articles elsewhere, and more advantageously, as needed."

In one opinion, at least (Board of Trade v. O'Dell Commission (1902) 115 Fed. 574, where the application of a board of trade for an injunction to restrain the use of its quotations was denied on the ground that the transactions on the board were themselves in the nature of bucket-shop operations), the fact that transactions are hedging transactions seems to be considered as tending to characterize them as gambling transactions rather than the contrary. Thus, the court said with reference to such transactions, and to the knowledge of the president of the board of trade in respect thereto: "And he knows that as a rule the 'hedging' deal is made by one who at the time has the commodity on hand, and who makes the deal to cover possible losses, and the expense of carrying and delivering the commodity, when it is actually sold, whether at home or abroad, and who settles the pretended sale or deal on the exchange by a pretended purchase or deal there, and the payment or receipt of the difference between the prices. The 'hedging' deal usually is an appeal to chance for indemnity against the expenses and possible losses from an actual transaction."

But the effect of the O'Dell Case is destroyed by the later cases of Board of Trade v. Christie Grain & Stock Co. (1905) 198 U. S. 236, 49 L. ed. 1031, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 637; L. A. Kinsey Co.

v. Board of Trade (1905) 198 U. S. 236, 49 L. ed. 1031, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 637, affirming (1904) 69 L.R.A. 59, 64 C. C. A. 669, 130 Fed. 507, which involved similar questions.

In Ascher v. Moyse (1911) 101 Miss. 36, 57 So. 299, in reply to the contention that the proviso exempting transactions by mail or wire between persons within and without the state, without a local intermediary, from the condemnation of dealings in futures when the intention is to settle by receiving or paying differences, was for the protection and in the interest of the local spot cotton buyer who protects his sales and purchases by transaction upon the future board, the court said: "We confess that we see very little force in this suggestion. We fail to appreciate the spirit which encourages the doing of an act in one, and prohibits it in another, class of persons. The purpose was to suppress the traffic as to all persons, to shut out entirely the evil; and the more reasonable construction to place upon this portion of the act is to say that it was inserted by the legislature upon the erroneous idea that the insertion of such a provision was necessary to preserve the constitutionality of the act."

In Bolfing v. Schoener (1920) 144 Minn. 425, 175 N. W. 901, where the court assumed for the purposes of the case, though without deciding the question, that "hedging" transactions were lawful, it was held that many of the transactions between the parties were not true "hedges," but were purely wagering contracts, and hence invalid. In particular it was said: "Defendant suggests that the options in September wheat may have been bought merely as a means of closing out the options in July wheat; that Bolfing, instead of closing out his 'hedge' by buying back July wheat, may have bought September wheat to cover it, and that this is a common practice, where the price has changed so that a heavy loss would be sustained by closing out the 'hedge' at the usual time, and the price of later futures looks more favorable. It is difficult to see why one who indulges in this practice is not speculating rather than 'hedging.' . . . The record also discloses that Bolfig sometimes gave an order for a purchase or sale of an option, and at the same time directed that it should be closed out whenever the market rose or fell a certain amount, and that he sometimes gave an order for the purchase or sale of an option at the specified price in case the market should rise or fall, as the case might be, to that point, and that defendant executed these orders. Such transactions indicate that Bolfig was speculating rather than 'hedging.' ”

And in Burney v. Blanks (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 136 S. W. 806, an action on a contract for the sale of cotton for future delivery, the plaintiff, in attempting to avoid the defense that the contract involved a gambling transaction and was therefore void, testified as follows: “Sometimes I have a contract to deliver spot cotton in the future, at a certain price, and protect that contract against fluctuation. If I see the market is going against me, I hedge it. If I have some cotton bought and on hand, or bought and to be delivered at a future time,—for instance, if I have bought 100 bales of cotton, to be delivered to me during October, November, or December,—and I see the market is going against me, I jump out and hedge it. If I have some cotton bought and got a good profit on it, then I will hedge it to secure that profit, and not take any further chances on it. The law gives us the right to do that. As to whether or not it was the purpose of this contract to hedge a sale, it was,

if I wanted to. It was my purpose, as soon as I got a profit in it, to hedge it. Of course, it was a speculation; if the price went down I made money, and if it went up they made money. If I had felt that the price of cotton was going up, I would not have gone out and hedged the contract with the bucket shop; I don't deal with bucket shops at all. I would carry the contract myself. I would either buy or sell to protect myself, if I had felt like it was necessary.” The court said: “We think it appears from the appellee's own testimony, as well as that given on behalf of the appellants, that the defendants sold to the plaintiff 133 bales of cotton at the market price of cotton at the time and place of the sale, and that the parties then and there agreed that, if the same grade of cotton should advance in price between that date and the 30th day of April, following, the defendants would have the right, upon demand, to collect from the plaintiff the difference between the price of such cotton at the time the demand was made, and the price which the plaintiff had paid the defendants for it. And, on the other hand, if no such demand was made by the defendants, and on the 30th day of April the market value of the grade of cotton referred to was less than the amount the plaintiff had paid for it, then he should have the right to collect the difference from the defendants. It is conceded in appellee's brief that the amount paid was the market value of the cotton at that time. If this is what the transaction was, we are unable to distinguish it from a bet or wager.” M. A. L.

CLARENCE IDELL, by Next Friend, et al.,
v.
ELBERT O. DAY, Appt.

Pennsylvania Supreme Court—February 6, 1922.

(— Pa. —, 116 Atl. 506.)

Automobile — negligence in turning to wrong side of road.

1. One driving an automobile upon a public highway at night may be found to be negligent in turning abruptly to the wrong side of the road, in the path of a coasting sled, although his excuse was that he thought he saw pedestrians on the road in front of him.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1433.]

Highway — coasting as nuisance.

2. Coasting on a public street which is not put to extensive public use, if not expressly prohibited by ordinance, is not necessarily a nuisance or negligence per se.

[See 13 R. C. L. 302.]

Trial — question for jury — negligence in coasting.

3. Whether or not one coasting on a public highway is exercising the care and diligence to avoid danger which should be expected of a reasonably careful and prudent man under like circumstances is a question for the jury where the evidence as to the danger is conflicting and the inferences to be drawn not clear.

Highway — sled as vehicle.

4. A hand sled is not a vehicle within the meaning of a law requiring vehicles to carry lights after dark.

(Schaffer, J., dissents.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 2, for Philadelphia County (Stern, J.) in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

- Mr. Lincoln L. Eyre for appellant.

Mr. M. J. McEnery, for appellees:

The question of the violation of the act of assembly by the minor plaintiff in the operation of the sled without the display of a light, and granting that a sled is a vehicle within the contemplation of the act, and that, upon the night in question, by reason of a white light not appearing upon the sled, plaintiff had violated the act, the question still remains whether the violation of the act of assembly was the efficient cause of the injury.

Stubbs v. Edwards, 260 Pa. 75, 103 Atl. 511; McIlhenny v. Baker, 63 Pa. Super. Ct. 385; Christner v. Cumberland & E. L. Coal Co. 146 Pa. 67, 23 Atl. 221; Hardie v. Barrett, 257 Pa. 42, L.R.A.1917F, 444, 101 Atl. 75, 16 N. C. C. A. 485.

Coasting upon a street which is not put to much public use, when not expressly prohibited by ordinance, is not necessarily a nuisance, nor is it an unlawful act, nor is it per se negligence.

Feldman v. Riccardino, 58 Pa. Super. Ct. 114.

The question of the conduct of the defendant in the operation of his automobile under the circumstances as narrated by him, and which narration in effect is his answer to the injuries caused by him to the plaintiff, becomes solely a question for the jury.

Reaney v. Jones, 75 Pa. Super. Ct. 355.

Kephart, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of trespass for personal injuries to Clarence Idell, a minor of seventeen. The accident happened on the evening of January 23, 1920, at about 10 o'clock, while young Idell, in company with eight others, all minors, was sled riding on a roadway in Germantown known as Lincoln drive. Their sled collided with defendant's automobile. Verdicts for the minor and father were recovered in the court below, but as appellant took but one appeal, instead of two, which the law requires, he was compelled to elect which judgment he would contest; by paper filed, he abandoned his objection to the father's judgment, and assigned as error to that of the minor the refusal of the court to give binding instructions in favor of defendant.

Lincoln drive, in the suburban section, is an 80-foot-wide street, 50 feet from curb to curb, with 15-foot sidewalks. The houses are built back 25 feet from the house line, and at Carpenter street, which intersects Lincoln drive, there is an unobstructed view down the latter for at least 800 feet. The occupants of the sled had come some distance before reaching the scene of the accident, which was 300 feet south of Carpenter street, on the right side of the road. Here there is little or no grade, and the sled was merely drifting, its momentum having been spent in the distance passed over, beyond which, as the boys described it, the hill was steeper and the coasting better. When they reached Carpenter street, going south, they were traveling possibly from 5 to 8 miles an hour, and the automobile could be seen coming north upon the right side of the road, the sled being on its proper side—8 to 10 feet from the west curb line of the road. There were no lights on the sled, but warning from a klaxon horn was sounded by the boys at all crossings, or whenever necessary to attract the attention of pedestrians who happened to be on the highway. There was an arc light at Carpenter street and gas lamps along the sides of Lincoln drive,—one immediately at the place of the accident. From the evidence, the night was clear enough that the persons on the drive could be seen for a distance of from 800 to 1,000 feet.

The sled continued past Carpenter street, and was between the latter and West View street, going about as fast as a man could run, on the proper side of the road, when defendant, without any notice or warning, within the space of 30 feet, suddenly turned his car from the right to the left hand side of the road, and crashed into the sled, injuring this minor and others.

Defendant, returning from a professional call, endeavoring to excuse his action by showing it was a misty night, and, being deceived by shadows of the trees, imagined he saw objects along the road which he mistook for pedestrians, going in the same direction as his car; he turned out of the road to avoid them, not knowing the boys were sled riding, though it appears they had been doing so for some time.

Coasting on a public street, which is not put to extended public use, and not expressly prohibited by ordinance, is not necessarily a nuisance, nor is it an unlawful act or negligence per se. Burford v. Grand Rapids, 53 Mich. 98, 103, 51 Am. Rep. 105, 18 N. W. 571; Faulkner v. Aurora, 85 Ind. 130, 133, 44 Am. Rep. 1; Lynch v. Public Service Corp. 82 N. J. L. 712, 715, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 865, 83 Atl. 382, 3 N. C. C. A. 514; Farrington v. Cheponis, 84 Conn. 1, 8, 78 Atl. 652; Feldman v. Riccordino, 58 Pa. Super. Ct. 114, 117.

Highway—coasting as nuisance.

Where, under the undisputed facts, coasting upon a street is clearly and manifestly dangerous, it may be the duty of the court to so declare as a matter of law; but where the evidence is conflicting, and the inferences to be drawn are not clear, the question whether plaintiff has exercised care and diligence to avoid danger while coasting, such as to be expected of a reasonably careful and prudent man under like circumstances, is for the jury. Meyers v. Central R. Co. 218 Pa. 305, 306, 67 Atl. 620.

Trial—question
for jury—negligence in coasting.

We have had several cases before us of right-angle collisions between sleds and vehicles; as to such circumstances, where there is no testimony to justify a finding that a driver knew or had reasonable ground for knowing boys were sled-ding, or likely to be sledding, on a hill at the time of passing, and a sled, not under control, comes rapidly, without warning or opportunity to apprehend its approach, and a collision takes place, there is no liability for damages to children who may be injured, as was the case in Eastburn v. United States Exp. Co. 225 Pa. 33, 35, 73 Atl. 977; but where a driver could see children at least 50 feet away from the crossing, or knew they were riding on the hill, he is required to give warning of his approach and take other reasonable means to guard against accident consistent with the circumstances. Yeager v. Gately & Fitzgerald, 262 Pa. 466, 471, 106 Atl. 76.

Here we have an accident between crossings where the driver deliberately passes to the wrong side of the street, immediately in the face of impending traffic. The speed of the car did not cause the accident; while the sled was not in a fixed position, the accident was bound to result when the car was turned directly in front of it within a few feet of its approach. It would have happened to any vehicle traveling in the same direction as the sled, under the circumstances here detailed. The doctor's acts imperiled the lives of everyone who might be traveling, as the sled was, on the opposite side of the street. His excuse received all the consideration it was entitled to by the court below; for what the headlight mistakenly revealed to him, as he says, could not have been true, and, if it was, should he not have made reasonably certain that people were actually ahead? He could have had his illusion dispelled by driving within 50 feet of the supposed pedestrians, when the shadows would have disappeared in the brilliancy of his headlights, and if he could see these supposed people walking, why could not he see the boys coming slowly along with their sled? If he had suspected there was something on the road in front of him, he should, as any prudent man would, have gone close enough to it to find out. Shadows are quickly neutralized in the glare of an electric headlight, and his suspicions would have been quickly dissipated had he followed a reasonable course.

We are not satisfied the use of the highway by traffic on this occasion was of a nature to cause coasting on this street to be declared a nuisance by us. The court below did not commit error in submitting the case to the jury, either on the ground of defendant's negligence or plaintiff's contributory negligence. This case is easily distinguishable from Leslie v. Catanzaro, 272 Pa. 419, 116 Atl. 504.

Automobile—negligence in turning to wrong side of road.

There is one other question. A hand sled is not a vehicle within the contemplation of the Act of June 12, 1919 (P. L. 451; Pa. Stat. 1920, §§ 19,630–19,636), which requires at least one white light from one hour after sunset until one hour before sunrise. It may be such conveyance or vehicle as would have the right to use the cartway of a street. Stevenson v. United States Exp. Co. 221 Pa. 59, 128 Am. St. Rep. 725, 70 Atl. 275. This act does not require a light on such sleds,—therefore, its absence not being in violation of an act of assembly, it is not, for this reason, the efficient cause of the injury, nor is its absence, moreover, such lack of ordinary care as would justify the court in declaring its contributory negligence as a matter of law, preventing a recovery.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

Schaffer, J., dissenting:

I would hold that the words "every vehicle" in the Act of June 12, 1919, comprehend sleds such as the one involved in the accident in this case, and when running at night upon a highway like Lincoln drive, one of the main arteries of travel in suburban Philadelphia, they must display a light as provided in that act. In the absence of such statutory requirement, it seems to me that due and ordinary care demands that those using such a sled on such a highway at night must give warning of its presence by the means other vehicles use. As I view the testimony, the fault here was not with the defendant, but with the plaintiff, and there should be no recovery permitted; therefore I dissent.

ANNOTATION.

Injury to one while coasting in the street.

- I. In general, 1433.
- II. Effect of ordinance against coasting, 1434.
- III. Applicability of law of road and road regulations, 1435.
- IV. Collisions with automobiles, 1435.

I. In general.

It is generally held that the fact that a person who was injured while coasting was pursuing this sport on a public street will not necessarily preclude a recovery, if he was not guilty of contributory negligence, and negligence by another causing the injury is made to appear. Farrington v. Cheponis (1911) 84 Conn. 1, 78 Atl. 652; Roennau v. Whitson (1920) 188 Iowa, 138, 175 N. W. 849; Strutzel v. St. Paul City R. Co. (1891) 47 Minn. 543, 50 N. W. 690; Terrill v. Virginia Brewing Co. (1915) 130 Minn. 46, L.R.A.1915E, 1028, 153 N. W. 136, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 453, 16 N. C. C. A. 648; Weber v. United R. Co. (1919) 201 Mo. App. 685, 213 S. W. 535; Lynch v. Public Service Corp. (1912) 82 N. J. L. 712, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 865, 83 Atl. 382, 3 N. C. C. A. 514; Meyers v. Central R. Co. (1907) 218 Pa. 305, 67 Atl. 620; Feldman v. Riccardino (1914) 58 Pa. Super. Ct. 114; Nevins v. Delaware & H. Co. (1918) 261 Pa. 32, 103 Atl. 1017; Yeager v. Gately & Fitzgerald (1919) 262 Pa. 466, 106 Atl. 76.

And in Roennau v. Whitson (1920) 188 Iowa, 138, 175 N. W. 849, where it was held that coasters on a hill had an equal right on the highway with a traveler in a horse-drawn carriage, the court said: "While not in terms denying the lawfulness of the use of a country highway for coasting purposes under ordinary circumstances, appellant's argument, in many of its assumptions and inferences, seems grounded on the thought that, as between the defendant driving an ordinary wheeled carriage drawn by horses and the party of coasters moving over the same public road on a sled propelled by their own weight, the superiority of right is

- V. Collisions with horse-drawn vehicles, 1437.
- VI. Collisions with street cars, 1439.
- VII. Collisions with steam cars, 1440.
- VIII. Collisions with obstructions, 1440.
- IX. Injury from kick by animal, 1440.

with the former. 'Surely,' say counsel, 'the defendant had a right to drive up the hill in the beaten or traveled way upon this public road.' This may be conceded, but it by no means answers or avoids the plaintiff's complaint if, as a matter of law, she was also clothed with a like right to come down the hill 'in the beaten or traveled way.' The right which any person has to use the public road in going from place to place is a right which he holds in common as one of the public. Each and every person exercising a common or public right is bound to do so with reasonable regard to the safety of others lawfully claiming a like privilege. So far as the highway is concerned, the law recognizes no favorites in its use. The titled traveler, with his 'coach and six' and outriders, has no higher or better right in the public road than has the patient squaw with her pony dragging the primitive travois, which bears her load of blankets. And, barring only the reservation that the vehicle shall not be of a kind destructive of the public use of the road or otherwise constituting a nuisance, the law, in the absence of statute at least, does not close the road against any form or method of travel or transportation known to man. Nor does the law limit such public right to the use of the highway as a mere artery or conduit of business or commerce. More and more as the years go by are the public ways crowded with those who walk or ride or drive for the mere pleasure of it, or as a restful change from their labors, or as a matter of exercise taken for the promotion of health. No practicable motive power has yet been developed which is in itself unlawful for use upon the highway. The subjection of steam, gas, and electricity to such uses is already an accomplished fact. Nor is gravity, that most universal and potent of all nature's forces, overlooked. The bicycle rider coasts down the hills, and the automobile driver does the same, and utilizes the momentum thus acquired to carry him far up the opposite slope, and in so doing neither of them abuses his lawful right to the use of the road. Nor is the right lost or forfeited because the use being made of the road is merely one of the movements in some amusement or sport."

And it has been held that coasting on a public street not put to extended public use, where it is not expressly prohibited by ordinance, is not necessarily a nuisance, or an unlawful act, or negligence per se. IDELL v. DAY (reported herewith) ante, 1429; Feldman v. Riccordino (1914) 58 Pa. Super. Ct. 114.

In Lynch v. Public Service Corp. (1912) 82 N. J. L. 712, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 865, 83 Atl. 382, 3 N. C. C. A. 514, it was held that one coasting in a public street, who was injured by another's negligence, was not prevented from recovery for the injury because his own act constituted a public nuisance.

And in Jackson v. Castle (1888) 80 Me. 119, 13 Atl. 49, an action for damages alleged to have been occasioned by reason of the negligence or wrongful act of defendant, who was coasting, it is said that sliding in a street, accompanied with boisterous conduct, is not necessarily unlawful, nor is it necessarily a public nuisance.

But it has been said that a large sled loaded with several persons coasting down an icy street after dark endangers the safety of every traveler upon the highway in its course, and is inconsistent with the purposes for which the street was made and for which it is used, and is per se a nuisance. Reusch v. Licking Rolling Mill Co. (1904) 118 Ky. 369, 80 S. W. 1168.

And in Eastburn v. United States Exp. Co. (1909) 225 Pa. 33, 73 Atl. 977, it was said that it cannot be doubted that for seven boys to come down a steep hill on one sled, at such a high rate of speed as would necessarily follow, and to run into a city street at the foot of the hill, would be a wrongful act.

And in McCarthy v. Portland (1877) 67 Me. 167, 24 Am. Rep. 23, a case of injury to a horse while racing in the streets of a city, it is said that, like racing or playing ball, sliding downhill is not an unlawful exercise or game, but that the streets are not proper places for such recreation, although one engaged in it is passing along the highway, in one sense, as any traveler would.

It is held that where, under the undisputed facts, coasting upon a street is clearly and manifestly dangerous, it may be the duty of the court to so declare as a matter of law, but that, where the evidence is conflicting and the inferences to be drawn are not clear, the question whether plaintiff has exercised care and diligence to avoid danger while coasting, such as to be expected of a reasonably careful and prudent man under like circumstances, is for the jury. Feldman v. Riccordino (1914) 58 Pa. Super. Ct. 114; IDELL v. DAY (reported herewith) ante, 1429. Other cases on the question of contributory negligence will be found in subsequent subdivisions.

II. Effect of ordinance against coasting.

See also Sturm v. Tri-City R. Co. (1920) 190 Iowa, 387, 178 N. W. 525, infra, VI.

In Farrington v. Cheponis (1911) 84 Conn. 1, 78 Atl. 652, it was held that the fact that one was violating an ordinance against coasting would not bar a recovery for an injury, unless such violation was a proximate cause of the injury.

And in Sturm v. Tri-City R. Co. (Iowa) supra, it was held that one who was injured while coasting was not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence because he was injured while violating the law against coasting, but that such violation did not constitute negligence unless the breach of law, in some manner, directly contributed to the injury sustained.

In Fluckiger v. Seattle (1918) 103 Wash. 330, L.R.A.1918F, 780, 174 Pac. 456, it was held that a failure of the police department to enforce an ordinance forbidding coasting in the city streets did not render a municipality liable for an injury to one who was violating the ordinance.

III. Applicability of law of road and road regulations.

In Roennau v. Whitson (1920) 188 Iowa, 138, 175 N. W. 849, it was held that the law of the road is applicable in cases of coasters. The court said: "Counsel argue that this statute (Code, § 1569) prescribing the so-called law of the road, which makes it the duty of persons on horseback or vehicles meeting upon the highway to give one half of the road by seasonably turning to the right, can have no application to a meeting on the road between the rider of a sled or coaster and a person who is operating a vehicle of any other description. We see no valid ground on which to draw this distinction, or to justify us in judicially ingrafting upon the statute an exception which the legislature did not make. The statute makes no attempt to classify vehicles or to include within its terms one or more to the exclusion of others. We have held that a bicycle is to be considered a vehicle, and its rider is entitled to the benefit of the law of the road (Cook v. Fogarty (1897) 103 Iowa, 504, 39 L.R.A. 488, 72 N. W. 677), and, if we once concede that any particular vehicle may be lawfully used on a public road its inclusion within the effect of the 'law of the road' is clearly inevitable. It is quite possible that this may, at times, work an apparent hardship as between a comparatively slow-moving vehicle and one which moves swiftly or more silently; but such inconveniences or disadvantages are inevitable unless we destroy the equality of right which makes the highway about the only place left where every man, no matter how humble, is the peer of every other man, no matter how exalted. The universality of this right and use makes it incumbent on each person to exercise it with a reasonable degree of vigilance to avoid interference with others. This duty observed, collisions and accidents will be few, even though annoyances multiply with the multiplication of methods of transportation and locomotion."

And in Terrill v. Virginia Brewing Co. (1915) 130 Minn. 46, L.R.A.1915E, 1028, 153 N. W. 136, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 453, 16 N. C. C. A. 648, a statute requiring all vehicles to keep to the right was held applicable, but a statute regulating the speed of motor vehicles approaching a curve was held not to apply.

And in the reported case (IDELL v. DAY, ante, 1429) it was held that a hand sled is not a vehicle within the contemplation of an act requiring at least one white light from one hour after sunset until one hour before sunrise.

IV. Collisions with automobiles.

It is held that, where the driver of a motor vehicle is aware of the presence of children coasting on a hill, he is bound to exercise unusual care and watchfulness. Yeager v. Gately & Fitzgerald (1919) 262 Pa. 466, 106 Atl. 76.

In Leslie v. Catanzaro (1922) — Pa. —, 116 Atl. 504, it was held that, although it is the duty of the driver of an automobile to keep his car under control so as to be able to stop within a reasonable time in case of an emergency, the evidence in the case showed that the defendant had exercised reasonable care in endeavoring to remove his car from the path of a sled on which the plaintiff was riding, where there was no clear evidence that the defendant was aware that coasters might be met at the place of collision, and the evidence also showed that as the defendant came toward an obstruction at a corner he sounded his horn, and as he rounded the obstruction, and observed plaintiff's sled approaching 15 or 25 feet distant, in the emergency he turned his car to the left and mounted the sidewalk, so that it was about 4 feet beyond the curb when it was stopped, practically within its own length.

And in Sund v. Smisek (1921) 105 Neb. 602, 181 N. W. 529, there was held to be no evidence supporting an allegation of negligence, where the testimony showed that the hill on which the deceased nine-year-old boy was coasting was steep, icy, and dangerous for coasting; that his sled was a fast one, and that he descended so rapidly that it was beyond his control; that the sled dashed out so swiftly from between the banks of an alley which hid defendant's view that the driver of a car running at a moderate rate of speed, in the exercise of ordinary care, under the circumstances, could not have prevented a collision with the sled, which struck the rear wheel of the defendant's automobile.

And in Wetherill v. Showell, F. & Co. (1919) 264 Pa. 449, 107 Atl. 808, it was held that there was no negligence shown, where there was no evidence that the driver of defendant's automobile was not heeding what he was doing as he approached a blind crossing, or that he knew that boys were in the habit of sliding on a certain street, or that the grade would permit them to do so, and there was evidence that the plaintiff's deceased child, as defendant's vehicle approached the crossing, also approached on an intersecting street at a high rate of speed, and that he attempted to avoid a collision by passing to the rear of the automobile, but was unable to steer his sled and struck the back wheel.

And in Post v. Richardson (1922) — Pa. —, 116 Atl. 531, in which a recovery was sought for the death of a coaster who collided with an automobile, the evidence was held to establish no negligence on the part of the defendant, where the testimony in substance was that the accident occurred at about 9:30 at night; that there was a turn in the road part way down the hill on which the deceased was coasting, which hid the view of the lower part until travelers had rounded the turn; that the sled was going from 15 to 25 miles an hour, and traveling on the south, or right, side as it made the curve; that the occupants of the sled noticed defendant's automobile ascending the hill, also on the south side of the road, about 175 or 200 feet from the place of collision; that as the vehicles neared each other the deceased, evidently thinking there was not room to pass the automobile on the right, suddenly turned to the left, and at the same instant the defendant, obeying the rule of the road, turned his car to the right; that deceased, evidently noticing the change, suddenly swerved his sled to the right, but did not clear the automobile; and that the defendant's automobile, when first seen by the coasters, had been turned to the left in order to pass groups of coasters who were drawing their sleds up the hill.

In Yeager v. Gately & Fitzgerald (Pa.) supra, the question of negligence on the part of the driver of a motor vehicle which collided at a street intersection with a boy who was coasting was held for the jury, where there was evidence that the accident occurred between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon; that the boy was coasting on the sidewalk, on the right side of the street, and traveling 6 or 8 miles an hour; that defendant's truck was traveling at about the same speed on the left or wrong side of a street which intersected at right angles that on which the boy was coasting; that the collision occurred practically at the instant the child's sled left the sidewalk and entered the crossing; that the driver knew children were coasting at the place where the accident happened; that he might have seen the boy, and that he failed to give any warning as his truck approached the intersection.

And it will be observed that in the reported case (IDELL v. DAY, ante, 1429) the question of negligence and contributory negligence were held for the jury, where the plaintiff's sled was traveling slowly on the proper side of the street and was run into at night by the defendant's automobile, which he turned on the wrong side, as he testified, to avoid objects on the road which he took for pedestrians.

In Goldberg v. Berkowitz (1921) 173 Wis. 603, 181 N. W. 216, the plaintiff was held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law where there was evidence that he was an intelligent boy nine and one-half years of age, and that he coasted down a hill, lying on his stomach on a sled, with his face downwards and his hands placed so that he could guide the sled; that as he proceeded he did not look up to see if the course was clear, but held his head down between the sled runners, and that he did not see or hear defendant's automobile until they met near the curb opposite from the side where he entered onto the street.

In Disher v. Kincaid (1922) — Iowa, —, 186 N. W. 666, where a recovery was sought for injuries sustained by one who was coasting when he collided with an automobile, it was held that the evidence did not justify a submission of the case to the jury upon the theory of the "last clear chance" doctrine, the court holding that too much was left to the speculation of the jury, where the two occupants of the automobile denied that they saw the sled until approximately the instant of the collision, although there was testimony that the driver was signaled, and that, had he looked, he could have seen the sled some distance from the street intersection.

In Kammer v. Loschke (1922) — Mo. App. —, 238 S. W. 1088, the jury was held justified in finding that the driver of the truck which collided with plaintiff's bobsled violated the humanitarian rule, where there was evidence that plaintiff had stationed a man at the intersection of a street over which he would pass to see that the way was clear; that after the sled, which started on a signal that the way was clear, was part way down the hill, the guard discovered defendant's truck approaching at a speed of 20 or 25 miles an hour on the intersecting street, and realizing that the sled could not be stopped, he frantically endeavored, by voice and gesture, to have the truck stopped; that as the sled got about 10 feet from the edge of the intersection, traveling northwesterly, the plaintiff saw the truck approaching from the eastward; that he turned the sled to the left, and turned in as narrow a circle as possible in an endeavor to avoid the truck, which was 150 to 200 feet away; that, notwithstanding the warnings given by the guard and the sight of the sled, the driver came on without slackening speed or making any effort to avoid the collision until he was within 40 feet of the point of collision, when he applied his brakes, and when the car and sled came together he swerved to the right; that the driver of the truck at all times had the means of stopping or slowing his truck, had he been observing and careful, while he knew that the sled could not be stopped. And the evidence in the case was held to justify an instruction that if the plaintiff was in a position of imminent peril, or entering a position of such peril, arising from danger of being run into by the truck, and the driver knew, or in the exercise of ordinary care could have known, that the plaintiff was in a position of imminent peril, or entering such a position, and thereafter the driver, in the exercise of ordinary care, could have stopped the truck, slackened its speed, or swerved the same, and thereby could have avoided the collision, and he failed to do so, then he was guilty of negligence, and if as a direct result of such negligence the plaintiff was injured, a recovery could be had. And the instruction was held not objectionable on the ground that it did not include a proviso that the truck driver could have stopped, slackened speed, or swerved the truck, "with due regard to his own safety," since the evidence raised no such issue. And it was held that an objection that the instruction should have required the jury to find whether or not the plaintiff was oblivious of his peril should not be upheld, in view of the facts, as obviousness was held immaterial.

V. Collisions with horse-drawn vehicles.

The fact that children are standing with their sleds near a crossing in the roadway at the foot of a hill, in a safe place, will not put a driver of a wagon upon notice that a large sled is likely to run into his wagon at great speed, and require him to take steps to avoid that possibility. Eastburn v. United States Exp. Co. (1909) 225 Pa. 33, 73 Atl. 977.

Neither is the sound of boy's voices in the streets on Saturday sufficient warning to require a driver to stop his team and make inquiry as to the location of the sounds and as to whether they come from boys coasting. Ibid.

And the fact that a person, when walking on a street one day, sees children sledding on a particular hill, cannot charge him, when driving a wagon along that street on a later day, with negligence, because his wagon is struck in the side by a sled; nor is he under a duty when arriving at the corner to stop his team and wait until all the children coasting down that hill shall arrive safely at the bottom. Ibid.

And even if a driver, upon arriving at a corner, can see boys at a considerable distance up the hill upon the cross street coasting down towards him, he is not obliged to anticipate the possibility of their steering their sled into his wagon. Ibid.

And where a sled with seven boys upon it was coming down a steep hill in the daytime, and appeared "like a shot out of a cannon" to the driver of a wagon upon a cross street, and a collision resulted, and there was nothing to show that he had knowledge that the boys were sledding on the hill, or that they were likely to be at that time, a verdict based upon the negligence of such driver is not warranted. Ibid.

And in Hoff v. Ward Baking Co. (1918) 70 Pa. Super. Ct. 235, it was held that the defendant was not chargeable with negligence because he was driving at a gallop across a street intersection at which a collision occurred with a sled on which the deceased and another boy were coasting, where the latter, who was steering, testified that there was sufficient space for the sled to have passed back of the wagon, but that, on account of the sled being overloaded, he was unable to deflect its course so as to escape the wagon.

In Roennau v. Whitson (1920) 188 Iowa, 138, 175 N. W. 849, a finding of negligence on the part of the driver of a buggy was held supported by the evidence, where there was testimony that he was warned of the danger from coasters while still at the foot of a hill; that he saw a flash light carried by those on a coaster descending the hill, when 200 feet away; that the coasters were making outcries for a clear way, which were audible at the foot of the hill; that, notwithstanding the darkness and the fact that he was driving a fractious team, he drove steadily ahead, occupying nearly all the traveled track, until an instant before the collision with the coaster, which descended the hill with the right sled runner in the right-hand wheel track.

In the Roennau Case the question of contributory negligence was held for the jury, where there was evidence that they had placed watchers at the foot of the hill to give warning; that they displayed a flash light, which was visible for the whole length of their course; and that they gave warning by shouts, which were audible at the foot of the hill.

And in Terrill v. Virginia Brewing Co. (1915) 130 Minn. 46, L.R.A.1915E, 1028, 153 N. W. 136, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 453, 16 N. C. C. A. 648, where the plaintiff's child, while coasting down a city street, was killed while attempting to avoid the defendant's wagon, which was proceeding on the left side of the street, it was held that it could not be said as a matter of law, that the boy was guilty of contributory negligence, but that the question was for the jury.

But in Stoll v. Laubengayer (1913) 174 Mich. 701, 140 N. W. 532, the act of the deceased in starting her sled down an incline after the defendant had left his team standing over a path into which the sled turned, resulting in a collision with the team, was held the proximate cause of the accident, and a recovery was denied.

VI. Collisions with street cars.

In Sturm v. Tri-City R. Co. (1920) 190 Iowa, 387, 178 N. W. 525, it was held that the defendant railway company was under no duty to anticipate that the plaintiff would violate an ordinance against coasting, merely because the right existed to use the street in a lawful manner.

If the driver of a street car has seen young boys sliding down to the track so frequently that he has reason to apprehend that they will be encountered there, it is culpable negligence on his part to approach the crossing without looking to see if they are there, unless his inattention is in some way excused; and if he actually sees a boy thus sliding, it is his duty to be careful so to control the motion of the car as to avoid the apparent danger; and in either case, the fact that coasting in the street is unlawful does not excuse him from the duty of carefulness. And where a boy nearly six years old was struck by a horse car in the daytime, at a crossing over which for several days boys had been in the habit of coasting, and at a place where the driver of the car, if he had looked, could have seen the boy in time to have avoided the accident, he being accustomed to pass the place about every hour of the day, it was held that the question of his negligence was properly left to the jury, and their verdict of substantial damages was affirmed. Strutzel v. St. Paul City R. Co. (1891) 47 Minn. 543, 50 N. W. 690.

In Weber v. United R. Co. (1919) 201 Mo. App. 685, 213 S. W. 535, it was held that, under an ordinance providing that persons in charge of street cars shall keep a vigilant watch for vehicles and persons on the track, or moving toward the car, and that it shall be stopped in the shortest possible time and space on the first appearance of danger, and, even aside from such ordinance, a motorman who had an unobstructed view for a long distance should have seen plaintiff's intestate, who was coasting down a hill, and first came towards the front of the car, and as it turned came towards its side and collided with it, and that nothing less than gross negligence would be attributed to the motorman in failing to see the deceased and another boy who crossed the track on his sled ahead of the latter, directly in front of the car, and there was held substantial evidence warranting the submission of the case to the jury.

But a street railroad company is not liable for injuries to a boy eight years old while coasting in the daytime down a steep street, crossing at right angles the street car track, where the injury occurs by reason of the fact that the motorman suddenly stops the car to avoid striking another boy who is preceding the one injured down the hill, and who undertakes to cross in front of the car, and in so doing the motorman upsets the plans of the injured boy, who is intending to cross behind the moving car, and who as a result comes in contact with the rear wheels. Kiley v. Boston Elevator R. Co. (1911) 207 Mass. 542, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1153, 93 N. E. 632.

In Lynch v. Public Service Corp. (1912) 82 N. J. L. 712, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 865, 83 Atl. 382, 3 N. C. C. A. 514, it was held that the jury must determine whether or not a motorman in charge of a street car was negligent in accelerating the speed of his car when attempting to cross a street on which he knew children were coasting, after he had been warned that sleds were approaching the point of intersections.

And, in the Lynch Case, the question whether or not a child was guilty of negligence in attempting to coast on a street crossing a street railway track, when persons were stationed at the point of intersection to warn coasters and car operators in order to prevent collisions.

The evidence in Rassman v. Shore Line Electric R. Co. (1913) 87 Conn. 701, 87 Atl. 271, which is not set out, was held not to establish the neglect by the defendant of any duty owed to the plaintiff's intestate, but to show negligence by the latter in attempting to coast across the defendant's track in front of a car, without observing its approach.

And in Flintoff v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co. (1919) 208 Mich. 527, 175 N. W. 438, a bright, intelligent boy over seven years of age who was killed by a street car was held guilty of contributory negligence where he slid down a steep hill onto the car track, riding feet foremost and lying upon his stomach upon the sled, knowing that cars were running upon the track at frequent intervals.

VII. Collisions with steam cars.

In Meyers v. Central R. Co. (1907) 218 Pa. 305, 67 Atl. 620, the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were held for the jury where there was evidence that a thirteen-year-old boy while coasting was struck at night by an engine at a public crossing, which was dangerous and was ordinarily protected by a watchman and gates; that there was no such protection at the time of the accident; and that the engine, which was running backwards, gave no warning of its approach; and that there was a considerable stretch of level ground before the track was reached, on which the boy could have stopped or turned to one side.

VIII. Collisions with obstructions.

It has been held that one who has placed a large wagon upon a street, and has left it to stand there over night, is not liable for damages to one injured by reason of running against it while coasting in the street after dark, although the street may have been used for coasting for many evenings preceding, for it is said that the owner of the wagon is under no obligation to exercise care for the protection of one thus improperly using the street. Reusch v. Licking Rolling Mill Co. (1904) 118 Ky. 369, 80 S. W. 1168.

In Brightenburg v. Mulcahy (1920) 104 Neb. 794, 178 N. W. 623, where it was alleged in substance that the defendant unlawfully maintained a fence extending into the public thoroughfare, and that the plaintiff was coasting downhill, and that his sled was crowded over the curb when near the fence, which caused him to run into the fence where it was unlawfully maintained, it was held that the question of what was the proximate cause of the injury was for the jury. The court said: "As to how far, or whether at all, acts of the parties coasting was the proximate cause, would be a matter of defense, hence a question for the jury. The situation then is a question of concurring or successive acts of negligence of numerous persons combined which caused plaintiff's injury. As a matter of law, he may recover of either or both, and neither can interpose the defense that the prior or concurrent negligence of the other contributed to the injury. See also Williams v. San Francisco & N. W. R. Co. (1907) 6 Cal. App. 715, 93 Pac. 122; Rev. Stat. 1913, § 8845. It would seem clear that one negligently causing an unlawful obstruction in the highway where someone is injured when in lawful pursuits, the party guilty of the obstruction might be held as liable in damages. Anyhow, such a situation constitutes a question for the jury."

And in Feldman v. Riccordinio (1914) 58 Pa. Super. Ct. 114, the question of negligence and contributory negligence was held for the jury where there was evidence that for a month the defendant had, in violation of an ordinance, maintained a pile of scrap iron in the cartway of the street, extending from the curb, a distance of 10 or 12 feet across the cartway, which was only 29 feet wide, and the evidence was conflicting as to whether a light had been placed on the obstruction, and as to whether the plaintiff, who collided with the iron while coasting, had knowledge of the obstruction, and a verdict for the plaintiff was held sustained by the evidence.

IX. Injury from kick by animal.

In Nevins v. Delaware & H. Co. (1918) 261 Pa. 32, 103 Atl. 1017, the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were held for the jury in an action to recover for the death of a boy who was kicked by a mule when coasting, where there was evidence that the mule, to the defendant's knowledge, was of a vicious and bad disposition and had kicked persons before, and that he was being led by one riding on another mule, and there was evidence that the boy was coasting with others on a bobsled which was steered by another boy, and that they waited three or four minutes for the mule to get out of the way.

J. T. W.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA

v.

MIGUEL MANRIQUEZ, Appt.

California Supreme Court (In Banc)—April 4, 1922.

(— Cal. —, 206 Pac. 63.)

Criminal law — permitting withdrawal of plea of guilty — discretion.

1. That one believed, or was led to believe, that by pleading guilty his punishment would be lighter than would otherwise be inflicted, is no ground for the exercise of discretion in permitting withdrawal of the plea when the belief proved to be unfounded.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1445.]

Appeal — failure to follow statute — dismissal.

2. An appeal from a judgment not taken in the manner prescribed by statute will be dismissed.

[See 2 R. C. L. 100, 167; 1 R. C. L. Supp. 196, 422.]

Criminal law — plea of guilty — when properly made.

3. A statute requiring a plea of guilty to be made by accused himself is complied with by his statement that "he had been guilty all the time," when the arraignment was translated to him by the interpreter, although, before he could answer, his attorney stated that the plea was guilty, and consented to the entry of the plea after it was made.

— waiver of time for sentence.

4. Accused may, by counsel, waive a statutory provision that, after a plea of guilty, the court must set a time for pronouncing sentence which shall not be less than two days after the plea, so as to permit sentence on the day following the entry of the plea.

Homicide — first-degree murder — attempted robbery.

5. Murder committed by one of several persons attempting to commit robbery, who is stationed by the others to guard the victim while the robbery is committed, by the discharge of the gun by which the victim is covered when the latter grabs for it, is within a statute making murder in an attempt to perpetrate robbery murder in the first degree.

[See 13 R. C. L. 776.]

Appeal — review of discretion in refusing leave to withdraw plea.

6. The exercise of discretion by the trial court in permitting or refusing leave to withdraw a plea of guilty is not reviewable on appeal except in cases of clear abuse.

[See 8 R. C. L. 112; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 551.]

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Superior Court for Imperial County (Conkling, J.) denying his motion to set aside a judgment convicting him of murder in the first degree and for leave to withdraw his plea of guilty and substitute a plea of not guilty. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

20 A.L.R.—91.

Messrs. Harry B. Ellison and M. A. Thomas for appellant.

Messrs. E. R. Simon, U. S. Webb, Attorney General, and J. Charles Jones for the People.

Waste, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was charged with the crime of murder. After the entry of a plea of "guilty" the court determined the degree of the crime as murder in the first degree, and, on July 22, 1921, imposed the death penalty. Thereafter the defendant interposed a motion to set aside the judgment and for leave to withdraw the plea of guilty and to substitute a plea of not guilty instead. The motion was denied on September 28, 1921. There appears, in the clerk's transcript of the proceedings in the court below, what purports to be a notice of appeal to this court from the judgment of conviction, "and from an order made on the 28th day of September, 1921, after judgment affecting the substantial rights of the defendant." It does not appear that any appeal from the judgment was taken by the defendant in open court, in the manner prescribed by § 1239 of the Penal

Appeal—failure to follow statute—dismissal.

Code at the time the judgment was rendered, or by filing a written notice of appeal within two days thereafter. Consequently the appeal from the judgment must be, and is, dismissed.

Several contentions are advanced in support of the appeal from the order denying the motion to set aside the judgment and to permit the withdrawal and substitution of the plea. The motion was made upon the ground, in substance, first, that no plea of guilty was put in by the defendant himself in open court, as required by § 1018 of the Penal Code, and that the entry of any such purported plea was without his express consent. Passing over the provision of the statute which requires that application for permission to withdraw a plea of guilty, and to substitute a plea of not guilty, must be made before judgment (Penal Code, § 1018), a point not raised by the attorney general, we are convinced that there is no merit in appellant's position.

From the record of the proceedings on arraignment, and no attempt is made to impeach the verity of the reporter's transcript, it appears that the appellant is a Mexican who does not speak or understand the English language. When he came into court for arraignment, an interpreter was duly appointed and sworn to interpret the proceedings. By direction of the court, the information was then translated to the appellant by the interpreter, a copy of the information was handed to the defendant at the time, and the court informed him of his right to be represented by counsel before being arraigned. Upon appellant stating that he had none, and no money with which to pay one, the court appointed a member of the local bar to represent the defendant, and continued the arraignment until the following morning. When the case was called the next day, the attorney appointed by the court appeared with appellant. At his request the information was read by the district attorney and then translated to the defendant by the interpreter. The court thereupon arraigned the defendant, but, at the request of his counsel, continued the matter another day to take the plea.

At that time the following proceedings were had:

The court: Are you ready for plea?

Mr. Ellison (defendant's counsel): Yes, sir.

The court: Is the interpreter in court? Translate the proceedings to the defendant, please, Mr. Interpreter. Miguel Manriquez, you have been heretofore arraigned upon this information, charged with the crime of murder; to this information what is your plea?

Mr. Ellison: The plea is guilty to the charge of murder.

The defendant: I have been guilty all the time.

Mr. Ellison: The plea of guilty may be entered.

The court: My recollection is, I have to take evidence to determine the degree.

Mr. Simon (the district attorney): I think that is true. If the court please, I assume the burden will be on us to show the degree.

Mr. Ellison: I am willing it should be shown by the defendant himself.

The court thereupon proceeded to take the testimony of several witnesses, including the defendant, who took the stand at his counsel's suggestion, and determined the crime committed to be murder in the first degree. Section 1018 of the Penal Code provides that a plea of guilty can be put in by the defendant himself only in open court, and the point now made on behalf of the appellant is that he "himself" offered no plea when arraigned. He relies upon the statement in People v. Thompson, 4 Cal. 238, to the effect that a defendant must plead guilty in person, and his attorney is not allowed by the law to admit away his life or liberty. It is true, as was said in People v. McCrory, 41 Cal. 458, 461, that a plea of a defendant confessing himself guilty of crime should not be entered except with the express consent of the defendant, given by him personally in direct terms in open court, and his confession of guilt should be explicitly made. We are satisfied that there was a positive and literal compliance with such requirement in this case. The foregoing extract from the record and the transcript of the proceedings on the motion to set aside clearly and most conclusively confirm that view. The mere fact that the attorney for the defendant announced to the Criminal law—

plea of guilty—
when properly made.

court what the plea would be, before the defendant was able to answer through the interpreter, and consented to the entry of the plea after it was made, is an unimportant matter in view of the independent action of the defendant himself. There is no merit in the contention that the answer of the appellant cannot be held to constitute a plea except by implication. The statement was a direct and explicit confession of guilt, and was properly received by the court and entered as the plea in the case. The form of the plea is not of vital importance, provided the admission of guilt is clear, definite, and unconditional. 16 C. J. 401.

Another ground upon which the appellant based his motion for vacation of the judgment was that his plea of guilty was entered without due deliberation, and with the hope and expectation that the punishment to which he might be exposed would be mitigated. Even if such were the case, the fact that a defendant, knowing his rights and the consequences of his act, hoped or believed, or was led by his counsel, or others, to hope or believe, that he would receive a milder punishment by pleading guilty than that which would fall to his lot after trial and conviction by a jury, presents no ground for the exercise of the discretion necessary to permit a plea of guilty to be withdrawn. People v. Dabner, 153 Cal. 398, 403, 95 Pac. 880; People v. Miller, 114 Cal. 10, 16, 45 Pac. 986; People v. Lennox, 67 Cal. 113, 115, 7 Pac. 260, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 542.

—permitting withdrawal of plea of guilty—
discretion.

Appellant's last contention in support of his motion to vacate the judgment is that the court violated the provisions of § 1191 of the Penal Code in that it pronounced judgment upon him the day following the entry of his plea. The section provides that, after a plea of guilty, the court must appoint a time for pronouncing judgment, which must be not less than two nor more than five days after the entry of the plea. A sufficient answer to the contention is that the appellant through his counsel, at the time he made his plea, expressly waived time, and, with the consent of the court and district attorney, requested the court to impose the sentence on the day following. It —waiver of time for sentence. has long been settled that one may waive a right created by statute for his benefit, and that the rule applies to the time for pronouncing the judgment of the court in criminal cases. People v. Robinson, 46 Cal. 94, 96; People v. Mess, 65 Cal. 174, 3 Pac. 670, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 592; People v. Johnson, 88 Cal. 171, 174, 25 Pac. 1116.

Although the appeal from the judgment has of necessity been dismissed, we have carefully read the entire record of the evidence submitted to the trial court, to enable it to determine the degree of the crime, before passing sentence. The homicide resulted from the attempt of the appellant and two others to rob a store at El Centro, kept by a Chinese. The three men went together to the store for the purpose of committing the robbery. According to the appellant, who took the stand at the instance of his own counsel, one of his accomplices directed Quon Sue, one of the Chinese, to hold up his hands and told the appellant "to hold him there." He "put his gun on him," and "as soon as I did it he tried to grab it. . . . When the Chinaman grabbed at me, the pistol went off, and he went down, and I ran out, and I don't know what the others did."

There was other testimony that Quon Sue was killed instantly, and the evidence of the autopsy surgeons tended very strongly to indicate that the killing was not in the manner described by the appellant.

Homicide—first-degree murder—attempted robbery. Be that as it may, the homicide was committed in an attempt to perpetrate robbery, and was murder in the first degree. Penal Code, § 189. The evidence was of such a nature as to support no other conclusion. Having determined this matter, as was its duty to do upon the entry of the plea of guilty (Penal Code, § 1192), nothing further remained for the trial court but to pronounce judgment. That it approached the performance of this difficult task with due regard for the serious consequences which might attend the appellant is evidenced by the careful manner in which it considered and determined the degree of the crime committed. That it saw fit to impose the extreme penalty fixed by the law is a matter resting within the exercise of the judicial discretion with which the trial court is vested by the supreme power of the state.

The granting or denying of permission to withdraw a plea of guilty, and to substitute a plea of not guilty, is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court, and its action must be upheld unless an abuse of such discretion clearly appears. There are no such peculiar or unusual circumstances in this case as to enable us to say the trial court should have acted differently in the matter. People v. Bostic, 167 Cal. 754, 760, 141 Pac. 380; People v. Dabner, supra.

Appeal—review of discretion in refusing leave to withdraw plea.

No legal questions are presented by the appeal which call for the intervention of this court. It follows, therefore, that the order appealed from must be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: Shaw, Ch. J.; Lawlor, J.; Wilbur, J.; Shurtleff, J.; Sloane, J.; Richards, Justice pro tem.

ANNOTATION.

Right to withdraw plea of guilty.

- I. General rule, 1445.
- II. Time of withdrawal, 1447.
- III. Circumstances justifying grant of leave to withdraw, 1450.

I. General rule.

When a defendant has pleaded guilty in a criminal case, it is within the discretion of the trial court to permit the plea to be withdrawn.

United States. — United States v. Billingsley (1917) 242 Fed. 330, affirmed in (1918) 161 C. C. A. 339, 249 Fed. 331.

Arkansas. — Greene v. State (1908) 88 Ark. 290, 114 S. W. 477; Joiner v. State (1910) 94 Ark. 198, 126 S. W. 723; Cox v. State (1914) 114 Ark. 234, 169 S. W. 789; Duncan v. State (1916) 125 Ark. 4, 187 S. W. 906. See also Wolfe v. State (1912) 102 Ark. 295, 144 S. W. 208, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 448.

California. — People v. Dabner (1908) 153 Cal. 398, 95 Pac. 880; People v. Bostic (1914) 167 Cal. 754, 141 Pac. 380; People v. Brown (1918) 38 Cal. App. 46, 175 Pac. 85; People v. Bellon (1919) 180 Cal. 706, 182 Pac. 420; People v. Breshi (1919) 44 Cal. App. 307, 186 Pac. 361; People v. Cosgrove (1920) — Cal. App. —, 192 Pac. 165. And see the reported case (PEOPLE v. MANRIQUEZ, ante, 1441).

Connecticut. — State v. Maresca (1912) 85 Conn. 509, 83 Atl. 635.

Florida. — Pope v. State (1908) 56 Fla. 81, 47 So. 487, 16 Ann. Cas. 972; Britton v. State (1914) 68 Fla. 438, 67 So. 142; Clay v. State (1921) — Fla. —, 89 So. 353.

Idaho. — State v. Raponi (1919) 32 Idaho, 368, 182 Pac. 855.

Illinois. — Krolage v. People (1906) 224 Ill. 456, 79 N. E. 570, 8 Ann. Cas. 235; People v. Walker (1911) 250 Ill. 427, 95 N. E. 475; People v. Stamatides (1921) 297 Ill. 582, 131 N. E. 197.

Indiana. — Conover v. State (1882) 86 Ind. 99; Myers v. State (1888) 115 Ind. 554, 18 N. E. 42; Monahan v. State (1893) 135 Ind. 216, 34 N. E. 967; Peters v. Koepke (1901) 156 Ind. 35, 59 N. E. 33; Meyers v. State (1901) 156

IV. Circumstances justifying refusal of leave to withdraw, 1454.

V. Effect of withdrawal, 1458.

Ind. 388, 59 N. E. 1052; Dobosky v. State (1915) 183 Ind. 488, 109 N. E. 742; Atkinson v. State (1920) — Ind. —, 128 N. E. 433.

Kansas. — State v. Yates (1894) 52 Kan. 566, 35 Pac. 209; State v. Pyle (1894) 52 Kan. 569, 35 Pac. 210; State v. Garrett (1908) 78 Kan. 882, 98 Pac. 219.

Kentucky. — See Little v. Com. (1911) 142 Ky. 92, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 133 S. W. 1149, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 241.

Louisiana. — State v. Delahoussaye (1885) 37 La. Ann. 551; State v. Jamerson (1897) 49 La. Ann. 597, 21 So. 728; State v. Boudreaux (1915) 137 La. 227, — A.L.R. —, 68 So. 422; State v. Dunham (1922) 149 La. 1013, 90 So. 387.

Massachusetts. — Com v. Hagarman (1865) 10 Allen, 401; Com v. Mahoney (1874) 115 Mass. 151; Com v. Ingersoll (1888) 145 Mass. 381, 14 N. E. 449; Com v. Wakelin (1918) 230 Mass. 567, 120 N. E. 209.

Minnesota. — State v. Olson (1911) 115 Minn. 153, 131 N. W. 1084; State v. Strum (1911) 115 Minn. 533, 131 N. W. 1086.

Mississippi. — Mastronada v. State (1882) 60 Miss. 86; Deloach v. State (1900) 77 Miss. 691, 27 So. 618; Turner v. State (1919) 121 Miss. 68, 83 So. 404.

Missouri. — State v. Stephens (1880) 71 Mo. 535.

Montana. — State v. Nicholas (1912) 46 Mont. 470, 128 Pac. 543.

New Hampshire. — State v. Cotton (1851) 24 N. H. 143.

New Jersey. — Clark v. State (1895) 57 N. J. L. 489, 31 Atl. 979; Clark v. State (1895) 58 N. J. L. 383, 34 Atl. 3.

North Carolina. — State v. Branner (1908) 149 N. C. 559, 63 S. E. 169.

Oklahoma.—Jenkins v. State (1914) 11 Okla. Crim. Rep. 168, 145 Pac. 500.

Oregon.—Curran v. State (1909) 53 Or. 154, 99 Pac. 420.

Pennsylvania. — Com. v. Joyce (1898) 7 Pa. Dist. R. 400. See also Com. v. Stephenson (1899) 9 Kulp, 561.

Vermont.—State v. Martin (1895) 68 Vt. 91, 34 Atl. 40.

Washington. — State v. Cimini (1909) 53 Wash. 268, 101 Pac. 891; State v. Wilmot (1917) 95 Wash. 326, 163 Pac. 742; State v. Scott (1918) 101 Wash. 199, 172 Pac. 234; State v. Anderson (1919) 109 Wash. 161, 186 Pac. 266.

West Virginia.—State v. Stevenson (1908) 64 W. Va. 392, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 713, 62 S. E. 688.

Wisconsin.—Barton v. State (1869) 23 Wis. 587.

England.—Rex v. Plummer [1902] 2 K. B. 339, 4 B. R. C. 917, 71 L. J. K. B. N. S. 805, 86 L. T. N. S. 836, 51 Week. Rep. 137, 66 J. P. 647, 20 Cox, C. C. 249, 18 Times L. R. 659.

The court said in State v. Garrett (Kan.) supra: "It has been announced so often that if a defendant in a criminal case enter a plea of guilty it is within the discretion of the court whether it will allow the plea to be withdrawn and a plea of not guilty to be entered, that the proposition does not need reiteration."

Some courts hold that this discretion is an absolute one, the exercise of which will not be reviewed. Com. v. Hagarman (Mass.) supra; Com. v. Mahoney (1874) 115 Mass. 151; Com. v. Ingersoll (1888) 145 Mass. 381, 14 N. E. 449; Clark v. State (N. J.) supra.

The better rule, however, is that the exercise of the discretion is subject to review, and that a reversal will be granted where an abuse of discretion is shown.

Arkansas.—Greene v. State (1908) 88 Ark. 290, 114 S. W. 477; Cox v. State (1914) 114 Ark. 234, 169 S. W. 789.

California.—People v. McCrory (1871) 41 Cal. 458; People v. Dabner (1908) 153 Cal. 398, 95 Pac. 880; People v. Bostic (1914) 167 Cal. 754, 141 Pac. 380; People v. Cosgrove (1920) — Cal. App. —, 192 Pac. 165.

Connecticut.—State v. Maresca (1912) 85 Conn. 509, 83 Atl. 635.

Florida.—Pope v. State (1908) 56 Fla. 81, 47 So. 487, 16 Ann. Cas. 972.

Idaho.—State v. Raponi (1919) 32 Idaho, 368, 182 Pac. 855.

Indiana.—Myers v. State (1888) 115 Ind. 554, 18 N. E. 42; Monahan v. State (1893) 135 Ind. 216, 34 N. E. 967; Atkinson v. State (1920) — Ind. —, 128 N. E. 433.

Kansas.—State v. Yates (1894) 52 Kan. 566, 35 Pac. 209; State v. Pyle (1894) 52 Kan. 569, 35 Pac. 210.

Louisiana.—State v. Dunham (1922) 149 La. 1013, 90 So. 387.

Mississippi.—Turner v. State (1919) 121 Miss. 68, 83 So. 404.

Montana.—State v. Nicholas (1912) 46 Mont. 470, 128 Pac. 543.

Oregon.—Curran v. State, supra.

Washington.—State v. Cimini, supra.

West Virginia.—State v. Stevenson, supra.

As was said in Pope v. State (Fla.) supra: "The law favors trials on the merits; and if the discretion of the trial court is abused in denying leave to withdraw a plea of guilty and to go to trial on the merits, the appellate court may interfere."

The correct rule as to permitting the withdrawal of a plea of guilty was said, in State v. Raponi (Idaho) supra, to be that "the matter is discretionary with the trial court, that the discretion should be liberally exercised, and that a refusal of such permission can be reviewed only as to the question of whether the trial court has exercised judicial discretion as distinguished from arbitrary action."

But the trial court's discretion will not be disturbed unless it clearly appears to have been abused. Joiner v. State (1910) 94 Ark. 198, 126 S. W. 723; Conover v. State (1882) 86 Ind. 99; Pattee v. State (1887) 109 Ind. 545, 10 N. E. 421.

It will be observed, of course, that the court has no discretion to withhold a request for the withdrawal of a plea of guilty where it is acting without jurisdiction of the offense charged (Gretsch v. United States (1917) 155 C. C. A. 485, 242 Fed. 897, which has writ of certiorari denied in (1917) 245

U. S. 654, 62 L. ed. 532, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 12); or where the plea is conditioned in an invalid agreement (Wolfe v. State (1912) 102 Ark. 295, 144 S. W. 208, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 448).

In the case last mentioned the court said: "The law does not authorize any such agreements as here entered into with the prosecuting attorney, and pleas of guilty cannot be accepted on condition that the fines imposed by statute as a result of a violation of the law will be pretermitted provided the offenders do not commit similar offenses in the future. There is no authority in the statute 'for a plea of guilty to be entered and received on any kind of condition, or for judgment to be suspended on condition.' . . . Under the law a party is either guilty or not guilty; and when he enters a plea of guilty upon the indictment under a statute which he has violated, the law fixes the punishment, which it is not in the discretion of the court to withhold unless the plea of guilty is withdrawn. . . . While it is within the discretion of the court to permit a plea of guilty to be withdrawn, it is not within the power of the court to withhold the punishment if the plea of guilty is not withdrawn. Kirby's Dig. § 2296. In the case, since the court finds that the appellant's pleas of guilty were entered upon condition, it results that they were not such pleas of guilty as the law authorizes or contemplates, and therefore the court was not justified in inflicting punishment upon such pleas. . . . Here the question is as to whether or not the court has the discretion to allow a plea of guilty to be entered upon a condition, and thereafter render a judgment against and impose a punishment upon the party entering such plea, because he had failed to comply with the conditions upon which the plea was entered. The whole proceeding was without authority of law and void. The court should have granted appellant's motion for a new trial and have allowed him to enter his plea of not guilty, as requested. It was not within the discretion of the court, upon the showing made in this record, to withhold such request."

In Michigan, it is provided by statute (Comp. Stat. 1915, § 15,830, subsec. 1) that whenever a judge shall have reason to doubt the truth of a plea of guilty, "it shall be his duty to vacate the same, direct a plea of not guilty to be entered, and order a trial of the issue thus formed." People v. Utter (1920) 209 Mich. 214, 176 N. W. 424; People v. Merhige (1920) 212 Mich. 601, 180 N. W. 418.

On a motion to withdraw a plea of guilty, the state may introduce evidence in regard to the matters presented thereby, and may call and cross-examine persons who have made and filed affidavits in support of the motion. Conover v. State (1882) 86 Ind. 99.

In Georgia by statute a plea of guilty may be withdrawn as a matter of right at any time before sentence is pronounced, while in Iowa by statute, withdrawal is of right before judgment. See the following subdivision of this note.

II. Time of withdrawal.

The holding of the various courts are not uniform as to the time of the withdrawal of a plea of guilty. In some jurisdictions the rule obtains that the court may permit the withdrawal of a plea of guilty at any time before judgment or sentence. Greene v. State (1908) 88 Ark. 291, 114 S. W. 477; Joiner v. State (1910) 94 Ark. 198, 126 S. W. 723; People v. Dabner (1908) 153 Cal. 398, 95 Pac. 880; Curran v. State (1909) 53 Or. 154, 99 Pac. 420; State v. Cimini (1909) 53 Wash. 268, 101 Pac. 891.

Other courts hold that the plea may be withdrawn either before or after judgment or sentence. State v. Raponi (1919) 32 Idaho, 368, 182 Pac. 855; Sanders v. State (1882) 85 Ind. 318, 44 Am. Rep. 29; Myers v. State (1888) 115 Ind. 554, 18 N. E. 42; Meyers v. State (1901) 156 Ind. 388, 59 N. E. 1052; State v. Olson (1911) 115 Minn. 153, 131 N. W. 1084; State v. Strum (1911) 115 Minn. 533, 131 N. W. 1086; State v. Kring (1880) 71 Mo. 551; Swang v. State (1865) 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 212, 88 Am. Dec. 593.

In England the plea may be withdrawn after verdict has been rendered. Reg. v. Clouter (1859) 8 Cox, C. C. (Eng.) 237. But the right to withdraw the plea after judgment has been denied by the English courts. Reg. v. Sell (1840) 9 Car. & P. (Eng.) 346; Rex v. Plummer [1902] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 339, 4 B. R. C. 917, 71 L. J. K. B. N. S. 805, 86 L. T. N. S. 836, 51 Week. Rep. 137, 66 J. P. 647, 20 Cox, C. C. 243, 18 Times L. R. 659.

And this seems to be the rule in Kentucky, subject to the qualification that, to authorize its withdrawal after verdict, there must exist such reasons as would be sufficient to justify the granting of a new trial. Mounts v. Com. (1889) 89 Ky. 274, 12 S. W. 311.

In Texas a plea of guilty may be withdrawn at any time before the retirement of the jury. Alexander v. State (1912) 69 Tex. Crim. Rep. 23, 152 S. W. 436. And such course should be followed when the evidence offered to enable the jury to fix the punishment shows a state of case under which, if true, the accused would not be guilty of any crime, as, for instance, the insanity of the accused. Taylor v. State (1918) 88 Tex. Crim. Rep. 470, 227 S. W. 679.

Where the defendant, after having pleaded guilty, has moved in arrest of judgment, and that motion has been denied, it is within the discretion of the court to allow the plea to be withdrawn. State v. Cotton (1851) 24 N. H. 143. And under these circumstances, should justice require, the court should permit a withdrawal of the plea of guilty and the substitution of the plea of not guilty. State v. Stephens (1880) 71 Mo. 535.

It has been held that where a defendant pleads guilty in a municipal or police court, and appeals from the sentence, he cannot of right claim a trial by jury, but may be sentenced on his original plea in the court below, unless he is given leave to plead anew. Com. v. Mahoney (1874) 115 Mass. 151; Com. v. Ingersoll (1888) 145 Mass. 381, 14 N. E. 449; Com. v. Crapo (1912) 212 Mass. 209, 98 N. E. 702. Accordingly, where a defendant pleaded guilty to a charge of assault and battery, in a municipal court, and appealed from the sentence pronounced to the superior court, it was held that the superior court properly refused a withdrawal of the plea, inasmuch as the defendant stated no reason and offered no evidence in support of his request. Com. v. Winton (1871) 108 Mass. 485.

To the same effect, see Com. v. Crapo (Mass.) supra.

And in State v. Martin (1895) 68 Vt. 91, 34 Atl. 40, wherein the defendant entered a plea of guilty in a justice's court, and appealed to the county court, it was held that it was within the discretion of the county court to allow the plea to be withdrawn or to enter judgment thereon, and that it was not error to refuse a withdrawal, even though the defendant offered testimony that such had been the settled practice of the county courts for a number of years.

It was held in Com. v. Hagarman (1865) 10 Allen (Mass.) 401, wherein the defendant pleaded guilty before a magistrate and was duly sentenced, that his admission of guilt in the court below and the proof of the admission in the record were competent and sufficient to authorize a verdict against him.

The action of the circuit court in dismissing an appeal from the justice's court was held proper in Stokes v. State (1916) 122 Ark. 56, 182 S. W. 521, and in Duncan v. State (1916) 125 Ark. 4, 187 S. W. 906, wherein it appeared that the defendant pleaded guilty before the justice and permission to withdraw the plea had been refused.

On the other hand, it has been held, under a statute authorizing appeals from judgments of justices of the peace in criminal cases, that the defendant, as a matter of right, may withdraw, in the circuit court, a plea of guilty entered in the court below. Holtman v. Com. (1908) 129 Ky. 710, 112 S. W. 851; People v. Richmond (1885) 57 Mich. 399, 24 N. W. 124, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 541. And the same result has been reached in the absence of statute. Anonymous (1809) 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 437. In People v.

Richmond (Mich.) supra, it is said: "In all cases of appeal from a criminal conviction on a plea of guilty, we think it is the right of the accused to withdraw his plea of guilty and have the case retried upon the merits. We think the object of the law granting a right of appeal in case of conviction was for the purpose of according to the accused a retrial in the circuit or appellate court. This end would be defeated if it rests in the discretion of the appellate court to permit a withdrawal of the plea of guilty for the purpose of pleading to the merits. Under the construction we give to the statute the accused was entitled, as matter of right, to withdraw his plea of guilty and interpose the plea of not guilty. This construction, we think, is in accord with the principles of justice and the manifest intent of the legislature."

In Georgia, under a statute (§ 971 of the Penal Code of 1910) declaring that "at any time before judgment is pronounced, the prisoner may withdraw the plea of 'guilty,' and plead 'not guilty,'" he has the right to withdraw his plea of guilty before sentence is pronounced, but after sentence is pronounced it ceases to be a right of the prisoner, and then may be allowed in the discretion of the court. Davis v. State (1856) 20 Ga. 674; Griffin v. State (1913) 12 Ga. App. 615, 77 S. E. 1080; Woodward v. State (1913) 13 Ga. App. 130, 78 S. E. 1009; Bearden v. State (1913) 13 Ga. App. 264, 79 S. E. 79; Polston v. State (1915) 15 Ga. App. 632, 83 S. E. 1101; Nobles v. State (1915) 17 Ga. App. 382, 86 S. E. 1073; Sanders v. State (1916) 18 Ga. App. 786, 90 S. E. 728; Farley v. State (1919) 23 Ga. App. 151, 97 S. E. 870; Walker v. State (1921) — Ga. App. —, 107 S. E. 898; Smith v. State (1921) — Ga. App. —, 108 S. E. 121.

In Woodward v. State (1913) 13 Ga. App. 130, 78 S. E. 1009, supra, the defendant pleaded guilty and asked the court to postpone sentence until a subsequent day, which request was granted. On the last day of the term, when sentence was to be imposed, the defendant moved that he be permitted to withdraw his plea of guilty and to enter a plea of not guilty, which was refused. It was held that the defendant had the absolute right to withdraw the plea. The court said: "The right which the statute gives to the prisoner to withdraw his plea of guilty before judgment is pronounced is without qualification. If, however, the trial judge should be satisfied that the prisoner is endeavoring to perpetrate a fraud upon the court by first pleading not guilty and then withdrawing that plea and then pleading guilty, and then again withdrawing the latter plea and again pleading not guilty, for the purpose of delaying his trial, or of taking advantage of the fact that the juries for the term have been discharged and the witnesses for the state have been excused, the judge would be justified in not allowing the prisoner to exercise this right; but this would require very clear and strong proof of misconduct on the part of the prisoner or his counsel. The fact that, if the prisoner is allowed to withdraw his plea of guilty, his case cannot be tried at the term in which this occurs, or that the state's witnesses have been discharged, and that the case would have to be continued, would not be sufficient to deprive the prisoner of this statutory right. It should further appear that this situation has been brought about designedly by the prisoner, for the purpose of misleading or deceiving the court in the manner indicated. The record does not show that this was the purpose of the prisoner or his counsel, and it will not be assumed that such was the purpose. The prisoner had only once entered a plea of guilty, and counsel had asked that sentence be postponed, presumably for the purpose of allowing him to procure exculpatory statements or affidavits in behalf of his client. While the record does not show the fact, it is fair to presume that between the entering of the plea of guilty and the day for imposition of sentence, the attorney for the prisoner, or the prisoner himself, may have discovered evidence in his favor. It is not the purpose of the law to invite pleas of guilty by persons charged with crime, but rather is it the purpose of the law to guarantee to all persons charged with crime a trial by a jury. Before depriving a man of his liberty or his property, trial judges would prefer to hear all the evidence and to have the support of a verdict of a jury upon that evidence, rather than impose sentence based upon a plea of guilty."

In Sanders v. State (1916) 18 Ga. App. 786, 90 S. E. 728, wherein it appeared that sentence had been pronounced orally, it was held that the defendant could not thereafter, as a matter of right, withdraw his plea of guilty. The court said: "Pronounce means to utter formally, officially, or solemnly; to declare or affirm; and it has been held that as used in a statute providing that when a defendant has been convicted in two or more cases, and the punishment in each is confinement in the penitentiary, the judgment and sentence shall be rendered and pronounced in each case in the same manner as if there had been but one conviction, it means to utter formally and solemnly the judgment of the court and order the same to be carried into execution. . . . To permit a person to withdraw his plea of guilty after the presiding judge has informed him orally what his written sentence will be would be trifling with the law, unless some fraud or intimidation was practised upon him to secure such plea."

The Iowa statute providing that "at any time before judgment the court may permit the plea of guilty to be withdrawn, and other plea or pleas substituted," has been held to be mandatory; and under this statute it is error to deny a motion for the withdrawal of a plea of guilty if the motion is made at any time before final judgment is formally pronounced. State v. Hortman (1904) 122 Iowa, 104, 97 N. W. 981. Where a defendant entered a plea of guilty to an indictment for a nuisance, he was allowed to withdraw the plea before judgment. State v. Oehlshlager (1874) 38 Iowa, 297. But where it appeared that there was no agreement as to what the punishment of defendant would be, the mere fact that he was surprised at the extent thereof was held not to be a good ground for withdrawal of the plea after sentence. State v. Buck (1882) 59 Iowa, 382, 13 N. W. 342.

Under the foregoing statute and a further provision, regulating appeals from justices of the peace in criminal cases, that "the cause when thus appealed should stand for trial, as an issue of fact on an indictment in the district court," it has been held error for a district court, on appeal, to refuse the withdrawal of a plea of guilty entered in a justice's court. State v. Kraft (1860) 10 Iowa, 330; State v. Farlee (1888) 74 Iowa, 451, 38 N. E. 155, reversing on rehearing (1887) — Iowa, —, 31 N. W. 952.

It has been held that the judgment understood in the statute first quoted has reference to the pronouncement by the court, rather than to the entry thereof in the records. Beatty v. Roberts (1904) 125 Iowa, 619, 101 N. W. 462. Where a defendant pleaded guilty to a violation of a permanent decree of injunction restraining the illegal sale of liquor, it was held that such plea could not be withdrawn after judgment pronounced in the written opinion of the court. Ibid. See also State v. Reiningham (1876) 43 Iowa, 149.

III. Circumstances justifying grant of leave to withdraw.

As the withdrawal of a plea of guilty is within the discretion of the court, and as this discretion is exercised on the facts of each particular case, it is difficult to lay down a general rule covering all the circumstances under which a plea of guilty may be withdrawn. However, it has been held that the withdrawal of a plea of guilty should not be denied in any case where it is in the least evident that the ends of justice will be subserved by permitting not guilty to be pleaded in its place, and that the least surprise or influence causing a defendant to plead guilty when he has any defense at all should be sufficient cause to permit a change of plea from guilty to not guilty. State v.

Williams (1893) 45 La. Ann. 1357, 14 So. 32.

The plea of guilty to a serious criminal charge should be freely and voluntarily made and entered by the accused, without a semblance of coercion, and without fear or duress of any kind, and the accused should be permitted to withdraw a plea of guilty entered unadvisedly when application therefor is duly made in good faith and sustained by proofs, and a proper offer is made to go to trial on a plea of not guilty. Clay v. State (1921) — Fla. —, 89 So. 353.

It was held in Deloach v. State (1900) 77 Miss. 691, 27 So. 618, that the court erred in refusing a withdrawal of a plea of guilty, it appearing that the defendant submitted his own affidavit of innocence and the testimony of several persons in his favor, one of whom testified that he considered him insane, and the others of whom testified that he was weak-minded.

So, in People v. Scott (1881) 59 Cal. 341, wherein the evidence was sufficient to raise a doubt respecting the condition of the defendant's mind at the time his plea of guilty was interposed to a charge of the crime of incest, it was held error to deny a motion, made before judgment was pronounced, for leave to withdraw the plea.

So, where the defendant had been arraigned before a city police judge in the presence of a large crowd, that he was very much excited, and was not asked whether he wanted an attorney or given an opportunity to secure one, and that the judge construed an admission of the defendant that he had sold beer in original packages as a plea of guilty to a charge of violating the liquor laws of the city, and that was done so hurriedly and under so much excitement that the defendant did not know what was going on or being done, and was not aware that he had had a hearing until he sent for and procured counsel, it was held in Salina v. Cooper (1890) 45 Kan. 12, 25 Pac. 233, that the district court, on appeal, erred in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw his plea of guilty.

In State v. Nicholas (1912) 46 Mont. 470, 128 Pac. 543, the defendant, while protesting his innocence, entered a plea of guilty on the urgent representations of his counsel that he was certain to be convicted and would receive a milder sentence if he pleaded guilty. The evidence taken at the time of sentence raised a serious doubt of the defendant's guilt. It was held that it was an abuse of discretion to deny a request to withdraw the plea of guilty.

It was held to be reversible error in Little v. Com. (1911) 142 Ky. 92, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 133 S. W. 1149, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 241, not to permit a plea of guilty to be withdrawn where it appeared that the defendant was induced to enter the plea because he believed, and was so advised, that it was the only means by which he could escape being taken from the jail and hung by a mob.

In Batchelor v. State (1920) 189 Ind. 69, 125 N. E. 773, the court said: "It appears that the court advised appellant, before he entered his plea, that, if he pleaded guilty, that would give the court the right to punish him according to law; but it is not shown that the court told him what penalty the law authorized the court to inflict. After the plea and before accepting it, the court asked appellant if he understood that it became the duty of the court to impose the penalty as provided by law; but the court at no time informed him that if he pleaded guilty to murder in the first degree it would be the duty of the court to impose on him the penalty of death or that of imprisonment for life, and that the court in its discretion would determine whether the penalty to be imposed should be death or the lesser penalty of imprisonment for life. He was not informed that, in case he was tried by a jury and found guilty of murder in the first degree, the jury, in its discretion, would have the right to decide whether the penalty to be imposed should be death or imprisonment for life, and that by pleading guilty he waived the right to have a jury exercise its discretion as to that matter. Under such circumstances, it cannot be said that appellant voluntarily entered his plea of guilty with full and perfect knowledge of the consequences of such a plea." To the same effect, see Bielich v. State (1920) 189 Ind. 127, 126 N. E. 220.

In People v. McCrory (1871) 41 Cal. 458, wherein there was nothing to show that the application of the defendant to withdraw a plea of guilty was not made in good faith, or that the entry of the plea and motion to withdraw it was a mere artifice, intended for delay, and where it appeared that the trial court improperly denied the defendant's motion for a continuance and forced him to trial in the absence of his witnesses, it was held that the defendant should have been allowed to withdraw the plea, and that, in denying his motion for leave to do so, the trial court abused its discretion.

Likewise, a plea of guilty should be permitted to be withdrawn where it has been entered under a total misapprehension of the defendant's rights through official misrepresentation or fraud (Swang v. State (1865) 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 212, 88 Am. Dec. 593; see also Com. v. Gerrity, 1 Lack. Leg. Rec. (Pa.) 430); as, where the trial court or the prosecuting attorney induces the defendant in a criminal prosecution, by threats or promises, to enter a plea of guilty, and the defendant is thereby overreached or deceived, even in respect to the quantum of punishment. People v. Walker (1911) 250 Ill. 427, 95 N. E. 475; People v. Byzon (1915) 267 Ill. 498, 108 N. E. 685; Myers v. State (1888) 115 Ind. 554, 18 N. E. 42; Mounts v. Com. (1889) 89 Ky. 274, 12 S. W. 311; State v. Stephens (1880) 71 Mo. 535; State v. Kring (1880) 71 Mo. 551.

In People v. Walker (Ill.) supra, the court said: "It must be presumed . . . that the court discharged its duty. . . . But independently, entirely, of this question, it was a matter within the sound legal discretion of the judge to vacate the judgment and permit the plaintiff in error to withdraw his plea of guilty and allow him to submit his case to a jury if it appeared that such plea had been entered unadvisedly or through a misapprehension, in consequence of the misrepresentation of his counsel. If, as he testifies in his affidavit, his attorney had assured him that he had arranged with the state's attorney that the bigamy charge was to be dropped, it is not unreasonable that the plaintiff in error would follow the advice of his counsel and enter a plea of guilty, expecting and believing that in some way he would not be imprisoned on said charge."

In People v. Byzon (1915) 267 Ill. 498, 108 N. E. 685, wherein it appeared that the defendant was induced to plead guilty by a policeman, under the belief that he would be released on probation, it was held an abuse of discretion not to permit the withdrawal of the plea, although the court fully advised the defendant of the consequences of his plea. The court said: "It is urged on behalf of the people that when the court, as required by statute, fully advised the defendant, on a plea of guilty, of the consequences of such plea, the explanation by the court was sufficient to advise the defendant that any previous representations made to him or any hope he may have entertained of securing leniency by reason of such plea would not avail. While this is true, it is provided by the probation law, on which plaintiff in error relied, that any defendant who has never been convicted of any crime or misdemeanor, who has entered a plea of guilty or been found guilty by the verdict of a jury or the finding of a court of certain offenses enumerated in the act, and nothing remains to be done by the court except to pronounce sentence, may request the judge who presided at his trial to be admitted to release on probation. In any way that we look at this case, it is apparent from the record that the plaintiff in error was not sufficiently advised of his rights or the method of procedure to request the court to be admitted to release under the probation law. Under such circumstances, the fact that the court fully advised plaintiff in error of the consequences of his plea was not enough to remove the misapprehension under which he pleaded guilty."

In People v. Joyce (1886) 4 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 341, wherein an application to withdraw a plea of guilty was denied by the judge, under a misapprehension of the facts, it was held to be an abuse of his judicial discretion, and error.

So, the court should permit a plea of guilty to be withdrawn, where it was entered by mistake. Davis v. State (1856) 20 Ga. 674; State v. Williams (1893) 45 La. Ann. 1357, 14 So. 32; State v. Coston (1904) 113 La. 717, 37 So. 619; Reg. v. Clouter (1859) 8 Cox, C. C. (Eng.) 237.

Thus, in Davis v. State (Ga.) supra, wherein it appeared that a defendant, on arraignment, pleaded guilty by mistake to one of several indictments against him, when he intended to plead to another, it was held that the error could be corrected, even though an entry of the plea had been made on the indictment and on the minutes of the court.

And permission to withdraw the plea should be granted where it was entered through fear. Sanders v. State (1882) 85 Ind. 318; Swang v. State (1865) 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 212, 88 Am. Dec. 593. It was said in the case first cited: "All men are by our laws entitled to a fair trial, in absolute freedom from restraint and entire liberty from fear of threats and violence. It is almost a mockery to call that a trial, or a judicial hearing, which condemns an accused upon a plea of guilty forced from his reluctant counsel by threats of an angry and excited mob, and interposed because they believed that to proceed with a trial upon a plea of not guilty would result in the hanging of their client by lawless men. A man who makes a promissory note because of fear is entitled to relief. A man who executes a deed under duress is entitled to judicial assistance. A will executed under the influence of fear falls before the law. These are small things when compared with life and liberty, and yet in the eyes of the law they are null. If such things are null when procured by fear, or extorted by violence, should not a plea be so, when to have refused it would have been to put in jeopardy the life of the man arraigned upon a charge of felony? In many respects the facts of this case go far beyond that of ordinary cases of duress; for here the officers of the law—judge, sheriffs, and jailers—were inspired with fear of violence; counsel of age and experience, influenced by the appearance of danger which surrounded their client, secured from him a reluctant acquiescence to the plea of guilty. More than this, the accused, if not at the time absolutely insane and incapable of understanding what he did, was weak and enfeebled in mind, and, as his counsel express it, 'lost and bewildered.'"

That a plea of guilty was entered under a misconception of the nature of the charge has been held to justify the granting of leave to withdraw. State v. Maresca (1912) 85 Conn. 509, 83 Atl. 635; Farley v. State (1919) 23 Ga. App. 151, 97 S. E. 870; Gardner v. People (1883) 106 Ill. 76; Reg. v. Clouter (Eng.) supra.

Thus, in Gardner v. People (1883) 106 Ill. 76, supra, wherein a young man between nineteen and twenty years of age, who was charged with the crime of murder, and who was unable to speak or understand the English language, pleaded guilty through an interpreter, who stated to the court that the accused did not understand his situation or "the relation of things," it was held error to refuse a withdrawal of the plea.

To the same effect, see State v. Maresca (Conn.) supra, wherein the court said: "If the accused . . . pleaded guilty, without fully understanding the significance and effect of his answers, and of his plea of guilty, the judgment and sentence should, under the circumstances, have been opened and the accused permitted to withdraw his plea of guilty. . . . The accused was an illiterate Italian, having but an imperfect knowledge of our language. The trial judge can hardly have intended by his finding, to say that the accused fully realized the difference between an assault with intent to kill and an assault with intent to murder, or the different punishments which might be imposed for the commission of a first and of a second offense. . . . In view of the serious character of the charge in the information, and its punishment, the trial court, upon the facts and circumstances disclosed by the record, should have granted the motion of the defendant's counsel, and should have opened the judgment and permitted the accused to withdraw his plea of guilty."

In Farley v. State (1919) 23 Ga. App. 151, 97 S. E. 870, it was said: "Where a defendant in a criminal case has entered a plea of guilty, and sentence has been pronounced thereon, he cannot as a matter of right withdraw the plea. His motion to be allowed to do so is addressed to the sound, legal discretion of the court, and the judgment thereon will not be controlled unless a manifest abuse of such discretion appears. Where, however, in such a case the accused, during the same term of court, files a written motion to be allowed to withdraw his plea of guilty, and, from uncontradicted evidence in support of the motion, it appears that the plea was entered under a misapprehension by him as to the offense to which he was pleading guilty, and that he thought he was pleading guilty to another offense, refusal to grant the motion is an abuse of discretion."

Under a statute providing that "at any time before judgment the court may permit the plea of guilty to be withdrawn and a plea of not guilty substituted," it has been held to be error to refuse the withdrawal of a plea of guilty after the introduction of evidence by the state, where it appears that the plea was entered upon the idea that the court would require the commonwealth to observe the custom prevailing in the court not to introduce evidence on a plea of guilty. Williams v. Com. (1904) 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2041, 80 S. W. 173.

On the trial of two persons indicted for forgery, where one of them withdrew a plea of not guilty and entered a plea of guilty under a misconception of the nature of the charge, the plea of guilty and the verdict of the jury pronounced thereon were permitted to be withdrawn. Reg. v. Clouter (1859) 8 Cox, C. C. (Eng.) 237.

Similarly, where, on the trial of three persons charged with conspiracy, two of them were acquitted, it was held to be error to refuse to allow the withdrawal of a plea of guilty entered by the third defendant. Rex v. Plummer [1902] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 339, 4 B. R. C. 917, 71 L. J. K. B. N. S. 805, 86 L. T. N. S. 836, 51 Week. Rep. 137, 66 J. P. 647, 20 Cox, C. C. 243, 18 Times L. R. 659.

In United States v. Dixon (1807) 1 Cranch, C. C. 414, Fed. Cas. No. 14,968, wherein the prisoner was charged with a capital offense, the court explained to him the nature of his offense and its punishment. He withdrew a plea of not guilty, and pleaded guilty. Later, when the prisoner was brought up for sentence, the court again explained the nature of the penalty and offered the privilege of withdrawing his plea of guilty, which the prisoner accepted.

IV. Circumstances justifying refusal of leave to withdraw.

As the presumption is in favor of the ruling of the trial court, its denial of an application to be permitted to withdraw a plea of guilty and to plead not guilty and defend will, as a rule, be sustained, where the record discloses no ground for the application, or where it appears from the record that the court's ruling was based on conflicting evidence which it was compelled to weigh to reach a conclusion. Dobosky v. State (1915) 183 Ind. 488, 109 N. E. 742; Atkinson v. State (1920) — Ind. —, 128 N. E. 433.

In Greene v. State (1908) 88 Ark. 290, 114 S. W. 477, wherein the defendant pleaded guilty to several indictments for violations of the liquor law "upon condition that he should pay a fine of $500, in one case, and that no fine should ever be assessed against him in the other two cases unless he again should be convicted of violating the liquor laws of the state," and he was subsequently convicted for the same offense, it was held that it was no abuse of the court's discretion to refuse to allow the plea to be withdrawn, and that judgment could be entered against him on his plea. To the same effect, see Joiner v. State (1910) 94 Ark. 198, 126 S. W. 723.

In United States v. Bayaud (1883) 21 Blatchf. 217, 23 Fed. 721, it appeared that four indictments were found against certain persons for violations of the internal revenue laws. Two of these indictments were consolidated by order of the court. On the trial, before the entry of a plea of guilty, it was understood between the counsel for the prisoners and the prosecuting officer that in case the defendants should plead guilty to the consolidated indictments, the prosecuting officer would enter a nolle prosequi on the other two indictments, and would not move for sentence on the consolidated indictments until the prisoners had had an opportunity to make an effort to effect a compromise of their case in Washington. It appeared that the plea of guilty was not made under any misapprehension or mistake, and that the suggestion of such a plea came to the prosecuting officer from the defendants' counsel, without suggestion, promise, or inducement by him. Under these circumstances it was held that the promise to quash the other indictments did not afford inducement to the plea of guilty of such a character as to make it proper for the court to refuse to receive it, and that the plea could not be withdrawn.

Where it appeared that in pleading to an indictment containing two counts, one for burglary and the other for larceny, the defendant pleaded guilty of larceny, and it was apparent from the record that when he entered the plea he could not have been mistaken as to what he was doing, it was held that he would not be allowed to say that he acted in error. State v. Crane (1908) 121 La. 1039, 46 So. 1009.

Unless the evidence is of doubtful sufficiency to support a conviction, the fact that a defendant, knowing his rights and the consequences of his act, hopes or believes, or is led by his counsel, or others, to hope or believe, that he will receive a milder punishment by pleading guilty than that which would fall to his lot after trial and conviction by a jury, presents no ground for the exercise of the discretion necessary to permit a plea of guilty to be withdrawn. See the reported case (PEOPLE v. MANRIQUEZ, ante, 1441).

Thus, where a defendant, who was of the age of eighteen years, had contrary to the advice of his counsel, but in accordance with the wishes of his father, and in the hope of securing leniency in the infliction of punishment, pleaded guilty to a charge of murder, and all the facts showed that the crime was without extenuating circumstances, it was held that it was no abuse of the court's discretion to refuse permission to withdraw the plea when the defendant came to the bar for sentence and after he had discovered that death would be the penalty. The court said: "It thus appears that the defendant was given five days for deliberation as to his plea; that during this time he had the counsel and advice of three attorneys, all urging him to plead not guilty; that he was fully informed by them as to the difference in the procedure if he pleaded guilty, from that to be had if he pleaded not guilty, and that the court also explained to him the course of procedure. His own testimony taken in these proceedings indicates that he is a young man of at least ordinary intelligence and quickness of apprehension, while that of others tended to show that he was possessed of considerable shrewdness and cunning. It must be conceded that the court justly concluded that the defendant made his plea after ample time for deliberation, and not in ignorance of the law or facts, nor of the course of procedure to be followed, and with full knowledge thereof. Doubtless he was prompted by the hope that he would escape death and be condemned only to imprisonment, and he seems to have been induced to indulge this hope largely by the suggestions and advice of his father. But we do not think this fact of sufficient force to have required the court to permit a withdrawal of this plea after the event had proven that his hope was vain. If this were so, then the punishment upon a plea of guilty must always be something less than the greatest allowed by law, for the defendant, in pleading guilty, always hopes for less, and if his disappointment was sufficient to give the right to withdraw the plea, it would, in such a case, always be withdrawn. It was not until the court had declared that the penalty would be death, and after a subsequent delay of six days, that the defendant applied to withdraw and change his plea." People v. Dabner (1908) 153 Cal. 398, 95 Pac. 880.

Likewise, where it appeared that the defendant, who was of the age of sixteen years, had pleaded guilty to the charge of larceny, having been induced thereto by the statement of a third person having no authority to speak that his punishment would be suspended during good behavior under this plea, and it further appeared that the defendant had had ample opportunity to withdraw the plea after having knowledge that he would receive punishment and after having been told by the trial judge what the punishment would be, it was held no abuse of the court's discretion to refuse permission to withdraw the plea after sentence had been pronounced. Monahan v. State (1893) 135 Ind. 216, 34 N. E. 967.

And, where a defendant was induced to enter a plea of guilty to a charge of violating the liquor law, as the result of a conversation between his friends and the prosecuting attorney, but without any definite promise of a lesser punishment being made by the prosecuting attorney, and the prosecuting attorney was not guilty of bad faith, it was held no abuse of the court's discretion to refuse to allow the plea to be withdrawn after sentence had been pronounced. State v. Yates (1894) 52 Kan. 566, 35 Pac. 209; State v. Pyle (1894) 52 Kan. 569, 35 Pac. 210.

So, where a prisoner, acting under the advice of counsel and with the knowledge of his rights and of the consequences of his act, withdraws a plea of not guilty to a charge of murder and enters a plea of guilty, it is within the discretion of the court to refuse to permit him to withdraw the latter plea; and this discretion will not be revised on appeal where it does not appear from the evidence received for the purpose of determining the degree of the crime that a lesser punishment was called for than that which the trial court imposed. People v. Lennox (1885) 67 Cal. 113, 7 Pac. 260, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 542; People v. Miller (1896) 114 Cal. 10, 45 Pac. 986. To the same effect, see Mounts v. Com. (1889) 89 Ky. 274, 12 S. W. 311.

A like conclusion was reached where the defendant withdrew a plea of not guilty and substituted a plea of guilty, speculating on the anticipated clemency of the trial judge, and, upon learning that his expectation in that behalf would not be realized, attempted to retract his plea of guilty. The court said: "The motion was addressed to the discretion of the court, and, under the circumstances of the case, it not being shown that there was any abuse of discretion, the action of the court must stand." People v. Brown (1918) 38 Cal. App. 46, 175 Pac. 85.

Where, on a motion to withdraw a plea of guilty, the defendant's affidavit did not aver that he was innocent, but showed that he was an old offender and that the plea had been induced by reason of the fact that a mild penalty had been inflicted, under a plea of guilty, on a previous occasion, and where it appeared that the only reason for a withdrawal was that the defendant was alarmed by a rumor that he was to be more severely dealt with than before, it was held that there was no error in refusing to permit defendant to withdraw his plea, the court saying: "The action of the court probably and properly taught him that the infliction of the lowest penalty for a first offense, instead of conferring a vested right to the same measure of punishment for a second, rather suggests the propriety of so increasing the penalty that it may effectually deter from a recurrence of a third." Mastronada v. State (1882) 60 Miss. 86.

Similarly, where the defendant made no request for the court to appoint counsel for him, and, on his motion to set aside the plea of guilty, did not offer to introduce any testimony tending to prove his innocence of the crime charged, and his testimony was not sufficient to show that he was induced to enter a plea of guilty under a misapprehension of the facts, it was held that there was no abuse of the court's discretion. Cox v. State (1914) 114 Ark. 234, 169 S. W. 789.

If a defendant, on entering a plea of guilty, states his version of the facts, and such facts do not constitute a justification or excuse, there is no abuse of discretion in refusing to permit the withdrawal of the plea unless it clearly appears that the statements were made under duress or mistake or other cause sufficient to satisfy the trial court that the statement made on entering the plea was untrue. Turner v. State (1919) 121 Miss. 68, 83 So. 404.

Where it did not appear that a plea of guilty had been put in by the defendant through any mistake, surprise, or misapprehension of his rights or in relation to the facts of the case, it was held that the plea could not be withdrawn upon a mere request of counsel, made after sentence had been pronounced, even though the record of the court had not been read and signed by the judge. Griffith v. State (1871) 36 Ind. 406.

So, if there was no misapprehension as to the nature of the charge against the defendant, and it appeared that a considerable length of time had elapsed since the day of arraignment, that the jury had in the meantime been discharged, and that the relief prayed for would practically have operated as a continuance of the cause to a future term of the court, it was held that a motion to withdraw the plea of guilty was made too late, and was properly denied. State v. Dela- houssaye (1885) 37 La. Ann. 551; State v. Williams (1893) 45 La. Ann. 1357, 14 So. 32; State v. Jammerson (1897) 49 La. Ann. 597, 21 So. 728.
20 A.L.R.—92.

A motion to set aside a plea of guilty and the judgment thereon has been held to have been properly overruled, where it appeared that the defendant did not enter the plea of guilty under the belief that he would receive a lighter punishment than that imposed, and was not misled by anything said or done by the prosecuting officer. State v. Richardson (1889) 98 Mo. 564, 12 S. W. 245.

In a case where the defendant entered a plea of guilty to a charge of violating the Sunday law, and judgment thereon was suspended pending the outcome of a test case against another offender, it was held that there was no error in denying the defendant's motion to be allowed to withdraw his plea, made a year after such plea had been entered. Territory v. Cook (1893) 7 N. M. 248, 33 Pac. 1022.

Where a defendant pleaded guilty, at one term of court, to an indictment for a violation of the liquor law, it was held that a denial of an application to withdraw the plea, made at the next term of court, was proper, as coming too late. State v. Shanley (1893) 38 W. Va. 516, 18 S. E. 734.

Where a defendant pleaded guilty to several indictments for forgery and was sentenced on one of the indictments, judgment on the others being suspended, and subsequently, after being pardoned, he moved for leave to withdraw his pleas to the indictments pending and to file a plea of a former conviction for the same offense, it was held that the withdrawal was properly denied. Barton v. State (1869) 23 Wis. 587. See also Tate v. State (1898) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 45 S. W. 707.

In State v. Boutte (1907) 119 La. 134, 43 So. 983, the complaint urged by counsel for and on behalf of the defendant was that the district judge had improperly refused to allow the accused to withdraw a plea of guilty to "cutting and stabbing with a dangerous weapon with intent to kill," which the accused had been permitted to enter in lieu of his original plea of not guilty to a charge of "wilfully, feloniously, and of his malice aforethought cutting and stabbing . . . with intent to kill and murder," and to allow him to enter a plea of not guilty, in order to be tried by a jury. The plea sought to be withdrawn had been accepted by the district attorney and the court. The motion to withdraw the plea was not signed by the accused himself nor did it state that he had any legal defense. The ruling of the trial judge was sustained. The court said: "Where, however, the accused does not plead guilty to the charge as made, but pleads guilty to a lesser offense, which places him in a position of safety and security relatively to the more serious offense, and where the district attorney and the district judge accept that plea, and by so doing substantially and practically abandon the greater charge, courts should exercise very great caution lest they themselves, by acceding to the wishes of counsel (under their sanguine expectations that the ultimate result of the trial will be the acquittal of their client), place the accused in a worse condition than he held before. In matters of that character courts should have before them positive evidence from the accused parties themselves that they are willing to take the chances of a trial on the higher charge, and they should themselves set out and sustain the grounds upon which they ask the withdrawal of their plea of guilty. To require less than this would, in our opinion, tend to impair the proper administration of justice."

V. Effect of withdrawal.

The admissibility in evidence of a plea of guilty, after its withdrawal and the substitution therefor of a plea of not guilty, for the purpose of establishing the fact that the defendant, at a prior time, made a claim inconsistent with his innocence, has been the subject of conflict in the authorities. In a Kentucky case, Com. v. Ervine (1839) 8 Dana (Ky.) 30, wherein it appeared that a conviction on a plea of guilty had been reversed and a plea of not guilty had been entered on a second trial, without objection by the commonwealth, it was held that the former plea of guilty was properly admitted, but was not conclusive of the guilt of the accused.

With two judges dissenting, a like conclusion was reached in the Connecticut case of State v. Carta (1916) 90 Conn. 79, L.R.A.1916E, 634, 96 Atl. 411, wherein the court apparently followed the Kentucky case, supra. In the majority opinion it was said: "Where an accused person has pleaded guilty in a justice or other inferior court, and has taken an appeal, or been bound over to a higher court, he is there always permitted to plead anew, and it has always been the rule in this state that, upon the trial there, the fact that he pleaded guilty in the lower court might be put in evidence either by the record or by testimony of witnesses who were present and heard the accused when he entered the plea. This is not conclusive upon the accused, and is insufficient to warrant a conviction without other evidence to prove the corpus delicti. This is the rule in a majority of the other states, although some have held that the confession in the lower court is a judicial confession and sufficient, without independent evidence of the corpus delicti, to warrant a conviction. It would seem that the same principle which admits the admission or confession of the accused in the lower court to be introduced against him in the upper court should admit, with the same consequences, his confession by a plea of guilty, afterward withdrawn, in the upper court. The plea of guilty, as was said in State v. Willis (1898) 71 Conn. 293, 308, 41 Atl. 820, 'is conviction,' until the plea is withdrawn. The withdrawal of the plea withdraws the evidence of conviction, but it does not withdraw the fact that such a plea was entered. It is as competent to give evidence of that fact as to give evidence that a similar fact occurred in the justice or magistrate's court. Neither is conclusive upon the accused. The evidence in each case establishes a fact which is inconsisent with his later claim before the jury that he is innocent." In the minority opinion, Wheeler, J. (dissenting), said: "Considerations of fairness would seem to forbid a court permitting a plea to be withdrawn for cause, and at the next moment allowing the fact of the plea having been made to be admitted in evidence, with all its injurious consequences, as an admission or confession of guilt by the accused. The withdrawal is permitted because the plea was originally improperly entered. No untoward judicial effect should result from the judicial rectification of a judicial wrong. The majority hold that the fact that the former plea may be explained will be a sufficient protection to the accused. Such a ruling places upon him a burden of disproving a fact which does not exist, for the withdrawal eradicated it. It brings him before the jury under the heavy cloud of suspicion created by his plea of guilty, when he is entitled to come before the jury with the presumption of innocence shielding him. It makes him prove again that his plea was wrongly entered, when that fact has already been judicially ascertained and settled by a court of competent jurisdiction, and cannot be opened unless a higher court finds an abuse of that court's discretion."

So, in State v. Meyers (1889) 99 Mo. 107, 12 S. W. 516, wherein the court refused to accept a plea of guilty, and on the trial permitted the prosecution to prove the fact that the indictment had been read to the accused and that he had pleaded guilty thereto, it was said: "Such testimony should not have been admitted. The confession, being what is termed 'a plenary judicial confession,' that is, a confession made before a tribunal competent to try him, was sufficient whereon to found a conviction. . . . Consequently, the trial court might have proceeded at once to pass sentence upon the accused. But this fact surely did not authorize the reception of the plea of guilty in evidence, after the court had refused to receive that plea, and had placed the defendant upon his trial. No one would contend that, if the plea of guilty had been entered of record, such plea could have been received in evidence against the defendant, and yet the same principle is involved whether the plea actually go upon record or not; in either case, it must, if received in evidence, be conclusive of the defendant's guilt. Like the previous question in parliamentary bodies, evidence of such a plea, having been made before a tribunal competent to try the party making it, cuts off debate and determines all issues. The course therefore pursued by the trial court, in this regard, was plainly inconsistent; the plea of the defendant should either have been received, and sentence passed accordingly, or that plea should never have been heard of again. By refusing to receive the plea and granting the defendant a trial, this of necessity meant a trial with the issues of fact to be determined by the jury, and not to be determined by the previous plea of the defendant, which admitted all that the state desired to prove. In short, the trial court could not refuse to receive the defendant's plea of guilty at one time, and then use it against him at another."

Under the California statute providing that "the court may at any time before judgment, upon a plea of guilty, permit it to be withdrawn and a plea of not guilty substituted," it has been held that the plea of guilty is not admissible in evidence against the accused, such plea being functus officio. People v. Ryan (1890) 82 Cal. 617, 23 Pac. 121. In support of its holding, the court said: "We do not think that the legislature, in passing the law under which the defendant was allowed to nullify and render functus officio his plea of guilty by substituting or putting in place of it a plea of not guilty, intended to say that, notwithstanding such substitution and doing away with the first plea, it may be given in evidence and sometimes serve as the only conclusive proof of a man's guilt under the plea of not guilty."

Where a principal was permitted to withdraw a plea of guilty to a charge of larceny, it was held, on the trial of an accessory, that there was no error in instructing the jury that the plea of guilty, which was filed and entered by the principal before the trial of the accessory began, was still before them, and might be considered by them only to show that fact, but that it was not conclusive evidence of the guilt of the principal, and that they should consider other evidence, outside of that furnished by the record, to establish this fact. Groves v. State (1886) 76 Ga. 808.

But it has been held that a court goes too far in indulging a defendant, an accessory, when the principal is allowed to withdraw his plea of guilty pending the trial of the accessory, and the court offers the defendant an opportunity to withdraw his case, and on that account to have a mistrial declared. Ibid.

Where a defendant withdrew a plea of guilty of murder in the second degree, before sentence was pronounced, and substituted therefor a plea of not guilty to an indictment for murder, it was held that the withdrawal of the plea of guilty operated as a waiver of the implication, which existed so long as the plea remained, of an acquittal of murder in the first degree. People v. Cignarale (1888) 110 N. Y. 23, 17 N. E. 135. A. S. M.

E. RAY MYERS et al., Appts.,

v.

CLARENCE E. SHIPLEY.

Maryland Court of Appeals — January 25, 1922.

(— Md. —, 116 Atl. 645.)

Automobile — liability of parents for injury by negligent driving of child.

1. A father maintaining an automobile for general family purposes is not liable for an injury caused by the negligent driving of the car by his adult son, who is a member of his family, and who has taken the car for a purpose of his own without the father's express knowledge or consent, but with implied general authority to make use of the car.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1469.]

Principal and agent — liability for acts of agent — tort.

2. To hold one responsible for the tortious acts of another not committed by his order, on the ground of ratification, the admission of liability must be explicit and with full knowledge of the facts.

[See 26 R. C. L. 767.]

— disaffirmance of ratification.

3. A person may disaffirm a ratification of the acts of his agent made before he knew the material facts.

[See 21 R. C. L. 929.]

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Carroll County (Moss, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injury to plaintiff's property, for personal injuries to himself, and loss of services and expenses incurred for injuries sustained by his wife, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant son. Affirmed as to defendant son; reversed as to defendant father.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. F. Neal Parke, James A. C. Bond, and Edward O. Weant for appellants.

Messrs. Ivan L. Hoff and Guy W. Steele, for appellee:

Where the head of a family makes it his business to provide recreation and pleasure for the family and its several members, and to that end furnishes an automobile for their use, he is responsible for its negligent operation by any one of the family having his permission to drive it.

Plasch v. Fass, 144 Minn. 44, 10 A.L.R. 1446, 174 N. W. 438; Birch v. Abercrombie, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, note; Ulman v. Lindeman, 44 N. D. 36, 10 A.L.R. 1442, 176 N. W. 25; Vannett v. Cole, 41 N. D. 260, 170 N. W. 663; Hutchins v. Haffner, 63 Colo. 365, L.R.A.1918A, 1008, 167 Pac. 966; McWhirter v. Fuller, 35 Cal. App. 288, 170 Pac. 417; Farnham v. Clifford, 116 Me. 299, 101 Atl. 468; McNeal v. McKain, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, note; Ploetz v. Holt, 124 Minn. 169, 144 N. W. 745; King v. Smythe, L.R.A.1918F, 297, note; Boes v. Howell, 24 N. M. 142, L.R.A.1918F, 288, 173 Pac. 966; Crittenden v. Murphy, 36 Cal. App. 803, 173 Pac. 595; Johnson v. Smith, 143 Minn. 350, 173 N. W. 675; Griffin v. Russell, 144 Ga. 275, L.R.A.1916F, 216, 87 S. E. 10, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 994; Hiroux v. Baum, 137 Wis. 197, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 332, 118 N. W. 533; Ferris v. Sterling, 214 N. Y. 249, 108 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1161; Daily v. Maxwell, 152 Mo. App. 415, 133 S. W. 354; Stowe v. Morris, 147 Ky. 386, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 224, 144 S. W. 53; Landry v. Oversen, 187 Iowa, 284, 174 N. W. 255; Collinson v. Cutter, 186 Iowa, 276, 170 N. W. 421; Lewis v. Steele, 52 Mont. 300, 157 Pac. 575; Missell v. Hayes, 86 N. J. L. 348, 91 Atl. 322; Miller v. Weck, 186 Ky. 552, 217 S. W. 904; 20 R. C. L. 629; Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 759, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677, 71 Atl. 296; Van Blaricom v. Dodgson, 220 N. Y. 111, L.R.A.1917F, 363, 115 N. E. 443; King v. Smythe, 140 Tenn. 217, L.R.A. 1918F, 293, 204 S. W. 296.

Plaintiff having proved the ownership of the car, the presumption arose that the person driving it was the servant or agent of the owner, and the burden is cast on him to show he was not.

Vonderhorst Brewing Co. v. Amrhine, 98 Md. 406, 56 Atl. 833; Geiselman v. Schmidt, 106 Md. 580, 68 Atl. 202.

It is only when the servant abandons his duty and wilfully becomes a wrongdoer that the master is exempt from all responsibility for his wrongful acts.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Rasche, 130 Md. 126, 99 Atl. 991.

Boyd, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment obtained by the appellee against Howard E. Myers, the owner of an automobile, and E. Ray Myers, his adult son who was driving it when an accident occurred, due to the alleged negligence of the latter. This suit was for the destruction of the plaintiff's buggy, injury to his horse, and for personal injuries to himself and the loss of the services of his wife, and expenses incurred by him for injuries sustained by her. Another suit by Mrs. Shipley resulted in a judgment for her, and the parties agreed that the record in that case should not be transmitted to this court, but that the judgment therein rendered should abide the result of this appeal. In addition to the usual allegations in such cases, it is alleged "that thereafter the defendant Howard E. Myers adopted and ratified said act, reckless, careless, and negligent operation of said automobile, by his said ——— or son, the defendant E. Ray Myers, whereby the plaintiff and his wife were damaged and injured as aforesaid, and assumed liability and responsibility for it."

The only bill of exceptions in the record is one presenting the rulings of the court in rejecting the defendants' prayers 1 and 1½, but the appellants' attorneys in their brief concede that prayer 1½ was bad under what we said in Firor v. Taylor, 116 Md. 69, 84, 81 Atl. 389, 2 N. C. C. A. 551. The only one for our consideration, therefore, is the first, which is "that under the pleadings there is no legally sufficient evidence from which the jury may find that the defendant Howard E. Myers was responsible in any way for the injury on account of which recovery is sought in this suit, and the verdict of the jury must be for the said Howard E. Myers."

Apparently the appellants were under the impression, by reason of what was said and done in Firor v. Taylor, supra, and Ewing v. Rider, 125 Md. 149, 156, 93 Atl. 409, that, as there was a joint judgment against the two, there must be an affirmance or reversal of that joint judgment under the first prayer; but, since those decisions, Acts 1920, chap. 229, adding § 22B to article 5 of the Code, was passed, providing that "if, on appeal, it shall appear to the court of appeals that said judgment should be affirmed as to all said defendants or should be reversed as to all said defendants or should be affirmed as to one or more of said defendants and should be reversed as to one or more of said defendants, then the said court of appeals may so direct."

As there is no valid exception in favor of E. Ray Myers, the only question, therefore, before us, is whether the judgment against Howard E. Myers should be affirmed or reversed.

Howard E. Myers owned the car which is alleged to have caused the injuries complained of. He was called as a witness by the plaintiff, and it appears in his testimony that he had six children, E. Ray Myers being the second one. He got this car in April or May, 1920, and had one before, which he traded and got this one. He was asked:

Q. Is this car used for your family?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who had been running the car; your son?

A. Yes, sir; both of them; the boy next to him, and the older boy before he left home.

Q. All of them had a right to use it for family use?

A. Yes, sir.

On cross-examination he testified that his son Ray was twenty-two years old, that he employed him on the farm, and paid him wages by the month, and he was so employed at the time of the accident. He said, if the boys were out, and wanted gasoline or oil, they got it, and, if anything happens, like spark plugs or something like that, they get them and pay for them. He said he did not know anything about the accident at the time it happened; that he did not know anything about his son taking the car out that night, or for what purposes he took it; that the night of the accident the car was at a garage in Westminster, where it had been for a day or two. He was asked:

Q. What was it there for?

A. For some little repairs; I don't know. I think maybe battery trouble. I don't pay much attention to the car myself.

He said he did not know anything about his son going for the car that night, and he had not told him to go. He was asked by the attorney for the plaintiff:

Q. Of course, Mr. Myers, your son, as you have stated, had perfect authority to get that car that night and use it?

A. If it was done, he had. I didn't tell him nothing about it.

Q. You didn't tell him not to do it?

A. No, sir.

Upon being asked by his attorney:

Q. It was not for any purpose of yours that he would go down the road to an oyster supper?

A. I wouldn't think so; he didn't bring me any oysters back.

The defendant E. Ray Myers said the automobile had been at the garage a day or two; that he went to town that night on the train (they lived 3 or 4 miles from Westminster), and did not have any conversation with his father in reference to the automobile; that they had said at the garage that they expected it would be finished, and he went for it; that Earl Shaffer got in the car with him, and they were going to an oyster supper at a village called Gamber. Earl Shaffer corroborated him. It is a five-passenger Paige car, and they expected to get two girls to go with them, but had not when the accident happened.

We come now to the question left unanswered in the case of Whitelock v. Dennis, 139 Md. 557, 116 Atl. 68, decided at this October term, whether the owner of an automobile provided by him for the use of his family is liable to a party injured by the negligence of his son when the car was being used wholly for purposes of the son, and not for those of the owner. In the case of Whitelock v. Dennis we said: "We are not willing to commit ourselves to the doctrine that an owner of an automobile is responsible for injuries sustained by a third party by reason of the negligence of a minor son in running the car, if the car was at the time being used by the son for his own purposes, and not for those of his father, even if he had the permission, express or implied, of his father so to use the car."

And we said that the defendant's third prayer, which in substance announced that rule, should have been granted. Of course, we were careful to confine the rule to such facts as we then had before us, which did not show that the use of the car by the son necessarily or probably involved unusual danger, and there was no evidence of his being reckless or incompetent to drive a car. That son was only eighteen years of age, but he had a state license to operate a car. As there was a conflict of evidence in that case as to whether it was being used for the father, we held that the case should go to the jury.

There is an unfortunate conflict in the decisions bearing on this subject. Many of them have been made by courts of high standing and have been supported by forcible and exceptionally able opinions, presenting the views of the respective sides, if we may use that term, of the controversy. We cannot but be impressed, however, with the conviction that some of them have disregarded principles of law applicable to the relations of principal and agent and master and servant, which before the days of automobiles, and especially before they had become so numerous on our streets and other highways, were supposed to be as firmly fixed as any principles known to the common law.

There have been some attempts to separate the decisions of the courts in the different states into two main classes,—those holding the owners of cars purchased for the use of their families responsible for injuries sustained by the negligent driving of their sons, or other members of their families, and those holding that they were not liable,—but, as many of them depend upon the facts of the particular cases, it is necessary to examine them critically in order to ascertain how they can be properly classified. In this case, as an adult son, living with his father, was driving the car for his own purposes, without the knowledge of his father that he was using it on that occasion, but undoubtedly with implied authority so to use it, we will refer to such of the authorities as may be of use in support of the position we will announce for this court. One of the fullest discussions we have found on the subject is in the case of Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, L.R.A.1918C, 715, 200 S. W. 286, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127. There the case of Daily v. Maxwell, 152 Mo. App. 415, 133 S. W. 351, which is often cited in support of the view that the owner is liable, was expressly overruled, as was Hays v. Hogan, 180 Mo. App. 237, 165 S. W. 1125. The supreme court of Missouri held that "the mere ownership of an automobile purchased by a father for the use and pleasure of himself and family does not render him liable in damages to a third person for injuries sustained thereby, through the negligence of his minor son while operating the same on a public highway, in furtherance of his own business or pleasure; and the fact that he had the father's special or general permission to so use the car is wholly immaterial."

Of course, the fact that the son is an adult does not lessen, but sometimes may strengthen, the reasons for the rule. In Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 87, 60 So. 150, an eighteen-year-old son took his father's automobile for his own uses, without the father's knowledge, but by his implied general permission, and it was held that the son was not the agent of the father, and the latter was not liable for the negligence of the former in operating the car. The court said the doctrine that the pleasure of the family is the business of the father "has no firm foundation in reason or common sense. In theory it overlooks well-settled principles of law; in practice it would interdict the father's generosity and his reasonable care for the pleasure, or even the well-being of his children, by imposing a universal responsibility for the acts."

In Spence v. Fisher, 184 Cal. 209, 14 A.L.R. 1083, 193 Pac. 255, it was said, in reference to the theory that the son was engaged in the business of his father in such cases: "Of course, it is true that every good father makes it his 'business,' in a certain sense of that word, to furnish, so far as he can, for use by the members of his family, all those things that will contribute to their convenience and pleasure. But to our minds his doing this cannot, by any sound reasoning, warrant a conclusion that, in the subsequent use of the thing by a member of the family solely for his own convenience or pleasure, while engaged exclusively on a mission of his own, such member of the family is engaged on the father's business, or in any way acting as his agent or servant."

That case overruled Crittenden v. Murphy, 36 Cal. App. 803, 173 Pac. 595.

The case of Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 754, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677, 71 Atl. 296, is a leading one in favor of the doctrine that the father is not responsible for the negligence of a son or daughter while using the car for his or her own purposes, and not those of the father, although used with the permission of the father. The court said that the mere fact of the relation of parent and child would not make the child the servant of the parent, and held that his liability in such a case depended upon the relation of master and servant. It said: "She was not even driving other members of the family. She was using the machine as a means of recreation and pleasure for herself and her own friends, and it would seem impossible to draw the conclusion that she could be regarded as the agent or servant of her father upon that occasion."

It then went on to say that, assuming the relation of master and servant existed generally between the father and daughter, yet it did not appear that on the occasion in question she was acting as such within the scope of her employment, and repeated the well-known doctrine that the master was "not responsible if the negligence was committed by the servant when engaged in some private matter of his own." It is contended that the doctrine of that case has been very much modified, if not reversed, by that court in Missell v. Hayes, 86 N. J. L. 348, 91 Atl. 322. In that case Hayes had purchased a car for the general uses of his family, and it was for that purpose habitually operated by the owner and his two sons, sometimes with and sometimes without his express consent and direction. At the time of the accident one of the sons was driving the car, and in it were the wife and daughter of the father and two guests. The court said in the Doran Case: "No other members of the father's family were in the car. The only element in the case tending to show that the daughter was acting as the servant of the father was the bare fact that the father owned the automobile, which, being personal property, was presumably, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, in his possession or the possession of his servant at the time of the accident; possession being the badge of ownership of personal property. This presumption, however, in that case, was overcome by the uncontradicted proof that in fact the automobile was not in the possession of the owner or his servant, but that, on the contrary, it was in the possession of a third party (who happened to be his daughter), who was using it for her own pleasure and the pleasure of her friends, and not upon the owner's business."

The court then went on to say that in the Hayes Case there were the father's immediate family and their guests: "This fact constituted affirmative evidence that the automobile was being used in the father's affairs or business. It was within the scope of the father's business to furnish his wife and daughter, who were living with him as members of his immediate family, with outdoor recreation, just the same as it was his business to furnish them with food and clothing, or to minister to their health in other ways. It cannot be said, therefore, that in this case there was no evidence of possession except a mere presumption which could be overcome by proof of inconsistent facts. Here there was affirmative proof of the fact of possession, quite apart from any presumption."

The court said that there was also evidence that the son invited his mother and sister to take a ride as his guests on a trip which he was taking for his own pleasure or business, and that they were doing so as such, and not as members of his father's family, and hence it became a question for the jury to decide, and added: "We think the question was one of fact, and that it was properly submitted to the jury." But the case of Doran v. Thomsen was not overruled, but expressly affirmed.

There seems to be some misunderstanding about the doctrine adopted in Maine. In Farnham v. Clifford, 116 Me. 299, 101 Atl. 468, the court did not hold that the father was responsible because he bought the machine for the pleasure of himself and family, but the motion for a new trial, which was then being reviewed, was distinctly overruled on the ground that after the accident, with full knowledge of the facts, the father admitted his liability, and when he went upon the stand he did not deny that he had so admitted, and did not contradict or explain the statement alleged to have been made by him, but allowed it to pass as true and unchallenged. The court said that that authorized the jury to find that he knowingly made the admission, and that his admission was true. In Farnum v. Clifford, 118 Me. 145, 106 Atl. 344, the court said that an instruction was without error which said: "Liability cannot be cast upon the defendant in this case because he owned the car, or because the driver at the time of the accident was his son, or because he permitted his son to use the car. There must be the further relation of master and servant between them, and the son, at the time of the accident, must have been using the car in the business of the defendant."

In Pratt v. Cloutier, 119 Me. 203, 10 A.L.R. 1434, 110 Atl. 353, it was held, quoting for convenience from the syllabus in the Atlantic Reporter: "A father who furnishes an automobile for the pleasure of his family, and allows his minor son to drive whenever he desires, is not responsible to a third person for the son's negligence while using the car solely for his own pleasure."

That case reviewed a number of others, and pointed out that the citation of Farnham v. Clifford, 116 Me. 299, 101 Atl. 468, by the court in Johnson v. Smith, 143 Minn. 350, 173 N. W. 675, in support of the Minnesota doctrine, was not justified. It also cited the case of Mad-dox v. Brown, 71 Me. 432, 36 Am. Rep. 336, to show that in Maine the doctrine then being applied to automobiles was announced in the case of a minor son taking his father's horse and carriage, which he had been allowed to use without restriction. In the case of Van Blaricom v. Dodgson, 220 N. Y. 111, L.R.A. 1917F, 363, 115 N. E. 443, the court of appeals of New York, in speaking of the doctrine that the father is liable in such cases, says: "This is an advanced proposition in the law of principal and agent, and the question which it presents really resolves itself into the one whether, as a matter of common sense and practical experience, we ought to say that a parent who maintains some article for family use and occasionally permits a capable son to use it for his individual convenience ought to be regarded as having undertaken the occupation of entertaining the latter and to have made him his agent in this business, although the act being done is solely for the benefit of the son. That really is about all there is to the question."

After saying that an affirmative answer had been given by the courts of some states (citing Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, 133 Pac. 1020; Davis v. Littlefield, 97 S. C. 171, 81 S. E. 487; Griffin v. Russell, 144 Ga. 275, L.R.A.1916F, 216, 87 S. E. 10, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 994; and two cases of Missouri appeals which have been overruled by the supreme court of that state), that court said: "But it seems to us that such a theory is more illusory than substantial, and that it would be far-fetched to hold that a father should become liable as principle every time he permitted a capable child to use for his personal convenience some article primarily kept for family use. That certainly would introduce into the family relationship a new rule of conduct, which, so far as we are aware, has never been applied to other articles than an automobile."

But we will extend this opinion to an unreasonable length if we continue to quote from the cases. We will content ourselves by referring to some others maintaining the views of those referred to above, such as: Arkin v. Page, 287 Ill. 420, 5 A.L.R. 216, 123 N. E. 30;

Smith v. Weaver, — Ind. App. —, 124 N. E. 503; Reynolds v. Buck, 127 Iowa, 601, 103 N. W. 946, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 412; Knight v. Cossett, 102 Kan. 764, 172 Pac. 533; Watkins v. Clark, 103 Kan. 629, 176 Pac. 131; Stafford v. Noble, 105 Kan. 219, 182 Pac. 650; Weiner v. Mairs, 234 Mass. 156, 125 N. E. 149; Woods v. Clements, 113 Miss. 720, L.R.A.1917E, 357, 74 So. 422; id. 114 Miss. 301, L.R.A.1917E, 358, 75 So. 119; Linville v. Nissen, 162 N. C. 95, 77 S. E. 1096; Heissenbuttel v. Meagher, 162 App. Div. 752, 147 N. Y. Supp. 1087; Elms v. Flick, 100 Ohio St. 186, 126 N. E. 66; McFarlane v. Winters, 47 Utah, 598, L.R.A.1916D, 618, 155 Pac. 437; Cohen v. Meador, 119 Va. 429, 89 S. E. 876; Blair v. Broadwater, 121 Va. 301, L.R.A.1918A, 1011, 93 S. E. 632.

There are quite a number of cases which are generally classed with the courts taking the view that the owner is liable under the circumstances referred to above, in which the child was driving the car with or for other members of the family. It was said in Pratt v. Cloutier, supra: "Few, indeed, of the many cases cited, will be found to go so far as to hold a father liable when a son, alone in the father's car, seeking only his own pleasure and entertainment, and while so engaged, injures a third party. The reason for finding the father liable in the cases so holding is usually founded on the fact that one other member of the family, at least, accompanied the driver, thus raising the questions which in each case have gone to the jury."

The appellee contends that there can be no valid distinction made between such cases, and those in which a son was driving wholly for his own purposes, without having any other member of the family with him; but courts of standing have made such distinctions, as shown by the cases, and when they have done so they have generally held that, when there is another member of the family being driven by one, it is for the jury to determine whether the driver was acting for himself alone, or for his father. In this case it is shown that there was no other member of the family with the son, and hence we need not discuss the effect, if any, of such difference in the facts. The appellants state in their brief that Benton v. Regeser, 20 Ariz. 273, 179 Pac. 966; Lewis v. Steele, 52 Mont. 300, 157 Pac. 575; Boes v. Howell, 24 N. M. 142, L.R.A.1918F, 288, 173 Pac. 966; McNeal v. McKain, 33 Okla. 449, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 775, 126 Pac. 742; Davis v. Littlefield, 97 S. C. 171, 81 S. E. 487, and Denison v. McNorton, 142 C. C. A. 631, 228 Fed. 401, were cases in which the child was driving with or for other members of the family, but we have not thought it necessary to examine to see whether those courts have passed on the question when the driver was the only member of the family in the car. The states of Kentucky, Minnesota, Tennessee, and Washington have not made such distinctions, and hence it must be conceded that there is conflict between the authorities, although some cases in several of those states would seem to be more in favor of the appellants' contention than that of the appellee. The cases of King v. Smythe, 140 Tenn. 217, L.R.A.1918F, 293, 204 S. W. 296, and Birch v. Abercrombie, supra, have perhaps presented the views of those holding the father liable as forcibly as any of the others, and seem to be leading cases. In chapter 26 of Berry on Automobiles, 3d ed., beginning on page 1072, § 1160, and Huddy on Automobiles, 5th ed., beginning with § 656, on page 849, and continuing to § 662, on page 863, most of the cases are cited in the notes, but it would take a good-sized volume to discuss all of them fully, and point out wherein they differ with other decisions. In Michigan, where the courts were also in accord with the view we have announced as to this question, the rule has been changed by statute, which would seem to us to be a far preferable way, if it be deemed best to adopt the other rule, rather than to run counter to well-established principles in reference to master and servant and principal and agent which cannot stand in their integrity if some of the automobile cases we have found are to be followed. It is said in Hatter v. Dodge Bros. 202 Mich. 97, 167 N. W. 935: "As the law now stands, it is not a prerequisite for recovery to prove that the motor vehicle causing an injury was being operated in the business of the owner, for his use and enjoyment, or by his servant or employee."

If many legislatures adopt such a rule as that, it will probably be because so many automobilists seem to forget at times that they do not have the right to the exclusive use of the highways, but it would be better to pass and enforce stricter laws in the use of the highways than simply provide for recovery of damages, which cannot restore life, or always compensate for injury.

While our decisions have not hitherto definitely settled the main question herein involved, they have approached it in some respects, and they place us more in line with the courts which have held that, under such facts as we have in this case, the plaintiff cannot recover. The opinion in Whitelock v. Dennis, 139 Md. 557, 116 Atl. 68, filed December 2, 1921, is the last one on the general subject, and we need not dwell on Symington v. Sipes, 121 Md. 313, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 662, 88 Atl. 134, and State use of Debelius v. C. B. Benson & Co. 129 Md. 693, 100 Atl. 505, therein referred to at some length. It may be well to say that in Buckey v. White, 137 Md. 124, 111 Atl. 777, we said enough to show that, but for the technical reason therein stated why we could not do so, we would have reversed that judgment on the ground that there was not enough in the record to show that the father was liable, although it was shown that the car was purchased by him and used in his business, and from time to time for the convenience of his family. It was being driven by his son, Earl Buckey, who was then about twenty-two or twenty-three years of age, lived with his father, and assisted him in his business. At the time of the accident the son, who had the privilege of using the car whenever he wished, was driving friends to a dance. In Charles v. Baltimore (decided May 13, 1921) 138 Md. 523, 114 Atl. 565, we said agency cannot be inferred merely from the relationship of husband and wife; that Mr. Charles was using the machine (which belonged to his wife), not for any business of his wife, but in connection with his own occupation, and the use of it was merely a permissive use.

There can be no difficulty about the question of the alleged adoption of the act of E. Ray Myers by Howard E. Myers. The general rule is thus stated in 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1185: "The doctrine of ratification applies as well to torts when done to the use or for the benefit of him who subsequently adopts them as to matters of contract. . . . But, to hold one responsible for the tortious act of another not committed by him or by his order, the adoption must be explicit and with a full knowledge of the facts."

In addition to the fact that the alleged wrong was not done in the interest, or for the use or benefit, of the father, as required to make him liable (1 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. 214, 217; 1 Poe, Pl. & Pr. 481, 525; Hammond v. Du Bois, 131 Md. 116, 154, 101 Atl. 612), the alleged ratification was far from being explicit and with a full knowledge of the facts.

The plaintiff testified that the next morning after the accident, in the presence of his son, Howard E. Myers said to him that "if his son was to blame, he was willing to 'daddy' the blame." Raymond Day-hoff testified that the day after the accident he said, "if his son had done any damage to the plaintiff's 'automobile,' he would stand all expenses or damages." As the plaintiff had no automobile in the accident, there is manifestly some mistake in that testimony. Carroll Owings said he told him that, "if his boy did it, he was willing to 'daddy' it, and, if he didn't do it, he don't feel that he ought to do it." It could hardly be said that there was an explicit adoption of the act of the son, and the father showed by his testimony that he did not have a full knowledge of the facts when he said what he did. He went on the stand in rebuttal and denied that he then said what Mr. Dayhoff testified to, and in answer to what he said to the plaintiff he testified: "I told Mr. Shipley before I left home, I told him at home, that if the boys were the cause of this, I would stand by them. After I went out there I found there was another car, and I told Mr. Shipley I wouldn't daddy the other fellow's dirt."

There is no contradiction of that, and, if a person ratifies an act of his agent before he knows the material facts, he may afterwards disaffirm. Adams Exp. Co. v. Trego, 35 Md. 47; Bannon v. Warfield, 42 Md. 22. Mr. Myers did what the court said in Farnham v. Clifford, 116 Me. 299, 101 Atl. 468, the defendant in that case should have done, and he could not have been held liable on the ground that he had made such qualified statements as it is claimed he did make.

We are of the opinion that the defendants' first prayer should have been granted. We said in Whitelock v. Dennis, supra, the presumption arising from such facts as we referred to in Stewart Taxi-Service Co. v. Roy, 127 Md. 70, 95 Atl. 1057, can be rebutted, and we referred to the fact that in Symington v. Sipes, and State use of Debelius v. Benson, supra, we had approved prayers liability of parents for injury by negligent driving of child.

Automobile—

Principal and agent—liability for acts of agent
—tort.

—disaffirmance
of ratification.

which instructed verdicts for defendants on the ground that the drivers were not acting within the scope of their employment, notwithstanding the presumption referred to. We will only add to that what was said by Judge Thomas, in speaking for the court, in Dearholt Motor Sales Co. v. Merritt, 133 Md. 323, 330, 105 Atl. 316. After referring to Vonderhorst Brewing Co. v. Amrhine, 98 Md. 406, 56 Atl. 833, Geiselman v. Schmidt, 106 Md. 580, 68 Atl. 202, Stewart Taxi-Service Co. v. Getz, 118 Md. 171, 84 Atl. 338, Symington v. Sipes and State use of Debelius v. Benson, supra, and National Mechanics' Bank v. National Bank, 36 Md. 5, he said: "The effect of the Maryland cases referred to is that, where the evidence in the case, whether produced by the plaintiff or by the defendant, is uncontradicted and clearly shows that the person in possession of the vehicle or machine was not, at the time of the accident, the servant or agent of the owner, there can be no recovery against the owner, and that the case should be withdrawn from the jury."

He then went on to show that Stewart Taxi-Service Co. v. Roy, 127 Md. 70, 95 Atl. 1057, did not establish a contrary rule.

It follows that the judgment against Howard E. Myers must be reversed, and, as there could be no recovery, a new trial will not be awarded, but, for reasons stated above, the judgment against E. Ray Myers must be affirmed.

Judgment against E. Ray Myers affirmed, and judgment against Howard E. Myers reversed, without a new trial, one half of the costs above and below to be paid by E. Ray Myers, and the other half by the appellee.

ANNOTATION.

Liability of owner under "family purpose" doctrine for injuries by automobile while being used by member of his family.

Where child is driving with other members of family.

(Supplementing annotations in 5 A.L.R. 222; 10 A.L.R. 1450; 14 A.L.R. 1088; and 19 A.L.R. 387.)

On a subsequent appeal of Tyree v. Tudor (1921) 181 N. C. 214, 106 S. E. 675, which is cited in the annotation in 14 A.L.R. 1088, in (1922) — N. C. —, 111 S. E. 714, the owner of an automobile was held liable for the death of a sixteen-year-old girl, due to the reckless driving of the car, which was apparently one of two kept for family use, by his sixteen-year-old son, where with knowledge of the reckless character of his son as a chauffeur he permitted him to use the car to take the deceased and another son to a dance. There was evidence in the case relating to the driver's negligence, and also that the sons had liquor in the car, and had partaken of it, and the court stated that the father was responsible for the son's negligence, both on the ground of having placed his son in charge of the machine and by reason of his liability for the negligence of his agent.

Where the car is being used by child alone.

(Supplementing annotations in 5 A.L.R. 228; 10 A.L.R. 1450; 14 A.L.R. 1088; and 19 A.L.R. 388.)

In Jones v. Cook (1922) — W. Va. —, 111 S. E. 828, the "family purpose" doctrine was adopted and applied where a father furnished an automobile for the pleasure of his family, including his stepdaughter, and while the latter was driving it with her friends, with his permission, she negligently ran into the plaintiff's automobile. The court said: "We see no possible ground of difference concerning the owner's liability, whether there be but one member of the family or all members of the family in the automobile at the time of the negligent injury. If the father makes it his business or affair to furnish members of his family with an automobile for family use, and he maintains it for that purpose, just the same as it is his business to furnish them with food and clothing, or to minister to their health in other ways, then he is in the furtherance of that business just as surely, when a single member of the family is driving it for his own pleasure and convenience, as if all the family were riding in it. Counsel for defendant say that defendant is not liable for the negligence of the step-daughter in the operation of the automobile in the present case, because it was none of his affair; but we hold that he made it his affair by maintaining the automobile for the very purpose for which she was using it at the time of the injury. He owned the machine and had the right to say where, how, and by whom it might be used, and impliedly, if not expressly, authorized the use to which it was put when the accident occurred. The doctrine of agency is not confined to merely commercial business transactions, but extends to cases where the father maintains an automobile for family use, with a general authority, expressed or implied, that it may be used for the comfort, convenience, pleasure, and entertainment or outdoor recreation of members of the owner's family. This view was also applied in cases of horse-drawn vehicles, decided before the introduction of the automobile. Schaefer v. Osterbrink (1886) 67 Wis. 495, 58 Am. St. Rep. 875, 30 N. W. 922; Lashbrook v. Patten (1864) 1 Duv. (Ky.) 316. It is not a new graft on the law of agency. It is merely applying old principles to new conditions. There are practical considerations involved to which courts cannot close their eyes. This doctrine puts the financial responsibility of the owner behind the automobile, while it is being used by a member of the family (who is likely to be financially irresponsible) in furtherance of the business and purposes for which it is maintained." Poffenbarger, P., in dissenting, said: "Although sustained by an apparent weight of authority, this decision, in my opinion, contravenes fundamental principles of the laws of agency, and master and servant, and the rule 'respondeat superior.' In running an automobile for his or her own pleasure, a son, daughter, or other member of a family cannot legally be the servant or agent of another person, even though such other person be the head of the family and owner of the car. Action by one person for his own benefit or pleasure is legally incompatible with service or agency for another, in the performance of the act. Service necessarily implies the doing of something for another, not for the actor. It involves two persons, the master and the actor. Agency generally involves three—the actor, the person for whom he acts, and the person affected by the act authoritatively done. Both relations have their legal limitations. One acting for himself alone can be neither servant nor agent of another. That the head of the family, or some other member of it, owns and keeps the car for the use of the family and permits all members thereof to operate it at their pleasure, or that he purchased and maintains it for such purpose, and one member thereof occasionally or generally drives it with others riding in it, cannot change the principles of law. When he alone is driving it and riding in it, for his own pleasure or about his own business, he cannot be serving or acting for anybody but himself. If, while he drives it, the car carries other members of the family, he may be. How he obtained the use of some other person's car, or the motive of such other person in its purchase, ownership, or maintenance, is entirely too remote to affect the question of agency or service. These circumstances and the close relationship of the parties add to and emphasize the probative force and effect of evidence of service or agency, but they are not of themselves such evidence. The same observation is true of the relation of master and servant. If the driver is the chauffeur of the owner or other employee in charge of his car, there may be a rebuttable presumption that he was using it in his master's business, but nothing more. On proof that he was not, the relation may reinforce evidence that he was, but beyond that, it signifies nothing. Such is the uniform holding in cases in which close relationship of parties is invoked, as evidence of fraud."

It will be observed, as pointed out in the annotation in 19 A.L.R. p. 388, that the court in the reported case (MYERS v. SHIPLEY, ante, 1460) refused to adopt the "family purpose" doctrine so as to hold a father liable for the negligent operation of his car, kept for family use, by his adult son, who was using it for his own pleasure with the implied consent of his father. And the same conclusion was reached by the court in McGowan v. Longwood (1922) — Mass. —, — A.L.R. —, 136 N. E. 72.

And in Markle v. Perot (1922) — Pa. —, 116 Atl. 542, it was held that there was nothing shown which would charge the father for the negligence of his adult son in operating the father's automobile, where it appeared that the car was used at times for the pleasure of the family, of which the son was a member, and that the son, with his father's permission, was using the car at the time the accident occurred for the purpose of attending a meeting of a fraternal organization of which he was a member.

And where a nineteen-year-old son who was practically manumitted was permitted by his father to drive a car kept for the family pleasure to a certain place to see about a position, it was held that the father was not liable for an injury resulting from the son's negligent operation of the car, since he was not engaged in the father's business or pleasure, and since the fact that the latter was interested, in a sense, in the son's trip, was not sufficient ground for holding him liable. Kunkle v. Thompson (1917) 67 Pa. Super. Ct. 37.

Liability where spouse of owner is using car.

(Supplementing annotations in 5 A.L.R. 232; 10 A.L.R. 1452; 14 A.L.R. 1088; and 19 A.L.R. 390.)

In Hill v. Jacquemart (1922) — Cal. App. —, 203 Pac. 1021, it was held that a husband could not be held liable for damages resulting from the negligent operation by his wife of his automobile, which was kept for the use, comfort, and enjoyment of his family. The court stated that in Spence v. Fisher (1920) 184 Cal. 209, 14 A.L.R. 1083, 193 Pac. 255, it had refused to hold the owner of an automobile liable for an injury occurring while a member of his family was using the car for such member's enjoyment, on the ground that the car was kept for family pleasure, and was being used with his consent when the injury occurred. J. T. W.

SAM H. JONES, Appt.,

v.

WILLIAM HENDERSON.

Kentucky Court of Appeals—October 26, 1920.

(189 Ky. 412, 225 S. W. 34.)

Attorney and client — recovery of money paid as fee for compounding felony.

1. A client cannot recover from an attorney a fee paid for services to be rendered in compounding a felony.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1476.]

Contract — to compound felony — validity.

2. An agreement by an attorney to use money placed in his hands by a client to compound a felony with the commission of which the client is charged, or to suppress evidence which might result in a conviction, is void.

[See 6 R. C. L. 755, 757 et seq.]

Money had and received—recovery of money advanced to compound felony.

3. No action lies to recover money placed by a client in the hands of an attorney to be used in compounding a felony with which the client is charged, although the effort is not successful, and the attorney agrees, when receiving the money, to return what is not used by him.

[See 2 R. C. L. 790.]

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Ballard County in favor of defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, in an action brought to recover money placed by plaintiff in defendant's hands to be used in compounding a felony. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. J. B. Wickliffe for appellant.

Mr. John E. Kane, for appellee:

Contracts entered into for the purpose of stifling or defeating trials or prosecutions of persons charged with crime are contrary to public policy, and will not be enforced at the instance of either of the parties to such contracts.

Swan v. Chandler, 8 B. Mon. 97; Gardner v. Maxey, 9 B. Mon. 90; Kimbrough v. Lane, 11 Bush, 556; American Nat. Bank v. Madison, 144 Ky. 152, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 597, 137 S. W. 1076; Johnson v. McMillion, 178 Ky. 707, L.R.A.1918C, 244, 199 S. W. 1070.

Settle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, Sam H. Jones, sued the appellee, William Henderson, in the court below, seeking to recover of him $1,000, which, as alleged in the petition, had been placed in his hands by appellant for the purpose recited in the following writing, executed by appellee when the money was received by him:

Rec'd of Sam H. Jones $1,000, same to be used in settlement of suit or case against him in circuit court, Ballard county, or so much as needed; balance to be returned to him. This December 24, 1917.

Wm. Henderson, Attorney.

It was alleged in the petition that appellee failed to compromise or settle the case referred to in the above writing, and that same was prosecuted against appellant to a final judgment; also, that the writing was without consideration, and that the consideration expressed therein failed, because of appellee's failure to carry out his promise made therein to settle the case against appellant by the use of the $1,000 paid him by the latter, or any part thereof; and, finally, that he refused to return or repay any part of the $1,000 to appellant, though the whole thereof had been demanded of him by the latter.

Appellee filed an answer and counterclaim, containing four paragraphs, in the first of which he admitted receiving of appellee the $1,000 in question for the purpose of settling the case against him in the Ballard circuit court, as stated in the writing, but denied the misappropriation of the money charged in the petition, or that appellee was entitled to the return of some or any part thereof.

In the second paragraph of the answer and counterclaim it was alleged that on September 28, 1917, appellant was arrested under a warrant issued by L. M. Wilford, a justice of the peace of Ballard county, charging him with the crime of unlawfully detaining a woman, Elizabeth Bennett, with the intent to have carnal knowledge of her against her will; that, upon appearing on that date before the justice of the peace, appellant waived an examination upon the charge, and was held on bond to appear in the Ballard circuit court, at its succeeding term, to answer any indictment the grand jury might return against him for the crime mentioned, and that the $1,000 delivered to appellee by appellant, and for which the writing of December 24, 1917, was executed by way of a receipt, was received by the former as attorney of the latter, for use in compromising or otherwise settling the case or prosecution referred to, which was then pending against him in the Ballard circuit court.

In paragraph 3 it was alleged that $900 of the $1,000 thus received of appellant by appellee was paid by the latter in compromise and settlement of the pending prosecution against appellant in the Ballard circuit court, to J. W. Bennett, father of the prosecutrix, Elizabeth Bennett, for the benefit of himself and daughter, appellee in good faith believing at the time, from what he regarded reliable information, that the commonwealth's attorney of the judicial district, including Ballard county, would consent to such compromise and settlement and dismiss the prosecution against appellant; but that, as the prosecution was for a felony, the furnishing of the $1,000 by appellant to appellee for the purpose of effecting the attempted settlement and dismissal of the prosecution, as well as the payment by appellee of $900 thereof to the father of the prosecutrix, as a means to that end, was contrary to the public policy of the state, and therefore unlawful, for which reason appellant was and is estopped to sue for or recover the $1,000, or any part thereof, of the appellee, or of the Bennetts, father or daughter, any part of the $900 received by them.

In the fourth and final paragraph of the answer and counterclaim it was alleged that, immediately following appellant's arrest under the warrant charging him with the crime stated, he employed appellee, who is an attorney at law, to represent him in any effort that might be made to compromise and settle the case, and also to defend him, both in the justice's and circuit courts, in any prosecution that might be instituted against him for the crime, and agreed to pay appellee for the professional services thus to be rendered by him, a fee of $100; that appellee, pursuant to such employment, did faithfully represent appellant in the justice's court, and in the attempt to procure the compromise and settlement of the case, and did in like manner defend him in the circuit court on his trial for the crime charged; and that for the services rendered by him for appellant in the two courts mentioned he was entitled to be paid, and did retain as a reasonable fee, $100, of the $1,000 received by him of the latter, which was all that remained in his hands after payment of the $900 to J. W. Bennett.

20 A.L.R.—93.

By agreement of the parties all affirmative matter of the answer and counterclaim was controverted of record, and on the trial of the case, following such completion of the issues, the circuit court, at the conclusion of appellant's evidence, peremptorily instructed the jury to return a verdict for the appellee, which was accordingly done. Appellant was refused a new trial, complaining of which, and of the action of the trial court in directing a verdict for the appellee, he prosecutes this appeal from the judgment of that court approving the verdict and dismissing the action.

The only evidence introduced in appellant's behalf on the trial of the case in the court below was furnished by his own testimony as a witness, which fully establishes the following facts: (1) His arrest under a warrant issued by a justice of the peace, charging him with the felony named in the pleadings, and that on appearing in the court of the justice he waived an examination under the warrant, and was held under a bond, then executed by him, to answer in the Ballard circuit court such indictment as might be returned against him by the grand jury for the crime charged; (2) that, after being thus held over to the circuit court, appellant furnished appellee $1,000 for use by the latter in effecting through the young woman upon whom he was charged to have committed the crime, or her father, a settlement and dismissal of the prosecution then pending against appellant for the crime charged, and that no part of the $1,000 was ever returned to him by appellee; (3) that appellee did not succeed in effecting such settlement or dismissal of the prosecution; (4) that the commonwealth's attorney of the judicial district did not consent to such settlement, and refused to dismiss the prosecution, and that appellant was indicted for the crime charged by the grand jury, and tried under the indictment.

In giving his testimony appellant did not deny the employment of appellee as attorney to procure for him the dismissal of the prosecution by means of the $1,000 furnished him, or the payment by appellee of the $900 to J. W. Bennett for that purpose; nor did he deny the employment of appellee to make his defense to the prosecution, or that the latter did defend him in both the justice's and circuit courts. It is fairly inferable, however, from his testimony, that, notwithstanding the payment to Bennett of the $900 by appellee, and the agreement by the former and his daughter to settle or dismiss the prosecution, its dismissal was prevented by the refusal of the commonwealth's attorney to be a party to such a compounding of a felony.

It does not appear from appellant's testimony, or from any pleading in the case, how his trial under the indictment in the circuit court resulted. We are, therefore, unable to learn from this record whether he was convicted or acquitted of the crime charged. We are, however, judicially advised by the opinion of this court in Henderson v. Com. 185 Ky. 232, 215 S. W. 53, of the reason for the silence of the record on this point, as it therein appears that by the payment to J. W. Bennett and his daughter of the money, or the greater part thereof, furnished him by appellant, appellee, as a means of preventing them from appearing in court or giving their testimony against the former regarding the crime committed by him on the daughter, induced them to leave Ballard county and remain away for at least two terms of the Ballard circuit court; and while the opinion in Henderson v. Com. supra, does not so state, the failure of the prosecutrix and her father to appear and testify against appellant doubtless caused his acquittal of the crime charged, or, if he was not tried, prevented the finding of an indictment against him. Appellee suffered, however, for his procurement of the absence of the two witnesses named, as by reason thereof he was indicted in the Ballard circuit court for the common-law offense of obstructing justice, and, on his trial in that court, convicted by verdict of a jury, which inflicted upon him, by way of punishment, a fine of $1,000, the judgment entered upon which was, on appeal, affirmed by this court.

It is patent from the language of the writing evidencing the agreement under which appellee received the $1,000 furnished him by appellant, as well as the admissions of the pleadings and appellant's testimony respecting the use to which it was to be applied, and in fact was applied, by appellee, that it, and the resulting transactions from beginning to end, had for their object the compounding of a felony, or the suppression of evidence to unduly prevent or end a criminal prosecution then pending against appellant, either or any of which rendered the agreement in question illegal and void. In 9 Cyc. 500, the doctrine we have in mind is thus declared: "Agreements calculated to impede the regular administration of justice are void, as against public policy, without reference to the question whether improper means are contemplated or employed in their execution. The law looks to the general tendency of such agreements, and it closes the door to temptation by refusing them recognition in any of the courts of the country. Within the condemned category are agreements to compound a crime or a penal action; agreements involving champerty or maintenance; agreements to refer compound felony

Contract—to
—validity.

to arbitration; agreements to procure a witness to swear to a particular thing, or to procure evidence of any kind; agreements to induce a witness to testify, or to abstain from testifying, or suppress evidence, or to influence the testimony of a witness in any way; agreements to stifle or prevent a criminal prosecution, or to unduly influence its termination; agreements involving the evasion of the service of judicial process; agreements to conceal the fact that a party is breaking the law; agreements interfering with the proper discharge of the duties of a judicial officer or other person charged with the enforcement of the law. . . . All agreements, it is said in a recent case, relating to proceedings in court, civil or criminal, which may involve anything inconsistent with the impartial course of justice, are void, although not open to the charge of actual corruption, and regardless of the good faith of the parties, or of the fact that no evil resulted therefrom." Kimbrough v. Lane, 11 Bush, 556; Barclay v. Breckinridge, 4 Met. (Ky.) 374; Gardner v. Maxey, 9 B. Mon. 90; Swan v. Chandler, 8 B. Mon. 97; Miller v. Payne, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 288 (abstract); Wheeler & W. Mfg. Co. v. Hord, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 240.

As the agreement in question was and is void, it is unenforceable as to either of the parties to it, or any Money had and received—recovery of money advanced to compound

felony.

person intended to be benefited by it. Nor can either party have a right of action against the other for a breach of any of its stipulations. There can be no doubt of appellant's knowledge of the illegal, even criminal, use to which the $1,000 he furnished appellee was to be applied by the latter, for its object is stated in the writing executed by him as a receipt for the money, and also admitted by appellant in giving his testimony. As said in Johnson v. McMillion, 178 Ky. 707, L.R.A.1918C, 244, 199 S. W. 1070, quoting with approval from 6 R. C. L. 969: "It undoubtedly is a correct principle, it has been said, that one who furnishes funds to another, who he knows or has every reason to believe intends to devote them to the perpetration of crime, and seeks to procure them for that purpose, will not be allowed to maintain an action on his contract."

In Johnson v. McMillion, supra, the action was upon a note executed for money a part of which, with the knowledge of the payee, was furnished and used to procure the absence and suppress the testimony of a witness against one charged with murder. It was held there could be no recovery upon the note, even for such part of the money due thereon as was not used for the illegal purpose of suppressing the testimony of the witness whose absence from the trial was procured. The opinion based this conclusion on the following well-known rule: "If any part of a single consideration for one or more promises be illegal, or if there are several considerations for one promise, some of which are legal and others illegal, the promise is wholly void, as it is impossible to say which part or which one of the considerations induced the promise." 9 Cyc. 566.

The above rule, stated in varying terms, is supported by the following cases, cited in the opinion: Brown v. Langford, 3 Bibb, 500; Kimrough v. Lane, 11 Bush, 556; Bugg v. Holt, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1208, 97 S. W. 29; McLain v. Dixon, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 683, 99 S. W. 601; Smith v. Corbin, 135 Ky. 729, 123 S. W. 277; Newport Rolling Mills Co. v. Hall, 147 Ky. 598, 144 S. W. 760; Stratton v. Wilson, 170 Ky. 61, 185 S. W. 522, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 917.

In American Nat. Bank v. Madison, 144 Ky. 152, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 597, 137 S. W. 1076, a married woman and her husband executed certain notes aggregating $2,500, secured by a mortgage upon her land, to a former employer of their son, for the payment of money embezzled by the latter. The notes were sold and assigned by the payee to the bank, which brought suit upon them when due. The payers resisted a recovery on the grounds that the notes were executed under duress and to prevent the prosecution of their son for embezzlement; the answer being made a cross petition against the employer of the son, against whom a judgment was asked for the amount of the notes, in the event of a recovery by the bank against the payers. The circuit court, holding that the bank was an innocent purchaser of the notes, gave it judgment against the payers of the notes, and the latter judgment on their cross petition against the employer of the son. On the appeal of the case, we affirmed the judgment against the payers and reversed the judgment of the payers against the son's employer, holding that, while the bank was protected by the law as an innocent purchaser of the notes, as the consideration passing between the employer of the son and payers was unlawful, as constituting the compounding of a felony, the latter were not entitled to recover of the former what was recovered of them by the bank. In the opinion it is said: "It was clearly an illegal contract, one which the law would not enforce, nor against which will it afford relief. If appellee, instead of executing her notes and mortgage, had paid to Claypool the

$2,500 in cash, and then thereafter sought to recover of him this money, on the ground that it was paid for the purpose indicated, the law would have afforded her no relief. She is in no better position as to the notes, by reason of the unlawful, vicious, and void contract into which she entered. The law will not lend its aid to the enforcement of such a contract, but simply leaves the parties where it finds them."

The principle announced in the case, supra, and others above cited, must be applied in the instant case. A part of the consideration of the contract involved being vicious, the whole contract is void. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to consider the question whether appellee has a right to retain $100 of the $1,000 furnished him by appellant as a fee. The contract under which the former received of the latter the $1,000 being void, he could not have recovered of appellant a fee; and for a like reason appellant cannot recover of him the $100 he retained for that purpose. Whether the contract is against public policy, or otherwise void, being a question to be determined by the trial court, the giving of the instruction directing a verdict for the appellee was not error.

Attorney and client—recovery of money paid as fee for compounding felony.

Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

ANNOTATION.

Agreement or understanding between attorney and client to use money for unlawful purposes as affecting their rights inter se.

In condemning an agreement between an attorney and his client, providing for the use by the attorney of money supplied by the client for an illegal purpose, and denying to the client a remedy to recover it back, the court in JONES v. HENDERSON (reported herewith) ante, 1471, applied principles long established and universally recognized in respect to unlawful and illegal contracts.

The general doctrine was stated by Wilmut, Ch. J., of England, long ago, as follows: "Whoever is a party to an unlawful contract, if he hath once paid the money stipulated to be paid in pursuance thereof, he shall not have the help of a court to fetch it back again." Collins v. Blantern (1767) 2 Wils. 347, 95 Eng. Reprint, 850. This doctrine has been consistently adhered to in this country, and applied to contracts to stifle criminal prosecutions, to suppress evidence in a judicial proceeding, or to procure testimony to bring about a given result in such a proceeding, or to control, defeat, or impede in any way the administration of justice.

The denial of relief to one in pari delicto is also related to the maxim, "ex dolo malo non oritur actio." These principles are too well known to need the citation of authorities thereon in this connection.

The cases in which agreements between attorneys at law and their clients to use money to carry out unlawful purposes came up for judicial action do not appear to have been numerous. An extended and thorough search for such uncovered only a few. And among these some contrariety of judicial opinion is disclosed.

In Ohio, it was held that a contract by attorneys at law to prevent the finding of an indictment against a person accused or suspected of a crime was absolutely void, and that the compensation stipulated to be paid for services rendered thereunder could not be recovered, notwithstanding the parties to it honestly believed in the innocence of the one suspected or accused of the impending charge, and in spite of the fact that nothing unlawful was done under or pursuant to the condemned contract. Weber v. Shay (1897) 56 Ohio St. 116, 37 L.R.A. 230, 60 Am. St. Rep. 743, 46 N. E. 377. (In this connection, see annotation in 17 A.L.R. 325, as to innocence of person threatened as affecting rights or remedies in respect to contracts to prevent or suppress criminal prosecution.)

In Pennsylvania, a contract by an attorney at law to bring about the abandonment or dismissal of a criminal prosecution for an offense of the grade of a misdemeanor for a contingent fee was held contrary to and one upon which no recovery could be had, public policy and void, notwithstanding the occurrence of the contemplated contingency without the use of any unlawful means. Ormerod v. Dearman (1882) 100 Pa. 561, 45 Am. Rep. 391.

In Kansas, the court denied a recovery upon an agreement between an attorney and client which contemplated future violations of law by the latter, and services in defending him by the former, on the ground that the contract was contrary to public policy and void. Bowman v. Phillips (1889) 41 Kan. 364, 3 L.R.A. 631, 13 Am. St. Rep. 292, 21 Pac. 230.

In Michigan, the contract of a person charged with receiving stolen property knowing it to have been stolen, to pay a lawyer a sum of money to obtain the release of the thief from jail, and to make sure that he would not appear as a witness, was adjudged an illegal and criminal agreement, which no court of justice would enforce. Crisup v. Grosslight (1890) 79 Mich. 380, 44 N. W. 621. The court was markedly severe in condemning this transaction. It said: A more shameful statement of a disreputable and criminal bargain, sought to be enforced in a court of justice, has seldom, if ever, been presented. And, it added, if the plaintiff's statement of his cause of action be true, he ought never again to be permitted to appear in the police court, or any other, as an attorney.

It is to be noted that the contract of an attorney to use his client's money in connection with a criminal prosecution must be inherently vicious to be a nullity and not recoverable upon.

Thus, the recipient from a lawyer retained to defend an alleged embezzler of bank funds, of the proceeds of checks contributed by friends of the accused, to be used in paying the fees and necessary expenses of the defense or to settle the debt due the accuser, under an agreement to hold such proceeds until after the then next term of the court, and then, if the criminal prosecution should be dismissed or continued generally, to pay over the money to a designated bank, otherwise to return it to the lawyer to be used by him for the purposes for which the checks were placed in his keeping, was not allowed to escape liability to the lawyer for the sum he received, in the latter's suit to recover the money after the event contemplated had happened, on any theory that the claimant obtained it for an unlawful purpose and under an agreement contrary to public policy and void. Shuck v. Hawkins (1915) — Mo. App. —, 180 S. W. 1034.

The argument does not appear to have been made in the reported case (JONES v. HENDERSON, ante, 1471) that an attorney at law and his client, when parties to an illegal contract to stifle a criminal prosecution of the latter, do not stand in pari delicto, since the public interest demands that the former be held to a higher ethical standard in his professional conduct.

But in Irwin v. Curie (1902) 171 N. Y. 409, 58 L.R.A. 830, 64 N. E. 161, the New York court of appeals held that the parties to a contract between an attorney at law and a layman, which was contrary to public policy because by statute the attorney was forbidden to make it, did not stand in pari delicto, and consequently that the layman might recover from the lawyer for a breach of such contract.

On the other hand, the Minnesota supreme court afterwards held that the parties to a contract between a lawyer and a layman, relating to transactions contrary to public policy and therefore void, were in pari delicto, and that neither of them could recover from the other upon such contract. Holland v. Sheehan (1909) 108 Minn. 362, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 122 N. W. 1, 17 Ann. Cas. 687. The Minnesota tribunal in that case criticized the New York decision cited next above, on the ground that in making it the court had lost sight of the important consideration that the layman was bound to know that the law forbade the lawyer to make such a contract, and that guilty intent was not essential to put both parties in pari delicto. The critic esteemed it very clear that, when two persons conspired to do together an act forbidden by law to one of them, the doing of it by joint agreement constituted a violation of law by both.

The conflict between these leaves the effect of the maxim "in pari delicto," as between attorney and client, still unsettled..

It is obvious that, since attorneys at law are licensed and authorized to assist courts in administering justice and enforcing the laws, they, above all other persons, should refrain from doing anything which might seem to encourage a violation of law. On this point, see Bowman v. Phillips (1889) 41 Kan. 364, 3 L.R.A. 631, 13 Am. St. Rep. 292, 21 Pac. 230. J. B. G.

S. C. BISSETT, Appt.,

v.

TOWN OF LITTLETON et al.

West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals — October 5, 1920.

(87 W. Va. 127, 104 S. E. 289.)

Municipal corporation — regulation of business hours of pool rooms.

A municipality chartered and exercising authority under and by virtue of chapter 47 (§§ 2382-2494) of the Code is given no specific or implied authority, by § 28 (§ 2409) thereof, or otherwise, and has no inherent power, to regulate by ordinance the time of opening and closing places where billiard and pool tables are kept for public use and resort, nor to impose penalties upon persons for violations thereof to whom state licenses have been issued pursuant to the several provisions of chapter 32 of the Code, as amended by chapter 102, Acts of 1919.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1482.]

Headnote by MILLER, J.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court for Wetzel County, in Chancery, dissolving a preliminary injunction and dismissing a bill filed to enjoin defendants from enforcing or attempting to enforce an ordinance regulating the hours of opening and closing pool rooms. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. M. H. Willis, for appellant:

While the common council of a town, chartered under chapter 47 of the Code, may possibly tax an occupation as a revenue measure, under our present laws it cannot prohibit the operation of a pool room. The laws of our state have changed the matter of a license tax upon occupations, from an exercise of the police power to a mere exercise of the taxing power.

10 Enc. Dig. 167, 169, 174; Judy v. Lashley, 50 W. Va. 628, 57 L.R.A. 413, 41 S. E. 197; State ex rel. Hatfield v. Porter, 84 W. Va. 399, 99 S. E. 508; State ex rel. Sampson v. Sheridan, 25 Wyo. 347, 1 A.L.R. 955, 170 Pac. 1.

Even if such authority and power were granted, the ordinance in question is void because it is unreasonable, unjust, oppressive, and destructive of the lawful business of the plaintiff.

Freund, Pol. Power, §§ 63, 158; McQuillin, Mun. Ord. p. 79; State v. Mott, 61 Md. 297, 48 Am. Rep. 105; Dill, Mun. Corp. § 325; Johnson v. Philadelphia, 94 Miss. 34, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 637, 47 So. 526, 19 Ann. Cas. 103; Crittenden v. Booneville, 92 Miss. 277, 131 Am. St. Rep. 520, 45 So. 723.

Even if such council had such power, and such ordinance was not unreasonable, it could not be enforced, because it is a regulation attempted after the business was authorized by the state.

State v. Pamperin, 42 Minn. 320, 44 N. W. 251.

Mr. James D. Parriott, for appellees:

Under the police powers of a municipality organized under chapter 47 of the Code, the common council can regulate a merely commercial business, vicious in its nature, so as to remove, as far as possible, its objectionable features, and so as to conserve the morals and industry of the youth of such municipality.

Burlingame v. Thompson, 74 Kan. 393, 86 Pac. 449, 11 Ann. Cas. 64; Tarkio v. Cook, 120 Mo. 1, 41 Am. St. Rep. 678, 25 S. W. 202; Goytino v. McAleer, 4 Cal. App. 655, 88 Pac. 991, 10 Cal. App. 683, 103 Pac. 174; Shreve- port v. Schulsinger, 113 La. 9, 36 So. 870, 2 Ann. Cas. 69; Ex parte Murphy, 8 Cal. App. 440, 97 Pac. 199; Ex parte Meyers, 7 Cal. App. 528, 94 Pac. 870; 19 R. C. L. 818; Laurel Hill Cemetery v. San Francisco, 216 U. S. 358, 54 L. ed. 515, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301; State ex rel. Dawson v. Atchison, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 502, note; State v. Karstendiek, 39 L.R.A. 524, note.

Whether an ordinance is unreasonable, and hence void, is for the court; but, in determining the question, it must regard the circumstances of the municipality, and the objects sought to be attained, and the necessity existing for the ordinance.

Hopkins v. Richmond, 117 Va. 692, 86 S. E. 139, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1114; People v. Gibbs, 186 Mich. 127, 152 N. W. 1053, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 830; State v. Starkey, 112 Me. 8, 90 Atl. 431, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 197; Pierce Oil Corp. v. Hope, 127 Ark. 38, 191 S. W. 405, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 143; Coal-Float v. Jeffersonville, 112 Ind. 15, 13 N. E. 115; 28 Cyc. 375; Burlingame v. Thompson, supra; Clearwater v. Bowman, 72 Kan. 92, 82 Pac. 526; Sikes v. State, 67 Ala. 77; 19 R. C. L. 805; McPherson v. Chebanse, 114 Ill. 46, 55 Am. Rep. 857, 28 N. E. 454; Greenville v. Kemmis, 58 S. C. 427, 50 L.R.A. 725, 36 S. E. 727.

Even if § 5 of the ordinance should be held void, the court may so hold without destroying the entire ordinance.

19 R. C. L. 816; Southern Operating Co. v. Chattanooga, 128 Tenn. 196, 159 S. W. 1091, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 720.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The final decree appealed from dissolved the preliminary injunction and dismissed plaintiff's bill, and plaintiff appeals. The purpose of the bill was to enjoin defendant, its mayor, and common council from enforcing or attempting to enforce against plaintiff, by prosecution or otherwise, an ordinance adopted by the council on July 21, 1919, purporting to regulate the operation of pool rooms in said town, § 2 of which is as follows: "Any place of business where such tables are kept for public use and resort shall be and remain open for business only between the hours of 7 o'clock A. M. and 8:30 o'clock P. M. each day in the week except Saturday and Sunday; but on Saturday such place may remain open until 10 o'clock P. M., and on Sunday shall remain closed the entire day."

Section 4 imposes quite drastic penalties upon those found guilty of the violation of the ordinance, and with which, the bill alleges and the record shows, plaintiff was threatened.

Prior to the commencement of the license year beginning July 1, 1919, and the passage of the ordinance complained of, plaintiff had applied for and obtained from the clerk of the county court of Wetzel county a license to operate a pool room in said town for the ensuing license year, and had paid the license tax thereon. He also subsequently obtained from the town authorities a license for the same purpose, and paid the license tax imposed thereon. He commenced business July 1, 1919.

The proposition relied on to reverse the decree and to obtain perpetuation of the injunction is that so much, at least, of the ordinance as purports to regulate the opening and closing time of places of business where such pool tables are operated, is void and unenforceable, no such power or authority being vested in town or council by chapter 47 (§§ 2382-2494) of the Code, under which the municipality was incorporated.

In support of his contention, counsel for plaintiff refers us first to chapter 102, Acts 1919, amending and re-enacting certain sections of chapter 32 of the Code 1916, particularly §§ 1 and 10 thereof. Section 1, as amended by said act, as did § 1 of chapter 32 (§ 1113) of the Code, inhibits the keeping for public use or resort a bowling alley, pool table, billiard table, etc., without a state license therefor. As amended by the Act of 1919, the businesses upon which license taxes may be imposed are very much enlarged and extended. Prior to the amendment of said section, such licenses were issuable only when authorized by the county court; now by the amendment thereof they are issued by the county clerk upon proper application filed with him, but revocable by the county court for good cause shown upon petition and notice to the licensee, and an opportunity to be heard, as provided by § 34 as amended. And prior to the amendment of § 10 by the Act of 1919, when the business was to be carried on in an incorporated city, town, or village, such license was permitted only when authorized under the charter of the city, town, or village by the council or license court thereof, as well as by the county court. So, we see these amendments worked a very decided and important change in the law respecting licenses.

It is conceded that, with this state license so obtained, plaintiff has absolute right to carry on his business in the town of Littleton. But on behalf of the defendants we are referred first to § 33 of chapter 47 (§ 2418), providing that "whenever anything for which a state license is required, is to be done within such city, town, or village, the council may require a city, town, or village license therefor, and may impose a tax thereon for the use of the city, town or village."

Here is authority for imposing a license tax on such businesses, but not to regulate or tax the same out of business, unless this power has been taken away or modified by the recent amendments to said chapter 32. As the plaintiff did not deny the power of the town of Littleton to impose the tax, but applied for and obtained a municipal license and paid the tax imposed, the same as that imposed by the state, we need not further consider this question, for no point is made thereon.

For authority to regulate in the manner provided by the ordinance, we are next referred to § 28, chapter 47 (§ 2409), as follows: "The council of such city, town or village, shall have plenary power and authority therein . . . to prevent injury or annoyance to the public or individuals from anything dangerous, offensive or unwholesome; . . . to abate or cause to be abated anything which, in the opinion of a majority of the whole council, shall be a nuisance; . . . to protect the persons and property of the citizens of such city, town or village, and to preserve peace and good order therein."

The police power of the state is also invoked as being inherent in the municipality. The police power of the state is conceded, but a municipality, in the exercise thereof, must always find the power of the state specifically delegated, or necessarily implied from the power specifically granted. Judy v. Lashley, 50 W. Va. 628, 57 L.R.A. 413, 41 S. E. 197; Bluefield Waterworks & Improv. Co. v. Bluefield, 69 W. Va. 1, 6, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 759, 70 S. E. 772; State ex rel. Hatfield v. Porter, 84 W. Va. 399, 99 S. E. 508. But can the power to regulate be extracted from the authority conferred by said § 28? "To prevent injury or annoyance to the public or individuals from anything dangerous, offensive, or unwholesome," is the first classification of the statute. It is not believed that the power to regulate the business of operating pool tables can, by any rule of construction, be referred to this power.

The next is "to abate or cause to be abated anything which, in the opinion of a majority of the whole council, shall be a nuisance."

Can it be said that operating a pool table, a business for which a license is authorized as a revenue measure, is or could be a nuisance, or within reason declared so by the council? Pool and billiard tables are now installed and operated in Y. M. C. A. buildings, in social clubs, and in the private homes of many of the people, and they are sometimes installed in the social rooms of the churches. Used as places of recreation and amusement, pool rooms are not nuisances. They may become nuisances when kept and resorted to for gambling, but they are not per se so. Other statutes of the state against gambling, against allowing pool rooms to be visited by persons under eighteen years of age, and the like, must have been regarded by the legislature as sufficiently regulatory of the business of operating pool and billiard tables for public use. In State ex rel. Morley v. Godfrey, 54 W. Va. 54, 46 S. E. 185, we held that the common council of a municipality has no power to suppress gambling. Sections 28 of chapter 47, prescribing the power of the council prior to that decision, contained no such authority, but by the amendment of this section, chapter 53, Acts 1905, this power was expressly conferred. Such, however, is not the scope or purpose of the ordinance in question, and the power claimed is not referred to that section of the Code. Authority to suppress gambling will not warrant an ordinance forbidding the keeping of billiard and pool tables for hire. State, Breninger, Prosecutor, v. Belvidere, 44 N. J. L. 350. Establishments where billiard and pool tables are kept are more properly to be regarded as places of amusement than gambling establishments. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 731, and cases cited. The third and last of the powers conferred, and relied on, is: "To protect the person and property of the citizens of such city, town or village, and to preserve peace and good order therein."

How can it be said that the power to regulate the hours of operating pool and billiard tables is lodged in the council by this provision? Certainly it is not so expressed in the language. General statutes to protect property and for preserving peace and good order fully cover these subjects, and there may be ordinances of the municipality for that purpose, but we cannot deduce from the language of § 28 any power to regulate the time of opening and closing pool rooms. If it be said that the business of pool rooms has a tendency to bring about breaches of the peace, so it was said in Judy v. Lashley, supra, with reference to carrying pistols; but as there held,

Municipal corporation—regulation of business hours of pool rooms.

so we hold in this case, the police power of the state in relation thereto must be specifically conferred before it can be exercised by a municipality. The case of Tarkio v. Cook, 120 Mo. 1, 41 Am. St. Rep. 678, 25 S. W. 202, cited and relied on by defendants' counsel, involved the validity of an ordinance regulating the time of closing billiard halls. In that case the ordinance was held valid, not alone under the power to preserve peace and good order, but because the charter specifically authorized the council to regulate the business of operating billiard tables, etc. A municipality cannot by ordinance make any law in violation of a statute. Block v. Crockett, 61 W. Va. 421, 56 S. E. 826. The Tarkio Case, supra, institutes a distinction between useful businesses and businesses, though lawful, for amusement, in the application of the power of regulation; but, as that case held, interference with the liberties of the people must find lodgment in specific authority. As said in 28 Cyc. 711, even express authority for such ordinances must be strictly construed in passing on their validity.

In all the cases cited by counsel for defendants in support of the ordinance, we find the power exercised was specifically conferred by the charter or by some general law. In no instance was municipal legislation sustained by the courts unless the power was so given. Some of the cases cited are, Goytino v. McAleer, 4 Cal. App. 655, 88 Pac. 991, and Tarkio v. Cook, supra. There is no inherent power in a municipality to enact police regulations; and, as already said, a municipality can exercise only such police powers as are fairly included in the grant of power by its charter or some general law. 19 R. C. L. 800.

Conceding the power to regulate, it is insisted the ordinance in question would be an unreasonable regulation of a lawful business. It is said, and the evidence tends to show, that the time when the ordinance requires the closing of pool rooms, is the time when many who would resort thither are released from their daily work, and that plaintiff could not succeed and pay his license taxes under such regulations; that he would be bound to quit the business because his patronage does not fairly begin until business at other places ends. There is much force in this argument of unreasonableness, but we need not go into that question, because we find the charter does not warrant the regulation imposed by the ordinance.

Our conclusion is to reverse the decree below, reinstate the injunction, and make the same perpetual.

ANNOTATION.

Licensing and regulation of pool and billiard rooms and bowling alleys.

I. In general, 1483.

II. Licensing and regulating:

- a. Power of legislature or of municipality acting under legislative authority, 1483.
- b. Authority conferred upon municipality, 1484.
- c. Reasonableness of license fee, 1485.

II.—continued.

d. Conditions of granting license:

1. In general, 1485.
2. Qualifications, 1486.
3. Requiring permission of others, 1486.
- e. Location, 1486.
- f. Forbidding other business on premises, 1486.

II.—continued.

- g. As to minors, 1487.
- h. As to hours, 1487.
- i. Who required to take out license, 1488.
- j. Right to refuse license, 1489.

III. Prohibiting or suppressing:

- a. Power of legislature or of municipality acting under legislative authority:
 - 1. In general, 1489.
 - 2. As denial of equal protection of laws, 1490.
 - 3. As discriminatory, 1491.

I. In general.

The common opinion as to the demoralizing tendency of public pool and billiard rooms has found expression in judicial opinion.

Thus, in Burlingame v. Thompson (1906) 74 Kan. 393, 86 Pac. 449, 11 Ann. Cas. 604, it was said that some of the most enticing games are reported as "gentlemen's games," in playing which the nicest decorum is observed. Still, the consequent tendency to become disorderly may be but one of the faults of a small-town pool room. It may be vicious and not be loud.

A pool room in a village is apt to degenerate into a trysting place for idlers and a nidus for vice. Morgan v. State (1902) 64 Neb. 369, 90 N. W. 108.

Playing pool and billiards is fraught with some dangers to the morals of those who play, even when the playing is done under the most favorable surroundings, in the atmosphere and under the restraining influence of the home or in the privacy of a club room. The danger is greatly increased when the playing is done at a public resort, where all who can pay the price are at liberty to come and play. There is more danger of playing in such places leading to gambling and other vices. The legislature might have prohibited playing at such places altogether. Thomas v. Foster (1917) 108 S. C. 98, 93 S. E. 397.

The dangerous tendency of these places is the subject of comment in the recent case of State ex rel. Sayles v. Superior Ct. (1922) — Wash. —, 206 Pac. 966.

III. a—continued.

- 4. As in destruction of property rights, 1491.
- 5. Statutes authorizing local option, 1491.
- b. Authority conferred upon municipality, 1492.

IV. Taxation, 1494.

V. As nuisance:

- a. In general, 1495.
- b. Power to declare as nuisance per se:
 - 1. Legislative power, 1496.
 - 2. Municipal power, 1496.
- c. Right to enjoin, 1496.

II. Licensing and regulating.a. Power of legislature or of municipality acting under legislative authority.

Those occupying useful trades and occupations do not occupy the same relation to society as those engaged solely in giving amusement to the public. Keepers of billiard tables are not recognized by the state as exercising a useful occupation, so they are subjected to police regulation by the state, and by cities under powers granted them by the state. Tarkio v. Cook (1894) 120 Mo. 1, 41 Am. St. Rep. 678, 25 S. W. 202.

A statute which requires every person operating any pool or billiard table outside of an incorporated city or town to pay an annual license was held in Thomas v. Foster (1917) 108 S. C. 98, 93 S. E. 397, to be clearly within the police power of the state, and so constitutional, since it deals with a business potential of evil.

And an ordinance to regulate, passed in pursuance of charter provisions providing that the city shall have authority, by ordinance, to license the keeping of billiard tables, nine pin and ten pin alleys, and bowling alleys, is a proper exercise of the police power. State v. Pamperin (1890) 42 Minn. 320, 44 N. W. 251.

The legislature may authorize town boards to issue licenses for billiard halls, pool halls, and bowling alleys within their respective townships. State v. Sherow (1912) 87 Kan. 235, 123 Pac. 866, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1050. The court stated that such a statute was within the police powers of the state, and denied the contention that the statute conferred upon the township board judicial, ministerial, and legislative powers in violation of the Constitution.

So, too, the legislature may legally delegate to a village the authority to license or prohibit billiard and pool tables at a public resort. Atwood v. Otter (1921) 296 Ill. 70, 129 N. E. 573.

Although the legislature cannot prohibit anyone from making or purchasing a billiard table, because it is an article of property, and, under the Constitution, anyone may lawfully acquire, possess, and protect it as such; yet the legislature may, by law, so regulate or restrict the use of such table as to prevent any injury to the public morals or public interest therefrom, in precisely the same manner that the use of other property generally may be regulated or restricted. Stevens v. State (1840) 2 Ark. 291, 35 Am. Dec. 72.

And see State v. Hangar (1844) 5 Ark. 413; State v. Hiner (1844) 5 Ark. 417.

A statute which¹ authorizes town boards to issue licenses to pool halls, billiard halls, and bowling alleys is not invalid because it confers upon the boards discretionary powers in issuing the permit. State v. Sherow (Kan.) supra.

And a statute that provides that a license to maintain a billiard table for public use, outside of any incorporated city or town, shall not be granted except with the approval of the county commissioners, is not unconstitutional as granting arbitrary power. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Mecklenburg County (1921) 181 N. C. 386, 107 S. E. 317. The court stated that "it is fully recognized that these billiard and pool tables, when kept open for indiscriminate use by the public, may, and not infrequently do, become the source of disorder and demoralization, and that it is absolutely essential that the power should be lodged in some governmental body to withhold or revoke the license in such cases; and the proviso in the statute is very far from conferring arbitrary powers on the commissioners, but they are to give these applicants for license a public hearing after full notice, and decide the question according to sound discretion, and their action may be reviewed when it shows that it has been palpably arbitrary and unjust."

Nor is such statute unconstitutional as discriminating between town and country. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Mecklenburg County (N. C.) supra. The court said that the fact that in the country the operation of these tables is, as a rule, without the instant police supervision that usually prevails in the city, is a good reason for the distinction, and of itself affords sufficient basis for the classification objected to.

A by-law of a town limiting the number of pool rooms in the town to one was held in Re Stewart (1915) 34 Ont. L. Rep. 183, 8 Ont. Week. N. 509, 24 D. L. R. 26, not to offend the municipal act providing against the creation of monopoly.

b. Authority conferred upon municipality.

Statutory authority to villages to raise revenue by levying and collecting a license tax on any occupation or business within the limits of the village, and to regulate the same by ordinance, confers upon the village ample power by ordinance to license and regulate billiard and pool rooms. Morgan v. State (1902) 64 Neb. 369, 90 N. W. 108.

So, too, statutory authority given to villages to license and regulate amusements confers authority to license and regulate billiard and pool rooms. Ibid.

And charter power to suppress and restrain bowling alleys authorizes a city to permit them to exist on the taking out of a license and paying a tax. Smith v. Madison (1855) 7 Ind. 86.

The imposition upon the mayor, by ordinance, of the duty of issuing licenses to conduct a billiard hall, is clearly within the authority conferred upon the common council to enact ordinances to restrain and prevent and suppress disorderly and gaming houses, billiard tables, and all instruments and devices for gaming. People ex rel. Economus v. Coakley (1920) 110 Misc. 385, 180 N. Y. Supp. 886.

While an ordinance authorizing the licensing of pool rooms in a place where liquor is sold is invalid where the city's charter contains a general power authorizing the licensing of a pool table, and further special prohibitory provisions that no pool table shall be kept in a house where liquor is sold, and makes the violation of such provision an indictable offense, yet a pool table kept in connection with a barroom or drinking saloon, but not in the same house with the barroom or drinking saloon, or in the same house where liquors are sold, is not within such prohibition, and so a municipality is authorized to require a license for such a pool table. Bailey v. Opelika (1906) 146 Ala. 171, 40 So. 968.

So, too, the right of one to keep a billiard or pool table within his own home, for his own private entertainment or recreation, is not affected by a statute conferring upon municipalities the power to license, tax, regulate, restrain, or prohibit, inter alia, billiard and pool tables. Ex parte Rowe (1912) 4 Ala. App. 254, 59 So. 69.

c. Reasonableness of license fee.

A license, as distinguished from a tax for the purpose of raising revenue, of $125 on the first table, $100 on the second table, and $75 on the third, and each additional table kept in the pool room for public entertainment, is prima facie valid. Purvis v. Ocilla (1920) 149 Ga. 771, 102 S. E. 241.

And in Smith v. Madison (1855) 7 Ind. 86, it was held that an ordinance fixing a license fee of $50 per year for the keeping and operating of a bowling alley might be enacted under an authority to suppress or to restrain, the court considering such license requirement as being imposed as a restraint upon the business.

And, in Wysong v. Lebanon (1904) 163 Ind. 132, 71 N. E. 194, it was held that, under authority to regulate, restrain, license, or prohibit pool tables for hire, the imposition of a $250 license fee for each table was within the range of the discretion of the common council.

Three hundred dollars for a billiard license has been regarded as not being excessive in Re Neilly (1875) 37 U. C. Q. B. 289.

Nor is $100 a table, for keeping billiard tables, excessive and prohibitive. Re Foster (1910) 22 Ont. L. Rep. 26, affirmed in (1910) 22 Ont. L. Rep. 342.

But in Crookston v. Miller (1912) 3 West. Week. Rep. (Can.) 10; 7 D. L.R. 771, a conviction for operating a pool hall without a license was quashed on the ground that the license fee was unreasonably high, and that its imposition was in absolute prohibition of the business of pool rooms. The fee provided for by the town by-law was $300 for the first table and $200 for each subsequent table, and the population of the town was only 1,100 inhabitants.

d. Conditions of granting license.

1. In general.

Municipalities may require as a condition precedent to one's engaging in the business of keeping a pool room, the making of a written application and the granting of a license thereon, the giving of a solvent bond conditioned to keep an orderly house or room, to observe the ordinances of the city and the regulations prescribed for such business, and to pay all fines imposed for the violation of municipal ordinances. Purvis v. Ocilla (1920) 149 Ga. 771, 102 S. E. 241.

And municipal authorities clothed with charter power may provide that any violation of the ordinance under which a license to operate a pool room for public use is granted shall ipso facto revoke the license to conduct such business. Ibid.

A municipal ordinance exacting a license fee of $10 for each public pool or billiard table, and forbidding the operation of such table without a license, to be granted after investigation and upon recommendation by a committee of the city council, there being a provision for notice and hearing before revocation of the license, but none for any hearing upon the original application, was upheld in State ex rel. Sayles v. Superior Ct. (1922) — Wash. —, 206 Pac. 966, as against the objection that it denied due process of law, raised by one who had been refused a renewal of his license.

2. Qualifications.

In order that one may obtain a license to operate a pool room, he must be a person of good moral character, law-abiding, and of good repute, and if he has a reputation as a pool-room operator that reputation should be good, and his place must be a suitable one, that is, not so near a church, school, or residence as to interfere with others in the pursuit or enjoyment of matter-of-course rights. State ex rel. Oetker v. Johnson (1919) — Mo. App. —, 211 S. W. 682.

An ordinance providing that no license to operate a pool table shall be granted to a person who is not a citizen of the United States was held in State ex rel. Balli v. Carrel (1919) 99 Ohio St. 285, 124 N. E. 129, to be valid and constitutional.

3. Requiring permission of others.

A city ordinance prescribing that "no person, firm, or corporation shall be permitted to establish a pool or billiard room or tenpin alley to be operated for hire, without first obtaining written permission of both the landlords and tenants nearest such place on either side, and no license will be granted until such permission is obtained," is not void on the ground that it is an unreasonable restriction upon business of the character therein dealt with. Trammell v. Yancey (1914) 142 Ga. 553, 83 S. E. 114 (syllabus No. 1 by the court).

e. Location.

The business of conducting pool or billiard rooms for public entertainment may, under the usual general welfare clause of a municipal charter, be confined to reasonable territorial limits within the municipality. Purvis v. Ocilla (1920) 149 Ga. 771, 102 S. E. 241.

And in Caraway v. State (1920) 143 Ark. 48, 219 S. W. 736, a statute which prohibited the operation of pool or billiard rooms within a certain distance of a school or church in certain counties was held constitutional as against the contention that it violated the constitutional provision which denies to the general assembly the right to grant to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not equally apply to all citizens. The court said: "All persons affected by the act are affected in the same manner. No citizen living in or out of the county named in the act can operate a billiard room within the prohibited area; but any of the citizens in that area have the right any other citizen of the state has to operate billiard halls in territory where their operation is not prohibited."

Nor was it invalid as arbitrary and unreasonable in that it would result in the practical confiscation of property used in a business which had been licensed pursuant to an ordinance which was valid at the time it was passed, and upon which the city license tax and Federal war tax had been paid. Ibid.

But the power to regulate tenpin alleys, given by the general statute to a city, does not authorize an ordinance forbidding the location of such alleys within the fire limits of the city or within 100 yards of any private residence or business house, where the only place within the corporate limits and outside of the prohibited points at which such an alley could be located would be 600 yards from the business center and in a portion of the city remote from any thoroughfare or public place, since the power to regulate does not include the power to suppress or prohibit. Ex parte Patterson (1900) 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 256, 51 L.R.A. 654, 58 S. W. 1011.

f. Forbidding other business on premises.

A provision of a municipal ordinance making it unlawful for any person to sell or offer for sale any article of merchandise in a pool room, or to carry on or conduct any other business, trade, or calling at such place, is not an unreasonable exercise of the police power. Purvis v. Ocilla (1920) 149 Ga. 771, 102 S. E. 241.

g. As to minors.

An ordinance prohibiting minors from visiting or remaining in a public billiard hall or pool room is not unconstitutional, notwithstanding such places do not constitute a nuisance per se. Ex parte Meyers (1908) 7 Cal. App. 528, 94 Pac. 870.

An incorporated musical society which operates bowling alleys for the benefit and amusement of its members, and for profit of itself, is an "establishment" within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the employment of any child under the age of fourteen years. McElhone v. Philadelphia Quartette Club (1913) 53 Pa. Super. Ct. 262.

h. As to hours.

A municipality, under the usual general welfare clause of its charter, may provide that pool rooms conducted for public entertainment within the city shall not be kept open between the hours of 7 P. M. and 6 A. M., or on Sundays or holidays, or "such days as the mayor and council shall direct." Purvis v. Ocilla (1920) 149 Ga. 771, 102 S. E. 241.

So, too, a city which has power to pass such ordinances as may be expedient to maintaining the peace, good government, health, and welfare of the city, and expressly to regulate billiard tables on which games are played for amusement, has the power to pass an ordinance relating to and regulating not only the tables upon which the games of billiards are played, but also the halls or rooms in which they are kept and used, and so is authorized to pass an ordinance requiring that billiard halls shall close at 9 o'clock in the evening. Tarkio v. Cook (1893) 120 Mo. 1, 41 Am. St. Rep. 678, 25 S. W. 202.

Also, under charter authority to regulate billiard and pool halls within the municipal limits, and to enact police regulations in regard thereto, a city is authorized to enact and enforce an ordinance closing pool halls from 12 o'clock at night until 5 o'clock the next morning. Ex parte Brewer (1913) 68 Tex. Crim. Rep. 387, 152 S. W. 1068; Ex parte Pitchios

(1913) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 152 S. W. 1074.

And in Com. v. Colton (1857) 8 Gray (Mass.) 488, it was held to be clearly within the police power of the legislature to prohibit a bowling alley from keeping open after 6 o'clock on a Saturday afternoon.

An ordinance which provides that all persons, firms, or corporations that own or carry on a cigar store, soft-drink parlor, billiard or pool parlor, restaurant, and other like places of business that deal in soft drinks or bottled goods, shall close at midnight and remain closed until 5 A. M., is, where it affects only those persons, firms, and corporations owning or conducting places of business that deal in soft drinks or bottled goods, and affects all that class alike, a valid ordinance. Churchill v. Albany (1913) 65 Or. 442, 133 Pac. 632, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1094.

An ordinance requiring billiard halls to be closed at 9 o'clock in the evening is not unreasonable or in derogation of any common rights. Tarkio v. Cook (Mo.) supra.

And as to the reasonableness of regulations requiring pool halls and billiard rooms to remain closed between midnight and 5 o'clock in the morning, the court, in Ex parte Brewer (1913) 68 Tex. Crim. Rep. 387, 152 S. W. 1068, said: "Experience has shown that during the hours between midnight and daylight were the hours in which the lawless element, to a great extent, would gather in and around saloons and breed crime. Consequently, the legislature, in the exercise of the police power, closed the saloons during those hours. Since the saloons have closed, these elements have gathered around pool and billiard halls in the cities, and the same reasoning, perhaps, which caused the legislature to close the saloons during these hours, would move the legislative bodies of the cities and of towns to close the pool and billiard halls during the same hours."

But a town ordinance which undertakes to limit the opening of pool halls till 9 o'clock in the evening is in direct conflict with a state statute under which pool halls and billiard tables may run or keep open during the twenty-four hours, since there is no limit placed by the statute upon the hours of opening and carrying on the business, and so is invalid. Ex parte Farley (1912) 65 Tex. Crim. Rep. 405, 144 S. W. 530.

And while, under charter authority to license billiard rooms, the license ordinance may impose reasonable conditions and terms as a consideration of the granting of the license, yet after the issue of the license no new terms and conditions can be imposed. So, where a license was issued imposing no conditions as to the hours of closing, excepting that the billiard hall should not be open on Sunday, a new ordinance providing that billiard halls shall remain closed during the hours of 11 o'clock at night and 6 in the morning was inoperative as to existing licenses issued under the former license ordinance. State v. Pamperin (1890) 42 Minn. 320, 44 N. W. 251. The court stated that if the power to regulate had also been conferred by the charter, then new and additional police regulations in respect to the same matter might have been made and enforced.

The power that a city has to decide the hours during which billiard and pool rooms may be open depends upon its charter. Ex parte Perkins (1920) 88 Tex. Crim. Rep. 309, 226 S. W. 411.

So, a city is without authority to regulate the hours during which pool and billiard rooms licensed by the state may be kept open, where the terms in which the city's charter is framed exclude the idea that it was intended thereby to confer the power to regulate amusements licensed by the state and not named in the city charter. Ibid.

1. Who required to take out license.

See also infra, IV. (Taxation).

A bowling alley kept by the proprietor of a watering place, solely for the exercise and amusement of his guests, no charge being made against those who played upon it, is within the meaning of a statute requiring alleys to be licensed. Spaight v. State (1856) 29 Ala. 32.

So, too, a billiard table kept by the proprietor of a cigar store, though used solely by his patrons and without charge to them or profit to himself, is within the meaning of a statute which provides that one who maintains a billiard table for public use shall procure a license. State v. Shotts (1910) 143 Mo. App. 346, 128 S. W. 245.

A billiard table operated in a bar-room, with the understanding that the losers in games played on the table must treat the winning players at the bar, is kept for public use, and is a source of profit to the owner, and the owner must take out a license therefore. Schmetzer v. State (1884) 63 Md. 420. So, one is required to take out a license for a billiard table who, although he does not charge any specific sum for the use of the table, does require that the loser should treat at his bar those who played with him and must pay for as many drinks as there were players, whether such players wished to drink or not. Clarke v. State (1873) 49 Ala. 37.

Possession of a municipal license to keep billiard tables is no defense to a prosecution for failure to take out a state license, where there is nothing whatever in the terms of the act requiring a state license to indicate a legislative intent to exempt the keepers of billiard tables in the city from the necessity of obtaining a state license, but the contrary design is clearly apparent from the whole course of legislation. Weber v. State (1911) 116 Md. 402, 81 Atl. 606.

And that one had paid an occupation tax imposed upon the business of conducting a billiard hall and pool room was held in McCarter v. Lexington (1908) 80 Neb. 714, 115 N. W. 303, to be no defense for failure to take out a license as required by an ordinance passed subsequent to his having paid the occupation tax.

A private club which provides bowling alleys on the club premises, and collects due from its members for games played thereon, does not own or keep bowling alleys for hire or profit within the meaning of acts requiring a license. Rex v. Dominion Bowling & Athletic Club (1909) 19 Ont. L. Rep. 107, 15 Can. Crim. Cas. 105.

J. Right to refuse license.

Where, by statute, a county court is vested with power to license and tax billiard and pool tables, it is vested also with discretion to refuse such license for cause. State ex rel. McClanahan v. Dewitt (1911) 160 Mo. App. 304, 142 S. W. 366.

In State ex rel. Bayless v. County Ct. (1916) 193 Mo. App. 373, 185 S. W. 1149, the Kansas City court of appeals held that the county court has no authority to refuse a license to keep a pool hall merely for the reason that it thinks that pool halls are not a good thing for any community, and that there is a strong sentiment against them in the county, and that they are a nuisance. And following that case as authority, the Springfield court of appeals in State ex rel. Oetker v. Johnson (1919) — Mo. App. —, 211 S. W. 682, held that the county court was not justified in refusing such a license, neither the applicant nor the location being unsuitable, because of a remonstrance by numerous citizens, protesting against the issuance of such licenses to any persons, and a resolution of the city council to the same effect. But a contrary position is taken by the Springfield court of appeals in the recent case of State ex rel. Hawkins v. Harris (1922) — Mo. App. —, 239 S. W. 564, which expressly characterizes those decisions as erroneous, and holds that the county court may refuse billiard or pool room licenses, without basing their conclusion on anything other than the determination that such an institution in the community is a nuisance. The statute (Mo. Rev. Stat. 1919, § 644) under which the county court acts in granting such licenses merely provides that the county court "shall have power to license the keepers of billiard tables," there being no provision for a hearing or a remonstrance, and, in the opinion of the court in this case, nothing directing that the county court shall do anything in connection with an application filed before it.

20 A.L.R.—94.

And one is within the meaning of a statute requiring a license for conducting a pool hall for hire who, although he advertises that the use of the tables is free to all, posts signs that donations will be thankfully received, and places a box near one of the tables, in which patrons deposit their donations. Ida Grove v. Smith (1918) — Iowa, —, 167 N. W. 188.

And a city which, by a general ordinance, has provided for the licensing of pool and billiard halls and pool and billiard tables, has no right to make an arbitrary discrimination in granting licenses; it cannot grant the same to favored ones and refuse another who has, in all respects, complied with the statutes of the state and ordinances of the city, so one who has brought himself strictly within the requirements regulating the licensing power may compel, by mandamus, the corporate authorities to grant him a license when he is refused through mere caprice. Nicodemus v. State (1921) 82 Okla. 152, 198 Pac. 847.

Where one has secured a county license authorizing him to conduct a pool and billiard room within a city of the first class, such city has no power to refuse a city license to such person upon presentation of his county license and payment of the fee required by the city ordinance for a city license. Nicodemus v. State (Okla.) supra.

However, the arbitrary refusal to issue a license to conduct a pool room for hire will not authorize one to conduct the business in defiance thereof, since, if it is the legal duty of a mayor to issue a license, proper steps to compel him to do so should be taken. Ida Grove v. Smith (1918) — Iowa, —, 167 N. W. 188.

III. Prohibiting or suppressing.

a. Power of legislature or of municipality acting under legislative authority.

1. In general.

"Any practice or business the tendency of which, as shown by experience, is to weaken or corrupt the morals of those who follow it, or to encourage idleness instead of habits of industry, is a legitimate subject for regulation or prohibition by the state. On this principle it is concededly within the police power of the state to suppress gambling in all its forms including . . . pool tables for hire." 6 R. C. L. p. 207.

So, too, it cannot be held as a matter of law that a pool table operated for the public, and not for a mere private pleasure or amusement, has not a tendency to invite to idleness and vice, and that it is not a subject which, under the law, should be so placed in the jurisdiction of municipalities as that, if they see proper, they may prohibit them altogether. Conditions existing in one municipality may be such that certain things which such municipality may, if it sees proper, lawfully prohibit, may be permitted to exist without injurious effect, while in another municipality the conditions may be such that, if such things are permitted to exist, public injury will, in all probability, actually result. Ex parte Rowe (1912) 4 Ala. App. 254, 59 So. 69.

The legislature may confer upon municipal authorities the power to prohibit outright the keeping of pool rooms for public use within the limits of the city. Trammell v. Rome (1914) 142 Ga. 602, 83 S. E. 221; Purvis v. Ocilla (1920) 149 Ga. 771, 102 S. E. 241.

And this is true although the legislature may have imposed a license or tax for the purpose of raising revenue upon the business of keeping pool rooms for public use. Purvis v. Ocilla (Ga.) supra.

And in Burlingame v. Thompson (1906) 74 Kan. 393, 86 Pac. 449, 11 Ann. Cas. 64, it was held that, in authorizing a city of the first class to prohibit the operation of pool tables for hire, the legislature did not transcend its power.

And subsequent to the decision in State ex rel. McMonies v. McMonies (1906) 75 Neb. 443, 106 N. W. 454, infra, the legislature delegated to boards of trustees of villages the power which they did not previously possess; that is, the right to prohibit billiard and pool halls. This delegation of power was held to be constitutional in Cole v. Culbertson (1910) 86 Neb. 160, 125 N. W. 287, the court stating that the statute was probably passed as the result of the decision in the McMonies Case.

The provision of a city charter authorizing the general council to prohibit by ordinance the keeping of billiard or pool tables for the public within the municipality, and an ordinance making such prohibition, are not void on the ground of special legislation in a case provided for in existing general law. Trammell v. Rome (1914) 142 Ga. 602, 83 S. E. 221. In this case it was contended that the charter provision and the ordinance prohibiting billiard and pool rooms were in conflict with the general tax act imposing a tax on the keeper of billiard and pool tables kept for public use. The court said: "It was not the object of the general tax to give to every person who paid the tax the right to maintain and operate for public use billiard and pool tables. . . . It was not designed as an exemption from the state's police power, so as to prevent the state from expressly permitting a municipality to exclude the carrying on of the business of operating billiard or pool tables within the limits of that municipality."

A general statute conferring upon municipalities the power to prohibit billiard and pool tables does not violate the constitutional provision that the legislature shall have no power to authorize any municipal corporation to pass any laws inconsistent with the general laws of the state, although there is a general law punishing the keeping of such a table without a license. Ex parte Rowe (1912) 4 Ala. App. 254, 59 So. 69.

2. As denial of equal protection of laws.

The statute which provides that "if any keeper of a public house or retailer of spirituous liquors, in this state shall establish, keep, or permit, to be kept upon his or their lot or premises, any ball or ninepin alley, or shall in whole or in part be interested in any ball or ninepin alley upon the lot or premises of another, he or they shall [etc.],” was held in Koepke v. State (1903) 68 Neb. 152, 93 N. W. 1129, to be constitutional as against the contention that it forbids a retailer of intoxicants or the keeper of a public house from keeping or being interested in a bowling alley anywhere in the state, and is therefore an unreasonable restriction upon individual freedom and a violation of the right of every citizen to the equal protection of the laws. The court stated: “Under counsel’s construction, the statute as a whole would, perhaps, be indefensible; but we are not disposed to think it was designed to exclude innkeepers and saloon keepers from a business in which all other citizens are permitted to engage, but rather to prevent evils supposed to result from running a bowling alley in connection with a saloon or hotel. It is rather to be presumed that the legislature failed to express itself clearly, than that it intended to enact an unconstitutional law.” The court added that if it were to accept the view that the prohibition against keeping a bowling alley or being financially interested in one was subject to no implied limitations, it would not follow that the judgment was wrong; since the enactment of a law prohibiting the running of a bowling alley in connection with a saloon or hotel was a legitimate exercise of legislative power, and the prohibition is valid, even if it be regarded as embraced within a broader prohibition which is void to the extent that it is broader.

A municipal ordinance forbidding the keeping of billiard or pool tables for hire or public use does not deny the equal protection of the laws because hotel keepers are permitted to maintain a billiard or pool room in which their regular and registered guests may play. Murphy v. California (1912) 225 U. S. 623, 56 L. ed. 1229, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 153, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697.

3. As discriminatory.

An ordinance which prohibits the operation of pool tables for hire is not void in that it discriminates in favor of a private pool table kept for the owner’s own amusement and benefit. Burlingame v. Thompson (1906) 74 Kan. 393, 86 Pac. 449, 11 Ann. Cas. 64.

And in Cole v. Culbertson (1907) 86 Neb. 160, 125 N. W. 287, it was held, citing Burlingame v. Thompson (Kan.) supra, with approval, that an ordinance is not void as being discriminatory in that it prohibits the keeping of a billiard or pool hall or the maintaining of tables for hire, while it does not attempt to prohibit keeping them for private or free use.

4. As in destruction of property rights.

The proprietor of an existing billiard and pool room is not deprived of his property without due process of law, contrary to the Federal Constitution, 14th Amendment, by the passage of a municipal ordinance prohibiting the keeping of billiard or pool tables for hire or public use. Murphy v. California (1912) 225 U. S. 623, 56 L. ed. 1229, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 153, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697.

Nor is an ordinance enacted pursuant to legislative authority prohibiting and suppressing pool tables for hire unconstitutional in that it suppresses tables lawfully in use at the time the ordinance is enacted. Burlingame v. Thompson (1906) 74 Kan. 393, 86 Pac. 449, 11 Ann. Cas. 64.

And the fact that such an ordinance may suppress pool tables which are conducted in a decent and orderly manner does not affect the validity of the ordinance. Ibid.

But a general ordinance of a municipality prohibiting all pool rooms or billiard tables in the town is void as being in destruction of property rights. Crittenden v. Booneville (1908) 92 Miss. 277, 131 Am. St. Rep. 518, 45 So. 723.

5. Statutes authorizing local option.

Roper v. Lumpkins (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 163 S. W. 110, Ex parte Francis (1914) 72 Tex. Crim. Rep. 304, 165 S. W. 147, and Winn v. Dyess (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 294, — which held that the Texas statute providing for local option elections in counties and other subdivisions to determine whether or not pool rooms should be prohibited does not delegate legislative powers, and so is constitutional, and is a valid law where it has been adopted by a majority vote of a county or other designated political subdivision — are overruled by Ex parte Mitchell (1915) 109 Tex. 11, 177 S. W. 953, which held such statute to be unconstitutional. See also Lyle v. State (1917) 80 Tex. Crim. Rep. 606, 193 S. W. 680, and Roper & Gilley v. Lumpkins (1921) — Tex. —, 230 S. W. 144.

b. Authority conferred upon municipality.

Pool halls or billiard parlors not being nuisances per se, a town council is without authority to prohibit their maintenance unless that authority was conferred by express legislative enactment or unless their maintenance was made unlawful by the laws of the state. Dardanelle v. Gillespie (1915) 116 Ark. 390, 172 S. W. 1036.

So, too, in the absence of express legislative authority, municipal authorities cannot prohibit the keeping of public pool rooms within the municipality; and this is true although the charter, in addition to the general welfare clause, contains a provision expressly authorizing the authorities to license or tax pool rooms. Purvis v. Ocilla (1920) 149 Ga. 771, 102 S. E. 241. The court stated that under the rule recognized in this state the authority to license and regulate does not imply the power to prohibit, but rather implies that the business is to be allowed to continue under such reasonable regulations as the authorities may adopt.

A statute providing that the mayor and board of aldermen of every city, town, and village shall have power to regulate, control, and suppress, and impose a privilege tax on all, billiard tables, bowling alleys, ten pin alleys, authorizes the enactment of an ordinance providing that "all pool rooms and billiard halls . . . are declared to be a public nuisance, and it shall be unlawful for any person . . .

to operate, within the limits of said town for gain or for gambling purposes any pool or billiard tables or maintain any public hall or room where such games may be played." Eros v. Powell (1915) 137 La. 342, 68 So. 632. It was contended in this case that the power conferred by statute to suppress billiard tables did not include the power to suppress pool tables; in other words, that the word "billiards" did not comprehend the word "pool." But the court stated that it was of opinion that, though pool, pool tables, pool rooms, and pool halls are not specifically mentioned in the statute, they were included in the term "billiard tables," which is use; since pool tables are billiard tables with pockets, which have been appropriated in the particular game or form of billiards called pool, even though the game of billiards proper, which was formerly played upon such tables, is now played upon tables without pockets. Moreover, the court added, the paragraph in question, after the completion of its enumeration, concludes with the words "and other like things," and the operation of pool tables "for gain or gambling purposes," and the "maintenance of public halls where such games may be played," are ejusdem generis as the things which are enumerated, and hence fall within the same prohibition.

The power to suppress the keeping of a public place for billiards, irrespective of gambling, was held in Shreveport v. Dale (1921) 149 La. 439, 89 So. 408, to be conferred by a municipal charter which, after expressly conferring power to prevent persons from gaming for money or property with billiards, confers authority to regulate (or suppress) billiard tables.

A statute which gives a city council power to suppress billiard tables, enacted at a time when a billiard table was similar to the later-day pool table, is sufficiently comprehensive to authorize an ordinance forbidding the maintenance of a public pool table. Clearwater v. Bowman (1905) 72 Kan. 92, 82 Pac. 526.

And it was held in Ex parte Murphy

(1908) 8 Cal. App. 440, 97 Pac. 199, followed and approved in (1909) 155 Cal. 322, 100 Pac. 1134, that an ordinance prohibiting the maintenance of a pool room or billiard hall within a city was sustainable under a power to make and enforce such local police, sanitary, and other regulations as were not in conflict with the general laws, notwithstanding such places do not constitute a nuisance per se. The court said that no one possesses an inherent right to conduct for-profit a place intended purely for the amusement of its patrons, where the tendency thereof is immoral or vicious; and a public billiard hall or pool room may, by reason of its environment or conditions existing in some communities, constitute a menace and endanger the morals and well-being of the public, and therefore become the subject of regulation or absolute prohibition under the police powers of the state or municipality. For a later phase of this case, see Murphy v. People (1912) 222 U. S. 623, 56 L. ed. 1229, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 153, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697, cited in this note.

But a village, under its statutory authority to license and regulate billiard and pool halls, has no authority to prohibit or suppress them. State ex rel. McMonies v. McMonies (1906) 75 Neb. 443, 106 N. W. 454; Re McMonies (1906) 75 Neb. 702, 106 N. W. 456.

And under a statute conferring upon town councils the power to license, regulate, tax, or suppress billiard tables or other instruments used for gaming, the town council is without authority to pass an ordinance suppressing billiard tables which are not operated for the purpose of gaming. Dardanelle v. Gillespie (1915) 116 Ark. 390, 172 S. W. 1036.

So, too, statutory authority given to a municipality "to regulate, suppress, and impose a privilege tax on all . . . billiard tables, pool rooms," does not carry with it the power to prohibit, unless it is in the exercise of the police power to suppress a nuisance. Crittenden v. Booneville (1908) 92 Miss. 277, 131 Am. St. Rep. 518, 45 So. 723. The court said: "The municipality may regulate; that is to say, it may provide the hours during which these places may keep open, etc., and if the conduct of the owner is such as to warrant so doing, or if the business is conducted in a boisterous or immoral way so as to become a nuisance, it may suppress altogether. But the power to regulate and suppress when the business has become a nuisance is one thing, and the power to pass a general ordinance prohibiting the operation of a pool room, which has been legalized by the statute, is another thing. The first alone it has the power to exercise."

In Ex parte Rowe (1912) 4 Ala. App. 254, 59 So. 69, the statute, in terms, conferred authority to "prohibit." The court distinguished Crittenden v. Booneville (1908) 92 Miss. 277, 131 Am. St. Rep. 518, 45 So. 723, which held that a municipality in that state had no power to prohibit by ordinance public pool tables, stating that the ordinance in that case was adopted under a statute of Mississippi known as one of its nuisance statutes, and authorized towns and cities to regulate and suppress pool rooms, and so there was room for such a judicial construction of the statutes as was placed upon them by the supreme court of Mississippi. "Suppress" as used in the connection in which it was used in the Mississippi statute might well have been, as in fact it was, construed as meaning to abate, but in the statute under consideration in the Rowe Case the word in the statute to be construed is not "suppress," but "prohibit;" and the word "prohibit" means to prevent, and as used in this statute means that a municipality may, if it seems proper to do so, prevent the exhibition of public pool tables within its jurisdiction entirely.

And in Corinth v. Crittenden (1908) 94 Miss. 41, 47 So. 525, it was held that an ordinance of the city of Corinth prohibiting the operation of pool rooms and billiard tables was valid, since the city of Corinth operated under a special charter, wherein the city was given power to restrain or prohibit the keeping of billiard tables, pool tables, etc., within its borders.

The case of Crittenden v. Booneville (Miss.) supra, denying the power of the municipality to prohibit, was distinguished upon the ground that the municipality in that case was acting under Code provisions, empowering municipalities to "regulate, suppress, and impose a privilege tax," inter alia, upon billiard tables and pool rooms, it being held in that case that the power to regulate and suppress does not carry with it the power to prohibit unless it is in the exercise of the police power to suppress a nuisance.

An ordinance which is passed under the guise of one to regulate billiard halls, but which is in fact intended to be one for the suppression of that business is void. Bryan v. Malvern (1916) 122 Ark. 379, 183 S. W. 957.

And if such an ordinance did not operate to accomplish the result of suppressing pool-room business in the city it would be, in effect, a revenue measure, and so void. Ibid.

The mayor of a town is without authority to issue a license to keep and operate pool tables where there is an ordinance of the town prohibiting any person from keeping a pool hall or operating a pool table, and one to whom such license has been issued can claim no immunity under the license issued by the mayor. Dardanelle v. Gillespie (1915) 116 Ark. 390, 172 S. W. 1036.

IV. Taxation.

The legislature has a perfect right to levy an occupation tax on a pool table run in connection with a saloon, regardless of any profit or payment whatever to the owner of such table. Wright v. State (1899) 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 200, 53 S. W. 640.

So, a statute levying an occupation tax on any pool table run for profit, or on any pool table used in connection with any drinking saloon or other place of business where intoxicating liquors are sold or given away, requires the tax to be paid regardless of any profit, where the pool table is kept in a saloon. Ibid.

And a club organized for social and literary purposes which keeps a billiard table for the use of members and invited guests only, the members alone paying for the use of the table, and then only a nominal sum which does not meet the expense of keeping up and maintaining the table, is liable to a tax imposed upon the keeper of a billiard table. The Germania v. State (1854) 7 Md. 1.

And under a statute providing that every man who "erects and keeps" a billiard table is made liable to a tax, one who maintains a billiard table for purposes of amusement only is liable to the tax. Sears v. West (1809) 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 291, 3 Am. Dec. 694.

But it has been held that a social club is not "the keeper of a billiard or pool room for purposes of profit" within the meaning of a statute requiring such to pay a tax. Union League v. Ransley (1908) 39 Pa. Super. Ct. 514.

And in Tarde v. Benseman (1868) 31 Tex. 277, the court stated that a billiard table which was simply kept for amusement, and not for profit, would not be a proper subject of taxation under a statute which requires a license tax of $50 for each and every person or firm keeping a billiard table.

So, too, a club which maintains billiard and pool tables for the free use of its members and invited guests is not within the meaning of a statute levying an occupation tax upon "every billiard or pool table or anything of the kind used for profit . . . any such table used in connection with any drinking saloon or other place of business where intoxicating liquors . . . or other things of value are sold or given away or upon which any money or other thing of value is paid shall be regarded as used for profit." State v. Country Club (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 173 S. W. 570.

A statute imposing a tax for the privilege of keeping a billiard table was held in Stevens v. State (1840) 2 Ark. 291, 35 Am. Dec. 72, to be unconstitutional and void.

And in Washington v. State (1853) 13 Ark. 752, and State v. Hines (1853) 13 Ark. 764, it was held that so much of an act as prohibited any person from setting up a billiard table or ten pin alley without paying a sum of money into the state treasury as a license therefor was repugnant to the Constitution, and void because there was no power to do that indirectly which could not be done directly, and the license was none the less a tax for the privilege of setting up such a table or alley because collected or enforced by means of criminal prosecution.

But the court was of the opinion that the constitutional provision concerning revenue was intended to apply to state revenue only, and not to taxes levied for county purposes, and so the general assembly might well, by legislation, authorize counties and incorporated towns to impose a tax upon billiard tables, ten pin alleys, etc., for municipal purposes and as a police regulation for the preservation of good order. Ibid.

As the act considered in the Washington Case provided for a state tax as well as authorizing a county tax, it was held that the whole act must be declared void, as the whole scope and provisions of the act were so intimately blended that the court did not feel warranted, by any rule of judicial interpretation, to separate the provisions in order to give to a part of the act any effect which it could not presume was intended.

V. As nuisance.

a. In general.

Bowling alleys appear to have been early regarded as analogous in character to stages for rope dancing, probably because they produced similar results. Hall's Case (1671) 1 Mod. 76, 86 Eng. Reprint, 744. Chief Justice Hale is reported to have said in that case "that in the eighth year of Charles I. Noy came into court and prayed a writ to prohibit a bowling alley erected near St. Dunstan's Church, and had it." It appears that a writ was issued in the case referred to by Lord Hale to abate the bowling alley as a nuisance. 1 Vent. 169, 86 Eng. Reprint, 115.

So, bowling alleys were held at common law to be nuisances per se where they were run for gain and were open to the public generally, not only because they were considered great temptations to idleness, but also because they were apt to draw together great numbers of disorderly persons, which could not keep from being very inconvenient to the neighborhood. 1 Hawk. P. C. chap. 75, § 6; Rex v. Hall (1671) 2 Keble, 846, 84 Eng. Reprint, 535.

And in several early cases in the United States the law on this subject which obtained at common law was recognized as still the law. Tanner v. Albion (1843) 5 Hill (N. Y.) 121, 40 Am. Dec. 337; State v. Haines (1849) 30 Me. 65.

So, also, in Updike v. Campbell (1855) 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 570, the same view of bowling alleys was entertained as prevailed in the Tanner Case (N. Y.) supra, and a contract leasing certain premises for the purpose of conducting a bowling alley therein was held to be void because the leasing was for an illegal purpose, although Judge Woodruff said that he was by no means satisfied with the correctness of the decision in the Tanner Case.

And in the early case of State v. Haines (Me.) supra, a conviction under an indictment charging that defendant was keeping a bowling alley for gain and common use was sustained, the basis of the decision being that a bowling alley was a common nuisance.

And in Tanner v. Albion (N. Y.) supra, it was held that, under authority to adopt by-laws relating to nuisances, a municipality might prohibit the keeping of a bowling alley for hire.

But the modern view is the one held in State v. Hall (1867) 32 N. J. L. 158, that a bowling alley kept by the owner with a view to profit, for the public amusement, not in itself prohibited by law, cannot be held to be a nuisance, unless such consequences attach from the mode in which it is kept; the mere keeping of a ten pin alley is not a nuisance per se.

And to the same effect are Harrison v. People (1902) 101 Ill. App. 224; Bloomhuff v. State (1846) 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 205; Hackney v. State (1857) 8 Ind. 494; State v. Noyes (1855) 30

N. H. 279; and Pape v. Pratt Institute (1908) 127 App. Div. 147, 111 N. Y. Supp. 354.

But a bowling alley kept for hire, while not a nuisance per se everywhere, may become such in some places (Harrison v. People (Ill.) supra), or by the mode in which it is kept (Bloomhuff v. State (1846) 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 205; Hackney v. State (1856) 8 Ind. 494).

So, bowling alleys and moving picture theaters, while not nuisances per se, may become so when they create a disturbance to the serious annoyance and physical discomfort of persons of ordinary sensibilities living in the neighborhood. Hamilton Corp. v. Julian (1917) 130 Md. 597, 7 A.L.R. 746, 101 Atl. 558.

Keeping a billiard room is not a nuisance at common law (People v. Sergeant (1828) 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 139), unless it be in a tavern, where it is made a nuisance by statute. Ibid.

And keeping a billiard table even though the loser pays for its use is not keeping a gambling table within the statute. Ibid.; People ex rel. Healey v. Forbes (1889) 52 Hun, 30, 4 N. Y. Supp. 757; People v. Commissioner of Excise, cited in People ex rel. Healey v. Forbes as decided in November, 1887.

But see State v. Book (1875) 41 Iowa, 550, 20 Am. Rep. 609, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 234, which held that one is guilty of maintaining a house for purposes of gambling where he operates billiard tables upon which the players play with the understanding that the loser shall pay for the games, and they are in fact so played.

b. Power to declare as nuisance per se.

1. Legislative power.

While a bowling alley is not of itself a nuisance, since it may either remain unused or it may be used only as a place of innocent amusement, and its injurious character depends upon the improper use alone, yet the legislature may determine that an instrument which tends to facilitate vicious practices is of itself an evil which ought to be prohibited. State v. Noyes (1855) 30 N. H. 279.

2. Municipal power.

Pool halls which may become nuisances by being improperly conducted may be so regulated by a city council that they may not become a nuisance. Bryan v. Malvern (1916) 122 Ark. 379, 183 S. W. 957.

The operation of a billiard hall or a pool room for gain is not recognized by law as necessary or useful, or a business which a person has an inherent right to engage in; and so a municipal ordinance declaring them a nuisance, and forbidding them, passed under statutory authority to declare what shall constitute a nuisance and to prevent the same, is valid. Re Jones (1910) 4 Okla. Crim. Rep. 74, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 548, 140 Am. St. Rep. 655, 109 Pac. 570.

So, if by the general terms of a village charter, the trustees are authorized to make by-laws relative to slaughterhouses and nuisances generally, and pursuant to such authority they passed a by-law declaring the keeping of the tenpin alley for gain to be a nuisance, such ordinance is valid even though the owner thereof has printed rules posted therein relative to the game, and forbidding, abating, and prohibiting the use of the alley by minors or boys, such enterprise having no useful end. Tanner v. Albion (1843) 5 Hill (N. Y.) 121, 40 Am. Dec. 337.

And a municipal corporation having power to declare what shall constitute a nuisance, and to prevent the same, may lawfully prohibit as public nuisances billiard and pool rooms operated for gain, although such rooms are not nuisances per se. Re Jones (Okla.) supra.

But a private bowling alley cannot be singled out by a common council and declared to be a nuisance until after a full hearing of both parties has been had. Shreveport v. Leiderkrantz Soc. (1912) 130 La. 802, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 75, 58 So. 578.

c. Right to enjoin.

If town authorities adopt a statute making bowling alleys a nuisance, such statute has a binding effect upon such town, and therefore such alleys, when situated within a certain distance from a dwelling house, become a nuisance within the meaning of such statute, which may be abated by the public authorities. State v. Noyes (1855) 30 N. H. 279.

But where bowling alleys have been licensed by the municipal authorities, their operation will not be enjoined as a nuisance where they are built in the same manner as such alleys are usually constructed, and contain certain pads or cushions designed to deaden the noise caused by the dropping or rolling of the balls, even though the operation of the alley disturbs the neighbors. Levin v. Goodwin (1906)

191 Mass. 341, 114 Am. St. Rep. 616, 77 N. E. 718.

And equity will not grant a perpetual injunction to restrain the owner of a bowling alley from permitting anyone to play upon it, and from permitting loud and boisterous noises to be made by persons there. Wende v. Socialer Turn Verein (1896) 66 Ill. App. 591.

But the fact that one who operated a bowling alley for hire was convicted under an indictment charging a nuisance did not authorize the court to issue an order for the abatement of the ball alley, since it was not the ball alley itself which was the nuisance. Bloomhuff v. State (1846) 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 205. J. H. B.

SYLVINA E. WALL, Exrx., etc., of John L. Wall, Deceased, Respt.,
v.

ALEXANDER HESS, Appt.

New York Court of Appeals — February 3, 1922.

(232 N. Y. 472, 134 N. E. 536.)

Landlord and tenant — duty of tenant to pay taxes — change of municipal charter.

Taxes which are imposed within the term by amendment of the municipal charter are within the operation of a lease requiring the tenant to pay all taxes imposed within the term, although they are not payable until after the expiration of the lease, and the tenant is thereby required to pay a tax falling due at the close of his term for a year only part of which is covered by his lease, and when the lease was executed the taxes were imposed later in the year.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1502.]

(Crane, Hogan, and Andrews, JJ., dissent.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing an order of a Trial Term for New York County, setting aside a verdict for plaintiff and granting a new trial in an action brought to recover unpaid rent of premises and taxes thereon, according to the terms of a written lease. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. David Cohen, with Messrs. Hedges, Ely, & Frankel, for appellant:

The defendant, under the terms of the covenant contained in the lease, was not obligated to pay and discharge those taxes which did not become due and payable, or a lien upon the premises, during the continuance of his lease.

Ward v. Union Trust Co. 224 N. Y.

73, 3 A.L.R. 1154, 120 N. E. 91; Morris v. Suerken, 88 Misc. 262, 151 N. Y. Supp. 817.

Messrs. Norwood & Walsh, for respondent:

The lessee's covenant was to pay when due and payable, or sixty days thereafter, every tax assessed or imposed upon the premises during the term. That was an absolute, unqualified obligation to pay, but as to the time for making the payment, he had an indulgence of sixty days after such taxes became due and payable. The money to be paid was the sum in dollars and cents of tax assessed during the term of the lease.

Ogden v. Getty, 100 App. Div. 430, 91 N. Y. Supp. 664; Re Sherwoods, 127 C. C. A. 304, 210 Fed. 754, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 940; Amory v. Melvin, 112 Mass. 83; Craig v. Summers, 47 Minn. 189, 15 L.R.A. 236, 49 N. W. 742; Walker v. Whittemore, 112 Mass. 187; Richardson v. Gordon, 188 Mass. 279, 74 N. E. 344; Post v. Kearney, 2 N. Y. 394, 51 Am. Dec. 303; New York v. Cashman, 10 Johns. 96; Ward v. Union Trust Co. 224 N. Y. 73, 3 A.L.R. 1154, 120 N. E. 91, reversing 172 App. Div. 569, 159 N. Y. Supp. 54; Welch v. Phillips, 224 Mass. 267, 112 N. E. 651; Waterman v. Harkness, 2 Mo. App. 494; Strohmeier v. Zeppenfeld, 28 Mo. App. 268; Terry v. Lucas, 66 Misc. 346, 123 N. Y. Supp. 770; Blythe v. Gately, 51 Cal. 236; Elliot v. Gantt, 64 Mo. App. 248; Blake v. Baker, 115 Mass. 188.

Pound, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action against a tenant to recover unpaid rent of premises in the city of New York and taxes thereon according to the terms of a written lease. On the trial the court directed judgment for the plaintiff, but afterwards set the verdict aside and ordered a new trial because plaintiff refused to stipulate to reduce the recovery by $1,472.53, being the amount of taxes for the year 1917, with interest. The appellate division reversed the order and reinstated the verdict.

The lease was for a term of fifteen years, eight months, from the 1st day of September, 1901, ending on the 30th day of April, 1917, at 12 o'clock midnight.

It contained the following clause: "First. That the said party of the second part [defendant] shall and will pay and discharge when due and payable, or within sixty days thereafter, all and every tax and taxes, Croton water or other water rates, charges for placing, replacing or repairing water meters upon said premises, rents, charges, assessments, duties and other impositions whatsoever, as well ordinary as extraordinary, which shall be assessed, levied, or imposed upon the said premises, or any part thereof, by any government, power, or authority whatsoever during the said term, except that the parties of the first part [plaintiff's testator] covenant and agree to pay all taxes, assessments or other charges which may become a lien and charge on said premises in the year 1901; but the party of the second part covenants and agrees to pay the water rates or rents chargeable against or to said premises or any part thereof after September 1, 1901."

The taxes for the year 1917 were fixed and levied on the 28th day of March, 1917. At the date of the lease, May 6, 1901, and thereafter until January 1, 1912, when chapter 455 of the Laws of 1911, amending the city charter (Laws 1901, chap. 466), took effect, taxes were assessed on the 15th day of September in each year, were payable on the 1st day of October thereafter, and became liens on the real estate affected thereby on the days when they became due and payable. It follows that if no change had been made in the charter the tenant would have been under no obligation to pay the taxes in suit, for they would have been neither assessed nor payable during the term, but under the change in the charter the taxes were assessed but not payable during the term.

The appellate division, in resolving the question of liability for taxes in favor of the landlord, relied upon Ogden v. Getty, 100 App. Div. 430, 91 N. Y. Supp. 664, in which it was held: "Where a lease of premises, located in the city of New York, for a term of twenty-one years, expiring October 1, 1903, provides that the lessee shall pay all taxes 'laid, levied, assessed or imposed' on the demised premises during the term, the lessee is required to pay a tax levied by the city of New York upon the demised premises, the amount of which becomes finally and unalterably fixed and imposed on September 15, 1903, notwithstanding that such tax cannot be paid nor a bill therefor be obtained prior to October 5, 1903."

This court had recently before it Ward v. Union Trust Co. 224 N. Y. 73, 3 A.L.R. 1154, 120 N. E. 81, in which the provisions of the lease were, with the important exception hereinafter noted, substantially the same as herein. The Ward lease expired at noon on May 1, 1914, and contained a covenant as follows: "Provided always and the lessee hereby covenants to pay said rent punctually, and to pay and discharge all annual taxes as shall during said term be imposed on said premises hereby demised, as soon as they become due and payable, and to pay the Croton and all other water charges as soon as the same shall become due, and to keep said demised premises free, clear, discharged, and unencumbered from all such taxes and Croton and other water charges during said term."

The lessee was held liable, not for the taxes for the year 1914 which had been assessed against the premises during its term, but for the one half thereof which became due and payable and a lien on the demised premises on May 1, 1914, a few hours before the expiration of the lease. The expression of the intention of the parties that this sum only should be paid was, however, found entirely in the words "keep said demised premises free, clear, discharged, and unencumbered from all such taxes during said term," which are not in the lease we are now considering. Chase, J., said: "Reading the covenant as a whole, the promise of the tenant includes the general taxes imposed and becoming due and payable within the term. The demised premises became encumbered with one half of the tax of 1914 on May 1, 1914. The lessee could not leave the demised premises free, clear, discharged, and unencumbered from taxes during said term if the taxes so actually due and payable on the date of the expiration of the lease were left unpaid." 224 N. Y. 78.

The gist of the decision plainly is the clause as to encumbrances, which is treated as evidencing the intention of the parties to the lease, and not as making a general rule. The landlord was to receive his rent during the term, and was to be subject to no expense on account of the demised premises for taxes which became due and payable and liens during said term. The landlord covenanted to receive the premises unencumbered, and the duty of the tenant was discharged when it so delivered them.

That is not this case. The obligation of this defendant was to pay all taxes that might be assessed, levied, or imposed against the premises during the term. No escape is possible from the conclusion that the taxes for the year 1917 were finally and unalterably fixed and imposed against the demised premises during the term of the lease, although not payable until after the expiration of such term.

We should not let the tenant out of his promise because the change in the charter increases his burdens in this regard. Landlords as a class are not lacking in sagacity when it comes to contemplated changes in the tax laws. They properly endeavor to draw their leases with sufficient definiteness to protect themselves from such contingencies. I fail to see what more the landlord could have done to protect himself in this case. We should not add the words "during the term of this lease" to the words of the parties, in order to give what may seem to us a fairer meaning to the contract than can be found in the words chosen. The words are not there. That is not the meaning of the lease in legal contemplation. The duty of the tenant to pay the 1917 taxes is absolute. The Ward Case states an exception to the general rule, amply recognized and stated by Chase, J. The exception should not be extended beyond the circumstances which moved the court in that case to find for the tenant in part on the terms of the lease before it.

The judgment appealed from should be affirmed, with costs.

Hiscock, Ch. J., and Cardozo and McLaughlin, JJ., concur.

Crane, J., dissenting:

By written instrument under seal, Jacob Wall and John L. Wall leased to the defendant certain premises situated in the southeasterly corner of Sixth avenue and Twenty-first street in the city of New York, known as No. 338 Sixth avenue.

The term of the lease was fifteen years and eight months, commencing on the 1st day of September, 1901, and ending on the 30th day of April, 1917, at 12 o'clock midnight of that day. The rental was $10,500 a year, payable the 1st day of each and every month. Said lease contained the following clause: "First. That the said party of the second part shall and will pay and discharge when due and payable, or within sixty days thereafter, all and every tax and taxes, Croton water or other water rates, charges for placing, replacing or repairing water meters upon said premises, rents, charges, assessments, duties, and other impositions whatsoever, as well ordinary as extraordinary, which shall be assessed, levied or imposed upon the said premises, or any part thereof, by any government, power, or authority whatsoever during the said term, except that the parties of the first part covenant and agree to pay all taxes, assessments, or other charges which may become a lien and charge on said premises in the year 1901; but the party of the second part covenants and agrees to pay the water rates or rents chargeable against or to said premises or any part thereof after September 1st, 1901."

The interest of Jacob Wall was assigned to John L. Wall, and, the latter having died, the plaintiff, his duly appointed executrix, brings this action for moneys claimed to be due under the lease.

The only question is whether the tenant is liable for the taxes becoming due and payable on May 1, 1917, the day after the expiration of the lease. The trial term held that the defendant was not liable to pay these taxes, but this conclusion has been reversed by the appellate division, two of the justices dissenting.

By the Greater New York Charter in force and effect in 1901, the assessment roll of each borough of the city was to be delivered to the receiver of taxes on or before the 15th day of September (§ 911), and the taxes became due and payable on the first Monday of October (§ 914). This evidently explains the provision in the above clause of the lease, that the party of the first part covenants and agrees to pay all taxes and assessments which may become a lien and charge on the premises in the year 1901. The lease commencing September 1st, the taxes under the charter would become due and payable October 1st, and it was agreed that the owner should, therefore, pay the taxes for the year 1901. Section 911 was amended by chapter 455 of the Laws of 1911 by changing the date when the assessment rolls should be finally completed and delivered to the receiver of taxes, to the 28th day of March. The date for payment of taxes was changed so as to make one half of the taxes upon real estate due and payable on the first day of May and the remaining and final half payable on the first day of November. All taxes, it was provided, should be and become liens on the real estate affected on the respective days when they became due and payable, and should remain liens until paid.

The lease was for a long term,—fifteen years and eight months,—and it seems reasonable to suppose that the parties contracted with a view to those things which would happen during the term of the lease. In my opinion, the wording of the clause does not warrant a construction which would require the tenant to do something which did not happen to the premises until after his term had expired and he had ceased to have anything to do with the property. This clause, above quoted, states that the lessee shall and will pay and discharge, when due and payable, all and every tax upon said premises which shall be assessed. The taxes in this case under the amendment of the charter, as above stated, did not become due and payable until May 1, 1917. At that time the lease had expired. The defendant had ceased to have any interest in the property. During his term, which was up to midnight of April 30, 1917, he could not pay the taxes assessed even if he desired to do so. They were not payable. The provision of the lease regarding the payment of taxes must have been written with a view to each one of the years that the lease had to run,—each one of the fifteen years. It was not made, having in mind solely the date of expiration. In fact, the changes in the law shifting the date of payment and of lien did not occur until after the making and execution of the instrument. Had the law remained as it was when the parties made the lease, the lessee's term would have expired many months before the taxes became due on October 1st. It cannot be said, therefore, that the parties contemplated that the taxes would be assessed before and become due and payable after the expiration of the lease, and made their provisions accordingly. It is for this reason that I am of the opinion that the parties used these words, intending them to apply to the things which would happen during the term of the lease, i. e., that the lessee was to pay the taxes which became due and payable while his lease was in force and effect, not those which became due and a lien upon the property after the expiration of his term. In effect this is what the clause means. If more than that had been intended, specific provision would have been made for it. This construction of the lease seems to be in harmony with our decision in Ward v. Union Trust Co. 224 N. Y. 73, 3 A.L.R. 1154, 120 N. E. 81. The lease in that case contained a covenant as follows: "Provided always and the lessee hereby covenants to pay said rent punctually, and to pay and discharge all annual taxes as shall during said term be imposed on said premises hereby demised, as soon as they become due and payable, and to pay the Croton and all other water charges as soon as the same shall become due, and to keep said demised premises free, clear, discharged, and unencumbered from all such taxes and Croton and other water charges during said term, and to put and keep the said premises in good order and repair, and in all respects promptly comply with and execute all the laws, orders, and regulations of the state and municipal authorities applicable to said premises; except as hereinafter provided with respect to the widening of Fifth avenue."

One half of the amount of taxes in that case became due and payable on the day on which the term of the defendant's lease expired. It was properly held that he should pay this half because the taxes became due and payable while he was in possession. As Judge Chase said: "Reading the covenant as a whole, the promise of the tenant includes the general taxes imposed and becoming due and payable within the term. The demised premises became encumbered with one half of the tax of 1914 on May 1, 1914. The lessee could not leave the demised premises free, clear, discharged, and unencumbered from taxes during said term if the taxes so actually due and payable on the date of the expiration of the lease were left unpaid. The payment of the tax comes precisely within the terms of the contract made by the lessee, and we can only consider and enforce it." 224 N. Y. 75, 78.

So, in this case, reading the covenant as a whole, the promise of the tenant included merely the payment of the general taxes imposed and becoming due and payable within the term. The fact that in the Ward Case the covenant also was to keep the demised premises unencumbered was not the determining feature, and is not a distinguishing element between that case and this. The effect is the same in this case. By the charter provision, above referred to, the taxes became a lien on the day when they became due and payable. It is the due date, the time when the parties must act, not the city officials, which was in the minds of the lessor and lessee. When the taxes were assessed was a matter of no importance. It could be weeks or months prior to the time of payment. This was a mere matter of detail, of bookkeeping, of administrative work on the part of the city government. What the landlord and tenant had in mind was the thing which affected them; it was the date when payment had to be made by one or the other; when the real property became charged with a lien. The assessment did not affect either of them until, by operation of law, it touched the property and became a payable tax. Therefore emphasis in both these cases, by reason of the phraseology used, comes upon the words "due and payable," and indicates that the tenant was to pay all such charges which matured during the term of his lease.

For this reason I am of the opinion that the judgment of the Appellate Division should be modified by deducting therefrom the amount of taxes due and payable on May 1, 1917, to wit, the sum of $1,313 and interest, and as so modified affirmed, without costs.

Hogan and Andrews, JJ., concur in dissent.

ANNOTATION.

Change in time for assessment or payment of taxes as affecting provision for payment of taxes during term of lease.

The reported case (WALL v. HESS, ante, 1497) apparently is the only one that has passed upon the question under consideration since the compilation of the note in 3 A.L.R. 1159, wherein the earlier cases are treated. In this case it was held that as a general rule a tenant is not relieved from the payment of taxes levied during his term, notwithstanding he would not have had to pay such taxes if the time of levying the same had not been changed, and this although the taxes in question were not payable until after the expiration of the lease. In reaching this conclusion the majority of the court (vote was four to three) expressly limited the decision in the earlier case of Ward v. Union Trust

Co. (1918) 224 N. Y. 73, 3 A.L.R. 1154, 120 N. E. 81, which is set out in the annotation in 3 A.L.R. 1159, to the facts of that case, saying that it formed an exception to the general rule, and that it should not be extended beyond the circumstances which were under consideration therein, and which it had been held relieved the tenant, in part, from the payment of taxes, the time for the levying of which had been advanced so as to fall within the tenant's term.

Another recent case which, while not in point in the present annotation, may be of interest because of the fact that it involves a statute which effects a change in the method of payment of taxes which, under a lease, were a charge upon the tenant, is Mascall v. Reitmeier (1920) 145 Minn. 214, 176 N. W. 486, wherein it was held that a statute changing the law so as to make road taxes payable in money, instead of optional in labor or money, did not relieve a tenant from his contract obligation to pay such taxes. G. J. C.

ANNO.—COVENANT TO PAY TAXES IN LEASE—CONSTRUCTION. 1503

JOSEPH DROBNER, by Guardian ad Litem, Respt.,
v.
AUGUST L. PETERS, Appt.

New York Court of Appeals—December 6, 1921.

(232 N. Y. 220, 133 N. E. 567.)

Infant — action for injury before birth.

A child has no right of action for injury negligently inflicted upon it while it is in its mother's womb.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1505.]

(Cardozo, J., dissents.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming an order of a Special Term for New York County denying his motion for judgment on the pleadings in an action brought to recover damages for prenatal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court.

The question certified to the court for review is as follows: Does the complaint herein state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action?

Messrs. William Dike Reed and William B. Shelton for appellant.

Mr. J. M. Cohen, with Mr. David Batt, for respondent:

At law, the plaintiff is considered born for all purposes that are for his benefit, and he has such rights as would enable him to maintain this action through his guardian.

Long v. Blackall, 7 T. R. 100, 101 Eng. Reprint, 875, 4 Revised Rep. 73; Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. Jr. 227, 31 Eng. Reprint, 117, 4 Revised Rep. 205, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 498; The George & Richard, L. R. 3 Adm. & Eccl. 466, 24 L. T. N. S. 717, 20 Week. Rep. 246, 1 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 50; Quinlen v. Welch, 69 Hun, 584, 23 N. Y. Supp. 963; Herndon v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 37 Okla. 256, 128 Pac. 727; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Contreras, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 489, 72 S. W. 1051; Cooper v. Heatherton, 65 App. Div. 561, 73 N. Y. Supp. 14; Nugent v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 154 App. Div. 667, 139 N. Y. Supp. 367; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 116; Lipps v.

Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 164 Wis. 272, L.R.A.1917B, 334, 159 N. W. 916, 13 N. C. C. A. 1113; Kirk v. Middlebrook, 201 Mo. 245, 100 S. W. 450; Kujek v. Goldman, 150 N. Y. 176, 34 L.R.A. 156, 55 Am. St. Rep. 670, 44 N. E. 773; Norton v. Randolph, 176 Ala. 381, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 129, 58 So. 283, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 714; Hundley v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 105 Ky. 162, 63 L.R.A. 289, 88 Am. St. Rep. 298, 43 S. W. 429; Erickson v. Schmill, 62 Neb. 368, 87 N. W. 166; O'Brian v. State, 14 Ind. 469; Masters v. Marsh, 19 Neb. 461, 27 N. W. 438; Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital (1900) 184 Ill. 359, 48 L.R.A. 225, 75 Am. St. Rep. 176, 56 N. E. 638, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 427, 76 Ill. App. 441.

Pound, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant negligently permitted a coalhole in the sidewalk in front of his premises to remain uncovered. Plaintiff's mother fell into it. Plaintiff, in his mother's womb, sustained injuries. Born eleven days after the accident, he now brings this action. It is contended that at the time of the injury he was not a person, but was a part of the body of his mother, and that, as the injury was to his mother, he has no cause of action.

Mr. Justice Holmes said in 1884, in Dietrich v. Northampton, 138 Mass. 14, 52 Am. Rep. 242, that no case, so far as he knew, had ever decided that an infant could maintain an action for injuries received in the mother's womb. The great weight of authority is still against

Infant—action for injury before birth.

the plaintiff's contention that the unborn child has a right of immunity from personal harm (Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital, 184 Ill. 359, 48 L.R.A. 225, 75 Am. St. Rep. 176, 56 N. E. 638, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 427; Walker v. Great Northern R. Co. Ir. L. R. 28 C. L. 69; Gorman v. Budlong, 23 R. I. 169; 55 L.R.A. 118, 91 Am. St. Rep. 629, 49 Atl. 704, 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 188; Buel v. United R. Co. 248 Mo. 126, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 625, 154 S. W. 71, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 613, 4 N. C. C. A. 129; Lipps v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 164 Wis. 272, L.R.A.1917B, 334, 159 N. W. 916, 13 N. C. C. A. 1113), although much judicial argument has been advanced to support a contrary ruling (Nugent v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 154 App. Div. 667, 139 N. Y. Supp. 367; dissenting opinion, Boggs, J., Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital, supra; Beven, Neg. 3d ed. 73, 76).

In Quinlan v. Welch, 69 Hun, 584, 23 N. Y. Supp. 963, it was held that a child born after the father's death was a child at the time of the injury which caused the death, within the meaning of the Civil Damage Act (Laws 1873, chap. 646), and as such was entitled to maintain an action for injury in means of support against the person who sold intoxicating liquors to the father; but this court, on appeal (Quinlan v. Welch, 141 N. Y. 158, 165, 36 N. E. 12), carefully declined, as unnecessary to the decision, either to approve or disapprove the views expressed by Haight, J., below.

The reasons given to defeat recovery in such a case are: Lack of authority; practical inconvenience and possible injustice; no separate entity apart from the mother, and therefore no duty of care; no person or human being in esse at the time of the accident. They are not absolutely conclusive against the infant en ventre sa mere.

"The law in many cases hath consideration of him in respect of the apparent expectation of his birth." Bedford's Case, 7 Coke, 8b, 77 Eng. Reprint, 424.

By a legal fiction or indulgence, a legal personality is imputed to an unborn child as a rule of property for all purposes beneficial to the infant after his birth (The George & Richard, L. R. 3 Adm. & Eccl. 466, 24 L. T. N. S. 717, 20 Week. Rep. 246, 1 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 50), but not for purposes working to his detriment (Villar v. Gilbey [1907] A. C. 139, 145, 1 B. R. C. 568, 76 L. J. Ch. N. S. 339, 96 L. T. N. S. 511, 23 Times L. R. 392, 7 Ann. Cas. 130). By the criminal law, such being the solicitude of the state to protect life before birth, it is a great crime to kill the child after it is able to stir in the mother's womb, by any injury inflicted upon the person of the mother (Penal Law, § 1050), and it may be murder if the child is born alive and dies of prenatal injuries (Clarke v. State, 117 Ala. 1, 67 Am. St. Rep. 157, 23 So. 671). If the mother, with the intent to produce her own miscarriage, produces the death of the quick child whereof she is pregnant, she may be guilty of manslaughter. Penal Law (Consol. Laws, chap. 40) § 1052. If the child is not quick, it may be felony to produce a miscarriage. Penal Laws, §§ 80, 81. If a female convict under sentence of death is quick with child, she may not be executed. Code Crim. Proc. §§ 500, 505. Many authorities are collected in the comprehensive prevailing opinion below. While they tend to cloud the real issue, they are not controlling. Rights of ownership of property do not connote a duty of personal care to the inchoate owner, nor does the crime of causing the death of an unborn child connote liability to the child for personal injuries. When justice or convenience requires, the child in the womb is dealt with as a human being, although physiologically it is a part of the mother, but the law has been fairly well settled, during its centuries of growth, against the beneficence of an artificial rule of liability for personal injuries sustained by it.

Does the present case permit the establishment by judicial decision of the rule that the innocent infant need not bear unrequited the consequences of another's fault? In the mother's womb he had no separate existence of his own. When born he became a person. He carried the injuries out into the world with him. His full rights as a human being sprang into existence with his birth. No longer may it be urged that the mother alone is injured. The presence of the injured child refutes that theory. Did he succeed to his mother's rights?

The modern tendency of decided cases is to ignore fictions and deal with things as they are. At common law, a cause of action for personal injuries did not survive if death resulted from another's negligence or wrongful act. Lord Campbell's Act, passed in England in 1846, and followed generally in this state (Code Civ. Proc. § 1905), was necessary to correct this omission. May this court attach an unnatural meaning to simple words, and hold, independently of statute, that a cause of action for prenatal injuries is reserved to the child until the moment of its birth, and then accrues? The formulation of such a principle of legal liability against precedent and practice may be a tempting task, to which sympathy and natural justice point the way; but I cannot bring myself to the conclusion that plaintiff has a cause of action at common law. The injuries were, when inflicted, injuries to the mother. No liability can arise therefrom except out of a duty disregarded, and defendant owed no duty of care to the unborn child in the present case, apart from the duty to avoid injuring the mother.

Strong reasons of public policy may be urged both for and against allowing the new right of action. The conditions of negligence law at the present time do not suggest that the reasons in favor of recovery so far outweigh those which may be advanced against it, as to call for judicial legislation on the question.

The order appealed from should be reversed, and the motion for judgment on the pleadings granted, with costs in all courts, and the question certified should be answered in the negative.

Hiscock, Ch. J., and Hogan, McLaughlin, Crane, and Andrews, JJ., concur.

Cardozo, J., dissents.

ANNOTATION.

Prenatal injury as ground of action.

The cases are agreed that in the absence of statute a prenatal injury affords no basis for an action in damages, in favor either of the child or its personal representative. Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital (1900) 184 Ill. 359, 48 L.R.A. 225, 75 Am. St. Rep. 176, 56 N. E. 638, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 427; Dietrich v. Northampton (1884) 20 A.L.R.—95.

138 Mass. 14, 52 Am. Rep. 242; Buel v. United R. Co. (1913) 248 Mo. 126, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 625, 154 S. W. 71, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 613, 4 N. C. C. A. 129; DROBNER v. PETERS (reported herewith) ante, 1503; Nugent v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1913) 154 App. Div. 667, 139 N. Y. Supp. 367, appeal dismissed in (1913) 209 N. Y. 515, 102

N. E. 1107; Gorman v. Budlong (1901) 23 R. I. 169, 55 L.R.A. 118, 91 Am. St. Rep. 629, 49 Atl. 704, 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 188; Lipps v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. (1916) 164 Wis. 272, L.R.A.1917B, 334, 159 N. W. 916, 13 N. C. C. A. 1113; Walker v. Great Northern R. Co. (1891) Ir. L. R. 28 C. L. 69. See Quinlen v. Welch (1893) 69 Hun, 584, 23 N. Y. Supp. 963, set out in the reported case.

Kirk v. Middlebrook (1906) 201 Mo. 286, 100 S. W. 450, while referring to the Allaire, Dietrich and Walker Cases, supra, as supporting the rule that the common law gives no right of action to an infant for injuries received by it while en ventre sa mere, does not pass upon the question, but leaves it to be determined when a case arises wherein the matter is directly in issue.

The court in Lipps v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. (1916) 164 Wis. 272, L.R.A.1917B, 334, 159 N. W. 916, 13 N. C. C. A. 1113, an action against a railway company by the guardian of the infant, in which the petition charged that the infant suffered epileptic fits as a direct result of injuries received on defendant's car while a fetus en ventre sa mere of the age of about five months, the court said: "We go no further than the facts of the case require, and hold that no cause of action accrues to an infant en ventre sa mere for injuries received before it could be born viable."

In Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital (1900) 184 Ill. 359, 48 L.R.A. 225, 75 Am. St. Rep. 176, 56 N. E. 638, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 427, affirming (1898) 76 Ill. App. 445, it is held that an infant has not, before birth, such an independent existence that a negligent injury to him will sustain an action in his behalf after he is born. The court said: "That a child before birth is, in fact, a part of the mother, and is only severed from her at birth, cannot, we think, be successfully disputed. The doctrine of the civil law and the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts, therefore, that an unborn child may be regarded as in esse for some purposes, when for its benefit, is a mere legal fiction, which, so far as we have been able to discover, has not been indulged in by the courts of common law to the extent of allowing an action by an infant for injuries occasioned before its birth. If the action can be maintained, it necessarily follows that an infant may maintain an action against its own mother for injuries occasioned by the negligence of the mother while pregnant with it. We are of the opinion that the action will not lie." Boggs, J., dissented in an able opinion which is worthy of consideration. The injury complained of here was inflicted by the negligence of a hospital, which had undertaken for hire the safe delivery of the child.

And in Gorman v. Budlong (1901) 23 R. I. 169, 55 L.R.A. 118, 91 Am. St. Rep. 629, 49 Atl. 704, 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 188, it is held that a child has no right of action for injuries to its mother which cause its premature birth, so that in case death results a cause of action will survive, under a statute giving a right of action for wrongful death caused by negligence, where it is such as would, had death not resulted, have entitled the person injured to maintain an action. The injuries here complained of were inflicted by the falling of a defective ceiling, of which the defendant had notice, and which he had promised to repair.

And in Dietrich v. Northampton (1884) 138 Mass. 14, 52 Am. Rep. 242, where a woman four or five months advanced in pregnancy, by reason of a fall upon a defective highway, was delivered of the child, who, although not directly injured, unless by communication of the shock to the mother, was too little advanced in fetal life to survive its premature birth more than ten or fifteen minutes, it was held that the child was not a "person" for the loss of whose life an action could be maintained against a municipality, by his administrator, as allowed by statute. The court said: "The court below ruled that the action could not be maintained; and we are of the opinion that the ruling was correct. . . . Some ancient books seem to have allowed the mother an appeal for the loss of her child by trespass upon her person. . . . But no case, so far as we know, has ever decided that, if the infant survived, it could maintain an action for injuries received by it while in its mother's womb. Yet that is the test of the principle relied upon by the plaintiff, who can hardly avoid contending that a pretty large field of litigation has been left unexplored until the present moment." And, after considering certain cases and arguments, the court concluded: "Taking all the foregoing considerations into account, and further, that, as the unborn child was a part of the mother at the time of the injury, any damage to it which was not too remote to be recovered for at all was recoverable by her, we think it clear that the statute sued upon does not embrace the plaintiff's intestate within its meaning; and have not found it necessary to consider the question of remoteness, or the effect of those cases which declare that the statute liability of towns for defects in highways is more narrowly restricted than the common-law liability for negligence."

The relation of passenger and carrier does not exist between a railroad company and an unborn child whose mother is a passenger, so as to render the company liable in tort or contract for injuries to the child. Walker v. Great Northern R. Co. (1891) 1r. L. R. 28 C. L. 69; Nugent v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1913) 154 App. Div. 667, 139 N. Y. Supp. 367, appeal dismissed in (1913) 209 N. Y. 515, 102 N. E. 1107. In the latter case the court said: "This is an action for negligence, for violation of defendant's duty as a carrier, and defendant cannot be judged as a trespasser. Negligence is culpable failure to observe a duty owed by one to another in a particular relation, and remedy is allowed for injury therefor. What duty did the defendant . . . owe the unborn child? The child in its distinct entity was not a passenger, and the company owed it as a separate person no duty in the manner of safe carriage. Had it, born, been carried in its mother's arms, it would have been a gratuitous passenger, but the carrier's duty towards it would not have been thereby lessened. The learned counsel for the plaintiff suggests that the duty would attach had the child been concealed in a garment. Such condition does not usually escape the observation of the carrier's servants exercising ordinary attention, and the case of mothers concealing their infants from the expectable knowledge of carriers might, under some circumstances, excuse some act of the carrier whereby it was injured. But it is not the duty of a carrier to scrutinize its passengers for the detection of unborn children, to the end that they, although latent, may be regarded as passengers. It undertakes to carry as passengers the born, and not the unborn. It carries by compulsion those visibly offering themselves. So, the mother presents herself and her living children, and the carrier is bound by the law of the realm to receive and to carry them. Its duty begins with receiving and ends with discharging them, and due care is required. The plaintiff stood in no such relation to the carrier as to earn such obligation on its part, and liability to respond for injury for the negligent carriage and discharge of the mother was coincident with the limits of its duty to her. The obligation arises from implied convention with the state that the carrier shall transport persons with due care, and the remedy is given to the one injured by the breach. The obligation is the same whether the action is in form based on breach of contract or of duty to carry." But neither of these cases necessarily goes so far as to deny the right of a child to recover for a prenatal injury under any circumstances, although the broad language of some of the judges in the Walker Case is much more unfavorable to such a recovery than that of the court in the Nugent Case.

In Buel v. United R. Co. (1913) 248 Mo. 126, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 625, 154 S. W. 71, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 613, 4 N. C. C. A. 129, the parents of a child which died, soon after its birth, from injuries negligently inflicted upon it before birth, were held not entitled to maintain an action against the negligent person for damages, under a statute providing that, whenever a person shall die from an injury occasioned by negligence, the negligent person shall pay a penalty to father and mother, if deceased is a minor unmarried.

While not in point in this annotation, the holding in Prescott v. Rob- inson (1908) 74 N. H. 460, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 594, 124 Am. St. Rep. 987, 69 Atl. 522, that a pregnant woman, injured by another's negligence so as to cause the child to be born deformed, cannot hold the negligent person liable to her for the pain and suffering and inability to labor of the child, is interesting in connection with the foregoing holdings, denying the child himself a right of action. W. A. E.

UNITED SHOE MACHINERY CORPORATION

v.

CHARLES W. FITZGERALD et al., Appts.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court—March 3, 1921.

(237 Mass. 537, 130 N. E. 86.)

Strike — legality — to compel collective bargaining.

1. A strike to compel an employer to adopt a system of collective bargaining is unlawful.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1513.]

Master and servant—contract for year's service.

2. An employer may contract for a year's service with employees entering his service, which requires training to render an employee skillful, although the influence of the union would be weakened and the power of the strike impaired.

—right to leave service.

3. Members of a labor union who have not signed contracts to render a specific term of service to their employer may retire from his service at will.

[See 16 R. C. L. 434; 3 R. C. L. Supp. 569.]

Injunction — against illegal picketing.

4. The maintenance of pickets in aid of an illegal strike will be enjoined.

Strike — to compel breach of contract.

5. A strike to compel a breach of existing contracts between an employer and his employees is illegal.

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Supreme Judicial Court for Essex County in favor of plaintiff in a suit to enjoin defendants from continuing a strike and from conducting it in an unlawful manner. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. W. G. Thompson, Peter J. Donaghue, and Harold R. Donaghue, for appellants:

The purpose for which the strike was begun and carried on was a lawful purpose.

Shinsky v. O'Neil, 232 Mass. 99, 121 N. E. 790; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229, 62 L. ed. 260, L.R.A.

1918C, 497, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 65, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 461; Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. L. 729, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 65 Atl. 165, 9 Ann. Cas. 698; Com. v. Hunt, 4 Met. 111, 38 Am. Dec. 346; Bowen v. Mathe-son, 14 Allen, 499; Snow v. Wheeler, 113 Mass. 179; Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 51 L.R.A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, 57 N. E. 1011; Berry v. Donovan, 188 Mass. 353, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 899, 108 Am. St. Rep. 499, 74 N. E. 603, 3 Ann. Cas. 738; Pickett v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 572, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(237 Mass. 537, 130 N. E. 86.)

1067, 116 Am. St. Rep. 272, 78 N. E. 753, 7 Ann. Cas. 638; Minasian v. Osborne, 210 Mass. 250, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 179, 96 N. E. 1036, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1299; Hoban v. Dempsey, 217 Mass. 166, L.R.A.1915A, 1217, 104 N. E. 717, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 810; Cornellier v. Haverhill Shoe Mfrs' Asso. 221 Mass. 554, L.R.A.1916C, 218, 109 N. E. 643; Bogni v. Perotti, 224 Mass. 152, L.R.A. 1916F, 831, 112 N. E. 853; Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 255, 64 L.R.A. 260, 102 Am. St. Rep. 341, 69 N. E. 1085; L. D. Willcutt & Sons Co. v. Driscoll, 200 Mass. 110, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1236, 85 N. E. 897; Walton Lunch Co. v. Kearney, 236 Mass. 310, 128 N. E. 429.

There is nothing in the master's findings warranting the granting of any relief to the plaintiff in respect of the manner in which the strike was carried on by the defendants.

Harvey v. Chapman, 226 Mass. 191, L.R.A.1917E, 389, 115 N. E. 304; Martineau v. Foley, 231 Mass. 220, 1 A.L.R. 1145, 120 N. E. 445; Folsom Engraving Co. v. McNeil, 235 Mass. 269, 126 N. E. 279; Morris Run Coal Min. Co. v. Guy, 14 Pa. Dist. R. 600; Everett Waddey Co. v. Richmond Typographical Union, 105 Va. 188, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 792, 53 S. E. 273, 8 Ann. Cas. 798; Goldfield Consol. Mines Co. v. Goldfield Miners' Union, 159 Fed. 500; Iron Molders' Union v. Allis-Chalmers Co. 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 315, 91 C. C. A. 631, 166 Fed. 45; Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, 156 Cal. 70, 103 Pac. 324; Barnes v. Chicago Typographical Union, 232 Ill. 424, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1018, 83 N. E. 940, 13 Ann. Cas. 54; Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497, 42 L.R.A. 407, 74 Am. St. Rep. 421, 77 N. W. 13; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Gee, 139 Fed. 582; Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 35 L.R.A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, 44 N. E. 1077; Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 51 L.R.A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, 57 N. E. 1011; Bowen v. Matheson, 14 Allen, 499; Jones v. Van Winkle Gin & Mach. Works, 131 Ga. 336, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 848, 127 Am. St. Rep. 235, 62 S. E. 236; Karges Furniture Co. v. Amalgamated Woodworkers Local Union, 165 Ind. 421, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 788, 75 N. E. 877, 6 Ann. Cas. 829; Cumberland Glass Co. v. Glass Bottle Blowers' Asso. 59 N. J. Eq. 49, 46 Atl. 208; W. & A. Fletcher Co. v. International Asso. — N. J. Eq. —, 55 Atl. 1077; Jones v. Maher, 62 Misc. 338, 116 N. Y. Supp. 180.

The fact, found by the master, that the cause of the strike was the persistent attempt of the plaintiff to induce members of the union to violate the contractual obligations into which they had entered with one another in mutually agreeing to be bound by the provisions of the constitutions of the grand lodge and the district lodge, is of itself sufficient to require the dismissal of this bill.

Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555; Beekman v. Marsters, 195 Mass. 205, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 201, 122 Am. St. Rep. 232, 80 N. E. 817, 11 Ann. Cas. 332; Reynolds v. Supreme Council, R. A. 192 Mass. 150, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1154, 78 N. E. 129, 7 Ann. Cas. 776; Hickey v. Baine, 195 Mass. 446, 81 N. E. 201; Ostrom v. Greene, 161 N. Y. 353, 55 N. E. 919; Henry v. Jackson, 37 Vt. 431; Highland Park Asso. v. Boseker, 169 Mich. 4, 135 N. W. 106.

Messrs. Charles F. Choate, Jr., Joseph Wentworth, and James Garfield, for appellee:

The strike was inaugurated and maintained to compel the plaintiff to withdraw and eliminate the individual contract, and is illegal.

Reynolds v. Davis, 198 Mass. 294, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 84 N. E. 457; Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 51 L.R.A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, 57 N. E. 1011; Baush Mach. Tool Co. v. Hill, 231 Mass. 30, 120 N. E. 188; Folsom Engraving Co. v. McNeil, 235 Mass. 269, 126 N. E. 279; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1183; Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. L. 729, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 65 Atl. 165, 9 Ann. Cas. 698; Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 254, 62 L. ed. 277, L.R.A. 1918C, 497, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 65, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 461; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555; Berry v. Donovan, 188 Mass. 353, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 899, 108 Am. St. Rep. 499, 74 N. E. 603, 3 Ann. Cas. 738; Reynolds v. Davis, 198 Mass. 294, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 84 N. E. 457; Folsom v. Lewis, 208 Mass. 336, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 787, 94 N. E. 316; Cornellier v. Haverhill Shoe Mfrs. Asso. 221 Mass. 554, L.R.A.1916C, 218, 109 N. E. 643; W. A. Snow Iron Works v. Chadwick, 227 Mass. 382, L.R.A.1917F, 755, 116 N. E.

801; Smith v. Bowen, 232 Mass. 106, 121 N. E. 814; Shinsky v. Tracey, 226 Mass. 21, L.R.A.1917C, 1053, 114 N. E. 957; Martineau v. Foley, 231 Mass. 220, 1 A.L.R. 1145, 120 N. E. 445.

The strike is an interference with existing contracts, and is therefore illegal.

Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555; Beekman v. Marsters, 195 Mass. 205, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 201, 122 Am. St. Rep. Rep. 232, 80 N. E. 817, 11 Ann. Cas. 332; Aberthaw Constr. Co. v. Cameron, 194 Mass. 208, 120 Am. St. Rep. 542, 80 N. E. 478.

The Peaceful Persuasion Act, so called, does not legalize strike picketing.

Vonnegut Machinery Co. v. Toledo Mach. & Tool Co. 263 Fed. 192; Vege-lahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 35 L.R.A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, 44 N. E. 1077.

Braley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A strike having been inaugurated at the plaintiff's factory March 5, 1920, suit is brought against the defendants as the officers, agents, and members of the local lodge of the international association of machinists, a voluntary organization, asking for injunctive relief from a continuance of the strike, and from its maintenance by unlawful means. We shall hereafter refer to the defendants who hold the offices and exercise the powers described in the second paragraph of the bill as the union, and to the plaintiff as the company. It appears from the master's report, and the single justice could find, that in November or December, 1919, the company, for the purpose of preventing machinists from leaving its employment after they had been trained as skilled workmen at considerable expense, and to retain a force of reliable workmen so that it could enter into and perform contracts for the manufacture and delivery of its product with reasonable assurance of success and despatch, solicited individual machinists as they were hired to sign a contract, a copy of which is annexed to the report. By these contracts, which are referred to in the record as "individual contracts," the employee to the best of his skill and ability, and in accordance with factory regulations, agreed to work for the company during its regular working hours for one year from the date of employment, at a fixed compensation for each hour worked, or the prevailing piece rate. If at the expiration of the year neither party gave to the other notice in writing of termination, the agreement was to remain in force for the further period of one year. The company could lawfully contract with machinists who desired to enter its service, and, as no law of the land was violated, it could impose as a condition precedent to employment, the terms of the "individual contracts." Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass.

492, 502, 598, 51 L.R.A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, 57 N. E. 1011; Folsom Engraving Co. v. McNeil, 235 Mass. 269, 126 N. E. 479. And this right is not cut down or abridged, as the single justice could say, by the master's further finding "that another motive operating in the minds of officials of the company in desiring to obtain such contracts was that by means thereof the influence of the union would be weakened and the power of the strike impaired."

The means being legitimate, the company could protect itself from the interruption of its business and consequent damage from the action of discontented employees hired in the mass, and controlled at all times in their contractual relations by the union of which they were members. W. A. Snow Iron Works v. Chadwick, 227 Mass. 382, L.R.A.1917F, 755, 116 N. E. 801; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 14, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229, 62 L. ed. 260, L.R.A.1918C, 497, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 65, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 461.

The union also was under no obligation whatever to recognize the "individual contracts," and its members who had not thus obligat-

Master and servant—contract for year's service.

ed themselves could retire at will from the company's service, leaving it to go into the labor market and obtain competent workmen if any could be found. Smith v. Bowen, 232 Mass. 106, 121 N. E. 814; Folsom Engraving Co. v. McNeil, supra. But the defendants, as the master states, were not satisfied to take this course, or any other action short of organizing and precipitating a strike which should so cripple the industrial powers of the company as to compel it to abandon its policy of selecting and hiring employees whenever and wherever it pleased. The situation very likely was becoming critical, as "the contracts were steadily adopted by considerable numbers of the machinists until on March 5, 1920, 2,222 employees of a total of about 6,000 had signed."

We now take up the action of the union, begun shortly after the company had requested signatures to the "individual contracts." It first protested. It next presented to the company an agreement which provided that none but union men should be employed when available, and shop committees appointed by the union should be recognized by the company as authorized to consider all disputes or grievances arising between members of the union and the company. It would seem almost unnecessary to say that the parties could have mutually agreed to this proposed form of contract. Smith v. Bowen, supra. But the company on February 7th declined, and insisted on its right to continue to make "individual contracts," and that this form of employment would be followed. The union replied that it could not agree that its members should sign the "individual contracts," and it would have to "insist on the practice being discontinued." During further negotiations the proposed agreement submitted by the union was withdrawn, but the proposition then submitted demanded "the elimination of the individual contracts as it concerns employees of the machine department," and it would be "absolutely useless to consider this or any other proposition unless we can come to some agreement as to holding in abeyance the making of these (individual) contracts in the meantime"—"that is, for six or seven days while the new proposition was being considered by the company, or until a compromise with the board of directors could be arranged." The company on the same day received a letter from the representative of the union, which in substance formally withdrew the proposed agreement, and asked that shop committees to represent the workmen be formed by the machinists, which should be recognized as their representatives by the company, and that the "individual contracts" should be withdrawn. The union had voted on February 21st to strike, but this action had not been communicated to the company until March 5th, when the strike was put in force, which on March 3d had been sanctioned by the grand lodge with which as a subordinate it was affiliated. It is expressly found that there was no dispute concerning wages, hours of employment, or general conditions of labor. The master reports that the union claimed before him that the strike was called in defense of "collective bargaining," while the plaintiff, as alleged in the bill, contended that it was ordered to compel the abandonment of the "individual contracts." The question whether the strike was lawful does not depend upon the choice of descriptive words. If the company surrendered to the union it must of necessity give up in the future the "individual contracts" as applied to employees of the machine department, and the demands even in modified form were not limited to "collective bargaining," but included an irrevocable abandonment of the "individual contracts."

The defendants' answer to all the essential allegations of the bill is nothing more than a general denial, and on the master's findings, with such material inferences of fact as properly could be drawn, the single justice as shown by the decree could determine that the strike was for the purpose of compelling the company to do away with "individual contracts," and to recognize the rights of the union as stated by their representative, and his conclusion, not being plainly wrong, should not be reversed. East Tennessee Land Co. v. Leeson, 183 Mass. 37, 66 N. E. 427; Kennedy v. Welch, 196 Mass. 592, 594, 83 N. E. 11; Folsom v. Lewis, 208 Mass. 336, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 787, 94 N. E. 316; Folsom Engraving Co. v. McNeil, supra. But if, notwithstanding the unequivocal and positive statements to the contrary appearing in the circulars it sent out broadcast, the contention of the union that the strike was solely to compel the company to adopt "collective bargaining," the decree should stand. "Whatever

Strike—legality —to compel collective bargaining.

may be the advantages of 'collective bargaining,' it is not bargaining at all, in any just sense, unless it is voluntary on both sides. The same liberty which enables men to form unions, and through them to enter into agreements with employers willing to agree, entitles other men to remain independent of the union and other employers to agree with them to employ no man who owes any allegiance or obligation to the union. In the latter case, as in the former, the parties are entitled to be protected by the law in the enjoyment of the benefits of any lawful agreement they may make." Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229, 62 L. ed. 260, L.R.A.1918C, 497, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 65, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 461. It has been uniformly held in principle by this court, "that the employer is as free to make nonmembership in a union a condition of employment as the workingman is free to join the union, and that this is a part of the constitutional rights of personal liberty and private property, not to be taken away even by legislation unless through some proper exercise of the paramount public power." Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 51 L.R.A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, 57 N. E. 1011; Berry v. Donovan, 188 Mass. 353, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 899, 108 Am. St. Rep. 499, 74 N. E. 603, 3 Ann. Cas. 738; Reynolds v. Davis, 198 Mass. 294, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 162, 84 N. E. 457; Folsom v. Lewis, 208 Mass. 336, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 787, 94 N. E. 316; Cornellier v. Haverhill Shoe Mfrs. Asso. 221 Mass. 554, L.R.A.1916C, 218, 109 N. E. 643; Baush Mach. Tool Co. v. Hill, 231 Mass. 30, 120 N. E. 188; W. A. Snow Iron Works v. Chadwick, 227 Mass. 382, L.R.A.1917F, 755, 116 N. E. 801; Smith v. Bowen, 232 Mass. 106, 121 N. E. 814; Folsom Engraving Co. v. McNeil, 235 Mass. 269, 126 N. E. 479. The strike, being illegal (Stat. 1913, chap. 690), is not applicable, and the maintenance by the union of relays of pickets from twenty-five to seventy-five in number patrolling the streets in the vicinity, and at the main entrance of the company's factory, calling out at various times the epithets recited in the report, while not sufficient, as the master finds, to frighten or coerce other employees, was unjustifiable. Sherry v. Perkins, 147 Mass. 212, 9 Am. St. Rep. 689, 17 N. E. 307. The action taken also was intended to be an interference with existing contracts. Before the vote to strike was taken the union appointed committees who were instructed to investigate and report the names of members who had signed existing contracts, in order that charges could be preferred against them, and some fifty-nine members who had signed contracts joined the strikers, of whom five were in the ranks of the picketers. The circulars which were distributed, as we have said, directly and indirectly assailed the individual contract system. It is plain on the entire report that what was done was the out-

Injunction—against illegal picketing.

Strike—to compel breach of contract.

(237 Mass. 537, 130 N. E. 86.)

growth of concerted action manifested in various forms, but all for the single purpose of forcing compliance with the terms of the union. Reynolds v. Davis, 198 Mass. 294, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 84 N. E. 457; Folsom v. Lewis, 208 Mass. 336, 35

L.R.A.(N.S.) 787, 94 N. E. 316; Folsom Engraving Co. v. McNeil, supra. We are therefore of opinion that the injunctive relief granted is supported by the record, and the decree should be affirmed, with costs. Ordered accordingly.

ANNOTATION.

Lawfulness of strike to compel collective bargaining.

The reported case (UNITED SHOE MACHINERY CORP. v. FITZGERALD, ante, 1508), holding that the purpose of forcing an employer to adopt a system of "collective bargaining" is not a justifiable cause for a strike, seems to go beyond the other reported cases.

The language quoted in the reported case from Hitchman Coal & Co. v. Mitchell (1917) 245 U. S. 229, 62 L. ed. 260, L.R.A.1918C, 497, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 65, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 461, to the effect that, "whatever may be the advantage of 'collective bargaining,' it is not bargaining at all in any just sense, unless it is voluntary on both sides," followed a statement in the latter case to the effect that an employer was acting within its lawful rights in employing its men only upon terms of non-membership in a union, and was used in discussing the question of the employer's right to protection of the status resulting from the employment of its men on those terms.

It will be noted that in the reported case there was no dispute concerning wages, hours of employment, or general conditions of labor,—it being expressly found that there was no dispute in that regard,—and that the strike was in reality in the interest of the union as an organization. In Tunstall v. Stearns Coal Co. (1911) 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 453, 113 C. C. A. 132, 192 Fed. 808, the court said: "It may well be that the limits of lawful persuasion, when exercised by employees in the course of a strike by them to force from their employer better terms or better conditions for themselves, and as a means collateral to their side of the conflict, are wider than are such limits in a case where there is no complaint by employees, but where the strike is directed by officials of a labor organization for the primary purpose of compelling its recognition." In that case, where, as the court said, there was no complaint by any of the company's employees regarding wages or conditions of service, the contest being wholly over "recognition," it was held that the labor union should be enjoined from paying employees or candidates for employment to leave the service, or to refrain from entering the employment, in order to promote a strike.

That the decision in the reported case carries no condemnation of "collective bargaining" voluntarily entered into on both sides, or of an agreement otherwise unobjectionable reached as the result of voluntary collective bargaining, is apparent from the opinion; and the distinction between the question of the lawfulness of a strike to compel "collective bargaining," and the lawfulness of an agreement reached as a result of such bargaining, voluntarily engaged in, is illustrated by comparison of the reported case with Shinsky v. O'Neil (1919) 232 Mass. 99, 121 N. E. 790, which denied equitable relief to a former employee who was unable to secure further employment in consequence of agreements between the employers and a labor union, to the effect that no one but members of the union should be employed. The court in that case said: "It is established that workmen can combine to get the advantage of bargaining for their common benefit in respect to the terms and conditions upon and under which they should work. It is further established that if they are successful in getting the bargain they wish, they can insert in the agreement setting forth that bargain a clause providing that all the work of the employer shall be given to them, or that a preference should be given to them in the employment of workmen." The question as to the validity of such an agreement, or as to the lawfulness of a strike to compel the employer to enter into such an agreement, is, however, beyond the scope of this annotation.

In Michaels v. Hillman (1920) 112 Misc. 395, 183 N. Y. Supp. 195, although a permanent injunction was granted in a case growing out of a strike to compel the recognition of a labor union, the right to call a strike for that purpose is recognized, "if no threats, intimidation, force, violence, or other coercive measures" are employed; and the injunction in that case was granted because of the disorderly and violent character of the picketing and other means employed to promote the strike.

In Grand Shoe Co. v. Children's Shoe Workers' Union (1920) 187 N. Y. Supp. 886, the court observed that labor has the right of collective bargaining, but that no organization or combination of workmen has the right to debar any individual or group of workers from employment; an employer not only has the right to employ whom he sees fit, but may even make membership in a labor union a bar to employment; and he may exercise this right even if he thereby makes collective bargaining impossible. The injunction in this case also seems to have been granted upon the ground that the picketing complained of had been conducted in an unlawful manner, and not upon the ground that the strike itself was unlawful.

It has been held that picketing, even peaceable picketing, is not permissible where the only purpose is to compel the recognition by the employer of the labor union, there being no dispute as to wages, hours, or other conditions of employment. Heitkemper v. Central Labor Council (1920) 99 Or. 1, 192 Pac. 765. There were two dissenting opinions in this case. What was involved in the "recognition" of the union is apparently indicated in the allegations in the answer of the union, to the effect that the plaintiffs had refused "to consider or treat with the defendants' organizations, or any of them, or to consider or agree to recognize the existence of defendants' organizations, or any of them, for the purpose of collectively bargaining or collective treatment, consideration, or settlement of any trade dispute or controversy of the defendants between the plaintiffs as employers and the defendants' organization of employees, or to recognize the existence of defendants' organization for any purpose whatever." The majority not only held that picketing for such purpose was unlawful in the absence of a statute authorizing it, but also that the controversy was not one between "employer and employee," or between "persons employed and those seeking employment," and did not arise from or grow out of a "dispute as to terms or conditions of employment," within the provisions of a statute providing that no restraining order or injunction shall be granted in such a case. And it was further held that the case was not within another section providing that no restraining order or injunction shall prohibit any person or persons, whether singly or in concert, from terminating any relation of employment, or from ceasing to perform any work or labor; or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means so to do; or from attending at any place where any person or persons may lawfully be, for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information, or from peacefully persuading any such person to abstain from working; or from ceasing to patronize any party to such dispute; or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful or lawful means so to do.

Generally, as to boycott as a weapon in industrial disputes, see annotation in 16 A.L.R. 230. G. H. P.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT
v.

TIHON SINCHUK et al.

Connecticut Supreme Court of Errors—August 14, 1921.

(96 Conn. 605, 115 Atl. 33.)

Constitutional law — right to assemble and petition.

1. A statute forbidding publication of disloyal, scurrilous, or abusive matter concerning the form of government of the United States, its military forces, flag, or uniform, or which tends to foster opposition to organized government, does not violate a constitutional provision that citizens have a right to assemble and appeal to those invested with power, for redress of grievances or other proper purposes.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1535.]

Sedition — sufficiency of statute penalizing.

2. A statute penalizing disloyal, scurrilous, or abusive matter concerning the form of government of the United States, its military forces, flag, or uniform, is not invalid because it fixes no ascertainable standard of guilt.

[See 8 R. C. L. 58; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 530.]

— forbidding utterances without regard to consequences.

3. A statute which penalizes disloyal, scurrilous, and abusive matter concerning the form of government of the United States is not invalid because the showing of harmful consequences is not required.

Constitutional law — applicability to aliens.

4. Aliens are not within the protection of a constitutional provision that the people have at all times the right to alter their form of government in such manner as they may think expedient.

— freedom of speech — objection to government — right of alien.

5. The constitutional right of freedom of speech does not include the right of aliens to publish disloyal, scurrilous, or abusive matter concerning the form of government, or which fosters opposition to organized government.

— right to protection in news dealing.

6. Aliens have a right to the equal protection of the laws in conducting the business of news dealing in which they engage.

[See 1 R. C. L. 799; 6 R. C. L. 394, 395; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 108.]

— who may attack validity of statute.

7. No one has a right to attack a statute as unconstitutional unless he can show that its enforcement against him has violated or will violate his constitutional rights.

[See 6 R. C. L. 89; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 21.]

— equal protection of laws — denial of freedom of speech to aliens.

8. Denial by a state, to aliens, of the right to attack the form of government of the United States, does not deny them the equal protection of the laws as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

(Wheeler, Ch. J., dissents.)

RESERVATION by the Superior Court for Fairfield County (Maltbie, J.) for determination by the Supreme Court of Errors of questions arising upon demurrer by defendants to an information charging them with violation of the statute concerning sedition. Overruling of demurrer advised.

Statement by Beach, J.:

Information charging the accused with violation of chapter 312 of the Public Acts of 1919, entitled "An Act Concerning Sedition," brought to the superior court of Fairfield county and reserved for the advice of this court, on the issues of law raised by a demurrer to the information. The superior court is advised to overrule the demurrer and to enter judgment pursuant to the stipulation.

The information charges "that on the 14th day of March, 1921, at Bridgeport, in said county, Tihon Sinchuk and Alexander Yavsk, not being citizens of the United States or of the state of Connecticut, and residing in said Bridgeport, with force and arms, did publicly exhibit or advertise certain disloyal, scurrilous, or abusive matter concerning the form of government of the United States and of its flag, and certain matter which was intended to bring them into contempt, or which creates or fosters opposition to organized government, against the peace and contrary to the statute in such case made and provided."

The offenses are charged in the exact language of the statute, but no excerpts from the matter complained of are included in the information, and no statement of the facts in the case is contained in the record.

To this information the accused demurred: (1) Because the information is insufficient in law; (2) because it does not state facts constituting an offense; and (3) because the statute is unconstitutional and void in that it violates §§ 2, 5, 6, 9, and 16 of article 1 of the Constitution of Connecticut, § 9 of article 1 of the Federal Constitution, and also the 6th and 14th Amendments thereof. The stipulation reserving the issues of law raised by the demurrer of the accused to the information recites that the cause is ready for plea and final judgment, and it is further stipulated that no question shall be raised by the defendants based upon any informality in the information, or upon any defects therein because of the failure to incorporate in the information specific quotations from the matter complained of. The only questions discussed in argument or on the briefs were those relating to the constitutionality of the statute.

Messrs. Homer S. Cummings, Galen A. Carter, and Warren F. Cressy, for the State:

The act does not violate the constitutional provisions relating to freedom of speech or of the press.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 612; State v. Pape, 90 Conn. 98, 96 Atl. 313; Rex v. St. Asaph, 3 T. R. 428, note, 100 Eng. Reprint, 657, note; State v. Pioneer Press Co. 100 Minn. 173, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 480, 117 Am. St. Rep. 684, 110 N. W. 867, 10 Ann. Cas. 351; Story, Const. 2d ed. § 1880; 4 Bl. Com. 151; Com. v. Blanding, 3 Pick. 304, 15 Am. Dec. 214; State v. McKee, 73 Conn. 18, 49 L.R.A. 542, 84 Am. St. Rep. 124, 46 Atl. 409; People v. Most, 171 N. Y. 423, 58 L.R.A. 509, 64 N. E. 175; State v. Gibson, 189 Iowa, 1212, 174 N. W. 34; Allyn's Appeal, 81 Conn. 534, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 630, 129 Am. St. Rep. 225, 71 Atl. 794; Beach v. Bradstreet, 85 Conn. 344, 82 Atl. 1030, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 946; State v. Kahn, 56 Mont. 108, 182 Pac. 107; State v. Holm, 139 Minn. 267, L.R.A.1918C, 304, 166 N. W. 181; Frohwerk v. United States, 249 U. S. 204, 63 L. ed. 561, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; Halter v. Nebraska, 205 U. S. 34, 51 L. ed. 696, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419, 10 Ann. Cas. 525, affirming 74 Neb. 759, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1079, 121 Am. St. Rep. 754, 105 N. W. 298.

Defendants are not denied due process of law, or the right to be informed of the nature of the accusation against them, nor are they denied the equal protection of the laws.

Seven Cases v. United States, 239 U. S. 510, 60 L. ed. 411, L.R.A.1916D, 164, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; State v. McKee, 73 Conn. 18, 49 L.R.A. 542, 84 Am. St. Rep. 124, 46 Atl. 409; Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 27 L. ed. 552, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; O'Brien's Petition, 79 Conn. 46, 63 Atl. 777; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; People v. Case, 153 Mich. 98, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 657, 116 N. W. 558; Adams v. Cronin, 29 Colo. 488, 63 L.R.A. 61, 69 Pac. 590, affirmed in 192 U. S. 108, 48 L. ed. 365, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 219.

The right to alter the form of government is limited to the methods and purposes defined by law.

Collier v. Frierson, 24 Ala. 100; United States ex rel. Milwaukee S. D. Pub. Co. v. Burleson, 255 U. S. 407, 65 L. ed. 704, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 352.

Defendants are aliens, and they are not included within the provisions of art. 1, § 5, or of art. 1, § 16, since both of these, by their terms, apply to citizens only.

Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 393, 15 L. ed. 691; Boyd v. Nebraska, 143 U. S. 135, 36 L. ed. 103, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375.

Messrs. A. S. Geduldig, Walter Nelles, and Isaac Shorr, for defendants:

The Sedition Law fixes no ascertainable standard of guilt, and would operate to delegate to courts and juries legislative discretion.

United States v. L. Cohen Grocery Co. 255 U. S. 81, 65 L. ed. 516, 14 A.L.R. 1045, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 298; International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, 234 U. S. 216, 58 L. ed. 1284, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 853; Collins v. Kentucky, 234 U. S. 634, 58 L. ed. 1510, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 924; American Seeding Mach. Co. v. Kentucky, 236 U. S. 660, 59 L. ed. 773, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456; Fox v. Washington, 236 U. S. 273, 59 L. ed. 573, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; State v. Pape, 90 Conn. 98, 96 Atl. 313; Campbell v. Spottiswoode, 3 Best & S. 769, 122 Eng. Reprint, 288, 32 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 185, 9 Jur. N. S. 1069, 8 L. T. N. S. 201, 11 Week. Rep. 569; Pollock, Torts, 9th ed. 262; Dearborn Pub. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 271 Fed. 479.

In penalizing expression for its character, regardless of relation to harmful consequence, the Sedition Law oversteps the police power and deprives of liberty without due process of law.

Ingham v. Brooks, 95 Conn. 317, 111 Atl. 209; State v. Feingold, 77 Conn. 326, 59 Atl. 211; Opinion of Justices, 207 Mass. 601, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 604, 94 N. E. 558; State v. McKee, 73 Conn. 18, 49 L.R.A. 542, 84 Am. St. Rep. 124, 46 Atl. 409; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; Ex parte Hudgins, 86 W. Va. 526, 9 A.L.R. 1361, 103 S. E. 327; People ex rel. O'Connell v. Turner, 55 Ill. 280, 8 Am. Rep. 645; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A. 1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Adams v. Tanner, 244 U. S. 590, 61 L. ed. 1336, L.R.A. 1917F, 1163, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 662, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 973; Ex parte Smith, 135 Mo. 223, 33 L.R.A.

606, 58 Am. St. Rep. 576, 36 S. W. 628; Watertown v. Christnacht, 39 S. D. 290, L.R.A. 1917F, 903, 164 N. W. 62; Lancaster v. Reed, — Mo. App. —, 207 S. W. 868; St. Louis v. Roche, 128 Mo. 541, 31 S. W. 915; Hechinger v. Maysville, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 486, 49 L.R.A. 114, 57 S. W. 619; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 86, 53 L. ed. 417, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 49 L. ed. 518, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; Schenck v. United States, 249 U. S. 47, 63 L. ed. 470, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247; Debs v. United States, 249 U. S. 211, 63 L. ed. 566, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252.

The Sedition Law infringes specific limitations upon the police power.

State v. McKee, 73 Conn. 28, 49 L.R.A. 542, 84 Am. St. Rep. 124, 46 Atl. 409; Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244; Masses Pub. Co. v. Patten, 244 Fed. 535; Freund, Pol. Power, § 475; State v. Tachin, 92 N. J. L. 269, 106 Atl. 145; State v. Gabriel, 95 N. J. L. 337, 112 Atl. 611.

The statute makes no distinction between citizens and aliens.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33, 60 L. ed. 131, L.R.A. 1916D, 545, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 283; People v. Crane, 214 N. Y. 154, L.R.A. 1916D, 550, 108 N. E. 427, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1254; Patsone v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 58 L. ed. 539, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Opinion of Justices, 207 Mass. 601, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 604, 94 N. E. 558; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255.

Beach, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The statute in question is entitled "An Act Concerning Sedition," and on its face it appears to penalize three classes of publications: (1) Disloyal, scurrilous, or abusive matter concerning the form of government of the United States, its military forces, flag, or uniform; (2) any matter intended to bring them into contempt; (3) or which creates or fosters opposition to organized government. The demurrer and the stipulation accompanying the reservation waive all defenses except the unconstitutionality of the statute.

The brief for the accused presents this defense in three aspects, which are described as to some extent overlapping: First, because it fixes no ascertainable standard of guilt and amounts to delegation to courts and juries of the legislative function of defining statutory offenses; second, because it oversteps the police power and deprives of liberty without due process of law in penalizing expressions for their character regardless of relation to harmful consequence; third, because it contravenes specific limitations on the police power, namely, the free speech sections, the right of the people to adapt their form of government in accordance with their opinion, and the right of remonstrance.

In support of the first of these propositions the defendants rely mainly on United States v. L. Cohen Grocery Co. 255 U. S. 81, 65 L. ed. 516, 14 A.L.R. 1045, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 298, holding that § 4 of the Lever Act (41 Stat. at L. 298, chap. 80, Comp. Stat. § 3115½ff, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 183), penalizing the making of "any unjust or unreasonable rate or charge, in handling or dealing in or with any necessities," was unconstitutional because it did not fix any ascertainable standard of guilt, and did not inform persons accused of violation thereof of the nature and cause of the accusation against them. To the same effect are International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, 234 U. S. 216, 58 L. ed. 1284, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 853; Collins v. Kentucky, 234 U. S. 634, 58 L. ed. 1510, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 924; American Seeding Mach. Co. v. Kentucky, 236 U. S. 660, 59 L. ed. 773, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456. These last cases arose under statutes forbidding combinations to fix a price greater or less than the "real value" of the article dealt in; and the attempt was to determine criminality by asking the court or jury to say what the real value of the article would have been had the combination not existed. On the other hand, a criminal statute is not unconstitutional merely because it throws upon men the risk of rightly estimating the effect of their conduct upon a condition of fact, e. g., what is "undue restraint" of trade (Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373, 57 L. ed. 1232, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 780); whether their conduct is "reasonably calculated" to restrain trade (Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 86, 53 L. ed. 417, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220); whether their language tends to encourage or advocate an actual breach of the law (Fox v. Washington, 236 U. S. 273, 59 L. ed. 573, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383); or whether a newspaper is "principally made up of criminal news" (State v. McKee, 73 Conn. 18, 46 Atl. 409, 49 L.R.A. 542, 84 Am. St. Rep. 124). And coming closer to the point, we have upheld a statute which penalized the publication of "any offensive, indecent, or abusive matter concerning any person." State v. Pape, 90 Conn. 98, 96 Atl. 313. Of this statute we said that it must be construed consistently with the principles of the common law governing the publication of all defamatory matter, and with the constitutional provision that in all actions of libel the truth shall be a defense.

Applying the principles underlying these authorities to the present case, we think the statute is not fairly open to the objection that it fixes no ascertainable standard of guilt. The phrase "disloyal, scurrilous, or abusive matter" is confined specifically to the form of government of the United States, its military forces, flag, or uniform; and the principles of the common law governing the publications of defamatory matter, in so far as they are applicable, furnish all the analogies necessary to define the nature and cause of this branch of the accusation. Whether the publication in question was with intent to bring the form of government of the United States and its flag into contempt is an issue of fact such as is presented in most criminal prosecutions. Whether the publication creates or fosters

Sedition—summacy of statute penalizing.

opposition to organized government is also an issue of fact no more uncertain than the question whether a publication is obscene.

The second objection is that the act penalizes expression for its character regardless of relation or harmful consequence. This objection, both in its form and in the mode in which it was presented in argument and on the brief, stands by itself and does not involve the third objection above stated. It deals not with the alleged violation of any specific limitation on the exercise of the police power, but with the reasonableness of the prohibition as a measure for the public peace and safety. It may be admitted that the publication of matter concerning the form of the Federal government which is merely scurrilous or abusive is not necessarily a direct incitement of disobedience to any other law; but it is not necessary to look outside of the statute itself to find a legal basis for criminality, because the act itself is the declaration of the general assembly that the publication of the prohibited forms of expression does endanger the public peace and safety.

—forbidding utterances without regard to consequences.

This declaration it has power to make unless the court can see that it is plainly unfounded. State v. McKee, 73 Conn. 18, 24, 49 L.R.A. 542, 84 Am. St. Rep. 124, 46 Atl. 409. We have no doubt that a sufficient probability of danger to the public peace and safety arises from publications concerning the government of the United States and of its flag which would come within the common-law definition of defamatory matter to justify the statute so far as its first two clauses are concerned. Defamatory publications seem as dangerous to the public welfare when addressed to the national government as when addressed to an individual. State v. Pape, supra. As to the final clause of the statute, it is idle to say that anarchistic propaganda is harmless in law.

We come now to the question, which also underlies the objections already discussed, whether the statute contravenes any specific provisions of the Bill of Rights or of the Federal Constitution. Section 2 of the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of this state provides: "That all political power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority, and instituted for their benefit; and that they have at all times an undeniable and indefeasible right to alter their form of government in such a manner as they may think expedient."

This section is plainly inapplicable to the defendants. The information alleges, and the demurrer admits, that the defendants are not "citizens of the United States or of the state of Connecticut." The right affirmed by this section is the right of the people to alter "their form of government." It is because it is their own and instituted by themselves for their own benefit that they have the right to alter it. The proposition that aliens have an undeniable and indefeasible right to alter our form of government will hardly bear statement.

Constitutional law—applicability to aliens.

Section 16 provides: "The citizens have a right, in a peaceable manner, to assemble for their common good, and to apply to those invested with the powers of government, for redress of grievances, or other proper purposes, by petition, address or remonstrance."

This section is also inapplicable. No right of peaceable assembly is invaded by the statute, and there is nothing to show that the publications in question were addressed for any purpose whatever to those invested with the powers of government. The allegations of the information and the admissions of the demurrer do not indicate that such was the fact, and the inference to be drawn from the admission that the publications were of the character described in

—right to assemble and petition.

the statute would lead to another conclusion.

Sections 5 and 6 of the Bill of Rights are as follows:

"Sec. 5. Every citizen may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty.

"Sec. 6. No law shall ever be passed to curtail or restrain the liberty of speech or of the press."

If we are right so far, the next question is whether matter of the kind described in the statute and information is of such a constitutionally privileged character that its publication by the defendants may not be punished, although dangerous to the public welfare. The defendants attempt to maintain that their publications are so privileged, and are a legitimate exercise of the right of free speech, by what is, in practical effect, an appeal to § 2 of the Bill of Rights. They quote from State v. McKee, 73 Conn. 18, 28, 49 L.R.A. 542, 84 Am. St. Rep. 124, 46 Atl. 413: "The right to discuss public matters stands in part on the necessity of that right to the operation of a government by the people." And they say: "There is a public necessity, however, that public matters should be freely discussed. . . . Is it not the law that such discussion, even though potentially harmful, may not be punished—is not an 'abuse' of free speech—so long as it does not amount to direct and positive incitation of harm?"

The distinction thus attempted is in principle a familiar one between harmful utterances intended to incite resistance or disobedience to law and the same harmful utterances intended only to secure a change in the law; the latter, though dangerous, being justified by the inalienable and indefeasible right of the people to alter their political institutions. 21 Columbia Law Rev. 526. The question then recurs whether the defendants, being aliens, possess that right. We discuss that question, and then the question whether the denial of that right to aliens violates the requirement of the 14th Amendment that "no state shall . . . deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

The defendants' brief does not argue the question whether § 2 of the Bill of Rights applies to aliens. It simply assumes that aliens are included in the term "the people," and then uses the assumption that the defendants are exercising the constitutional right of altering their form of government as a plea of privilege for the publication of matter which the legislature has declared to be dangerous to the public peace and safety. Prima facie, publications which have been forbidden by the legislature because dangerous to the public welfare are abuses of the privilege of free speech. Unless the defendants can successfully claim the right to unlimited political discussion, they cannot say that the statute deprives them of any constitutional privilege.

The question whether aliens are entitled to the benefit of the reservations of personal liberty guaranteed to citizens and to the people in our Bill of Rights is not altogether a new question in this state. In Jackson v. Bulloch, 12 Conn. 38, the question arose in a writ of habeas corpus, whether a slave could be held in servitude in Connecticut by her owner, who had brought her here with a view to a temporary residence. The petitioner relied both upon the Constitution and upon the slavery statutes then in force. On the latter ground she prevailed, but in discussing the constitutional question we said: "The Bill of Rights, in its 1st section, declares that all men, when they form a social compact, are equal in rights; and that no man, or set of men, are entitled to exclusive public emoluments or privileges from the community. The language is certainly broad; but not as broad as that of the Bill of Rights in Massachusetts, to which it has been compared. It seems evidently to be limited to those who are parties to the social compact thus formed. Slaves cannot be said to be parties to that compact, or to be represented in it."

And of § 8 of the Bill of Rights, we said: "The 8th section of the Bill of Rights has also been pressed upon us,—that 'the people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and possessions, from unreasonable searches or seizures.' This is almost a transcript of the 4th article of the Amendments of the Constitution of the United States. And the fact that this Amendment was adopted at all, and that amidst all the conflict of opinions upon the subject of slavery this clause has never been claimed to affect that subject, shows very strongly that it was not intended to apply to that description of persons. When the preamble to the Constitution of the United States speaks of 'We, the people, . . . to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution,' it cannot be seriously contended that it included that class of people called slaves; and the term 'people,' in the Bill of Rights, must have been used in a similar sense."

The principle underlying this portion of the decision applies to the present case with added force, for the 2d section of the Bill of Rights, declaring that all political power is inherent in the people, cannot refer to aliens, who have no political power; nor can the declaration that the people have at all times an undeniable and infeasible right to alter their form of government refer to aliens, who have no part or lot in the government.

Turning back to the free speech sections, § 5 declares that "every citizen" may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty. This privilege is, on its face, confined to citizens. And § 6, that no law shall ever be passed to curtail or restrain the liberty of speech or of the press, plainly refers to the liberty of speech and of the press conferred by § 5 on citizens.

We do not mean to say that aliens have no right of free speech. If the general assembly should undertake to declare a comprehensive censorship of the press, and an alien newsdealer should be prosecuted for selling a book or a newspaper which had not been passed by the censor, the statute could not be enforced against him, and for the reason that the business of newsdealing is a matter of private concern, and is a business in which aliens, who are duly admitted to the United States under our immigration laws, have an inherent right to engage, and having that right they are entitled to the equal protection of the laws in the conduct of that business. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 34, 60 L. ed. 131, L.R.A. 1916D, 545, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 283. We do, however, lay it down as a self-evident proposition, supported in principle by Jackson v. Bulloch, supra, that aliens have no constitutional right to share in the privilege and responsibility of attempting to change our laws or forms of government, and hence that they have no right, under cover of being engaged in good faith to accomplish those ends, to engage in scurrilous or anarchistic propaganda which has been declared by the general assembly to be dangerous to the public welfare. It follows that, so far as aliens are concerned, the general assembly has a right to pass a statute forbidding or penalizing the publication of such propaganda. And as it is a principle of constitutional law that no one has a right to attack a statute as unconstitutional unless he can show that its enforcement against him has violated or will violate his constitutional rights, the defense of unconstitu-

—right to protection in news dealing.

—freedom of speech—objection to government—right of alien.

—who may attack validity of statute.

tionality is not open to the defendants in this action. Tyler v. Judges of Ct. of Registration, 179 U. S. 405, 45 L. ed. 252, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206, 6 R. C. L. 89, and numerous cases cited in the note to § 87.

The remaining question is whether this conclusion deprives the defendants of the equal protection of —equal protection of laws—denial of freedom of speech to aliens.

the laws. Evidently not, for the question whether the statute is enforceable against citizens is not before us. We simply hold that the defendants, being aliens, do not possess the right of attempting to alter our form of government, and for that reason are not qualified to plead the privilege of unlimited political discussion on which their defense that the statute violates the 2d, 5th, and 6th sections of the Bill of Rights is founded.

We may add that, if this defense had been pleaded by a citizen, it would have been by no means clear that the statute might not be construed so as to avert most, if not all, of the criticism directed against it. State v. McKee, supra; State v. Pape, 90 Conn. 98, 96 Atl. 313.

We have already indicated that the 1st and 2d clauses of the statute are to be construed in the light of the principles of the common law governing the publication of defamatory matter. And while the construction of the statute as a whole is not required or permitted by this record, it is a fair question, Professor Freund to the contrary notwithstanding, whether the 2d section of the Bill of Rights justifies the publication of anarchistic propaganda.

The Superior Court is advised to overrule the demurrer and to enter judgment pursuant to the stipulation.

Gager, Curtis, and Burpee, JJ., concur.

Wheeler, Ch. J., dissenting:

This appeal involves questions of highest importance, which justify a statement of the grounds of this dissent and of my view upon these questions. I assume that the information charges three offenses: Publicly exhibiting or advertising (1) certain disloyal, scurrilous, or abusive matter concerning the government of the United States and its flag; (2) certain matter which was intended to bring them into contempt; (3) certain matter which creates or fosters opposition to organized government.

The matter thus generally characterized is not set forth in the information either in terms or in substance. The court has no means of ascertaining whether, on its face, the matter is any of the things the state charges. Under our law the accused must be informed of the nature of the crime with which he is charged. Criminal procedure of universal acceptance requires that the information for criminal libel should set forth the charge, either in the terms made, or so fully that by reference its terms can be wholly known.

Wharton's Criminal Law, 11th ed. says:

Section 1982. "The alleged libelous matter also must be set out accurately; any variance being fatal."

Section 1983. "It is enough now to say that if the indictment does not on its face profess to set forth an accurate copy of the alleged libel in words and figures, it will be held insufficient on demurrer, or in arrest of judgment."

Wharton's Criminal Procedure, 10th ed. vol. 2, § 921, says: "An indictment or information alleging libelous matter should set it out in hæc verba; a mere statement as to the meaning and effect of the words being insufficient."

Various authorities are cited in support of this principle of criminal procedure. Other textbooks make a like statement. 17 R. C. L. § 228, p. 465; Newell, Slander & Libel, 3d ed. pp. 1160, 1161. In reported cases of criminal libel we find the libel set forth in the information. State v. McKee, 73 Conn. 18, 29, 49

L.R.A. 542, 84 Am. St. Rep. 124, 46 Atl. 409, is not in conflict. There the information sustained charged the accused with having in his possession, with intent to sell, a paper devoted to criminal news, and described the issue of the paper so that it could be identified. The practical objection to incorporating the entire newspaper as a part of the information led to the ruling made.

The parties herein by counsel stipulated "that no question shall be raised upon appeal by the defendants, based upon any informality in the information, or upon any defect therein, because of the failure to incorporate in the information specific quotations from the matter complained of."

My brethren assume that this stipulation of counsel removes this question from the case. I do not think it should be regarded as doing this. What is there in the stipulation which would compel the accused to plead guilty to this charge after the judgment herein? An agreement not to press a point upon an appeal is far from an agreement to plead guilty after the appeal is determined. It is true that counsel for the defendants say in their brief "that the defendants have agreed to submit themselves for punishment if this statute is held valid," but such agreement is no part of the stipulation of record. Again, what is there in the stipulation which prevents these defendants from urging this point upon a motion in arrest? What is really determined by the majority opinion? Only this, that it is possible to conceive of matter which these defendants may have published which would offend this statute. But what that matter is which is within the statute the opinion cannot name. One judge hereafter may have one view; another, another view. The decision does not make for certainty in the law, but the reverse. And it may well be that the justices who concur had different matter in mind as constituting the charge. Other reasons suggest themselves, but these seem to be sufficient reasons why the court should refuse to regard this stipulation and should determine the first and second grounds of demurrer, that the information is insufficient and does not state facts constituting an offense, to be well taken. When we consider the situation of these defendants—aliens—whose counsel have stipulated away their fundamental right to have the charge against them set out with reasonable certainty, and that this stipulation may be construed as their agreement that they have been guilty of inciting violence, murder, and revolution against the United States, with the intention of subverting its government, we may well stop to ask whether intelligent aliens, understanding their rights and the penalty of their agreement, would ever have made the stipulation counsel have made for them.

A court should be most careful to see that the rights of these aliens under our law are fully protected, and if there is a reasonable possibility that they may not have fully understood the effect of their stipulation, and that it does deprive them of a right which is vital to a fair trial and a fair consideration of their case, the court ought not to permit the action of counsel, or their action upon the advice of counsel, to prevent a consideration of their cause without this elementary safeguard.

As we examine the nature of these charges, it will become more apparent that the court ought not to determine the grave questions raised on this appeal without having before it the matter charged to have been published. I agree that what is disloyal, scurrilous, or abusive matter concerning the government of the United States and its flag, and whether matter was intended to bring these into contempt, can be ascertained by our courts by the application of the definitions and principles known to our common law, so that it cannot be said that this statute fixes no ascertainable standard of guilt. Nor do I think this statute oversteps the police power in depriving these defendants of liberty without due process of law, by penalizing expression without regard to harmful consequences.

Publications which degrade or throw into contempt the government of our country necessarily tend to incite and encourage breach of the peace. The constitutional guaranty of free speech gives to every person who comes within the United States the right to discuss publicly any subject so long as its object and effect be not to disturb the peace of individuals or of families, the quiet of society, or the existence of government, Federal or state.

"The liberty protected is not the right to perpetrate acts of licentiousness, or any act inconsistent with the peace or safety of the state. Freedom of speech and press does not include the abuse of power of tongue or pen, any more than freedom of other action includes an injurious use of one's occupation, business, or property." State v. McKee, 73 Conn. 29, 49 L.R.A. 542, 84 Am. St. Rep. 124, 46 Atl. 409.

Any published matter which tends to degrade or vilify or bring into contempt the government of the United States or its flag is libelous, and libels of this nature are seditious and criminal. The law presumes harmful consequences may result from their use, for this is a natural consequence. Newell, Slander & Libel, 3d ed. § 1090; 2 Wharton, Crim. Proc. § 911.

Had the matter which the defendants are charged with publicly exhibiting been set up in the information, the demurrer would then have raised the question whether this matter fell within the characterization. No hard and fast rule can automatically determine this. The circumstances surrounding the matter and its nature must in each case be considered in the light of the accepted legal definitions of these terms, where such exist, and, if they do not exist, then they must be considered by the exercise of a judgment formed after a consideration of applicable legal principles.

Aside from the objection that the matter which creates or fosters opposition to organized government is not stated in the information, this particular count is bad for other reasons. It does not state whether the opposition created or fostered was by means of force or by means calculated to—that is, likely to—incite or encourage the use of force or a breach of the public peace, or whether it was a purely speculative discussion without relation to the accomplishment of evil purpose. The constitutional right of free speech does not give anyone the right to create or foster opposition to the government of the United States or of this state by the advocacy of force or the incitement of means calculated to destroy or subvert or injure the government or the peace of the community. The majority opinion assumes that the charge is against the United States or this state. But specification 3 of this information is not personal to the United States or this state. The opposition charged is to all organized government. Such opposition may intend present danger to government by inciting the use of force or of opinions, beliefs, or arguments likely to subvert or injure government.

If it be opposition of this kind which is created or fostered, our constitutional guaranty of free speech does not protect one in such form of opposition. But if it be a purely philosophical or speculative discussion of the condition of society without the restraints and burdens of any government, it cannot be said that this will be likely to subvert or injure government. Such discussion has no relation to any particular government. The Constitution of the United States and our Bill of Rights forbid the abridgment of freedom of speech and of the press, and their guaranties forever do away with some of the restraints and limitations to which this fundamental right had been subjected not so many years before these constitutional enactments. But the exercise of this vital adjunct of freedom does not countenance licentiousness of speech, or seditious utterances. And such utterances are those which incite or encourage the use of force, or means which injure government or are likely to injure government. In passing upon an indictment under the Espionage Act (Comp. Stat. §§ 10,212a-10,212h, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, pp. 120-125), for preventing recruiting by named illegal acts, the Supreme Court, by Justice Holmes, said: "The question in every case is whether the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a right to prevent." Schenck v. United States, 249 U. S. 47, 63 L. ed. 470, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247.

Publications inciting or encouraging revolution in another country, the subversion of its government, the murder of its rulers, or any evil to its government by the use of force, would clearly fall without the liberty of speech guaranteed by the Constitution. And so would publications which are likely to produce these effects. For these would be seditious libels, and would properly subject their authors to criminal penalty. Whether language is or is not likely to produce such an effect is the dividing line between what is and what is not seditious libel. While this determination is difficult, it is one to which courts are accustomed. A breach of the peace may occur by any act likely to produce violence. Bishop, Crim. Law, 8th ed. § 536. And a libel has been indictable, time out of mind, because it tends to produce violence. People v. Most, 171 N. Y. 423, 424, 58 L.R.A. 509, 64 N. E. 175.

In determining whether a libel is likely to injure organized government, a court will be careful to be sure of its ground that danger clear and imminent is likely to result from the publication, since it must never forget that freedom of speech is an indispensable prop of our free government, and that "repression of full and free discussion is dangerous in any government resting upon the will of the people." Coolsey, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 614. Whether the statement is seditious libel, we test by the question, "Is the language calculated to promote public disorder or physical force or violence in a matter of state?" Odgers, Libel & Slander, p. 513.

No case and no authority, so far as we discover, go so far as to penalize mere opinion concerning government or its institutions without regard to evil consequences occurring or likely to occur. This we suppose to be the meaning of the Supreme Court of the United States when it says: "We understand the state court, by implication at least, to have read the statute as confined to encouraging an actual breach of law. Therefore the argument that this act is both an unjustifiable restriction of liberty and too vague for a criminal law must fail. It does not appear and is not likely that the statute will be construed to prevent publications merely because they tend to produce unfavorable opinions of a particular statute or of law in general." Fox v. Washington, 236 U. S. 273, 277, 59 L. ed. 573, 575, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Schenck v. United States, 249 U. S. 47, 63 L. ed. 470, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247; State v. Tachin, 92 N. J. L. 269, 274, 106 Atl. 145.

Newell on Slander and Libel, § 1090, thus states the rule: "Mere theoretical discussions of abstract questions of political science, comparisons of various forms and systems of government, and controversies as to details of our own constitutional law, are clearly permissible."

The language of the statute before us is not limited to matter which incites or encourages, or which is likely to so incite or encourage, opposition to all organized government. It may include a philosophical or theoretical discussion without regard to means or effect which may remotely be held to incite or encourage such opposition. A statute cannot do this without violating the constitutional guaranties of free speech.

The majority opinion does not construe this statute as one which is confined to the incitement or encouragement of force, or which is likely to produce this result. What it really decides is that aliens such as the accused have no right "to engage in scurrilous or anarchistic propaganda which has been declared by the general assembly to be dangerous to the public welfare." It fails to discuss that phase of the right of free speech which is involved, and holds the statute good against aliens. I think the state has the right to prohibit the publication of matter which is disloyal, scurrilous, or abusive concerning the government of the United States and its flag, or which is intended to bring them into contempt, whether it be published by a citizen or by an alien. Our treatment of this subject so far is equally applicable to citizen or alien. Our Bill of Rights, with few exceptions, and all of our fundamental constitutional guaranties, are for the protection of the alien as well as the citizen.

I agree with my associates that §§ 5, 16, and 17 of our Bill of Rights are by their terms applicable to citizens alone. I also agree that the right to alter our form of government as guaranteed by § 2 is the exclusive privilege of the citizen. Aside from these sections, our Bill of Rights protects aliens and citizens alike.

I do not agree that § 6 of our Bill of Rights is confined to citizens. That section provides: "No law shall ever be passed to curtail or restrain the liberty of speech or of the press."

While denying to aliens the protection of this section, my associates say: "We do not mean to say that aliens have no right of free speech." But the right of free speech which they accord the alien is a very limited one, unprotected by Constitution and restricted by judicial construction. I cannot believe that this position is sound. I cannot find the parallel between the slave and the alien and so treat Jackson v. Bulloch, 12 Conn. 38, as controlling the judgment, as my associates do.

So far as the right of free speech is concerned, the distinction between the rights of citizen and alien does not exist except as to the specific guaranties given to citizens alone. The 14th Amendment was enacted "to secure equal rights to all persons." Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 347, 25 L. ed. 676, 679. And when it says: "Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws,"—it included the alien within the term "any person."

"These provisions are universal in their application, to all persons within the territorial jurisdiction, without regard to any differences of race, of color, or of nationality; and the equal protection of the laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws." Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 369, 30 L. ed. 220, 226, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1070; Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33, 39, 60 L. ed. 131, 134, L.R.A.1916D, 545, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 283.

We quote from a few of the many authorities:

"The equal protection of the laws is due to aliens as to citizens." Cardozo, J., People v. Crane, 214 N. Y. 154, L.R.A.1916D, 550, 108 N. E. 427, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1254.

"An alien friend, however transient his presence may be, is entitled to a temporary protection, and owes in return a temporary allegiance." Fisher v. Fielding, 67 Conn. 91, 32 L.R.A. 236, 52 Am. St. Rep. 270, 34 Atl. 714.

"These rights and privileges [of aliens] include both personal rights—such as the right to dwell safely in the country, the general right to engage in any lawful labor, trade, or business within the state, and the right of protection to person, reputation, and other relative rights—and property rights. In return for the protection given aliens they owe a temporary and local allegiance to the country in which they reside, which continues during the period of their residence." 2 C. J. 1046, 1074, 1078; 2 Cyc. 89, 107.

That the 14th Amendment guarantees freedom of speech is unquestioned. But, apart from this, Connecticut is ever bound to maintain a republican form of government. Beach v. Bradstreet, 85 Conn. 344, 348, 82 Atl. 1030, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 946. And a republican form of government without the right of free speech would be an anomaly. The statute in question on its face applies to "any person," be he citizen or alien. And the constitutional guaranty of free speech does not prevent any state penalizing seditious libel, whether committed by alien or citizen. Citizen or alien who publicly exhibits matter which creates or fosters opposition to organized government by force, or is likely to produce force or disorder, will be guilty of a criminal or seditious libel. And if this statute were confined to this, it would not violate the right of free speech. But since it goes further and penalizes all speculative and philosophical matter without regard to its actual or likely effect, it does in this respect violate the right of free speech which the Constitution of Connecticut and of the United States guarantees to alien and citizen alike.

NOTE.

As to validity of legislation directed against political, social, or industrial propaganda deemed to be of a dangerous tendency, see annotation following STATE v. DIAMOND, post, 1535. As to the specific question presented in the reported case (STATE v. SINCHUK, ante, 1515), see III. a, of that annotation, post, 1539.

STATE OF NEW MEXICO

v.

JACK DIAMOND, Appt.

New Mexico Supreme Court—November 30, 1921.

(— N. M. —, 202 Pac. 988.)

Constitutional law — right of free speech.

1. Chapter 140, Laws 1919, prohibiting acts which have for their object the destruction of organized government, is held to be unconstitutional as violative of the right of free speech guaranteed by § 17 of article 2 of the state Constitution.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1535.]

Statute — construction — sedition.

2. Chapter 140, Laws 1919, interpreted, and held, that the offenses therein enumerated are not confined to acts of violence or force or other unlawful things, but include all acts, peaceful or otherwise, which have for their object the destruction of organized government, or acts antagonistic to or in opposition to such organized government, or acts inciting or attempting to incite revolution against or opposition to such organized government, or the teaching of such doctrines.

Definition — "revolution."

3. The word "revolution," as used in the act, held to include all forms of revolution, accomplished by peaceful means or otherwise, and not to be limited to revolution by force of arms.

Statute — uncertainty — invalidity.

4. The act uses words of no determinative meaning, and the language is so general and indefinite as to embrace not only acts properly and legally punishable, but also others which cannot be punished, and it is for this reason void for uncertainty.

[See 25 R. C. L. 810.]

Appeal — constitutionality of statute — first attack.

5. Where an act creating a crime is found to be unconstitutional, the question may be raised for the first time on appeal.

[See 6 R. C. L. 96; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 24.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Colfax County (Leib, J.) convicting him of unlawfully and feloniously attempting to incite revolution and opposition to the organized government of the United States and of the state of New Mexico. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Edward D. Tittmann, for appellant:

Jurisdictional matters can always be raised for the first time on appeal.

17 Cyc. ¶ 3334; Territory v. Taylor, 11 N. M. 588, 71 Pac. 489; Arbuckle v. State, 80 Miss. 15, 31 So. 437.

The statute is void for want of due process of law because it fails to describe with reasonable certainty the elements of the offense.

United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563; 16 C. J. 68, note 10.

The indictment is void for the reason that it fails to charge any offense and fails to set forth the names of the persons solicited to become members of the Industrial Workers of the World, and the places where such solicitation was made, and because it does not show in what manner the soliciting of membership in this organization should be described as an attempt to incite revolution.

12 C. J. 1202; State v. Lucero, 20 N. M. 55, 146 Pac. 407; United States v. Medina, 15 N. M. 204, 103 Pac. 976; Territory v. Cortez, 15 N. M. 92, 103 Pac. 264; Territory v. Lotspeich, 14 N. M. 412, 94 Pac. 1025; Fontana v. United States, 262 Fed. 283; Evans v. United States, 153 U. S. 584, 38 L. ed. 830, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 668; Reeder v. United States, 262 Fed. 36; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588; Batchelor v. United States, 156 U. S. 426, 39 L. ed. 478, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 446; Dunbar v. United States, 156 U. S. 185, 39 L. ed. 390, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 325; United States v. Mayer, 252 Fed. 868; 2 McClain, Crim. Law, p. 534; 3 Whart.

Crim. Law, p. 2313, ¶ 2162; People v. Lynch, 11 Johns. 549.

The manner in which the trial was conducted deprived the defendant of his liberty without due process of law, and deprived him of the equal protection of the law.

State v. Brooks, 57 Mont. 480, 188 Pac. 942; Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 Mich. 355, 19 N. E. 33.

The demurrer of the defendant to the evidence of the state at the conclusion of the state's case should have been sustained for the reason that, aside from the defects in the law and in the indictment, there was no evidence to sustain the charge in the indictment, and especially no evidence that the defendant attempted to incite to treason against the state of New Mexico.

Weeks v. United States, 232 U. S. 383, 58 L. ed. 652, L.R.A.1915B, 834, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1177; Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. United States, 251 U. S. 385, 64 L. ed. 319, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182; 3 Whart. Crim. Law, 11th ed. 2301.

Messrs. Harry S. Bowman, Attorney General, and A. M. Edwards, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

Failure to raise, in the court below, the question of the unconstitutionality of the act involved waives the right to raise such question in the appellate court.

R. Haas Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Springfield Amusement Park Co. 236 Ill. 452, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 620, 127 Am. St. Rep. 297, 86 N. E. 248; McDonald v. Spring Valley, 2 A.L.R. 1359, note, p. 1363, 285 Ill. 52, 120 N. E. 476; 6 R. C. L. 96;

Minden v. McCrary, 108 La. 518, 32 So. 468; State v. Raymond, 156 Mo. 117, 56 S. W. 894; State ex rel. Vandiver v. Burke, 175 Ala. 561, 57 So. 870; State v. Hertzog, 92 S. C. 14, 75 S. E. 374; State v. Meyer, 180 Iowa, 210, 163 N. W. 244; State v. Swift & Co. 270 Mo. 694, 195 S. W. 996; Ellis v. State, 74 Fla. 215, 76 So. 698; Jersey City v. Thorpe, 90 N. J. L. 520, 101 Atl. 414; State v. Mack, 92 Vt. 103, 102 Atl. 58; State v. Gibson, — Iowa, —, 174 N. W. 34; State v. Hefton, — Mo. —, 213 S. W. 442; Scoggins v. State, 24 Ga. App. 677, 102 S. E. 39; State v. Chavez, 19 N. M. 325, 142 Pac. 922, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 127.

If the title of the act on which the indictment is based does not strictly conform to the requirements of § 16 of art. 4 of the state Constitution, it will hardly be contended that the fundamental rights of the defendants are violated thereby.

State v. Helton, 255 Mo. 170, 164 S. W. 457; State v. Gibson, — Iowa, —, 174 N. W. 34; State v. Herzog, 92 S. C. 14, 75 S. E. 374.

The legislature, in creating an offense, may define it by particular description of the act or acts constituting it, or may define it as any act which produces, or is reasonably calculated to produce, a certain defined or prescribed result.

16 C. J. 67, 68; State v. Helton, 255 Mo. 170, 164 S. W. 457; Fessler v. State, 12 Okla. Crim. Rep. 579, 160 Pac. 1129; State v. Gibson, — Iowa, —, 174 N. W. 34.

Defendant cannot complain that he has been deprived of his right of freedom of speech, if, by the act under which he was tried, he was forbidden to utter statements inciting to revolution or the overthrow of the organized government.

People v. Most, 71 App. Div. 160, 75 N. Y. Supp. 591; State v. Gibson, supra; Debs v. United States, 249 U. S. 211, 63 L. ed. 566, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252.

The indictment is sufficiently specific.

22 Cyc. 341, 342; 14 R. C. L. 185, 187.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, Jack Diamond, was convicted in the district court of Colfax and sentenced to the penitentiary, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The indictment charged that the defendant "did then and there unlawfully and feloniously attempt to incite revolution and opposition to the organized government of the United States of America and of the state of New Mexico by then and there soliciting members for the Industrial Workers of the World, an organization which has for its purpose and aim the destruction of organized government, Federal, state, and municipal."

The statute under which the prosecution was had is chapter 140, Laws 1919, which provides as follows:

"Section 1. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, firm or corporation, to commit or perform or to cause to permit or to be performed any act of any kind whatsoever which has for its purpose or aim the destruction of organized government, Federal, state, or municipal, or to do or cause to be done any act which is antagonistic to or in opposition to such organized government, or incite or attempt to incite revolution or opposition to such organized government.

"Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment in the state penitentiary for not less than one year nor more than ten years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"Sec. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons, firm or corporation to advocate or teach, or cause to be advocated or taught, in any manner whatsoever, the doing or performance of any of the acts prohibited by § 1 hereof."

Counsel for appellant argues that the act is unconstitutional for several reasons, among which is that it violates § 17 of article 2 of the state Constitution, which provides: "Every person may freely speak, write or publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press."

1. It is apparent from the terms of the statute, considered as a whole, that the offenses enumerated are not confined to

Statute—construction—
sedition.

, acts of violence or force or other unlawful things, but include all acts, peaceful or otherwise, which have for their object the destruction of organized government, or acts antagonistic to or in opposition to such organized government, or acts inciting or attempting to incite revolution against or opposition to such organized government, or the teaching of such doctrines. In this particular this statute is unique. Under its terms no distinction is made between the man who advocates a change in the form of our government by constitutional means, or advocates the abandonment of organized government by peaceful methods, and the man who advocates the overthrow of our government by armed revolution, or other form of force and violence. Both are alike guilty. It prohibits alike the creation of public opinion by argument and persuasion, and the compulsion of action by the people by force of arms, intimidation, sabotage, or other criminal or illegal means. And we are not at liberty to supply by intentment the element of force and violence which would render the statute free from the objection raised to it. To do so would be to insert words in the statute which are not there and which would entirely change its meaning. This is not allowable, especially in statutes creating crimes, where the rule of strict construction must be applied. State v. Armijo, 19 N. M. 345-349, 142 Pac. 1126.

2. In State v. Tachin, 92 N. J. L. 270, 106 Atl. 145, the New Jersey court had before it a somewhat similar question to the one at bar. The statute of New Jersey (P. L. 1918,

p. 130) provided in § 1 of the act punishment for inciting, or, by writing, speech, or other means, attempting to incite, "insurrection or sedition." Section 2 of the act provided that "any person who shall advocate, in public or private, by speech, writing, printing, or by any other means, the subversion or destruction by force of the government of the United States, or of the state of New Jersey, or attempt by speech, writing, printing, or in any other way whatsoever to incite or abet, promote or encourage hostility or opposition to the government of the United States, or of the state of New Jersey, shall be guilty," etc.

Section 3 of the act prohibited membership in any society formed for the purpose of inciting, abetting, promoting, or encouraging hostility or opposition to the government of the United States, or of the state of New Jersey.

In the case before the court the defendant was charged with a violation of § 2 of the act by reason of a speech in which it was urged he attempted to incite hostility and opposition to the government of the United States. The section was challenged as unconstitutional upon the ground that it invaded the constitutional guaranty of the right of free speech. The majority of the court construed the section to the effect that the words "hostility or opposition to the government of the United States, or of the state of New Jersey," meant such hostility and opposition as involved the "subversion or destruction by force" of those governments, and held that the statute, as thus construed, was constitutional. The court states, however, that if the statute punished hostility or opposition to the government without force, the statute would be unconstitutional. Two vigorous dissents were filed in this case, which are reported in 93 N. J. L. 485, 108 Atl. 318. In one of these opinions §§ 2 and 3 of the act are condemned on the ground that they violate the right of free speech, the freedom of the press, and the freedom of assembly guaranteed by the Federal Constitution and the Constitution of New Jersey. Sections 2 and 3 of this same act came before the New Jersey court again in State v. Gabriel, 95 N. J. L. 337, 112 Atl. 611. The court adhered to the former construction of § 2 of the act, but held § 3 to be unconstitutional, and said: "At the close of the trial counsel for defendant moved that the court direct that the defendant be acquitted on this indictment, because the statute upon which it rested is unconstitutional, and this, we think, is sound. Under the Constitution and Bill of Rights the legislature cannot make it criminal to belong to a party organized or formed for the purpose of encouraging hostility or opposition to the government of the United States or of this state, unless the hostility or opposition includes a purpose to overthrow or subvert such government. The constitutionality of the 2d section of the act was sustained in State v. Tachin, 92 N. J. L. 269, 106 Atl. 145, because that section provides that the hostility or opposition prohibited involved subversion and destruction by force. While by the section under consideration it is made a crime to be a member of a society organized or formed for the purpose of encouraging hostility or opposition to the Federal or state government, not to subvert or destroy them by force, and would apply to any citizen who sought a change in the form of the government by a most peaceful means. . . . In our judgment, so long as an organization formed for the purpose reserved in the paragraph of the Constitution referred to confines its purpose to peaceful hostility or opposition, and does not advocate or indicate a purpose to overthrow or subvert the existing government by force, but only by constitutional methods, the right of the members of such society to assemble together and consult for the common good is protected by the Bill of Rights."

In Iowa they have an act very similar to the New Jersey act, and which is chapter 372, Laws 1917. Section 1 prohibits the inciting of "insurrection or sedition." Section 2 of the act prohibits the advocacy by speech, writing, printing, or other means of the subversion and destruction by force of the government of the state of Iowa or of the United States, or the attempt by speech, writing, printing, or other means to incite or abet, promote or encourage, hostility or opposition to the government of the state of Iowa or of the United States. Section 3 of the act prohibits membership in any organization or society organized for the purpose of inciting, abetting, promoting, or encouraging hostility or opposition to the government of the state of Iowa or of the United States. This statute came before the supreme court of Iowa in State v. Gibson, — Iowa, —, 174 N. W. 34. The defendant was charged that he "did attempt by speech, action, and manner of speaking to incite, abet, promote, and encourage hostility and opposition to the government of the state of Iowa and of the United States, contrary to the statutes in such case made and provided," etc.

The indictment evidently was brought under § 2 of the act, and was sustained by the court upon the ground that it charged an attempt to promote sedition. If the construction of the statute by the court was intended to mean that the hostility and opposition to the government was hostility and opposition by force, the opinion of the court is, no doubt, correct. The court said: "It is presented that the statute violates the guaranty of article 1, § 7, of the Constitution of the state, that all may speak, write, and publish their sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right, and that no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. The constitutional guaranty itself qualifies the immunity by a plain indication that, while the right is given, the abuse of that right is not to be tolerated. The framers of our Constitution were laboring for the good of the commonwealth. They did not intend to protect what might destroy the state. It was not intended that the right of free speech included the right to promote sedition."

If our interpretation of our statute is correct, as no doubt it is, the whole statute is unconstitutional upon the same reasoning as that adopted by the New Jersey court in regard to § 3 of their act. It is true that § 3 of that act violated the right of assembly, but the principles governing the right of assembly and the right of free speech are the same.

3. What has been heretofore said refers to the statute generally. It remains to consider specifically the provisions prohibiting the inciting or attempting to incite revolution. Is the word "revolution" as used in the statute confined to an armed revolution, or does it include revolution by peaceful methods? "Revolution" has been variously defined as a radical change or modification of the government (McMullen v. Hodge, 5 Tex. 34-75); the overthrow of an established political system (Ballentine's Law Dictionary); a fundamental change in government or in the political Constitution of a country effected suddenly and violently, and mainly brought about by internal conditions (New Standard Enc.); a radical change in social or governmental conditions; the overthrow of an established political system, generally accompanied by far-reaching social changes (Century Dictionary).

In the American mind the word "revolution," at first view, is associated with the war for independence by the colonies, which was, of course, a rebellion and a revolution accomplished by force of arms. But this cannot be said to be the ordinary meaning of the word in all cases. The promulgation and adoption of the Constitution of the United States was a revolution of far-reaching importance. At the time there was in existence a complete government of the thirteen states under the Articles of Confederation. Under article 13 of that document the Articles of Confederation could be amended only with the consent of all the states, and they provided for a "perpetual union." Notwithstanding this contract between the thirteen states, the Constitution provided that upon the ratification of the same by nine states it should become established as a Constitution between the states so ratifying the same. As a matter of fact, eleven of the states ratified before any action was taken under the Constitution, leaving North Carolina and Rhode Island without any participation in the new government. The contract between the states was thus violated by the adoption of the Constitution, and the Constitution went into effect without the consent of those two states. Upon this subject Judge Cooley says: "This exclusion was not warranted by anything contained in the Articles of Confederation, which purported to be articles of 'perpetual union,' and the action of the eleven states in making radical revision of the Constitution, and excluding their associates for refusal to assent, was really revolutionary in character, and only to be defended on the same ground of necessity on which all revolutionary action is justified, and which in this case was the absolute need, fully demonstrated by experience, of a more efficient general government." See Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. pp. 9 and 10.

The result was accomplished by argument and persuasion, and, of course, no one would say that any law could now be passed which would make criminal the same kind of conduct. Nor is the meaning of the word changed by its connection with the word "incite." To "incite" is to arouse to action, nothing more, and cannot be held to narrow the word "revolution" to revolution by violence. The doctrine of noscitur

Constitutional law—right of free speech.

a sociis is applicable here. The word "revolution" is directly associated with the words "opposition to such organized governments," and must be held to include the same thing. A fair, general view of the whole statute leads to the conclusion that it was designed to close the mouths and tie the hands of people who were dissatisfied with the government as at present constituted, and who advocated by any means, peaceful or otherwise, change in the form of government, or the abandonment of organized government entirely. This act was passed after the Armistice and and before the conclusion of peace with Germany, which has been accomplished only within the last few days. But the act is not a war measure, and none of the considerations which apply to conduct which constitutes a proximate and imminent danger to the government in the time of war, or danger to the success of its arms against the public enemy, apply here. See Schenck v. United States, 249 U. S. 47, 63 L. ed. 470, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247, and Gilbert v. Minnesota, 254 U. S. 325, 65 L. ed. 287, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 125, where the distinction is pointed out that time and circumstances may be determinative as to whether a statute limiting the right of free speech will be valid.

4. A further technical legal objection to the statute is its want of certainty. Where the statute uses words of no determinative meaning, or the language is so general and indefinite as to embrace not only acts commonly recognized as reprehensible, but also others which it is unreasonable to presume were intended to be made criminal, it will be declared void for uncertainty. 16 C. J. § 28. Thus in United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563, the defendant, with another, had been indicted for an offense under an act of Congress, and was charged with refusing to receive and count at an election the vote of a citizen of African descent. Congress had passed an act (16 Stat. at L. 140, chap. 114, Comp. Stat. § 3966, 3 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 118) to put the 15th Amendment into operation, § 4 of which provided for the punishment of any person who should by force, bribery, threat, intimidation, or other unlawful means, hinder, delay, or combine with others to hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct any citizen from doing any act required to be done to qualify him to vote or from voting at any election. It will thus be seen that this section went beyond the purview of the 15th Amendment and was not limited in its terms to cases involving the deprivation of the right to vote by colored people, but included all classes of voters. The court pointed out that the statute did not confine its operation to unlawful discrimination on account of race, etc., and that the act was broad enough to punish discrimination against any class of voters, which was, of course, beyond the power of Congress. The court said:

"It remains now to consider whether a statute, so general as this in its provisions, can be made available for the punishment of those who may be guilty of unlawful discrimination against citizens of the United States, while exercising the elective franchise, on account of their race, etc.

"There is no attempt in the sections now under consideration to provide specifically for such an offense. If the case is provided for at all, it is because it comes under the general prohibition against any wrongful act or unlawful obstruction in this particular. We are, therefore, directly called upon to decide whether a penal statute enacted by Congress, with its limited powers, which is in general language broad enough to cover wrongful acts without as well as within the constitutional jurisdiction, can be limited by judicial construction so as to make it operate only on that which Congress may rightfully prohibit and punish. For this purpose, we must take these sections of the statute as they are. We are not able to reject a part which is unconstitutional, and retain the remainder, because it is not possible to separate that which is unconstitutional, if there be any such, from that which is not. The proposed effect is not to be attained by striking out or disregarding words that are in the section, but by inserting those that are not now there. Each of the sections must stand as a whole, or fall altogether. The language is plain. There is no room for construction, unless it be as to the effect of the Constitution. The question, then, to be determined, is whether we can introduce words of limitation into a penal statute so as to make it specific, when, as expressed, it is general only. . . .

"To limit this statute in the manner now asked for would be to make a new law, not to enforce an old one. This is no part of our duty."

In Augustine v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 59, 96 Am. St. Rep. 765, 52 S. W. 77, the question was as to the uncertainty of a statute which provided for a different venue in cases of murder by "mob violence." The court said: "We have given this question much thought and study, and we confess to being unable to solve the difficulty, and to determine what the legislature really meant by the term 'mob violence,' or what character of cases they intended the act should embrace. It is so uncertain in its terms as to escape intelligible construction, and we therefore declare it inoperative and void."

In United States v. Capital Traction Co. 34 App. D. C. 592, 19 Ann. Cas. 68, the question was whether an act of Congress which made it a criminal offense for the street railway company in the District of Columbia to run an insufficient number of cars to accommodate persons desiring passage thereon without crowding the same was so indefinite and uncertain as to be void. The court said: "What shall be the guide to the court or jury in ascertaining what constitutes a crowded car? What may be regarded as a crowded car by one jury may not be so considered by another. What shall constitute a sufficient number of cars in the opinion of one judge may be regarded as insufficient by another. What may be regarded as grounds for acquittal by one court may be held sufficient to sustain a conviction in another. The principle of uniformity, one of the fundamental elements essential in determining the validity of criminal statutes, is wholly lacking. There is a total absence of any definition of what shall constitute a crowded car. This important element cannot be left to conjecture, or be supplied by either the court or the jury. It is of the very essence of the law itself, and without it the statute is too indefinite and uncertain to support an information or indictment."

In Czarra v. Medical Supers. 25 App. D. C. 443, the question was whether an act of Congress providing for the cancellation of a physician's license to practise medicine was void for uncertainty. The act (29 Stat. at L. 200, chap. 313) provided that the license might be revoked for any of the following causes, to wit: "The employment of fraud or deception in passing the examinations provided for in this act, chronic inebriety, the practice of criminal abortion, conviction of crime involving moral turpitude, or of unprofessional or dishonorable conduct."

The court said: "Reasonable certainty, in view of the conditions, is all that is required, and liberal effect is always to be given to the legislative intent when possible. But when the legislature declares an offense in words of no determinate signification, or its language is so general and indefinite as that it may embrace within its comprehension, not only acts commonly recognized as reprehensible, but others also which it is unreasonable to presume were intended to be made criminal, the courts, possessing no arbitrary discretion to discriminate between those which were and those which were not intended to be made unlawful, can do nothing else than declare the statute void for its uncertainty."

The court then quotes from United States v. Reese, supra, as follows: "It would certainly be dangerous if the legislature could set a net large enough to catch all possible offenders, and leave it to the courts to step inside and say who could be rightfully detained and who should be set at large. This would, to some extent, substitute the judicial for the legislative department of the government."

See also, in this connection, Stoutenburgh v. Frazier, 16 App. D. C. 229, 48 L.R.A. 220; State v. Gaster, 45 La. Ann. 636, 12 So. 739; Ex parte Jackson, 45 Ark. 158.

In view of the foregoing considerations and the cases cited, it would seem clear that the statute under consideration here is void for uncertainty.

5. The unconstitutionality of the act was not raised in the trial court, and the attorney general insists that the weight of authority supports his contention that a constitutional question is not jurisdictional in character, and therefore cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

It is true that we have held in State v. Chavez, 19 N. M. 325, 142 Pac. 922, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 127, and State v. Garcia, 19 N. M. 420, 421, 143 Pac. 1012, that where the alleged unconstitutional character of a statute concerns a matter of evidence, rather than the offense itself, the constitutional question cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. But in this case a different proposition is involved. Here the question of the constitutionality of the act involved determines whether a crime has been committed. If the law is void, no crime has been committed and none can be committed under it, and the court has no jurisdiction over the person of the defendant or the subject-matter of the cause. It is a proceeding to punish a man where there is no law authorizing the same. In such a case it would seem that the question is jurisdictional and may be raised for the first time on appeal, and we so hold. See, in this connection, Schwartz v. People, 46 Colo. 239, 47 Colo. 483, 104 Pac. 92; State v. Gibson, — Iowa, —, 174 N. W. 34, and State v. Winehill & Rosenthal, 147 La. 781, 86 So. 181.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the court below will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the District Court to dismiss the cause and discharge the defendant, and it is so ordered.

Raynolds, Ch. J., concurs.

Davis, J., did not participate.

ANNOTATION.

Validity of legislation directed against political, social, or industrial propaganda deemed to be of a dangerous tendency.

- I. Introduction, 1535.
- II. Espionage Act:
 - a. In general, 1536.
 - b. As affected by provisions in Federal Constitution regarding treason, 1538.
- III. State statutes:
 - a. Sedition acts generally, 1539.
 - b. Syndicalism and sabotage statutes, 1543.

I. Introduction.

The present annotation is supplemental to that on the same question

III.—continued.

- c. Statutes directed against interference with military forces or war, 1547.
- d. Possession or display of red flags, 1548.
- IV. Intent as an essential element, 1549.
- V. Miscellaneous, 1549.

appended to State v. Moilen, 1 A.L.R. 336.

The annotation is concerned only with the question of the validity, and not with the construction, of legislation of the nature indicated in the above title. In several cases, however, attention is called to the nature of the particular language, words, or acts relied on, in order to show that, as thus drafted and applied, the statute has been held valid.

II. Espionage Act.

a. In general.

The Espionage Act enacted by Congress in 1917 (40 Stat. at L. 219, chap. 30), and the amendment thereto in 1918 (40 Stat. at L. 553, chap. 75, Comp. Stat. § 10,212c, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 120), have been held constitutional in numerous cases. Frohwerk v. United States (1919) 249 U. S. 204, 63 L. ed. 561, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; Debs v. United States (1919) 249 U. S. 211, 63 L. ed. 566, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252 (amendment); Schenck v. United States (1919) 249 U. S. 47, 63 L. ed. 470, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247; Abrams v. United States (1919) 250 U. S. 616, 63 L. ed. 1173, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 17 (amendment); Schaefer v. United States (1920) 251 U. S. 466, 64 L. ed. 360, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259; Pierce v. United States (1920) 252 U. S. 239, 64 L. ed. 542, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 205, affirming (1917) 245 Fed. 878; O'Connell v. United States (1920) 253 U. S. 142, 64 L. ed. 827, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444; United States ex rel. Milwaukee S. D. Pub. Co. v. Burleson (1921) 255 U. S. 407, 65 L. ed. 704, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 352; Heynacher v. United States (1919) 168 C. C. A. 273, 257 Fed. 61, petition for writ of certiorari denied in (1919) 250 U. S. 674, 63 L. ed. 1021, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 54; Dodge v. United States (1919) 7 A.L.R. 1510, 169 C. C. A. 316, 258 Fed. 300, petition for writ of certiorari denied in (1919) 250 U. S. 660, 63 L. ed. 1194, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10 (amendment); Hickson v. United States (1919) 169 C. C. A. 587, 258 Fed. 867; Equi v. United States (1919) 171 C. C. A. 649, 261 Fed. 53, petition for writ of certiorari denied in (1920) 251 U. S. 560, 64 L. ed. 414, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 219 (amendment); Schoborg v. United States (1920) 264 Fed. 1, petition for certiorari denied in (1920)

253 U. S. 494, 64 L. ed. 1029, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586 (amendment); Wimmer v. United States (1920) 264 Fed. 11, petition for writ of certiorari denied in (1920) 253 U. S. 494, 64 L. ed. 1030, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586 (amendment); Lockhart v. United States (1920) 264 Fed. 14, petition for writ of certiorari denied in (1920) 254 U. S. 645, 65 L. ed. 455, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 14 (amendment); Dierkes v. United States (1921) 274 Fed. 75 (amendment). See also Seebach v. United States (1919) 262 Fed. 885.

Section 3 of the 1917 Act above referred to provided a punishment for "whoever, when the United States is at war, shall wilfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States, or to promote the success of its enemies, and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall wilfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall wilfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States to the injury of the service or of the United States." The 1918 amendment provides, inter alia, for punishment for anyone who, when the United States is at war, shall wilfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States, or to promote the success of its enemies, or wilfully cause or attempt to cause, or incite or attempt to incite, insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States, or wilfully obstruct or attempt to obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, or "wilfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States," or its Constitution, military or naval forces, flag, or uniform, or any language intended to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution, military or naval forces, flag, or uniform, into contempt or disrepute, or "wilfully utter, print, write, or publish any language intended to incite, provoke, or encourage resistance to the United States, or to promote the cause of its enemies," or whoever shall wilfully advocate, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things enumerated in the statute, or "whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of any country with which the United States is at war, or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein."

It was said in Frohwerk v. United States (1919) 249 U. S. 204, 63 L. ed. 561, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249, supra, that the 1st Amendment to the Federal Constitution, while prohibiting legislation against free speech as such, could not have been, and obviously was not, intended to give immunity for every possible use of language. And it was held in this case that constitutional freedom of speech and press was not infringed by the provisions of the Espionage Act, under which a person might be convicted for conspiring to obstruct the military recruiting or enlistment service by words of persuasion in newspaper publications.

In Schenck v. United States (1919) 249 U. S. 47, 63 L. ed. 470, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247, supra, the Federal Supreme Court held that the 1st Amendment to the Federal Constitution, forbidding the abridgment of freedom of speech, did not prevent conviction for a conspiracy to violate the Espionage Act through the distribution of a circular denouncing conscription in impassioned terms, and vigorously urging that opposition to the selective draft be asserted, although in form the circular was confined to peaceful measures, such as a petition for the repeal of the act. It was said: "We admit that in many places and in ordinary times the defendants, in saying all that was said in the circular, would have been within their constitutional rights. But the character of every act depends upon the circumstances in which it is done. . . . The most stringent protection of free speech would not protect a man in falsely shouting fire in a theater, and causing a panic. It does not even protect a man from an injunction against uttering words that may have all the effect of force. . . . The question in every case is whether the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a right to prevent. It is a question of proximity and degree. When a nation is at war, many things that might be said in time of peace are such a hindrance to its effort that their utterance will not be endured so long as men fight, and that no court could regard them as protected by any constitutional right."

20 A.L.R.—97.

And the court in Schenck v. United States (U. S.) supra, declared that the question in every case is whether the words are used under such circumstances, and are of such a nature, as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils which Congress has a right to prevent; that it is a question of proximity and degree.

It was held in Debs v. United States (1919) 249 U. S. 211, 63 L. ed. 566, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252, supra, that a public speech so expressed that its natural and intended effect was to obstruct the military recruiting or enlistment service was not protected by the constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech, from condemnation under the Espionage Act, by reason of the immunity of the general theme, viz., socialism, its growth, and prophecy of its ultimate success, or because it was a part of a general program to obstruct war, and expressed a general and conscientious belief.

In Schoborg v. United States (1920) 264 Fed. 1, petition for certiorari denied in (1920) 253 U. S. 494, 64 L. ed. 1029, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586, supra, the court applied the rule that language in a statute which is capable of a very broad or of a very narrow construction should receive the latter where the former would or might make it unconstitutional, and where the latter was sufficient to reach the particular case; and held that it was unimportant that the terms "favor," "support," and "oppose" in the amendment of the Espionage Act of 1918 might be susceptible of a definition broad enough to cover and include some things which were within the protection of the Amendment forbidding abridgment of freedom of speech; and that the important question before it was whether that particular kind and degree of favor, support, or opposition alleged against the defendant was within the constitutional immunity.

The constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech does not extend to the protection of utterances in time of war, which involve the integrity of the nation or injure or tend to injure it. Dodge v. United States (1919) 7 A.L.R. 1510, 169 C. C. A. 316, 258 Fed. 300, petition for writ of certiorari denied in (1919) 250 U. S. 660, 63 L. ed. 1194, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10, supra.

Where the defendant stated, among other things, that he "would rather serve a term in the penitentiary than wear a uniform in Wilson's Wall street war," it was held in Dierkes v. United States (1921) 274 Fed. 75, supra, that the language used was not protected by the Amendment to the Federal Constitution forbidding abridgment of freedom of speech; that the court could not say as matter of law that the language used was, under appropriate environment, incapable of being reasonably construed as disloyal to the military forces of the United States, or such as might bring those forces into disrepute; and that a conviction under the Espionage Act should be affirmed.

In Seebach v. United States (1919) 262 Fed. 885, supra, the court, in sustaining a conviction under the Espionage Act of 1917, said: "Time, place, and circumstance have everywhere much to do with the quality of human conduct, and this is true of the exercise of rights under the Constitution. The Constitution contains no invitation to destroy the fundamental structure of the government, to frustrate its duly ordered operations, or to lend aid to the public enemies. When the nation is at war, its very existence is in the scales, and the freedom of action and speech of the individual is qualified accordingly. If this were not so, each one might determine for himself the validity or force of public statutes for the general safety; there could even be no such crime as treason."

The constitutionality of the Espionage Act was conceded in Schaefer v. United States (1920) 251 U. S. 466, 64 L. ed. 360, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259, supra, in which, however, it was unsuccessfully contended that freedom of speech and of the press, protected by the Federal Constitution, was violated by convictions for the particular publications in question, which were in the German language, and were derisively contemptuous of the war activities of the United States, and intended to convey the idea that the war was not demanded by the people, but was the result of the machinations of the Executive power, and in effect justified the German aggressions.

b. As affected by provisions in Federal Constitution regarding treason.

In several cases the contention has been overruled that the offense, if any, was treason, and punishable only according to the provisions of article 3, § 3, of the Federal Constitution. (See, in this connection, State v. Hennessy (Wash.) infra, III. b.)

Thus, the Federal circuit court of appeals in Equi v. United States (1919) 171 C. C. A. 649, 261 Fed. 53, supra, in affirming a conviction under the Espionage Act, of one who at a public meeting of the Industrial Workers of the World had used language which it was charged was disloyal and abusive with respect to the flag and the military forces of the government, and was calculated and intended to provoke and encourage resistance to the United States and to promote the cause of its enemies, overruled the contention that the crime defined by the Espionage Act was treasonable, and was punishable as treason or not at all.

To a similar effect is Frohwerk v. United States (1919) 249 U. S. 204, 63 L. ed. 561, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249, supra, in which the Federal Supreme Court said: "Some reference was made in the proceedings and in argument to the provision in the Constitution concerning treason, and it was suggested, on the one hand, that some of the matters dealt with in the Act of 1917 were treasonable and punishable as treason or not at all, and, on the other, that the acts complained of, not being treason, could not be punished. These suggestions seem to us to need no more than to be stated."

And in Wimmer v. United States (1920) 264 Fed. 11, supra, the Federal circuit court of appeals overruled the contention that the Espionage Act was unconstitutional in that it punished treasonable conduct without proof of the overt act and without the two witnesses thereto required by the Federal Constitution. The case was one where the offense did not consist in overt acts but in words only, which, it was alleged, violated that provision of the Espionage Act providing for punishment of anyone who, by word or act, supported or favored the cause of any country with which the United States was at war, or by word or act opposed the cause of the United States therein. The court said: "If we had to do with a case where the conduct which was prosecuted consisted of acts, we would have to consider the line of reasoning upon which Wimmer depends. That Congress has power to take hold of an act which is, in fact, treason, and to say that it shall be severely punished, without the proof which is required to establish treason, and to justify this result because the conduct is given another name, is a proposition which we have no occasion to affirm or deny. Here the only conduct alleged or proved, as making out the offense, consisted of oral statements,—words only. It is well settled that one cannot, by mere words, be guilty of treason, . . . and thus the fallacy of Wimmer's contention becomes apparent."

To the same effect, overruling the contention that the Espionage Act was invalid because it unwarrantably extended the constitutional definition of the crime of treason, is Schoborg v. United States (1920) 264 Fed. 1, petition for certiorari denied in (1920) 253 U. S. 494, 64 L. ed. 1029; 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586.

III. State statutes.

a. Sedition acts generally.

See also People v. Most (1902) 171 N. Y. 423, 58 L.R.A. 509, 64 N. E. 175, set out in the earlier annotation on the same subject in 1 A.L.R. on p. 338.

It was held in STATE v. SINCHUK (reported herewith) ante, 1515, that the Connecticut sedition statute penalizing the publication of disloyal, scurrilous, or abusive matter concerning the form of government of the United States, its military forces, flag, or uniform, or any matter which was intended to bring them into contempt, or which created or fostered opposition to organized government, was not unconstitutional in that it fixed no ascertainable standard of guilt, and amounted to a delegation to court and jury of the legislative function of defining statutory offenses. It was held, also, that the statute was not invalid on the ground that it overstepped the police power, and deprived of liberty without due process of law, in penalizing expressions because of their character, regardless of relation to harmful consequences.

And the court in the SINCHUK CASE further held that the defendants, who were aliens, with no constitutional right to share in the privilege and responsibility of attempting to change our laws or forms of government, and hence with no right, under cover of being engaged in good faith to accomplish those ends, to engage in scurrilous or anarchistic propaganda declared by the legislature to be dangerous to the public welfare, could not invoke the defense of the unconstitutionality of the statute as in violation of provisions of the Bill of Rights that "all political power is inherent in the people," who have at all times an undeniable and indefeasible right to alter their form of government in such manner as they may deem expedient; that "every citizen" may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments upon all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty; and that no law should be passed to curtail or restrain the liberty of speech or of the press.

The constitutionality of the Iowa statute prescribing a punishment for anyone who should excite an insurrection by sedition, or should attempt by writing, speaking, or other means to do this, or who should by any means, including speech and writing, advocate the subversion and destruction by force of the government of the state or United States, or should incite, abet, promote, or encourage hostilities or opposition to either government, was sustained in State v. Gibson (1919) — Iowa, —, 174 N. W. 34, and a conviction affirmed for attempting by speech and action to incite and encourage hostility and opposition to the government of the state and of the United States. The court said, in reply to the contention that the statute violated the provision of the state Constitution, that all persons might speak, write, and publish their sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right, and that no law should be passed to restrain or abridge liberty of speech or of the press; that the constitutional guaranty itself qualified the immunity by a plain indication that, while the right was given, the abuse of that right was not to be tolerated; that the framers of the Constitution did not intend to protect that which might destroy the state; and that it was not intended that the right to free speech included the right to promote sedition.

The principal constitutional question discussed in State v. Gibson (Iowa) supra, was whether the title of the statute was sufficient, being, "An Act Relating to Offenses against the State of Iowa, and providing for Punishment for Violation Thereof." It was unsuccessfully contended that the act created an offense against each government,—state and Federal,—and provided a punishment for offending against either, and that the title was therefore insufficient.

The court held that the act did not make separate offenses as against the state and the nation respectively, but charged only a single offense,—against the state; although it is intimated that the title might be sufficient, even if the statute created two distinct offenses.

The validity of the Montana Sedition Act of 1918 has been sustained in several cases. Ex parte Starr (1920) 263 Fed. 145; State v. Kahn (1919) 56 Mont. 108, 182 Pac. 107; State v. Wyman (1919) 56 Mont. 600, 186 Pac. 1; State v. Smith (1920) 57 Mont. 563, 190 Pac. 107; State v. Fowler (1921) 59 Mont. 346, 196 Pac. 992, rehearing denied in (1921) 59 Mont. 356, 197 Pac. 847; State v. Schaffer (1921) 59 Mont. 463, 197 Pac. 986.

The provision of the Montana statute declaring that whenever the United States is engaged in war, any person who shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or state authorities in connection with the prosecution of the war, shall be guilty of the crime of sedition, was held valid, in State v. Kahn (1919) 56 Mont. 108, 182 Pac. 107, supra, as against the objection that the subject-matter was national in character, with respect to which Congress alone had the power to legislate; that the act infringed on the provision of the state Constitution, forbidding the impairment of freedom of speech, and providing that every person should be free to speak or write on any subject, being responsible for all abuse of that liberty. Regarding the latter point, the court said that neither the Federal nor the state Constitution was intended to extend immunity for every use or abuse of language; that one's words, like his acts, assumed their character from the surrounding circumstances; that in time of peace the language employed by the defendant in this case might not constitute a crime, and that it might be true that it was beyond the power of the legislature to make its use a crime in time of peace.

Substantially the same contentions against the validity of the Montana statute were overruled in State v. Wyman (1919) 56 Mont. 600, 186 Pac. 1, supra, on the authority of the Kahn Case.

And the contention that the statute was unconstitutional in that the subject-matter was one upon which Congress alone might legislate was overruled in State v. Fowler (1921) 59 Mont. 346, 196 Pac. 992, supra.

In Ex parte Starr (Fed.) supra, the Federal district court sustained the validity of the Montana statute, as applied to the offense of uttering and publishing contemptuous and slurring language about the flag, committed before the amendment in 1918 of the Federal Espionage Act. The contention was that the state law was repugnant to the Federal Constitution in that it assumed powers which were vested in the United States alone, and which had been exercised by it. It was found unnecessary to decide whether the state law, which the court said, in so far as it related to the flag, was similar to the Espionage Law of 1918, was superseded by that act, because the offense in question was committed prior to the enactment of that law, and the latter neither pardoned the offense nor drew it within Federal jurisdiction.

The decisions of the New Jersey court, in passing on the construction and validity of the state Sedition Statute of 1918, in State v. Tachin (1919) 92 N. J. L. 269, 106 Atl. 145, affirmed in (1919) 93 N. J. L. 485, 108 Atl. 318, and State v. Gabriel (1921) 95 N. J. L. 337, 112 Atl. 611, are set out at length in STATE v. DIAMOND (reported herewith) ante, 1527. The effect of these decisions is that while the state may constitutionally make it unlawful for any person to advocate the subversion or destruction by force of the government of the United States, or attempt by speech, writing, or in any other way to promote or encourage hostility or opposition to such government, involving subversion or destruction by force, it cannot constitutionally make it unlawful for any person to become a member of an organization or society formed for the purpose of upholding or encouraging hostility or opposition to the government of the United States, or aid, abet, or encourage any such organization, provided the means by which this is to be accomplished are peaceful and lawful. Section 2 of the New Jersey Statute, which is set out in the DIAMOND CASE, was, as is there indicated, construed as referring to hostility or opposition to the government of the United States or of the state, which involved the use of force; and a conviction under this section was sustained in the Tachin Case. But § 3 of the statute was construed as referring to organizations which opposed the government of the United States or of the state even by peaceful means, and therefore was held to offend against the constitutional provision reserving to the people the right freely to assemble, to consult for the common good, to make known their opinions to their representatives, and to petition for redress of grievances. The latter section, which was held unconstitutional, provided that "any person who shall become a member of any organization, society, or order organized or formed, or attend any meeting, or counsel or solicit others so to do, for the purpose of inciting, abetting, promoting, or encouraging hostility or opposition to the government of the United States, or of the state of New Jersey, or who in any manner shall aid, abet, or encourage any such organization, society, or order or meeting in the propagation or advocacy of such a purpose, shall be guilty of a high misdemeanor."

In State v. Tachin (N. J.) supra, the court said that primarily sedition against the United States was a crime against the Federal government, which is the direct object of attack; but that under our system the Federal and state governments are so closely interwoven that an attack on the former may imperil the existence of the latter. And, after calling attention to the fact that it has been held that the Federal government, which is a government of delegated powers only, may properly protect by criminal law the honesty and purity of elections, the court said that much more could the state government protect its own existence against sedition, which, although aimed directly at the Federal government, must indirectly affect the security of the state government.

And it was held, also, in State v. Tachin (N. J.) supra, that the fact that Congress had enacted a statute punishing sedition did not necessarily operate to destroy the power of the state; that the act of Congress, if inconsistent, superseded the state statute; but that if the statute was not inconsistent, the two acts might both be in force,—the one punishing the crime against the Federal government and the other punishing the crime against the state government, although both crimes were based on the same facts.

To a somewhat similar effect as the New Jersey cases cited supra is STATE v. DIAMOND (reported herewith) ante, 1527, in which the court, in holding the statute in question unconstitutional, took the view that the acts prohibited were not merely acts of violence or force, but included all acts, peaceful or otherwise, which had for their object the destruction of organized government, or acts antagonistic to or in opposition to such organized government, or acts inciting or attempting to incite revolution against or opposition to organized government, or the teaching of such doctrines; and that the word "revolution" as used in the statute included all forms of revolution, accomplished by peaceful means or otherwise, and was not limited to revolution by force of arms.

The New York statute making it a felony for any person, by word of mouth or writing, to advocate, advise, or teach the duty or necessity of overthrowing organized government by force or violence, or by assassination of officials, or "by any unlawful means," was held constitutional in People v. Gitlow (1921) 195 App. Div. 773, 187 N. Y. Supp. 783, as applied to the advocacy of the overthrow and destruction of the government by "mass strike" and other class action to obtain objects which obviously could not be peaceably obtained, even though the doctrines advocated contemplated the formation of a government by a proletariat dictatorship and ultimately by the proletariat. The statute, it was held, was not limited in its application to the recognized doctrine of anarchists, which merely seeks the destruction and end of all governments. And it was unsuccessfully contended that the statute, unless confined to the advocacy of anarchy in its strict sense, would be unconstitutional as constituting, an abridgment of personal liberty guaranteed by the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, and of the freedom of speech and of writing and publishing one's sentiments, and freedom of the press, preserved by the state Constitution, as well as in violation of due process of law provisions of the state and Federal Constitutions.

The view also was taken in People v. Gitlow (N. Y.) supra, that the legislature might make it a criminal offense to advocate within the state the overthrow of the government of the United States, or of any state thereof, by any means or method other than constitutional means or methods, even though the means used did not of themselves constitute a crime. The court took the view that the words "unlawful means" as used in the statute could not necessarily be construed as limiting its provisions to the advocacy of the overthrow of government by the commission of a crime, but might be held to have been used in the sense of means which were unauthorized by law; although it was said that if the statutory provision required a construction that the doctrines advocated must in and of themselves be illegal, in the sense that they advocated the commission of a crime, the scheme and program advocated by the defendant in this instance, if they did not as matter of law require the construction that they advocated the overthrow of government by illegal means involving the commission of a crime, warranted a finding to that effect by the jury.

It was held, also, in People v. Gitlow (N. Y.) supra, that even the initial steps and other acts looking toward the ultimate overthrow of the government, although such effect might not be presently and immediately threatened, could be constitutionally punished under the statute. The court said that it could not subscribe to the proposition that the legislature was incompetent to forbid the advocacy of such doctrines designed and intended to overthrow governments, until it was shown that there was a present or immediate danger that they would be successful.

It was said in Re Lithuanian Workers' Literature Soc. (1921) 196 App. Div. 262, 187 N. Y. Supp. 612, that the right of free speech does not embrace the right to advise or encourage attempts to overthrow by force the existing government; in other words, by revolutionary methods.

But the prohibition of the use of disloyal language per se, as a war measure, was held in Ex parte Meckel (1919) 87 Tex. Crim. Rep. 120, 220 S. W. 81, to be the subject exclusively of Federal legislation, and not within the scope of state regulation. And it was held that the state disloyalty act was invalid, as not within the police power of the state, and in conflict with the provision of the Bill of Rights guaranteeing liberty of speech and of the press. The court took the view that if the disloyal language which the statute prohibited must be uttered under such circumstances as to make the same reasonably provocative of a breach of the peace, the statute would be valid as within the police power of the state, but held that this was not a proper construction of the statute, which provided that "if any person shall, at any time or place within this state, during the time the United States of America is at war with any other nation, use any language in the presence and hearing of another person, of and concerning the United States . . . or of and concerning any flag . . . of the United States, . . . which language is disloyal to the United States of America, or abusive in character, and calculated to bring into disrepute the United States of America, . . . or is of such nature as to be reasonably calculated to provoke a breach of the peace, if said in the presence and hearing of a citizen of the United States of America, [he] shall be deemed guilty of a felony." The court said that the gravamen of the offense thus created was the use of language of such nature as that, in case it was uttered in the presence of a citizen, it would likely cause a breach of the peace; and that the terms of the statute were so framed as to penalize one who uttered language of such a nature, whether it was used under circumstances or in such presence as to make it reasonably provocative of a breach of the peace.

The result of the last decision would apparently limit the power of the state to punish language which was disloyal to the United States and was uttered in the presence of another person, to cases where it was uttered under circumstances reasonably tending to lead to a breach of the peace, in which case it would be within the police power of the state; but, in the absence of such circumstances, the punishment of disloyal language must, according to this decision, be left to Congress.

To the same effect, following the last case in holding the Texas Disloyalty Act unconstitutional, is Schellenger v. State (1920) 87 Tex. Crim. Rep. 411, 222 S. W. 246.

b. Syndicalism and sabotage statutes.

As to the validity of the New Jersey statute, see State v. Quinlan (1914) 86 N. J. L. 75, 91 Atl. 586, affirmed on opinion below, with dissenting opinion, in (1915) 87 N. J. L. 333, 93 Atl. 1086; and State v. Boyd (1914) 86 N. J. L. 75, 91 Atl. 586, affirmed, without opinion, in (1915) 87 N. J. L. 328, 93 Atl. 599, which are set out in the earlier annotation on this question in the annotation 1 A.L.R. pp. 336, 337.

The California Statute of 1919 defining criminal syndicalism and sabotage, and prescribing penalties for those who are guilty of the same, was sustained in Re McDermott (1919) 180 Cal. 783, 183 Pac. 437, and People v. Malley (1920) — Cal. App. —, 194 Pac. 48. The statute defines criminal syndicalism to be "any doctrine or precept advocating, teaching, or aiding and abetting the commission of crime, sabotage (which word is hereby defined as meaning wilful and malicious physical damage or injury to physical property), or unlawful acts of force and violence or unlawful methods of terrorism, as a means of accomplishing a change in industrial ownership or control, or effecting any political change." And any person was declared guilty of a felony who should print, publish, edit, issue, or circulate, or publicly display, any book, paper, pamphlet, or printed matter in any other form, containing or carrying written or printed advocacy, teaching, or aid in abetment of, or advising, criminal syndicalism.

The validity of the California Criminal Syndicalism Act, which was before the court in the last case, was sustained also in People v. Steelik (1921) — Cal. —, 203 Pac. 78, the particular provision of the statute violated in this instance being that which made one guilty of a felony who organized, or assisted in organizing, or was or knowingly became a member of any organization or society which was organized or assembled to advocate, teach, or aid and abet any doctrine or precept advocating, teaching, or aiding and abetting the commission of crime, wilful and malicious physical damage, or injury to physical property, or unlawful acts of force and violence, or unlawful methods of terrorism, as a means of accomplishing a change in industrial ownership or control, or effecting any political change. The court overruled the contention that the statute was void for uncertainty in that it denounced acts and conduct "as a means" of accomplishing political or industrial changes, leaving it to a court or jury to determine whether or not the particular act or conduct of the defendant was adapted to the result denounced by the statute. The court said, also, that it was clear that the statute did not violate the right of free speech; that this right did not include the right to advocate the destruction or overthrow of the government, or the criminal destruction of property; although it was said, also, that the defendant was not in a position to raise this point, as he was not charged with or convicted of a violation of the act with respect to anything which he said or published.

The fact that the statute punished aiders and abettors even where the crime advocated was not committed was held in People v. Steelik (Cal.) supra, not to render it invalid on the ground of uncertainty.

And that the legislature may constitutionally denounce membership in organizations formed for the purpose of committing crimes against persons and property in furtherance of political or industrial changes is supported by People v. Taylor (1921) — Cal. —, 203 Pac. 85, where the court sustained a conviction under the California Syndicalism Act on a charge of the offense of knowingly belonging to an organization advocating sabotage, etc.

The validity of the California Syndicalism Act seems sustained also by Whitney v. Alameda County (1920) 182 Cal. 114, 187 Pac. 12, which does not show the nature of the offense in question, but which is referred to in People v. Steelik (Cal.) supra, as involving the question of the constitutionality of the act, which was attacked on the ground that it violated a provision of the Constitution prohibiting a legislative act which embraced more than one subject.

The Minnesota Criminal Syndicalism Act of 1917, forbidding anyone to teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of crime, sabotage, and other unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political ends, was held valid in State v.

Worker's Socialist Pub. Co. (1921) — Minn. —, 185 N. W. 931, as against the contention that the statute was so uncertain and indefinite that it violated the provision of the state Constitution that in any criminal prosecution the accused was entitled to know the nature and cause of the accusation against him. As upholding the validity of the statute against attacks made on other grounds, see State v. Moilen, 1 A.L.R. 331, to which the earlier note on the present question is appended.

The Nevada Statute of 1919, against criminal syndicalism, was held constitutional in Re Moriarity (1920) 44 Nev. 164, 191 Pac. 360, as against the contention that the statute constituted class legislation and denied the equal protection of the laws. The statute provided that any person should be guilty of a felony who, "by word of mouth or writing, advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of crime, sabotage, violence, or other unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political reform," or who did certain other acts of an analogous nature, as circulating books and documents advocating such doctrine, or organizing or becoming a member of a society formed to teach or advocate criminal syndicalism.

The Oregon statute against criminal syndicalism and sabotage was held constitutional in the recent case of State v. Laundry (1922) — Or. —, 204 Pac. 958, rehearing denied in (1922) — Or. —, 206 Pac. 290. In this case the defendant was indicted for helping to organize, becoming a member of, and voluntarily assembling with, the society known as the Industrial Workers of the World, which, it was alleged, taught and advocated the doctrine of criminal syndicalism, sabotage, violence, and crime, the indictment following the provision of the statute making any person guilty of a felony who "helps to organize or become a member of, or voluntarily assembles with any society or assemblage of persons which teaches, advocates or affirmatively suggests the doctrine of criminal syndicalism, sabotage, or the necessity, propriety or expediency of doing any act of physical violence or the commission of any crime or unlawful act as a means of accomplishing or effecting any industrial or political ends, change or revolution, or for profits." It was urged against the constitutionality of the statute that it unlawfully infringed on personal liberties, constituted class legislation, violated constitutional provisions concerning treason, infringed upon the right of free speech, and encroached upon the right of assemblage. It was said: "The statute is not an unlawful interference with personal liberties. Liberty does not import an absolute right to be freed from all restraint. Liberty does not imply unrestricted license. The possession and enjoyment of all rights are subject to such reasonable conditions as the governing authority may deem essential to the safety, peace, and welfare of the general public. . . . Stated broadly, the Syndicalism Statute penalizes the advocacy or teaching of crime as a means of effecting industrial or political ends, or for profit. The acts which shall not be advocated are acts which, when done, are of themselves unlawful by force of statutes other than the Syndicalism Statute. If any one of those unlawful acts should be actually committed, the person so committing such unlawful act would be guilty of a crime; and surely no competent person would think of attempting to argue that his personal liberties are unconstitutionally curbed by legislation penalizing him for intentionally injuring the person or property of another. Statutes penalizing those who solicit or incite others to commit crimes are not innovations upon the criminal law. . . . If it is within the power of the legislature to declare that a given act, when done, constitutes a crime, then it is likewise within the power of the legislature to declare that to advocate the doing of such act is a crime; for, if public policy requires the punishment of him who does an act, it likewise may require the punishment of him who incites the doing of such act, whether the act is actually done or not. . . . At the hearing it was argued, on the authority of Ex parte Smith (1896) 135 Mo. 223, 33 L.R.A. 606, 58 Am. St. Rep. 576, 36 S. W. 629, that any person may, if he chooses, rightfully associate with persons having the reputation of being thieves. There is a vast difference, however, between the act of merely associating with persons having the reputation of being thieves, and the act of joining with such person either in the commission of theft or in the advocacy of the commission of theft. . . . The Syndicalism Statute is not class legislation. It affects all alike. It does not discriminate against some or favor others. . . . The defendant argues that the Syndicalism Act, when resolved to its final analysis, declares that the doing of the prohibited act constitutes constructive treason. This argument arises out of the fact that the statute penalizes the advocacy of the commission of unlawful acts 'as a means of accomplishing or effecting any industrial or political ends, change, or revolution, or for profit.' A single sentence taken from the opinion delivered by Marshall, Ch. J., in Ex parte Bollman (1807) 4 Cranch (U. S.) 75, 126, 2 L. ed. 554, 571, completely answers the defendant's contention: 'Crimes so atrocious as those which have for their object the subversion by violence of those laws and those institutions which have been ordained in order to secure the peace and happiness of society are not to escape punishment because they have not ripened into treason.' . . . The same organic law which protects the right of each person to speak freely also makes him responsible for the abuse of that right. The Syndicalism Statute does not attempt to punish the advocacy of peaceable methods for effecting changes. . . . The same organic law which assures the right of assembling limits that right to assembling 'in a peaceable manner.' Freedom of speech does not mean unbridled license. No man can enter a crowded theater, falsely shout 'Fire,' and thus cause a panic resulting in the crushing, maiming, and killing of enfeebled men, helpless women, and innocent children, and then justify his conduct by brazenly proclaiming that he did no more than to exercise his constitutional right of free speech. . . . The Syndicalism Act does not violate the constitutional right to speak freely or the constitutional right to assemble peaceably."

The contention was also overruled in State v. Laundry (Or.) supra, that the statute was void because it was too vague, indefinite, and uncertain, and that the indictment was likewise bad because of indefiniteness.

And it was also held in State v. Laundry (Or.) supra, that the title of the statute was sufficient, the contention in this respect being that the title was not broad enough to cover those provisions of the act which prohibited organizing, helping to organize, and becoming a member of a society of the character denounced. The title was: "An Act Entitled an Act Defining Criminal Syndicalism, and the Word 'Sabotage;' Prohibiting the Advocacy, Teaching or Affirmative Suggestion Thereof; and Prohibiting the Advocacy, Teaching or Affirmative Suggestion of Crime, Physical Violence, or the Commission of Any Unlawful Act or Thing as a Means to Accomplish Industrial or Political Ends, Change or Revolution, or for Profit; and Prohibiting Assemblages for the Purpose of Such Advocacy, Teachings or Suggestions; Declaring It Unlawful to Permit the Use of Any Place, Building, Rooms or Premises for Such Assemblages in Certain Cases."

The validity of the Washington Criminal Syndicalism Statute of 1919 was sustained in State v. Hennessy (1921) 114 Wash. 351, 195 Pac. 211, as against objections that the statute amounted to an attempt to punish constructive treason (see in this connection, II. b, supra), that it unconstitutionally interfered with the powers of Congress in this respect; that it was class legislation; that it violated the constitutional provision against cruel and unusual punishment; that it was void for indefiniteness; that the title was too general and insufficient; that the act infringed upon the personal liberties of citizens; and that it unconstitutionally abridged freedom of speech. The statute provided that any person should be guilty of a felony who should "advocate, advise, teach, or justify crime, sedition, violence, intimidation, or injury as a means or way of effecting or resisting any industrial, economic, social, or political change;" or who should print, sell, circulate, distribute, or display any book, pamphlet, etc., advocating, advising, etc., as above indicated; or who should organize or help to organize, give aid to, or be a member of or voluntarily assemble with, any group of persons formed to advocate, advise, or teach crime, etc., as above quoted. The court said that the fact that treason was defined in the Federal Constitution did not deprive the state legislature of the power to enact the statute; that while the Federal government undoubtedly had ample power to protect its sovereignty, it did not necessarily follow that the legislature of a state might not pass laws for the purpose of aiding or assisting the national government; that the state was one of the component parts of the Federal government, and what affected the latter affected the former.

To similar effect, following the above case, are State v. Hestings (1921) 115 Wash. 19, 196 Pac. 13, and State v. Hemhelter (1921) 115 Wash. 208, 196 Pac. 581.

The constitutionality of the Kansas statute concerning criminal syndicalism is apparently assumed in such cases as Re Danton (1921) 108 Kan. 451, 195 Pac. 981. The statute in effect declared anyone guilty of a felony who, by word of mouth or by writing, suggested or taught the duty, necessity, or expediency of crime, criminal syndicalism, or sabotage, or the destruction of property or injury to persons, as a means of accomplishing any industrial or political end, change, or revolution, or for profit; or who published or knowingly circulated, distributed, or displayed written or printed matter of the character and for the purposes named; or who organized or helped to organize or became a member of any society or assemblage which taught or advocated the doctrine and practices mentioned.

c. Statutes directed against interference with military forces or war.

In several cases the courts have sustained the validity of the Minnesota Statute of 1917, making it unlawful for any person to advocate or teach that men should not enlist in the military or naval forces of the United States or of the state, or that citizens of the state should not aid the United States in prosecuting war with its public enemies. Gilbert v. Minnesota (1920) 254 U. S. 325, 65 L. ed. 287, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 125, affirming (1918) 141 Minn. 263, 169 N. W. 790; State v. Holm (1918) 139 Minn. 267, L.R.A.1918C, 304, 166 N. W. 181 (cited in note in 1 A.L.R. 336); State v. Townley (1918) 140 Minn. 413, 168 N. W. 591 (question as to title); State v. Kaercher (1918) 141 Minn. 186, 169 N. W. 699 (same); State v. Gilbert (1919) 142 Minn. 495, 171 N. W. 798 (same).

It was held by the Federal Supreme Court in Gilbert v. Minnesota, supra, that the statute did not usurp or encroach upon congressional power, and did not unlawfully deny freedom of speech or press; and that it might even be sustained as a simple exercise of the police power to preserve the peace of the state, in view of the necessity of suppressing a seditious speech in order to prevent disorder and violence.

In State v. Townley (1918) 140 Minn. 413, 168 N. W. 591, supra, it was held that the title to the Minnesota statute, designating as the subject thereof interference with or discouragement of enlistments in the military or naval forces of the United States or of the state, was sufficient to cover that provision of the act making it unlawful for citizens of the state to advocate or teach that citizens "should not aid or assist the United States in prosecuting or carrying on war."

d. Possession or display of red flags.

In Com. v. Karvonen (1914) 219 Mass. 30, L.R.A.1915B, 706, 106 N. E. 556, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 846, the court sustained the validity of the Massachusetts statute, providing that "no red or black flag, and no banner, ensign, or sign having upon it any inscription opposed to organized government, or which is sacrilegious, or which may be derogatory to public morals, shall be carried in parade within this commonwealth," as applied to the carrying in a socialistic parade of a branch organization's regular banner, which was red throughout, except that it contained an inscription on one side in gilt letters, it being left to the jury to determine whether it was a red flag within the meaning of the statute. The court said: "The statute as thus construed does not violate any rights protected by either the state or Federal Constitutions. Under both these instruments the liberty of the citizen is guaranteed. But the liberty thus secured does not mean the unrestrained license of an unbridled will. Constitutional freedom means liberty regulated by law. Personal rights may be curbed in a rational way for the common good. Liberty is immunity from arbitrary commands and capricious prohibitions, but not the absence of reasonable rules for the protection of the community. . . . The statute here in question cannot be said to interfere unreasonably with the liberty of the citizens, nor can it be adjudged to have no rational connection with the preservation of public safety. The maintenance of order is plainly a lawful exercise of the police power. Statutes designed to promote that end cannot be stricken down as unconstitutional unless they manifestly have no tendency to produce that result. It is said in Webster's Dictionary that, 'historically, a red flag has been a revolutionary and terroristic emblem.' In the Century Dictionary is found this: 'A red flag is a flag of a red color with or without devices associated with blood or danger.' Other lexicographers give similar definitions. In the light of this well-recognized significance of the red flag, it may be assumed that the legislature regarded it as the symbol of ideas hostile to established order, and decided that its carrying in parades would be likely to provoke turbulence or to menace the safety of travelers or citizens in general, or otherwise to interfere with the common welfare. Its determination in this regard cannot be pronounced by the courts contrary to the fundamental law, as being arbitrary or unreasonable, or as having clearly no relation to the ends for which the police power may be exercised."

Attention is called, also, to People v. Burman (1908) 154 Mich. 150, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 117 N. W. 589, in which the court took the view that there is no right to display a red flag in a procession where those composing the procession know that the natural and inevitable consequence will be to disturb the public peace and tranquillity, in violation of a municipal ordinance against riot.

But attention is called in this connection to Re Hartman (1920) 182 Cal. 447, 188 Pac. 548, where a municipal ordinance was declared invalid which made it unlawful for any person to display, or to have in his possession, a flag of any society or association which in its purposes or regulations espoused for the government of the people of the United States principles or theories of government antagonistic to the Constitution and laws of the United States, or to the form of government thereof as now constituted. The court said that, under this ordinance, a person would be guilty of the crime defined therein who should have in his possession a flag or emblem of an organization which advocated or espoused any change of principle or theory of government, merely because such principle or theory was antagonistic to our present Constitution and form of government; that the language was so broad as to render criminal the display or possession of the flag or emblem of a peaceful organization which espoused amendments to the Federal Constitution, or form of government, national or state, in respect admittedly proper from a legal point of view; that nothing seems more certain than that the inhabitants of the United States have both individually and collectively the right to advocate peaceable changes in our Constitution, laws, or form of government, although such cases may be based upon theories or principles of government antagonistic to those which now serve as its basis; and that it seemed equally certain that an organization peaceably advocating such basis might adopt a flag or emblem signifying its purpose, and that the display or possession of such flag or emblem could not be made an unlawful act.

IV. Intent as an essential element.

The question whether intent is an essential ingredient of the offense declared by the various statutes above referred to is one involving principles beyond the scope of the present annotation, and is only referred to incidentally because it has arisen in connection with the question of their validity. It should be observed that the rule that intent is unnecessary under statutes enacted as police regulations is involved in many kinds of cases, and that those within the scope of the present annotation are only illustrative of this broader doctrine. It has generally been held that intent is not an essential element in the offense created by the various statutes, or that intent might, at least, be inferred from the particular acts or language. And notwithstanding this construction of the statutes, their validity has been sustained.

Thus, it was contended in State v. Kahn (1919) 56 Mont. 108, 182 Pac. 107, supra, III. a, that the Montana sedition statute was invalid because it characterized certain acts as criminal without reference to the intent. The court said that the act was a general police regulation; that it was elementary that for the preservation of the peace, the safety of the people, and the good order of society, the legislature might prohibit certain acts, and attach a penalty for disobedience, without including evil intent as an ingredient of the offense other than the general intent implied from a violation of the statute. But the court took the further view that the word "calculated" in the statute implied the power to reason and to plan; that in its broadest significance it meant to intend, to purpose, to design.

Among possibly other cases to the effect that intent is not an essential element of the offense under the statutes above set out are State v. Gilbert (1918) 141 Minn. 263, 169 N. W. 790, affirmed in (1920) 254 U. S. 325, 65 L. ed. 287, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 125; State v. Worker's Socialist Pub. Co. (1921) — Minn. —, 185 N. W. 931; State v. Smith (1920) 57 Mont. 563, 190 Pac. 107; State v. Tachin (1919) 92 N. J. L. 269, 106 Atl. 145, affirmed in (1919) 93 N. J. L. 485, 108 Atl. 318; State v. Hennessy (1921) 114 Wash. 351, 195 Pac. 211.

The question, it seems, in most of the above cases, was as to the construction of the statute in this regard, a question, of course, beyond the scope of the annotation; and the courts do not generally discuss the bearing of their conclusion regarding the necessity of intent on the question of the statutes' validity.

In People v. Gitlow (1921) 195 App. Div. 773, 187 N. Y. Supp. 783, supra, III. a, the court said: "It will be observed that the statutes make the advocacy of the doctrine a crime, without regard to criminal intent. The doing of a lawfully prohibited act, in and of itself, without regard to intent, may constitute the crime; . . . but the language of these statutes is quite general, and, therefore, I think it is essential that the forbidden doctrine be knowingly advocated with a view to the accomplishment of the forbidden purpose."

V. Miscellaneous.

In Fraina v. United States (1918) 166 C. C. A. 356, 255 Fed. 28, the court, in affirming convictions for conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States by aiding and abetting, persons unlawfully to evade the Selective Service Act, through speeches and pamphlets urging objections to the war and alleged discrimination against so-called "nonreligious conscientious objectors," said: "Men can be punished for words, if the legislature so decrees, within constitutional limits. Men commit crimes when they counsel or procure others to sin against the statute law, and they also commit crimes when they confederate to effect that object, and yet it is difficult to imagine any more suitable or usual method of procuring or counseling than by speech. In this inaccurate sense men have very often been punished for words by statutory enactment. The free speech secured federally by the 1st Amendment means complete immunity for the publication, by speech or print, of whatever is not harmful in character, when tested by such standards as the law affords. . . . Legal talk liberty never has meant, however, 'the unrestricted right to say what one pleases at all times and under all circumstances.' Warren v. United States, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 800, 106 C. C. A. 156, 183 Fed. 721."

Among other cases which are of value on the present question, but are not strictly within the scope of the annotation, is State v. McKee (1900) 73 Conn. 18, 49 L.R.A. 542, 84 Am. St. Rep. 124, 46 Atl. 409, in which it was held that a statute making it a penal offense to sell, or offer to sell, lend, or give a paper principally made up of criminal news, police reports, and pictures and stories of bloodshed, lust, and crime, did not violate a constitutional provision that every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, and that no law should be passed to restrain the liberty of speech or of the press.

Attention is called also to United States ex rel. Turner v. Williams (1904) 194 U. S. 279, 48 L. ed. 979, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719, holding that the guaranty of the Federal Constitution as to freedom of speech and of the press was not infringed by the provisions of the Immigration Act of 1903 for the exclusion and deportation of alien anarchists, whether the statute was construed as applying to persons whose opposition to all organized government was professed as a political ideal, or simply as including those who advocated the forcible overthrow of government or assassination of officials.

But a municipal ordinance adopted in 1918, declaring certain persons to be vagrants and providing a punishment for them, was held invalid in Taft v. Shaw (1920) 284 Mo. 531, 225 S. W. 457, as covering matters of Federal rather than state cognizance, and as conflicting with definitions of a vagrant contained in a state statute. Among those who were declared by the ordinance to be vagrants was anyone who should become a member of an organization or association opposed to the prosecution of the war by the United States, or should circulate, or aid and abet in circulating, literature directly intended to hinder the United States in the exercise of its war powers, or who should utter seditious sentiments against the United States government.

R. E. H.

COMBINED INDEX

TO

NOTES AND CASES.

ABANDONMENT.

Of contract, see CONTRACTS.

ABSENCE.

Direct contempt by presenting libelous charge against judge in open court, though parties responsible are absent when contents of paper become known. 20-900.

ABUSE OF PROCESS.

Servant's or agent's personal liability for. 20-116.

ACCESS.

Tenant's rights and remedies in case of destruction of access by lessor. 20-1400.

ACCIDENT.

Liability of person causing injury for aggravation thereof by accident, see DAMAGES.
In general, see NEGLIGENCE, PERSONAL INJURIES.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

ACTINOMYCOSIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that actinomycosis contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-6.

ACTION OR SUIT.

Forbearance to sue as consideration for contract, see CONTRACTS.

Parties, see PARTIES.

By or against partners, see PARTNERSHIP.

Defenses.

In action for trespass, see TRESPASS.

In workmen's compensation cases, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Consolidation.

Court's right, of its own motion, to consolidate appeal from order appointing guardian for child and a motion to modify an order for its custody, entered in divorce proceedings between its parents. 20-827.

ADMINISTRATION.

Of estates of decedents, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

ADMIRALTY.

Jurisdiction.

Injury to longshoreman at work upon a wharf by breaking of sling by which cargo was being unloaded from vessel. 20-1079.

State's power to confer jurisdiction on admiralty courts in nonmaritime matters. 20-1079.

ADMISSIONS.

Admissibility in evidence, see EVIDENCE.
By pleading, see PLEADING.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Constitutionality of statutes as to cigarette advertising. 20-930.

AFFIDAVIT.

In contempt proceedings, see CONTEMPT.
In support of motion for new trial, see NEW TRIAL.

AFTERBORN CHILDREN.

Prenatal injury as ground of action. 20-1505 (case p. 1503).

AGENCY.

See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

AIR.

Tenant's rights and remedies in case of destruction of air or light by landlord. 20-1400.

ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS.

Action for, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

ALIENS.

Constitutional rights of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

AMBIGUITY.

In statute, see STATUTES.

AMUSEMENTS.

On Sunday, see SUNDAY.

ANCIENT LIGHTS.

Servant's or agent's personal liability for obstruction of. 20-116.

ANEURISM.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that aneurism contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-6.

ANKYLOSIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that ankylosis contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-7.

ANNULMENT.

Of judgment, see JUDGMENT.

ANTHRAX.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that anthrax contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-7 (case p. 1).

APOPLEXY.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that apoplexy suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-9.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

APPEAL AND ERROR.In general.

In public improvement proceedings, see
PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Bail bond given on appeal, termination of liability of sureties. 20-636.

Security.

Raising for first time on appeal objection that bond for appeal to intermediate court was not filed in time. 20-827.

Objections and exceptions.

Evidence, necessity of specifying particular section of constitution alleged to be violated by admission of. 20-639.

Dismissal of appeal.

Appeal from judgment, not taken in manner prescribed by statute properly dismissed. 20-1441.

Rules of decision.

Evidence viewed in aspect tending to support verdict upon review of denial of motion to direct verdict for defendant. 20-1118.

Presumptions.

Presumption that jury, instructed to find against defendant if they found that he was negligent, considered only such grounds of negligence as were supported by the evidence, although others were alleged in the complaint.
20-525.

Refusal of affirmative charge presumed to be supported by sufficient evidence, where evidence is not in record.
20-1303.

Discretionary matters.

Withdrawal of plea of guilty, discretion as to, not reviewable except in case of clear abuse. 20-1441.

Questions not raised below.

Bond for appeal to intermediate court, objection that, because of failure to file in time, intermediate court had no jurisdiction. 20-827.

Crime, right to raise for first time on appeal question of constitutionality of act creating. 20-1527.

Evidence, failure to object to admission of, as bar to right to complain thereof on appeal. 20-936.

Homicide, refusal to give accused benefit of instruction as to presumption of law from use of deadly weapon by deceased, where attention of trial court was not called to the omission.
20-1249.

Review of verdict.

Verdict on conflicting evidence as conclusive on appeal. 20-1261.

Verdict supported by sufficient evidence.
20-86.

Verdict supported by evidence and approved by trial court. 20-83.

Separate maintenance and custody of child in divorce proceedings, conclu-siveness of verdict of jury as to.
20-827.

— as to damages.

Refusal to set aside verdict for excess if not so much as to indicate passion and prejudice. 20-1138.

Review of findings of court.

Decision of trial court on motion for new trial, upon question whether new evidence was introduced in jury room, as conclusive. 20-1180.

Witness's recollection of contract between husband and wife, made twenty years before, as sufficient to sustain finding that it provided for passing of wife's separate property to husband upon her death. 20-1272.

— on appeal from appellate court.

Findings of fact by appellate court in divorce proceeding not binding on supreme court. 20-827.

What errors warrant reversal.

Taking verdict binding upon the judge as to the facts in an action which should have been tried as a suit in equity.
20-1079.

— as to pleadings.

Striking from defendant's pleadings in personal injury case where violation of speed ordinance is pleaded as element of negligence, facts tending to show unreasonableness of ordinance.
20-1214.

— failure or refusal to instruct.

Duty to charge as to reasonable doubt as between different degrees of crime or included offenses. 20-1253 (case p. 1249).

Homicide by killing police officer raiding gambling house, failure to give special charge on law of excessive force of officers. 20-1180.

Monitory instruction concerning individual responsibility of each juror in criminal case. 20-502.

— conduct of jury.

*Receipt of document or statement in jury room, constituting new evidence, as ground for reversal in criminal case.
20-1187 (case p. 1180).*

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

20 A.L.R.—98.

APPOINTMENT.

Of guardian, see GUARDIAN AND WARD.
Power as to, see POWERS.

APPROPRIATIONS.

Particularity of specification of purpose required in appropriation bill. 20-981 (case p. 972).

ARCHITECTS.

Construction of contract for compensation of. 20-1356 (case p. 1352).

Estimating percentage of cost price to which architect is entitled. 20-1352.

ARRAIGNMENT.

Of one charged with direct contempt, right to. 20-900.

ARREST.

Transportation of concealed liquor as an offense within presence of officer authorizing an arrest without a warrant. 20-652 (case p. 639).

Information sufficient to justify officer in arresting suspected person without warrant. 20-639.

ARSENICAL POISONING.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that arsenical poisoning suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-11.

ARSON.

What is an "outhouse," or "outbuilding." 20-234.

ARTERIOSCLEROSIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that arteriosclerosis suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-11.

ARTHRITIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that arthritis suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-12.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

Former jeopardy, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Servant's or agent's liability for assault committed at command of principal or master, or in discharge of duties of employment. 20-111.

ASSEMBLY.

Constitutional right of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

ASSESSMENTS.

For public improvement, see PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

ASSIGNMENT.

Check for whole amount which drawer has on deposit as equitable assignment; necessity of acceptance. 20-174.

ASSUMPSIT.

Agent's or servant's personal liability to action by third person for money had and received. 20-131.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Client's right to recover money placed in hands of attorney to be used in compounding crime. 20-1471.

ATTACHMENT.

Exemptions, see EXEMPTIONS.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Right to defend judge sued for libel in a matter pertaining to the duties of his office. 20-398.

ATTORNEYS.

Validity of contract by attorney to compound crime, see CONTRACTS.

Confidential communications to, see EVIDENCE.

Agreement or understanding between attorney and client to use money for unlawful purposes as affecting their rights inter se. 20-1476 (case p. 1471).

Evidence in civil suit of threats by plaintiff's attorney. 20-1352.

AUCTIONS.

Conversion, auctioneer's personal liability for sale of property which does not belong to the one employing him. 20-135.

Right of auctioneer employed by owner as against prospective purchaser or bidder who refuses to complete purchase. 20-214 (case p. 211).

AUTOMOBILES.

Garage, see GARAGE.

Negligence in use of; injuries by.

Coasting in street, injury by collision with automobile. 20-1435 (case p. 1429).

"Family purpose" doctrine, liability of owner under, for injuries by automobile while being used by member of his family. 20-1469 (case p. 1460).

Guest, liability of owner or operator for injury to. 20-1014 (case p. 1008).

Who is responsible for injury by car during demonstration or instruction by dealer. 20-194 (case p. 189).

Adult son's negligent driving while using car for purpose of his own. 20-1460.

Instructions in action for injury. 20-525.

Wife's negligence in driving car, husband's liability. 20-525.

BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Stage of proceeding at which sureties are discharged in criminal case. 20-594 (case p. 589).

Variance between name in bail bond and in judgment of forfeiture. 20-411 (case p. 410).

Extrinsic evidence to impeach forfeiture of bail bond. 20-589.

BAILMENT.

Liability of a bailee of money who commingles it with his own funds. 20-378 (case p. 374).

BANKRUPTCY.

Insurer's refusal to consent to change of beneficiary in life policy as affecting right of trustee in bankruptcy of insured. 20-256 (case p. 253).

BANKS.

Negligence as to condition of bank premises, see NEGLIGENCE.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Officers and agents.

President's power to make contract for purchase of cotton. 20-984.

President's power to agree that liability of party to commercial paper shall not be enforced. 20-412.

Payment of checks.

Gift of check uncollected at death of drawer not validated by statute permitting payment of checks by bank during specified time after drawer's death. 20-174.

Insolvency.

Right of depositor to rescind, or to claim a trust in respect of a deposit because of insolvency of bank when it was made. 20-1206 (case p. 1208).

Fraud in taking deposits after insolvency 20-1203.

When bank is insolvent. 20-1203.

BARBERS.

Constitutionality of statute regulating barbers. 20-1111 (case p. 1105).

BARN.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-236.

BATTERY.

See ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

BEAT HAND.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that "beat hand" suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-13.

BIAS.

Evidence to show bias of witness, see WITNESSES.

BIBLE.

Reading of, in schools, see SCHOOLS.

BILLIARD ROOMS.

Licensing and regulation of. 20-1482 (case p. 1478).

BILLS AND NOTES.In general; validity.

Bank president's authority as to, see BANKS.

Parol evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

Place of maker's signature on bill or note. 20-394 (case p. 392).

Statute of frauds, note as memorandum satisfying. 20-363.

Validity of sealed note to repay money given to the maker. 20-392.

Delivery.

Parol evidence to show conditional delivery of note. 20-424 (cases pp. 412, 417).

Consideration.

Parol evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

Extension of time for payment of invalid special assessment as consideration for note. 20-1317.

Repayment of money given to maker of note as a gift as consideration. 20-392.

BLOOD POISONING.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that blood poisoning suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-13.

BONDS.

Appeal bond, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Bail bonds, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without

BOWLING ALLEYS.

Licensing and regulation of. 20-1482
(case p. 1478).

BREACH.

Of contract, see CONTRACTS.

BRICKKILN.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding."
20-236.

BROKERS.

In general.

Personal liability of broker who sells property for one who is not the true owner. 20-132.

Real estate brokers.

Does ordinary broker's contract exclude right of sale by owner. 20-1268 (cases pp. 1261, 1265).

Right of broker employed by owner as against prospective purchaser who refuses to complete purchase. 20-214.

Right of real estate broker to commissions under a contract providing for payment of commissions out of purchase price. 20-289 (case p. 280)

Necessity that customer produced by broker be able and willing to purchase on terms stated in the original contract. 20-280.

Price named, necessity of securing, to entitle broker to commissions. 20-280.

Revocability of authority to sell. 20-1265.

BURGLARY.

Indictment for, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

What is an "outhouse" or "outbuilding" within meaning of statute as to breaking and entering. 20-236.

BUSINESS.

Validity of agreement to refrain from, see CONTRACTS.

Negligence as to condition of place of business, see NEGLIGENCE.

Right of individual to adopt name under which to carry on business. 20-984.

CANCER.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that cancer suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-23.

CARRIERS.

Injury to passenger.

Servant's or agent's personal liability for injuries to passenger. 20-144.

"Step box" or other device to facilitate entering and leaving car, duty and liability of carrier as to. 20-914 (case p. 908).

Wrong doorway, injury to passenger in consequence of passing through. 20-1155.

— contributory negligence.

Step box, contributory negligence in using. 20-908.

Freight carriers.

Mob or strikers causing loss of, or damage to, freight, liability of carrier. 20-262 (case p. 257).

CARS.

Freight car used as warehouse as an "outhouse." 20-237.

CATTLE RINGWORM.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that cattle ringworm suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-23.

CAUSA MORTIS.

See GIFT.

CAUSE.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see EVIDENCE.

Question for jury as to, see TRIAL.

CHANGE OF BENEFICIARIES.

See INSURANCE.

CHARACTER.

Impeachment of witness by evidence as to character, see WITNESSES.

New trial or reversal in criminal case because of statement in jury room reflecting on character of accused. 20-1195.CHATTEL MORTGAGE.Auctioneer's personal liability for sale of mortgaged property at instance of mortgagor.* 20-137.Servant's or agent's personal liability for conversion of mortgaged property. 20-128.CHECK.

Check as equitable assignment, see ASSIGNMENT.

Gift of, see GIFT.

Statute of frauds, check as memorandum satisfying. 20-363 (cases pp. 357, 361).CHICKEN HOUSE.

As an "outhouse." 20-236.

C. I. F.What constitutes delivery of goods sold under "c. i. f." contract. 20-1236 (case p. 1232).

Documents necessary to execute a sale c. i. f. 20-1232.

Insurance in name of seller, provision for, as repugnant to c. i. f. contract. 20-1232.

Tender of the goods instead of the documents in case of c. i. f. contract. 20-1232.

Uniform Sales Act as affecting c. i. f. contracts. 20-1232.

CIGARETTES.Constitutionality of anti-cigarette legislation. 20-926 (case p. 921).

Election between counts in prosecution for illegal sale. 20-921.

Making possession of cigarettes and cigarette papers prima facie evidence of selling and keeping for sale. 20-921.

CITIZEN.

Conclusiveness of judgment as to, see JUDGMENT.

CLASS LEGISLATION.

See STATUTES.

COASTING.

Right to coast in highway, generally, see HIGHWAYS.

Injury to one while coasting in the street. 20-1433 (case p. 1429).COLLECTIVE BARGAINING.

Lawfulness of strike to compel, see STRIKES.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

COMMERCE.

State's power to create and enforce lien for a nonmaritime tort on ship engaged in interstate commerce. 20-1095 (case p. 1079).

Ordinance requiring draymen to file notice of destination of household goods moved by them as interference with commerce. 20-206.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

Workmen's compensation, death or injury while traveling as arising out of, and in the course of, employment. 20-309. (cases pp. 309, 316).

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

See FACTORS.

COMMISSIONS.

See COMPENSATION.

COMMITTEES.

Political committees, see ELECTIONS.

COMMON CARRIERS.

See CARRIERS.

COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

COMPENSATION.

Of architect, see ARCHITECT.
Of broker, see BROKERS.

Auctioneer's right to recover damages for loss of commissions from one refusing to comply with his bid. 20-211.

COMPLAINT.

In criminal case, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

COMPOUNDING CRIME.

Illegality of contract for, see CONTRACTS.

CONDEMNATION.

Of property, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

CONDITIONAL SALE.

See SALE.

CONDITIONS.

See COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

Evidence of, see EVIDENCE.

CONSENT.

Of insurer to change of beneficiary, see INSURANCE.
Judgment by, see JUDGMENT.

CONSEQUENTIAL INJURIES.

Compensation for, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

CONSIDERATION.

For note, see BILLS AND NOTES.

For contracts generally, see CONTRACTS.

Parol evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

CONSOLIDATION.

Of actions or proceedings, see ACTION OR SUIT.

CONSPIRACY.

Picketing, see PICKETING.

Strikes, see STRIKES.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Sunday law, see SUNDAY.

Construction of constitution.

Homestead, liberal construction of constitutional provisions as to. 20-270.

Legislative construction of constitutional provision of no weight when there is no doubt as to its proper construction. 20-972.

Delegation of power.

Barbers, delegation of power to regulate. 20-1112.

Pool rooms and billiard rooms, validity of statute authorizing local option elections as to prohibition of. 20-1491.

Rights of persons and property; equal protection and privileges; due process of law; police power.

Provisions against taking or damaging property without compensation, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

What trades or occupations shall be regulated, nature and extent of regulations, as questions for legislature, in exercise of police power. 20-1105.

—aliens.

Constitutional guaranty of right of people to alter their form of government, aliens as within protection of. 20-1515.

Equal protection of the laws to aliens in conducting business. 20-1515.

Equal protection of the laws not denied to aliens by statute forbidding them to attack form of government of the United States. 20-1515.

Freedom of speech, constitutional right of, as including right of aliens to publish disloyal or abusive matter concerning form of government. 20-1515.

—barbers.

Constitutionality of statute regulating barbers. 20-1111 (case p. 1105.)

—billiard and pool rooms; bowling alleys.

Constitutionality of regulations as to. 20-1482 (case p. 1478).

—cigarettes.

Constitutionality of anti-cigarette legislation. 20-926 (case p. 921).

—dower.

Constitutionality of statutes in relation to dower. 20-1330 (case p. 1326).

—freedom of speech, press, and worship.

Political, social, or industrial propaganda deemed to be of a dangerous tendency, validity of legislation directed against. 20-1535 (cases pp. 1515, 1527).

Sectarianism in schools. 20-1351 (case p. 1334).

Alien's right to publish disloyal or abusive matter concerning form of government as within constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech. 20-1515.

Statute forbidding publication of disloyal, scurrilous, or abusive matter concerning form of government of United States, its military forces, flag, or uniform, validity of. 20-1515.

Statute forbidding all acts, peaceable or otherwise, having for their object the destruction of organized government, or acts inciting revolution against such organized government. 20-1527.

—master and servant.

Workmen's compensation, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

—nonresidents.

Dower statute which discriminates against nonresidents. 20-1332 (case p. 1326).

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

—propaganda.

Political, social, or industrial propaganda deemed to be of a dangerous tendency, validity of legislation directed against. 20-1535 (cases pp. 1515, 1527).

—remedies; notice and hearing; evidence.

Seizure of vessel to answer in damages for injury as sufficient notice to owner of vessel of pendency of the proceeding. 20-1079.

Making possession of cigarette and cigarette papers prima facie evidence of selling and keeping for sale. 20-921.

—vested rights.

Constitutionality of statutes in relation to dower as affecting rights previously vested by contract or death of husband. 20-1333.

CONSTRUCTION.

Of Constitution, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Of contract, see CONTRACTS.

Of pleading, see PLEADING.

Of statutes generally, see STATUTES.

Of Workmen's Compensation Act, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

CONSUMPTION.

See TUBERCULOSIS.

CONTAGIOUS AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

See also ANTHRAX; DIPHTHERIA; INFLUENZA; SCARLET FEVER; TUBERCULOSIS; TYPHOID FEVER.

Tenant's rights and remedies because of existence of infectious disease on premises, where he remains in possession. 20-1408.

CONTEMPT.

In general; what constitutes.

Reflection on judge by grand or petit juror as contempt. 20-908 (case p. 900).

Definition of criminal contempt. 20-900.

Direct contempt by presenting libelous charge against judge in open court, though parties responsible are absent when contents of paper become known. 20-900.

Intent as affecting question of one's guilt of contempt. 20-900.

Privilege of grand jurors in filing report criticizing judge. 20-900.

Purpose of punishment of persons guilty of criminal contempt. 20-900.

Procedure.

Arraignment, right to, of one charged with direct contempt. 20-900.

Statement, filing after issuance of warrant for arrest of persons in contempt. 20-900.

Venue, right of accused to change of. 20-900.

Purging from contempt.

Truth of charge as purging grand jurors of contempt in charging judge with bias and favoritism. 20-900.

Power as to.

Judge not required to proceed for libel rather than to punish for contempt one filing libelous charge against him. 20-900.

Power of courts of record of general jurisdiction. 20-900.

CONTRACTORS.

Definition of contractor. 20-658.

CONTRACTS.

Bank president's power to make, see BANKS.

Bills and notes, see BILLS AND NOTES.

Parol and extrinsic evidence as to written contracts, see EVIDENCE.

Parties plaintiff in action on, see PARTIES.

Specific performance of, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Implied agreements.

Landlord's right to recover on quantum meruit for use and occupation in case of partial eviction of tenant. 20-1378.

Consideration.

Consideration for note, see BILLS AND NOTES.

Parol evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

Validity of promise based on invalid paving assessment. 20-1326 (case p. 1317).

Baseless demand, extension of time to pay, or forbearance to sue thereon, as consideration for promise. 20-1317.

Mutuality.

Restrictive covenant in contract of employment, effect of lack of mutuality of obligation on validity of. 20-869 (case p. 846).

Offers and their acceptance or withdrawal.

Acceptance by mail, see POSTOFFICE.

Mistake in using word "October" for "September" in exercising option to secure services from September to September. 20-846.

Statute of Frauds.

Entirety of parol contract to sell land and personal property. 20-361.

-sufficiency of writing or memorandum.

Check or note as memorandum satisfying Statute of Frauds. 20-363 (cases pp. 357, 361).

Deed left with grantor's attorney for delivery. 20-357.

Tender of deed by vendor, not accepted by vendee. 20-361.

Construction.

Question for jury as to, see TRIAL.

Construction of contract for compensation of architect. 20-1356 (case p. 1352).

Giving meaning to all the words of a contract. 20-1352.

Reconciling different parts of contract unless so radically repugnant that no rational interpretation will render them effective. 20-1332.

Written portions of document as prevailing over printed parts. 20-1232.

Agreement to render theatrical performances for twenty weeks as a contract to perform on Sunday. 20-846.

-entirety.

Architect's contract to prepare plans and specifications. 20-1362.

Parol contract to sell land and personal property. 20-361.

Validity; public policy.

Contracts between husband and wife, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Attorney and client, agreement or understanding between, to use money for unlawful purpose as affecting their rights inter se. 20-1476 (case p. 1471).

Attorney's agreement to use money placed in his hands by client to compound a felony. 20-1471.

Husband's and wife's agreement that survivor shall have entire property of both. 20-1272.

Sunday performance of theatrical nature, validity of contract for. 20-846.

Year's service, employer's right to contract for, with employees entering service. 20-1508.

-gambling and wager contracts.

Nature and validity of "hedging" transactions on the commodity market. 20-1422 (case p. 1417).

-contracts in restraint of trade.

Validity and enforceability of restrictive covenant in contracts of employment. 20-861 (cases pp. 846, 857).

Performance; breach.

Specific performance, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

-recovery for extra work.

Architect's right to additional compensation for extra work. 20-1360.

-breach.

Injunction against breach, see INJUNCTION.

Strike to compel breach of contract, validity of. 20-1508.

Abandonment; repudiation.

Disagreement between parties to land contract as to which shall pay taxes for a certain year as an abandonment or termination of the contract. 20-357.

Husband's and wife's agreement that survivor shall take all their property, wife's right to repudiate. 20-1272.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Question for jury as to abandonment.
20-357.

CONVERSION.

See TROVER AND CONVERSION.

CORPORATIONS.

Service of process on, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Officers.

Bank officers, see BANKS.

Service of process on corporate officers,
see WRIT AND PROCESS.

When resignation of officer of private corporation becomes effective. 20-267 (case p. 264).

COST, INSURANCE, AND FREIGHT.

See C. I. F.

COTTON.

Bank president's power to bind bank by contract for purchase of. 20-984.

COUNTERCLAIM.

See SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

COUPONS.

*Constitutionality of legislation prohibiting use of coupons or other extraneous articles in cigarette package.
20-932.*

COURTS.

Contempt of, see CONTEMPT.

Judges, see JUDGES.

Relation to other departments of government.

Review of orders of public service commission, see PUBLIC SERVICE COM-MISSION.

Review of decisions of workmen's compensation commissions, see WORK-MEN'S COMPENSATION.

— political questions.

*Determination of controversy within political party. 20-1035 (case p.
1030).*

Recognition and vindication by courts of rights accorded by decisions of political parties. 20-1030.

— legislative department; statutes.

Refusal to declare statute unconstitutional except where conflict between act and Constitution is clear. 20-1105.

Workmen's compensation, question whether liability exists to compensate workmen under, as judicial. 20-994.

— municipal matters.

Reasonableness of ordinance passed in exercise of express power. 20-206.

Loss of jurisdiction.

Divorce proceedings, jurisdiction of orders in, not lost where motion to open the judgment is made at term at which orders were entered, and continued from time to time. 20-827.

State and territorial courts.

Jurisdiction of Nebraska district courts to protect minors and enforce paternal obligations. 20-809.

COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Conditional delivery of note, see BILLS AND NOTES.

Parol evidence that note was conditional,
see EVIDENCE.

Condition to grant of license, see LICENSE.

*What is "outhouse" or "outbuilding."
20-234 (case p. 230).*

CREDIBILITY.

Of witnesses, see WITNESSES.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

CRIMINAL CONVERSATION.

Action for, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

CRIMINAL LAW.

Bail, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Compounding crime, see COMPOUNDING CRIME.

Violation of liquor law, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

New trial, see NEW TRIAL.

See also ARSON; BURGLARY; EXTORTION; GAMING; ROBBERY; SEDITION.

Intent.

Political, social, or industrial propaganda of dangerous tendency; intent as element of offense for violating statute directed against. 20-1549.

Former jeopardy.

Conviction or acquittal upon charge of murder of, or assault upon, one person as bar to prosecution for like offense against another person at the same time. 20-341 (case p. 328).

Procedure.

Failure or refusal to instruct as prejudicial error, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Evidence in criminal case, see EVIDENCE.

Election between counts, see TRIAL.

Instructions in criminal case generally, see TRIAL.

Waiver of rights by accused.

Statutory provision as to time for pronouncing sentence after a plea of guilty, waiver of. 20-1441.

Arraignment.

Contempt, right of one charged with direct contempt to arraignment. 20-900.

Pleading; demurrer.

Bail bond, plea to the indictment as terminating liability of sureties. 20-615.

Right to withdraw plea of guilty. 20-1445 (case p. 1441).

Statute requiring plea of guilty to be made by accused himself; sufficiency of compliance with. 20-1441.

Review of discretion as to withdrawal of plea of guilty. 20-1441.

State's right to answer over upon overruling of its demurrer to pleading in criminal case. 20-328.

Judgment; sentence.

Bail bond, discharge of sureties on pronouncement of judgment or sentence. 20-629.

Waiver of statutory provision as to time for pronouncing sentence after plea of guilty. 20-1441.

CROSSINGS.

Accidents at railroad crossings, see RAILROADS.

CUSTODY.

Of infant, see INFANTS.

DAMAGES.

Review of, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Amendment of pleading as to, see PLEADING.

Award of, in connection with specific performance, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Liability of person causing injury for aggravation thereof by accident. 20-524 (case p. 520).

Recent variations in rate of foreign exchange as affecting damages for tort. 20-899 (case p. 884).

Restrictive covenant in contract of employment, effect of provision for liquidated damages or penalty on enforceability of. 20-870.

DEAFNESS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that deafness suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-25.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

DEATH.

Question for jury as to cause of, see TRIAL.

Right of action for.

Contributory negligence of beneficiary as bar to action for death. 20-1214.

Contributory negligence of one beneficiary as affecting other beneficiaries. 20-1214.

Question for jury as to contributory negligence of beneficiary. 20-1214.

Effect of.

Payment of checks by bank after drawer's death, see BANKS.

Gift of personal check as revoked by death of drawer. 20-174.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Claims against decedent's estate, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Exemptions, see EXEMPTIONS.

Conveyance in fraud of creditor, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

DECEDENTS' ESTATES.

Administration of, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Agent's personal liability for meddling with. 20-119.

DECEIT.

See FRAUD AND DECEIT.

DECLARATIONS.

Admissibility of, in evidence, see EVIDENCE.

DEEDS.

Undelivered deed as memorandum satisfying Statute of Frauds, see CONTRACTS.

Covenants in, see COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Execution of power by, see POWERS.

DEFENSES.

In civil actions, see ACTION OR SUIT.

In homicide case, see HOMICIDE.

DELAY.

In enforcing specific performance of contract to sell real estate as depriving purchaser of right to rents and profits. 20-357.

DELEGATION OF POWER.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

DELIRIUM TREMENS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that delirium tremens suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-26.

DELIVERY.

Of note, see BILLS AND NOTES.

Of personalty sold, see SALE.

DEMONSTRATION.

Who is responsible for injury by automobile during demonstration or instruction by dealer. 20-194 (case p. 189).

DEMURRER.

See PLEADING.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

DEPOSITIONS.

Admissibility of, in evidence, see EVIDENCE.

DERMATITIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that dermatitis contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-27.

DESTRUCTION.

Bail bond, liability of sureties as terminated on destruction of indictment. 20-607.

DETAINER.

See FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

DETINUE.

See REPLEVIN.

DIABETES.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that diabetes suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-27.

DIPHThERIA.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that diphtheria contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-27.

DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

See TRIAL.

DISCHARGE.

Of jury, see TRIAL.

DISCRETION.

Review of, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

DISLOYALTY.

Political, social, or industrial propaganda deemed to be of a dangerous tendency, validity of legislation directed against. 20-1535 (cases, 1515, 1527).

DISMISSAL OR DISCONTINUANCE.

Libel, motion to dismiss complaint to hold judge liable for placing libel on files of court as proper. 20-398.

DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

In general.

Conclusiveness of divorce decree, see JUDGMENT.

Decree rendered in other state, see JUDGMENT.

Findings of fact by appellate court in divorce proceeding not binding on supreme court. 20-827.

Loss of jurisdiction of orders entered in divorce proceeding. 20-827.

Custody and support of children.

Foreign decree as to custody, see JUDGMENT.

Consolidation of appeal from order appointing a guardian for infant child and a motion to modify an order for its custody, entered in divorce proceedings. 20-827.

Court acquiring jurisdiction of divorce as entitled to dispose of custody of children. 20-827.

Father not relieved of duty to support minor child by divorce. 20-809.

Jury's verdict as to maintenance and custody of child as advisory merely. 20-827.

Third person's right as against father to custody of children after death of mother, to whom custody was awarded. 20-827.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE.

DOMICIL.

Guardian's right to change domicil of child. 20-827.

DONATION.

See GIFT.

DOWER.

Constitutionality of statutes in relation to dower. 20-1330 (case p. 1326).

Validity of statute providing for forfeiture of dower by nonresidents. 20-1326.

DRAYMEN.

See TEAMING AND TRUCKING.

DRUMMERS.

See COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

DRUNKENNESS.

See DELIRIUM TREMENS.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

DUGOUT.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-243.

DUST STORM.

As affecting liability for injury to one struck by train or street car. 20-1067, 1072.

ELECTION.

Between counts in indictment, see TRIAL.

ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

Liens, statutory provision for foreclosure of, as exclusive. 20-1079.

Lessor's action of replevin to recover leased machine from third person as an election to recover possession discharged from the lease. 20-83.

ELECTIONS.

Determination of controversies within political party. 20-1035 (case p. 1030).

Court's refusal to determine controversies between rival political committees or factions of such committees. 20-1030.

Recognition and vindication by courts of rights accorded by decision of political parties. 20-1030.

ELEVATORS.

Tenant's rights and remedies against landlord for failure to furnish elevator service where tenant remains in possession. 20-1414.

EMINENT DOMAIN.Consequential injuries.

Levee, right to compensation for damages to land left outside of. 20-302 (case p. 296).

Right under constitutional provision against taking or damaging, to recover in other than an eminent domain proceeding, for consequential damages to property no part of which is taken. 20-516 (case p. 512).

Cutting off switch connections with railroad from land not taken in construction of levee. 20-296.

Public improvements, action against counties to recover compensation for injuries to property by construction of. 20-512.

EMPLOYEES.

In general, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

ENCEPHALITIS.

See SLEEPING SICKNESS.

ENTIRETY.

Of contract, see CONTRACTS.

ENTRY.

Forcible entry, see FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT.

See ASSIGNMENT.

EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.

See ESTOPPEL.

EQUITY.

Review on appeal of findings in equity, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Specific performance of contract, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Tender of money received as necessary in equitable suit to rescind compromised judgment. 20-1239.

ERYSIPELAS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that erysipelas contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-27.

ESPIONAGE ACT.

Validity of. 20-1536.

ESTOPPEL.

By judgment.

Divorce or separation decree as basis of estoppel in action for alienation of affections or criminal conversation. 20-943 (case p. 936).

Equitable estoppel.

Change of position to his injury of party asserting estoppel, necessity of. 20-936.

Reliance of party asserting estoppel, necessity. 20-936.

— by laches or silence.

Husband's failure to set up, in proceeding against him by his wife, for divorce, her misconduct with another man, as estopping him from maintaining action against such man for criminal conversation. 20-936.

— by inconsistency.

Probate of wife's will by husband, and electing not to take under it, as estopping him from setting up contract by which he was to receive her entire estate. 20-1272.

— who may set up.

Criminal conversation, right of defendant in action for husband's conduct in settling property rights with his wife in suit for divorce as an estoppel. 20-936.

EVICTIION.

Of tenant, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

EVIDENCE.

Objections and exceptions to, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Presumption as to, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Constitutionality of rules of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Receipt of new evidence in jury room as ground for new trial, see NEW TRIAL.

Judicial notice.

Rules and regulations of political parties and tribunals for their administration. 20-1030.

Workmen's compensation commission, judicial notice by, that hides on which employee was working were of a kind that frequently contained anthrax germs, and that person working about them with an open wound would receive the germs. 20-1.

Presumptions and burden of proof.

Constitutionality of statute as to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

— laws; ordinances.

Ordinance passed in pursuance of statutory authority presumptively valid. 20-206.

Ordinance regulating speed of trains through municipality presumptively valid. 20-1214.

— establishing allegations or claims.

New trial, burden of establishing grounds on which asked. 20-1180.

— cause.

Workmen's compensation, presumption that claim comes within provisions of statute. 20-1.

Documentary evidence.

Decree of divorce or separation as evidence in action for alienation of affections or criminal conversation. 20-951.

— depositions; former testimony.

Deposition taken for and used at first trial, admissibility upon second trial. 20-86.

Admissibility of evidence at trial of action against carrier and refrigerator company for injury to shipment of fruit, which was dismissed without prejudice to the merits, as between plaintiff and the refrigerator company, after holding carrier not liable, in subsequent action against the refrigerator company for the same cause. 20-86.

Parol and extrinsic evidence concerning writings.

General rule as to. 20-984.

Right to prove oral parts of contract partly oral and partly written which are consistent with the written parts. 20-984.

Writer of letter capable of but one construction not entitled to testify as to what he meant by it. 20-392.

— condition.

Admissibility of parol evidence to show that a bill or note was conditional, or given for a special purpose. 20-421 (cases pp. 412, 417).

Conditional character of contract, parol evidence to show. 20-412.

Condition attached to note, right to show in suit by one not a holder in due course. 20-417.

— consideration.

Evidence of want of consideration admissible in action by one not a holder in due course. 20-417.

— identity.

Admissibility of extrinsic evidence, to identify the person or persons intended to be designated by the name in which a contract is made. 20-992 (case p. 984).

— character of party.

Signature of firm name "by" the name of an individual, parol evidence as to capacity in which individual signed. 20-984.

Opinions and conclusions.

Note may be established by proof of signature of maker. 20-392.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

20 A.L.R.—99.

Admissions.

Note may be established by admissions of maker. 20-392.

Evidence wrongfully obtained.

Evidence discovered by search of person arrested without warrant. 20-639.

Declarations; confidential communications; threats.

Evidence of declarations to impeach witness, see WITNESSES.

Homicide, declarations of one accused of, made prior to killing. 20-1249.

Threats by plaintiff's counsel to defendant in civil suit. 20-1352.

Wife's communications to attorney acting for both husband and wife in settling property rights as privileged in action by husband to establish rights under agreements made. 20-1272.

Relevancy and materiality.

Evidence to impeach witness, see WITNESSES.

Conversion of machine, evidence as to purpose of putting store in name of witness, which resulted from foreclosure of a mortgage which did not include the machine. 20-83.

Weight, effect, and sufficiency.

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain findings of court, see APPEAL.

Necessity and sufficiency of evidence that disease contracted by applicant for workmen's compensation is attributable to employment. 20-4 (case p. 1).

EXCEPTIONS.

To raise question for appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

EXCHANGE.

Damages for tort as affected by recent variations in rate of foreign exchange. 20-899 (case p. 884).

EXECUTION.

Sale under, see JUDICIAL SALE.

Levy under, see LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Of power, see POWERS.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Personal liability of agent of executor or administrator for injuries caused to third person. 20-119.

Loose declarations of recipient of gift of money that it is to be repaid at her death as obligating her estate to repay it. 20-392.

EXEMPTIONS.

Homestead exemptions, see HOMESTEAD.

Set-off or counterclaim of judgment under which exempt property has been seized against claim based on the wrongful seizure. 20-276 (case p. 270).

Damages because of unlawful invasion of plaintiff's homestead rights. 20-270.

EXTENSION OF TIME.

As consideration for promise, see CONTRACTS.

EXTORTION.

Servant's or agent's personal liability for injury inflicted on third person by extortion committed on behalf of employer. 20-112.

EXTRA WORK.

Recovery for, see CONTRACTS.

EYES.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that eye inflammation or infection contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-28.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

FACTIONS.

Controversies between factions of political parties, see ELECTIONS.

FACTORS.

Personal liability to true owner as for a conversion of factor selling property for one who is not the owner. 20-182.

FACTS.

Review of, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

FALLING OBJECTS.

Master's liability for injury to employee by stone rolling down hill. 20-371.

FAMILY PURPOSE DOCTRINE.

See AUTOMOBILES.

FELLOW SERVANTS.

Servant's liability for injury to, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

FELON.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that felon suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-34.

FELONY.

Compounding, see COMPOUNDING CRIME.
In general, see CRIMINAL LAW.

FINDINGS.

Review of, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Privilege within law of libel of findings or the like of judge or person acting in judicial capacity. 20-407 (case p. 398).

FIRE INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

FIRES.

Personal liability of servants or agents for injury to third person by fire. 20-145.

Carrier's liability for destruction by, of property during transportation, see CARRIERS.

FISHERIES.

Injury to licensee fishing from log rollway in lake. 20-197.

Public's right to fish in waters of navigable lake stocked with fish by the public. 20-197.

Trespass upon fast land of riparian owner, or use of his deck or railway of logs while fishing in waters of navigable lake. 20-197.

FOE.

As affecting liability for injury to one struck by train or street car. 20-1067, 1073, 1077, 1079.

FORBEARANCE.

As consideration for promise, see CONTRACTS.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

Agent's or servant's personal liability for. 20-138.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Judicial process, right to revocatory action where fraudulent sale was made by. 20-665.

FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

See JUDGMENT.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND PRESS.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

FORFEITURE.

Of bail bond, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

FREIGHT CARRIERS.

See CARRIERS.

FORMER ADJUDICATION.

See JUDGMENT.

FUTURES.

Validity of contracts dealing in futures, see CONTRACTS.

FORMER TESTIMONY.

Admissibility of, in. evidence, see EVIDENCE.

GAMING.

Validity of gambling transactions, see CONTRACTS.

What is an "outhouse" where people resort, within meaning of statute as to gaming. 20-243.

FRAUD AND DECEIT.

Statute of frauds, see CONTRACTS.

Fraudulent conveyance, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

In making proofs of loss by insured, see INSURANCE.

As ground for impeachment of foreign judgment, see JUDGMENT.

Servant's or agent's personal liability for injury to third person by fraud committed on behalf of employer. 26-112.

Bank's act in accepting deposit with knowledge of insolvency as fraud. 20-1203.

GARAGE.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-237.

GAS.

Advance in price conditions due to World War as affecting valuation of property for rate-making purposes. 20-555 (case p. 542).

Service charge for gas meter, validity of. 20-225 (cases pp. 217, 222).

Amortizing loss inflicted by rate fixed by commission, and spreading it over a term of years. 20-542.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

See CONTRACTS.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Compensation to which company is entitled as founded upon the fair value of the property, and not upon stock issued or debts owed. 20-542.

Constitutional requirement that property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation as affecting gas rates. 20-542.

Costs of operation as essential element in fixing rates. 20-542.

Right to rate which will make securities of gas company attractive to investors. 20-542.

Tax imposed upon profits of gas company as element to be considered in fixing rates. 20-542.

GAS INHALATION.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that inhalation of poisonous gas by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-35.

GASTRALGIA.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that gastralgia suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-35.

GIFT.

Donor's own check as subject of gift. 20-177 (case p. 174).

Check on commercial bank, accompanied by drawer's pass book, as valid gift. 20-174.

Check not collected before death of drawer not validated by statute permitting bank to pay checks during a specified time after drawer's death. 20-174.

Recipient of money intended as a gift as a trustee for the donee. 20-392.

GRAND JURY.

Contempt by reflection on judge by grand jurors. 20-903 (case p. 900).

Right to indict judge for commission of crime. 20-900.

GREENHOUSE.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-239 (case p. 230).

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

Guardian's right to custody of child, see INFANTS.

Consolidation of appeal from order appointing a guardian for infant child and a motion to modify an order for its custody, entered in divorce proceedings. 20-827.

Decree awarding custody of child to father as divesting mother's right to make testamentary disposition of it. 20-827.

Domicil of ward, guardian's right to change. 20-827.

Interests of child as controlling upon question of its guardianship. 20-827.

GUEST.

Automobile, liability of owner or operator for injury to guest. 20-1014 (case p. 1008).

GUILT.

Plea of, see CRIMINAL LAW.

HAIL STORM.

As affecting liability for injury to one struck by train or street car. 20-1059.

HANDWRITING.

Proof of, see EVIDENCE.

HEALTH.

Anti-cigarette legislation, see CIGARETTES.

Barbers, regulations as to, in interest of health. 20-1113 (case p. 1105).

HEARING.

Necessity of, to constitute due process of law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

HEART DISEASE.

See also ANEURISM.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that heart disease suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-36.

HEAT.

Landlord's duty as to, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Loss by, without external ignition, as within fire insurance policy. 20-967.

HEAT STROKE.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that heat stroke suffered by applicant for compensation, is attributable to his employment. 20-42.

HEDGING.

Nature and validity of "hedging" transactions on the commodity market. 20-1422 (case p. 1417).

HEMORRHAGE.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that hemorrhage suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-44.

HERNIA.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that hernia suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-48.

HIGHWAYS.

Injury to one while coasting in the street. 20-1433 (case p. 1429).

Coasting as contributory negligence. 20-1429.

Coasting as a nuisance. 20-1429.

Hand sled as a vehicle within law requiring vehicles to carry lights. 20-1429.

Question for jury as to negligence of one coasting in highway. 20-1429.

HODGKIN'S DISEASE.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that Hodgkin's disease suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-57.

HOMESTEAD.

Damages sustained because of unlawful invasion of plaintiff's homestead rights as exempt. 20-270.

Judgment under which homestead property was seized as a set-off or counterclaim against claim based on the wrongful seizure. 20-270.

Liberal construction of constitutional and statutory provisions. 20-270.

Policy of the law as to homestead. 20-270.

What included in homestead right. 20-270.

HOMICIDE.

In general.

Former jeopardy, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Evidence generally, see EVIDENCE.

Impeachment of witnesses, see WITNESSES.

Homicide as affected by time elapsing between wound and death. 20-1006 (case p. 1004).

Evidence of declarations of accused. 20-1249.

Failure or refusal to instruct in homicide case. 20-1180.

Necessity that death occur within a year and a day after infliction of the wound to constitute murder. 20-1004.

Statute providing for punishment of murder as referring to that crime as it existed at common law. 20-1004.

While engaged in unlawful act.

Homicide by one of several persons attempting to commit robbery, by discharge of gun with which victim is covered when he grabs for it, as murder in the first degree. 20-1441.

Defense of property.

Actual, and not merely constructive, possession necessary to justify homicide in defense of property. 20-1249.

Necessity of making every effort to repel aggression before killing aggressor. 20-1249.

When homicide may be considered as in defense of property. 20-1249.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Self-defense.

Gaming house, patrons' right to protect themselves against police officers raiding the place. 20-1180.

Instructions as to. 20-1180.

Limit on right of patrons of gambling house to protect themselves against excessive force of police officers raiding the place. 20-1180.

HORSEPLAY.

Recovery under workmen's compensation act for injury sustained through, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

HOTEL.

See INNKEEPERS.

HOURS.

Regulating hours within which pool and billiard rooms and bowling alleys may be kept open. 20-1487.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Husband's liability for wife's torts.

Automobiles, liability under family-purpose doctrine where spouse of owner is using car. 20-1471.

Liability of husband for independent tort of wife. 20-528 (case p. 525).

Property rights; transactions between.
Dower right, see DOWER.

Wife's interest in husband's life insurance, see INSURANCE.

— community property.

Partner's interest in partnership real estate as community property. 20-374 (case p. 369).

— contracts with, or conveyances to, each other.

Partnership agreement between husband and wife, validity. 20-1304 (cases pp. 1272, 1303).

Contract that survivor should have entire property of parties. 20-1272.

Estoppel of husband to set up contract by which he was to receive wife's entire estate at her death. 20-1272.

Necessity that agreement by wife to leave her property to her husband be executed as a testamentary instrument. 20-1272.

Privileged character of communications by wife to attorney acting for both husband and wife in settling property rights in action by husband to establish rights under agreements made. 20-1272.

Witness's recollection of contract between husband and wife, made twenty years before, as sufficient to sustain finding that it provided for passing of wife's separate property to husband upon her death. 20-1272.

Alienation of affections or criminal conversation.

Decree of divorce or separation as res judicata or basis of estoppel or evidence in action for alienation of affections or criminal conversation. 20-943 (case p. 936).

Estoppel to maintain action for criminal conversation. 20-936.

HYDROPHOBIA.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that hydrophobia contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-57.

ICE HOUSE.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-239.

IDENTITY.

Extrinsic evidence to identify the person or persons intended to be designated by the name in which a contract is made. 20-992 (case p. 984).

IMPEACHMENT.

Of witnesses, see WITNESSES.

IMPLIED TRUST.

See TRUSTS.

INCONSISTENCY.

Estoppel by, see ESTOPPEL.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.

Employer's liability for injuries to employees of, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Liability of, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Who are, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act for injury to, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

In general.

Ball bond, failure to indict or destruction of indictment as terminating liability of sureties. 20-507, 600.

Burglary, necessity of naming owner of building in indictment or information for. 20-510 (case p. 502).

Necessity of stating whether owner of building burglarized was a corporation or a partnership. 20-502.

Quashing.

Ball bond, quashing of indictment as terminating liability of sureties. 20-604.

What questions raised by motion to quash information for burglary on ground that facts stated do not constitute a public offense. 20-502.

INDUSTRIAL INSURANCE.

Workmen's compensation, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

INDUSTRIAL PROPAGANDA.

Validity of legislation directed against industrial propaganda deemed to be of a dangerous tendency. 20-1535 (cases pp. 1515, 1527).

INFANTS.

In general.

Jurisdiction in matters pertaining to, see COURTS.

Guardian for, see GUARDIAN AND WARD.

Injury to, while coasting, see HIGHWAYS.

Contributory negligence of, see NEGLIGENCE.

Minor children as wards of the state. 20-809.

Custody.

In case of divorce, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Nonresidence as affecting one's right to award of custody of child. 20-838 (case p. 827).

Decree awarding custody of child to father as divesting mother's right to make testamentary disposition of it. 20-827.

Father's primary right to custody. 20-827.

Father's lack of property because he had transferred it to his wife as affecting his right to custody. 20-827.

Guardian's right to custody as against father merely because former is more prosperous. 20-827.

Intoxicating liquors, occasional indulgence in, by father as affecting his right to custody of child. 20-827.

Nonresidence as affecting father's right to custody of child in preference to aunt. 20-827.

Preference of child as affecting right to custody as between guardian and father. 20-827.

Judgment against.

Right of infant to set aside consent judgment in action for personal injuries. 20-1249 (case p. 1239).

Consent judgment not binding on infant unless based on facts judicially ascertained upon a real hearing. 20-1239.

Avoiding judgment on ground of infancy merely. 20-1239.

INFLUENZA.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that influenza contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-57.

INFORMATION.

In criminal case, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

INFRINGEMENT.

Of patent, see PATENTS.

INJUNCTION.

Interference by landlord with tenant's possession or enjoyment as ground for injunction. 20-1390.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Irreparable injury justifying injunction. 20-846.

Picketing in aid of illegal strike, injunction against. 20-1508.

Theatrical performer, injunction against breach of restrictive covenant in contract employing. 20-846.

INNKEEPERS.

Injury to guest in consequence of passing through wrong doorway. 20-1154.

INSANITY.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that insanity suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-59.

INSOLVENCY.

Of bank, see BANKS.

Bankruptcy, see BANKRUPTCY.

When trader is insolvent. 20-1203.

INSTRUCTIONS.

See TRIAL.

INSURANCE.

Vested interest of beneficiary. In policy which provides for change of beneficiary. 20-253.

Change of beneficiary.

Vested interest of beneficiary, see supra.

Refusal of insurer to consent to change of beneficiary in life policy as affecting right of trustee in bankruptcy of insured. 20-256 (case p. 253).

Proofs of loss.

Overvaluation in proof of loss of property insured as fraud avoiding fire insurance policy. 20-1164 (case p. 1159).

Risks and causes of loss, injury, or death.

Death or injury intentionally inflicted on another as due to accident or accidental means. 20-1123 (case p. 1118).

Loss by heat, smoke, or shot without external ignition as within fire insurance policy. 20-967 (case p. 964).

Question for jury as to whether death of insured was accidental. 20-1118.

Interest in proceeds.

Second wife's right to take under policy designating "wife" or "widow" as beneficiary, issued during life of first wife. 20-959 (case p. 956).

Lien of beneficiary who pays dues from his own money to keep certificate in force. 20-956.

Actions.

Direction of verdict in action on insurance policy, see TRIAL.

INTENT.

As element of criminal offense, generally, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Contempt as affected by. 20-900.

INTENTIONAL INJURIES.

To insured, see INSURANCE.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

See COMMERCE.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Transportation of concealed liquor as an offense within presence of officer authorizing arrest without a warrant. 20-652 (case p. 639).

Breach of peace by having intoxicating liquor in possession. 20-639.

Breach of peace by transportation of intoxicating liquor. 20-639.

Custody of child, parent's right to as affected by occasional indulgence in intoxicating liquor. 20-827.

INVITEES.

Liability for injury to, see NEGLIGENCE.

IRRIGATION.

Landlord's breach of covenant to pay assessments on water stock, so that tenant is deprived of water, as a partial eviction. 20-1363.

JEOPARDY.

See CRIMINAL LAW.

JUDGES.

Contempt by conduct affecting, see CONTEMPT.

Privilege of statement or publication by, see LIBEL AND SLANDER.

Attorney general as entitled to defend judge sued for libel in matter pertaining to the duties of his office. 20-398.

Grand jury's right to indict judge for commission of crime. 20-900.

JUDGMENT.

In criminal case generally, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Estoppel by, see ESTOPPEL.

Admissibility in evidence, see EVIDENCE.

Against infant, see INFANTS.

Set-off of, see SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

*Effect and conclusiveness.*Foreign judgment, see infra.

Consent judgment against infant, see INFANTS.

Decree of divorce or separation as res judicata or basis of estoppel or evidence in action for alienation of affections or criminal conversation. 20-943 (case p. 936).Judgment in favor of defendant or respondent in an action or proceeding involving a matter of public right or interest as a bar to a subsequent action or proceeding by a different plaintiff or relator. 20-1183 (case p. 1127).

Final judgment for defendant sustaining demurrers to complaint as one upon the merits. 20-1127.

Divorce decree as conclusive upon strangers as to status of parties, but not as to facts litigated. 20-936.

Infants, decree awarding custody to father as divesting mother's right to make testamentary disposition of child. 20-827.

Attack upon and relief against.

Setting aside judgment against infant, see INFANTS.

Meritorious defense, necessity that motion for vacation of judgment for lack of service of process show existence of. 20-264.

Tender of money received as necessary in equitable suit to rescind compromised judgment. 20-1239.

Foreign judgment.Alienation of affections or criminal conversation, foreign divorce decree as bar to action for. 20-953.Extraterritorial effect of provision in decree of divorce as to custody of child. 20-815 (case p. 809).

Mere procedure resulting in judgment or in the modification thereof not protected by full faith and credit clause. 20-809.

State is required to give to foreign judgment only the effect to which it is entitled where rendered. 20-809.

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

See EVIDENCE.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

Privilege as to, see LIBEL AND SLANDER.

JUDICIAL SALE.

Chilling bids or preventing competition as ground for setting aside. 20-665.

JURISDICTION.

Of admiralty, see ADMIRALTY.

Raising question of, for first time on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

In divorce proceedings generally, see DIVORCE.

Lack of, as ground for impeachment of foreign judgment, see JUDGMENT.

In general, see COURTS.

JURY.

Presumptions on appeal as to conduct of, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Conduct of, or interference with, as ground for reversal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Grand jury, see GRAND JURY.

Affidavits of, in support of new trial, see NEW TRIAL.

JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE.

See HOMICIDE.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

KIDNEY DISEASE.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that kidney disease suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-60.

LABOR.

Priority of lien for, see LIENS.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Right of members of, to quit work at will, see MASTER AND SERVANT.
Strikes, see STRIKES.

LAKES.

Riparian rights in beds and shores of, see WATERS.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Injunction as between landlord and tenant, see INJUNCTION.

Set-off and counterclaim in actions between landlord and tenant, see SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Lease.

Unavoidable or inevitable casualty or accident, what is, within provision of lease. 20-1101 (case p. 1098).

Interference with possession of tenant; eviction.

Rights and remedies of tenant who remains in possession of all or part of the premises against landlord for interfering with his possession or enjoyment. 20-1369 (cases pp. 1363, 1366).

Discordant music produced by tenant of other portions of premises, landlord's liability. 20-1366.

General rule as to what constitutes eviction. 20-1363.

Irrigation, landlord's failure to furnish water for, as partial eviction. 20-1363.

Odors from other parts of building interfering with enjoyment of premises, waiver of right to object. 20-1366.

Taxes.

Change in time for assessment or payment of taxes as affecting provision for payment of taxes during term of lease. 20-1502 (case p. 1497).

Rent.

Unavoidable or inevitable casualty or accident, what is, within provision of lease as to effect of, on rent. 20-1101 (case p. 1098).

Rights and remedies of tenant who remains in possession of all or part of the premises against landlord for interfering with his possession or enjoyment. 20-1363 (cases pp. 1363, 1366).

Freezing of pipe causing hot water heater to burst, as an "unavoidable casualty" which will relieve tenant from liability for rent. 20-1098.

LAW OF THE ROAD.

See AUTOMOBILES; HIGHWAYS.

LAWYERS.

See ATTORNEYS.

LEAD POISONING.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that lead poisoning contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-61.

LEASE.

In general, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Lessor's action of replevin to recover leased machine from third person as an election to recover possession discharged from the lease. 20-83.

Lessor's right to maintain trespass for leased chattel wrongfully appropriated by third person. 20-83.

LEVEE.

Compensation for damages to land left outside of. 20-302 (case p. 296).

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Exemptions, see EXEMPTIONS.

Sale under, see JUDICIAL SALE.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.Who liable.

Servant's or agent's personal liability for libel published while acting in capacity of servant or agent. 20-116.

Privileged communications.

Findings or the like of judge or person acting in judicial capacity as privileged within law of libel. 20-407 (case p. 399).

Demurrer to complaint containing averment that defendant acted maliciously as preventing defendant from raising question of privilege. 20-398.

LICENSE.

Liability to licensees generally, see NEGLIGENCE.

Negligence as to licensees, generally, see NEGLIGENCE.

From public; of right to do business.

Barbers, constitutionality of regulations requiring license of. 20-1111 (case p. 1105).

'Pool and billiard rooms and bowling alleys, licensing and regulation of. 20-1482 (case p. 1478).

LIENS.In general.

As interference with interstate commerce, see COMMERCE.

For nonmaritime tort, see SHIPPING.

Independent contractor, who is a contractor not entitled to lien. 20-665.

Priorities.

Priority as between lien for repairs and right of seller under conditional contract. 20-249 (cases pp. 244, 246).

General rule as to priority of labor lien. 20-244.

Enforcement.

Exclusiveness of statutory remedy for foreclosure. 20-1079.

LIFE INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

LIGHTS.

See also ANCIENT LIGHTS.

Tenant's rights and remedies in case of destruction of air or light by landlord. 20-1400.

Hand sled as a vehicle within law requiring vehicles to carry lights. 20-1429.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

See DAMAGES.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS.

See PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

LOCAL LEGISLATION.

See STATUTES.

LOCATION.

Pool and billiard rooms and bowling alleys, regulation of location of. 20-1456.

LOCKJAW.

See TETANUS.

LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that locomotor ataxia suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-61.

LOGS.

Riparian owner's right to use submerged lands of lake to store logs. 20-197.

LOST INSTRUMENTS.

Specific performance of lost contract, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

MAILS.

See POSTOFFICE.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

MANDAMUS.

- Bible reading in school, mandamus to require board of education to comply with ordinance as to. 20-1334.
 Necessity of clear legal right of relator to have performance of the act he seeks to coerce performance of. 20-1030.

MASTER AND SERVANT.In general.

- Validity of contracts of employment, generally, see CONTRACTS.
 Labor organizations, see LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.
 Picketing, see PICKETING.
 Strikes, see STRIKES.

Restrictive covenant in contract of employment, validity and enforcement of. 20-861 (cases pp. 846, 857).

Termination of relation.

- Right of employee who has not signed contract for definite term to leave service at will. 20-1508.

Injuries to servants.

- Recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.
 General rule as to master's duty as to places and appliances. 20-678.
 Foreman's negligence in uprooting stump on a hillside, for use as fuel, so that it causes a stone to roll down on person working at foot of hill. 20-671.
 Question for jury as to negligence of foreman, rendering working place unsafe. 20-671.

—employee of independent contractor.

- Statute as to duty of owners, contractors, etc., to protect employees, as rendering property owner liable for injury to employee of independent contractor by breaking of scaffold rope. 20-654.

Liability of master for wrongful acts of servant or independent contractor.

- Injury by servant driving automobile, see AUTOMOBILES.

—for acts of independent contractors.

Elements bearing directly upon the quality of a contract as affecting the character of one as independent contractor. 20-684 (cases pp. 654, 658, 662, 665, 671, 674, 678).

Definition of "contractor." 20-558.

Definition of independent contractor. 20-678.

Employer's intention to retain control over person performing work, presumption as to. 20-678.

General rule as to what may be considered in determining relation between proprietor and one doing work for him. 20-678.

Question for jury as to who is an independent contractor. 20-678.

Liability of servant.

Personal liability of servant to third person for injuries caused by the performance or nonperformance of his duties to his employer. 20-97 (cases pp. 83, 86).

Liability of independent contractor.

Injury to private property by casting material thereon where contractor follows plans prepared by municipal authority, where the right to hold the city liable has been lost. 20-674.

MASTOIDITIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that mastoiditis suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-61.

MEAT HOUSE.

As an "outhouse." 20-289.

MEMORANDUM.

Sufficiency of, to satisfy statute of frauds, see CONTRACTS.

MINORS.

See INFANTS.

MISFEASANCE.

Agent's liability for, see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

MOBS AND RIOTS.

Carrier's liability for loss of property by acts of, see CARRIERS.

MONEY.

Trover for, see TROVER AND CONVERSION.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED.

See ASSUMPSIT.

MOTOR VEHICLES.

See AUTOMOBILES.

MOVING.

Validity of statute or ordinance in relation to moving vans and moving operations. 20-210 (case p. 206).

MOVING PICTURES.

Tenant's right and remedies where odors escape into theater from other portions of premises. 20-1366.

Tenant's rights and remedies where loss results from discordant music produced by tenant of other portion of building. 20-1366.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Power as to license, see LICENSE.

Public improvements by, see PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Ordinances.

Court's power to review ordinance, see COURTS.

- validity.

Presumptions and burden of proof as to validity, see EVIDENCE.

Licensing and regulation of pool and billiard rooms and bowling alleys. 20-1482 (case p. 1478).

Moving vans and moving operations, validity of ordinance in relation to. 20-210 (case p. 206).

Reasonableness of regulation of speed of railroad train. 20-1222 (case p. 1214).

Court's right to inquire into reasonableness of ordinance. 20-206.

MURDER.

See HOMICIDE.

MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

MUTUALITY.

Of contract, see CONTRACTS.

MUTUAL WILLS.

Repudiation by one party of contract to execute. 20-1272.

NAME.

Indictment or information for burglary, necessity of naming owner of building in. 20-510 (case p. 502).

Variance between name in bail bond and in judgment of forfeiture. 20-411 (case p. 410).

Right of individual to adopt business name. 20-984.

NEGLIGENCE.

In use of automobile, see AUTOMOBILES.

Of bailee, see BAILMENT.

Of carrier, see CARRIERS.

Measure of damages for, see DAMAGES.

In highway, see HIGHWAYS.

Of innkeeper, see INNKEEPERS.

Of master or servant, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Agent's liability for, see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

In operation of railroad, see RAILROADS.

In operation of street railway, see STREET RAILWAYS.

Correctness of instructions as to, see TRIAL.

Dangerous premises.

Duty of owner to licensee as to changing condition of premises. 20-202 (case p. 197).

Liability for injury to person on business premises in consequence of passing through wrong doorway. 20-1147 (case p. 1138).

Bank's duty to provide safe and suitable entrances to banking rooms. 20-1138.

Fisherman using private rollway as a fishing ground as an invitee, where riparian owner points out where he thinks fish may be caught. 20-197.

Notice to licensees using log rollway in a lake for fishing purposes, of danger from changed condition. 20-197.

Person entering bank to transact business with it and with an employee, who is also a municipal officer, as an invitee. 20-1138.

Question for jury as to negligence. 20-1138.

Contributory negligence.

Passenger's contributory negligence, see CARRIERS.

Of beneficiary as bar to action for death, see DEATH.

Of person injured in highway, see HIGHWAYS.

Of person injured on railroad track, see RAILROADS.

As question of law or fact generally, see TRIAL.

Passing through wrong doorway as contributory negligence. 20-1147 (case p. 1138).

Question for jury as to negligence of one entering business place in failing to look to the floor of the vestibule before crossing the threshold of an open door, apparently leading into the business room. 20-1138.

— of children.

General rule as to. 20-1214.

Question for jury as to. 20-1239.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

See BILLS AND NOTES; CHECKS.

NEPHRITIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that nephritis suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-62.

NEURASTHENIA.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that neurasthenia suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-62.

NEW TRIAL.

Grounds for.

Receipt of document or statement in jury room constituting new evidence as ground for new trial in criminal case. 20-1187 (case p. 1130).

Burden of establishing grounds on which new trial is asked. 20-1180.

Conclusiveness of decision of trial court as to whether new evidence was introduced in jury room. 20-1180.

Evidence against reputation of accused, introduced in jury room. 20-1180.

Affidavit for.

Defective verification of affidavit; right to correct. 20-1180.

Verification of affidavits by jury in support of new trial taken before attorney for appellant. 20-1180.

NOLLE PROS.

Bail bond, entry of nolle pros. as terminating liability of sureties. 20-602.

NONFEASANCE.

Agent's liability for, see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

NONRESIDENTS.

Custody of child, nonresidence as affecting one's right to award of. 20-838 (case p. 827).

Discrimination against, in statute as to dower. 20-1330 (case p. 1326).

NOTICE.

Necessity of, to constitute due process of law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

NUISANCES.

In highway, see HIGHWAYS.

Billiard room as nuisance. 20-1496.

Bowling alley as nuisance, subject to regulation or abatement. 20-1496.

OBJECTIONS.

To raise question for appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

OBSTRUCTION.

Of ancient lights, see ANCIENT LIGHTS.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

OCCUPATION TAX.

See LICENSE.

ODORS.

Tenant's rights and remedies where his enjoyment is interfered with by odors from other portions of premises. 20-1366.

OFFICERS.

Of bank, see BANKS.

Of private corporation, generally, see CORPORATIONS.

Self-defense as justification for killing, see HOMICIDE.

Judges, see JUDGES.

Absolute duty imposed where power is granted to officer in permissive language. 20-589.

OPTIONS.

Offers and their acceptance or withdrawal generally, see CONTRACTS.

Definition of. 20-846.

ORAL CONTRACTS.

In general, see CONTRACTS.

ORAL EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE.

ORDINANCES.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

OSTEOMYELITIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that osteomyelitis suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-62.

OUTHOUSE.

What is an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-234 (case p. 230).

OVEREXERTION.

See ANEURISM.

PARALYSIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that paralysis suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-63.

PARENT AND CHILD.

Custody of child, see INFANTS.

PARESIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that paresis suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-65.

PAROL CONTRACTS.

In general, see CONTRACTS.

PAROL EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE.

PARTIES.

Husband and wife who agree between themselves to render service under a contract with a third person as proper and necessary parties to an action to enforce the latter contract. 20-1303.

PARTNERSHIP.

Between husband and wife, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Community character of interest of a partner in partnership real property. 20-374 (case p. 369).

Action against partnership without showing membership. 20-984.

Action by partnership in firm name. 20-984.

Common-law partnership as a contractual status only, and not a legal entity. 20-984.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Joint interest of partners in property upon dissolution of firm. 20-1272.

PASSENGER CARRIERS.

See CARRIERS.

PATENTS.

Agent's or servant's personal liability for infringement of patent. 20-118.

PEOPLE.

Délégation of power to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

PEREMPTORY INSTRUCTIONS.

See TRIAL.

PERITONITIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that peritonitis suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-65.

PERSONAL INJURIES.

Admiralty jurisdiction of action for, see ADMIRALTY.

To unborn child, see AFTER-BORN CHILDREN.

Presumption and burden of proof as to cause of, see EVIDENCE.

To servant, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

In general, see NEGLIGENCE.

Agent's liability for, see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Lien for, on ship, see SHIPPING.

Instructions in action for, see TRIAL.

Infant's right to set aside consent judgment in action for. 20-1249 (case p. 1239).

PERSONAL SERVICES.

Injunction against breach of contract for, see INJUNCTION.

PERSONALTY.

Mortgage of, see CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

Sale of, see SALE.

PETITION.

Constitutional right of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

PHLEBITIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that phlebitis suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-66.

PICKETING.

Injunction against, see INJUNCTION.

PIGSTY.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-239.

PLACE.

Of signature on bill or note, see BILLS AND NOTES.

PLAINTIFF.

Parties plaintiff, see PARTIES.

PLEADING.

In criminal case, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Construction.

Language as controlling figures in case of discrepancy in claim of damages between words and figures. 20-1079.

Admissions.

Admissions by demurrer, see infra.

Amendments.

Amendment of complaint as to amount of damages made just before the jury retires. 20-1079.

Withdrawal.

In criminal case, see CRIMINAL LAW.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

20 A.L.R.—100.

Striking out.

Prejudicial error as to, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Demurrer.

Demurrer in criminal case, see CRIMINAL LAW.

— admissions by.

Allegations of fact contained in plea admitted by demurrer. 20-328.

Inference drawn by pleader from facts stated not admitted. 20-328.

— effect; practice.

Conclusiveness of rulings on demurrer, see JUDGMENT.

Libel, demurrer to complaint containing averment that defendant acted maliciously as barring defendant from raising question of privilege. 20-398.

State's right to answer over upon overruling of its demurrer to pleading in criminal case. 20-328.

PNEUMONIA.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that pneumonia contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-66.

POISONING.

See ARSENICAL POISONING; BLOOD POISONING; LEAD POISONING.

POLICE.

Homicide of police officer; self-defense as justification. 20-1180.

POLICE POWER.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

POLITICAL PARTIES.

In general, see ELECTIONS.

Judicial notice as to, see EVIDENCE.

POLITICAL PROPAGANDA.

Validity of legislation directed against political propaganda deemed to be of a dangerous tendency. 20-1535 (cases pp. 1515, 1527).

POOL ROOMS.

Licensing and regulation of. 20-1482 (case p. 1473).

POSSESSION.

Of plaintiff in replevin, see REPLEVIN.

Necessity and sufficiency of, in action for trespass, see TRESPASS.

POSTOFFICE.

Mailing of letter exercising option as closing the contract. 20-846.

Right to accept offer by mail. 20-846.

POWER.

Tenant's rights and remedies for landlord's failure to furnish power where tenant remains in possession. 20-1412.

POWERS.

Will as exclusive means of exercising power conferred by will to dispose of property. 20-388 (case p. 383).

PRACTICAL CONSTRUCTION.

Of constitutional provision, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

PRACTICAL JOKE.

Recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act for injury sustained through, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

PRAYER.

In schools, see SCHOOLS.

PREJUDICE.

Evidence to show prejudice of witness, see WITNESSES.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

Bail, termination of liability of sureties by appearance of principal at preliminary examination. 20-597.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

FETATAL INJURY.

See AFTER-BORN CHILDREN.

PRESIDENT.

Powers of bank president, see BANKS.

PRESS.

Freedom of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

PRESUMPTIONS.

On appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.
In general, see EVIDENCE.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Parol evidence on question of agency, see EVIDENCE.

Agent's authority; liability of principal.

Appropriation of money deposited by third persons with agent, principal's liability. 20-374.

Receipt of money on deposit as within agent's implied authority. 20-374.

— ratification.

Knowledge of facts, necessity of, to render one liable for tortious acts of another, on theory of ratification. 20-1460.

Disaffirmance of ratification of acts of agent, made without knowledge of material facts. 20-1460.

Liabilities of agent.

Personal liability of agent to third person for injuries caused by the performance or nonperformance of his duties to his employer. 20-97 (cases pp. 83, 86).

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Surety on bail bond, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

PRIORITY.

As between liens, generally, see LIENS.

PRIVILEGE.

In libel case, see LIBEL AND SLANDER.

PROBATE.

Of will, see WILLS.

PROCEDURE.

In contempt case, see CONTEMPT.

PROCESS.

Abuse of, see ABUSE OF PROCESS.

Service of, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

PROOFS OF LOSS.

By insured, see INSURANCE.

PROPAGANDA.

Validity of legislation directed against political, social, or industrial propaganda deemed to be of a dangerous tendency. 20-1535 (cases pp. 1515, 1527).

PROPERTY.

Homicide in defense of, see HOMICIDE.

PUBLIC.

Conclusiveness of judgment as to, see JUDGMENT.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Right to compensation for injuries arising from construction of, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Validity of promise based on invalid paving assessment. 20-1326 (case p. 1317).

Defects in assessments, attempt to cure, by appeal to board of supervisors. 20-1317.

Defects in assessments, provisions in ordinance for curing, which contravene terms of city charter. 20-1317.

Defects in street improvement proceedings, provisions for curing not applicable to preliminary steps necessary to confer jurisdiction. 20-1317.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

PUBLIC MONEY.

Appropriation of, see APPROPRIATIONS.

Public aid of sectarian schools. 20-1334.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

See SCHOOLS.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS.

Review of orders, failure to state facts on which findings of commission are based. 20-542.

PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

See also CARRIERS; GAS; RAILROADS; TELEPHONES; WATERS.

Rates.

Gas rates, see GAS.

Public utility rate valuations as affected by advance in price conditions due to World War. 20-555 (case p. 542).

Reproduction cost, less depreciation, as basis for fixing value of property. 20-542.

QUASHING.

Of indictment, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

QUO WARRANTO.

Judgment for defendant in quo warranto proceeding by individual relator acting for the general public as bar to subsequent proceeding by another relator to effect the same result. 20-1127.

RAILROADS.

For all questions involving the duty and liability of a railroad company as a carrier to its patrons, or the public, or governmental control of railroad companies, see CARRIERS.

Speed regulations.

Reasonableness of regulation of speed of railroad train. 20-1222 (case p. 1214).

Injuries to persons on or near tracks.

Weather conditions as affecting liability for injury to one struck by train. 20-1064 (case p. 1061).

General rule as to duty of railroad company to trespasser on track. 20-1061.

Weather conditions as affecting liability for injury to trespasser. 20-1061.

Accidents at crossings.

Coaster colliding with train at crossing. 20-1440.

Engineer's or fireman's personal liability for injury to one at highway crossing. 20-142.

RAIN STORM.

As affecting liability for injury to one struck by train or street car. 20-1069, 1074, 1076.

RATES.

Gas rates, see GAS.

Of public utilities, generally, see PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

RATIFICATION.

Of acts of agent, see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

RATE.

Tenant's rights and remedies where his possession or enjoyment is interfered with by rats. 20-1394.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

See BROKERS.

REAL PROPERTY.

Deeds, see DEEDS.

Homestead, see HOMESTEAD.

Community property, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Power as to, see POWERS.

Rights and liabilities on sale of, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

REASONABLE DOUBT.

Instructions as to, see TRIAL.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

RECIPROCAL WILLS.

See MUTUAL WILLS.

RECOGNITION OF UNION.

Validity of strike to compel, see STRIKES.

RECOGNIZANCE.

See BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

RECORDS.

Drayman, ordinance requiring filing of records of destination of household goods moved by. 20-206.

RED FLAG.

Validity of legislation prohibiting possession or display of. 20-1548.

REFRIGERATOR COMPANY.

Liability of refrigerator company which contracts with carrier to supervise loading of fruit and to ice the cars, to shipper for negligent performance of undertaking. 20-86.

RELEASE.

Of sureties on bail bond, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM.

See SCHOOLS.

REMEDIES.

Election of, see ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

RENT.

For gas meter, see GAS.

In general, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Delay of purchaser in enforcing specific performance of contract to sell real estate as depriving him of right to rents and profits. 20-357.

REPAIRS.

Priority of lien for, see LIENS.

REFPLEVIN.

Lessor's right to maintain trespass de bonis against third person who has wrongfully appropriated leased machine. 20-83.

REPUDIATION.

Of contract, see CONTRACTS.

RESIGNATION.

Of officer of private corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Validity of contracts in restraint of trade, generally, see CONTRACTS.

RESULTING TRUST.

See TRUSTS.

REVIVOR.

Revival of liability of bail, terminated by execution of appeal bond, on dismissal of the appeal. 20-636.

REVOCATION.

Of broker's authority to sell, see BROKERS.

Of gift of personal check by death of drawer. 20-174.

RHEUMATISM.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that rheumatism contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-72.

RINGWORM.

See CATTLE RINGWORM.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

RIOTS.

See MOBS AND RIOTS.

ROBBERY.

Homicide in attempt to perpetrate robbery, see HOMICIDE.

RUPTURE.

See HERNIA.

SABOTAGE.

Validity of legislation directed against. 20-1543.

SALE.

Priority as against conditional vendor, of lien for labor and repairs, see LIENS.

What constitutes delivery of goods sold under "c. i. f." contract. 20-1236 (case p. 1232).

C. i. f. contracts not affected by Uniform Sales Act. 20-1232.

Documents necessary to execute a sale c. i. f. 20-1232.

Insurance in name of seller, provision for as repugnant to c. i. f. contract. 20-1232.

Tender of the goods instead of the documents in case of c. i. f. contract. 20-1232.

SALES AGENT.

Personal liability of agent who sells property for one who is not the true owner as for conversion. 20-132.

SAMPLE ROOM.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-240.

SCARLET FEVER.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that scarlet fever contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-73.

SCHOOLHOUSE.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-240.

SCHOOLS.

Mandamus to school officers, see MANDAMUS.

Ectarianism in schools. 20-1351 (case p. 1334).

SCIATICA.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that sciatica contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-73.

SEAL.

Effect of, on validity of note, see BILLS AND NOTES.

SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

Admissibility of evidence secured by illegal search, see EVIDENCE.

SECTARIANISM.

In schools, see SCHOOLS.

SEDITION.

Validity of legislation directed against political, social, or industrial propaganda deemed to be of a dangerous tendency. 20-1535 (cases pp. 1515, 1527).

SELF-DEFENSE.

In case of homicide, see HOMICIDE.

SENTENCE.

For crime, generally, see CRIMINAL LAW.

SEPARATION.

See DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

SERVICE.

Of process, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

SERVICE CHARGE.

For gas meter, see GAS.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Availability of judgment under which exempt property has been seized as a set-off or counterclaim against claim based on the wrongful seizure. 20-276 (case p. 270).

Interference with possession or enjoyment of tenant who remains in possession of all or part of the premises, set-off of damages for, in action for rent. 20-1384.

SHED.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-241.

SHIPPING.

Power of the state to create and enforce liens on ships for a nonmaritime tort. 20-1095 (case p. 1079).

Tort committed by the ship itself within meaning of statute giving lien on vessel, what constitutes. 20-1079.

SIGNATURE.

Place of signature to note, see BILLS AND NOTES.

SLANDER.

See LIBEL AND SLANDER.

SLEEPING SICKNESS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that sleeping sickness suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-74.

SMELLS.

See ODORS.

SMOKE.

Loss by, without external ignition, as within fire insurance policy. 20-967 (case p. 964).

SMOKEHOUSE.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-241.

SMOKING.

Constitutionality of legislation prohibiting cigarette smoking. 20-931.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

SNOW STORM.

As affecting liability for injury to one struck by train or street car. 20-1070, 1075.

SPEECH.

Freedom of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

SOCIAL PROPAGANDA.

Validity of legislation directed against social propaganda deemed to be of a dangerous tendency. 20-1535 (cases pp. 1515, 1527).

Regulation of speed of railroad train, see RAILROADS.

SOOT.

Loss by, without external ignition, as within fire insurance policy. 20-967 (case p. 964).

SPONDYLITIS DEFORMANS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that spondylitis deformans suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-74.

SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS.

See PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

SPRINGHOUSE.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-242.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

See STATUTES.

SPUR TRACKS AND SIDINGS.

Cutting off switch connections with railroad from land not taken in construction of levee, right to damages for. 20-296.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

In general.

Agreement to make particular disposition of property by will enforceable against promisor's heirs, devisees, or personal representatives. 20-1272.

Lost contract, provable only by parol evidence specifically enforceable. 20-1272.

Right to enforce contract breach of which might be the foundation of civil action for damages. 20-1272.

Award of damages.

Delay of purchaser in enforcing performance of contract to sell real estate as depriving him of right to rents and profits. 20-357.

STABLE.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-242.

STATEMENT.

In contempt proceedings, see CONTEMPT.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

See CONTRACTS.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

STATUTES.

Appropriation bills, see APPROPRIATIONS.
Review of, by courts, see COURTS.

Validity in general.

Questioning for first time on appeal constitutionality of statute, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Resolving doubt as to validity in favor of statute. 20-1105.

- ambiguity.

Statute prohibiting acts having for their object the destruction of organized government. 20-1527.

- who may question validity.

Residents of state not entitled to attack statute on ground that it discriminates against nonresidents. 20-1105.

Necessity that one attacking constitutionality of statute show that it will violate his constitutional rights. 20-1515.

Title.

Anti-cigarette statutes. 20-935.

Local and special legislation.

Statute regulating barbers applicable only in cities in excess of 5,000 inhabitants. 20-1105.

Construction.

Liberal construction of homestead laws, see HOMESTEAD.

"Contractor," meaning of, as used in Workmen's Compensation Act. 20-658.

"Revolution," meaning of word as used in act forbidding acts inciting or attempting to incite revolution against or opposition to organized government. 20-1527.

STEP BOX.

Duty and liability of carrier as to "step box" or other device to facilitate entering and leaving car. 20-914 (case p. 908).

STILLHOUSE.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-242.

STOLEN PROPERTY.

Auctioneer's personal liability to true owner for sale of stolen property. 20-137.

Broker's personal liability to true owner for selling stolen property for principal. 20-134.

STORE.

Negligence as to condition of, see NEGLIGENCE.

STOREHOUSE.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-242.

STRAIN.

See OVEREXERTION.

STREET RAILWAYS.

As common carriers, see CARRIERS.

Coaster colliding with street car. 20-1439.

Weather conditions as affecting liability for injury to one struck by street car. 20-1070.

STRIKES.

Carrier's liability for loss of or damage to freight by acts of strikers, see CARRIERS.

Lawfulness of strike to compel collective bargaining. 20-1513 (case p. 1508).

Breach of existing contracts between employer and employees, validity of strike to compel. 20-1508.

STRIKING OUT.

Of pleading, see PLEADING.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

SUNDAY.

Barber shops, validity of Sunday closing statute. 20-1114.

Agreement to render theatrical performances for twenty weeks as a contract to perform on Sunday. 20-846.

Contract for Sunday performance of theatrical nature, validity of. 20-846.

TEAMING AND TRUCKING.

Validity of statute or ordinance in relation to moving vans and moving operations. 20-210 (case p. 206).

Notice of destination of household goods moved by draymen, ordinance requiring filing of, as interference with commerce. 20-206.

SUN STROKE.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that sun stroke suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-42.

TELEPHONES.

Advance in price conditions due to World War as affecting valuation for rate-making purposes. 20-555.

Tenant's rights and remedies against landlord for failure to furnish telephone service where tenant remains in possession. 20-1414.

SWITCH YARD.

Reasonableness of regulation of speed of railroad train in. 20-1230.

TERMINATION.

Of broker's authority, see BROKERS.

Of contract of employment, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

SYNDICALISM.

Validity of legislation directed against. 20-1543.

TESTAMENTARY CHARACTER.

Of instrument, see WILLS.

TAXES.

Landlord or tenant's duty to pay, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Definition of tax. 20-994.

Disagreement between parties to land contract as to which shall pay taxes for a certain year as an abandonment or termination of the contract. 20-357.

Gas rates, tax imposed upon profits of company as element to be considered in fixing. 20-542.

TETANUS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that tetanus contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-75.

THEATERS.

Sunday performance, see SUNDAY.

TAXPAYER.

Conclusiveness of judgment as to, see JUDGMENT.

THEATRICAL PERFORMER.

Restrictive covenant in contract employing. 20-846.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

THREATS.

Admissibility in evidence, see EVIDENCE.

TIME.

For giving appeal bond, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Extension of, as consideration for promise, see CONTRACTS.

Architect's compensation, when payable. 20-1861.

Withdrawal of plea of guilty, time for. 20-1447.

Statutory provision as to time for pronouncing sentence after plea of guilty, waiver of. 20-1441.

TITLE.

Of statute, see STATUTES.

TOBACCO.

See CIGARETTES.

TORTS.

Damages for, see DAMAGES.

Husband's liability for torts of wife, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Negligence generally, see NEGLIGENCE.

Agent's liability for, see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Lien on vessel for nonmaritime tort, see SHIPPING.

Liability for tortious acts of another, on theory of ratification. 20-1460.

TRADE.

Contracts in restraint of, see CONTRACTS.

TRAVELING.

Workmen's compensation, death or injury while traveling as, arising out of, and in the course of, employment. 20-319 (cases pp. 309, 316).

TRAVELING SALESMAN.

See COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

TREASON.

Political, social, or industrial propaganda deemed to be of a dangerous tendency, validity of legislation against as affected by provisions of Federal Constitution regarding treason. 20-1538.

TRESPASS.

Servant's or agent's personal liability to third person for trespass in the course of his employment. 20-109 (case p. 83).

Tenant's right to maintain action of trespass against landlord for interference with his possession or enjoyment. 20-1882.

Lessor's right to maintain trespass against third person wrongfully taking leased machine. 20-83.

Third person's order to do illegal act complained of as defense. 20-83.

TRIAL.

Evidence, see EVIDENCE.

New trial, see NEW TRIAL.

Witnesses, see WITNESSES.

Election between counts.

Election between several sales in prosecution for wrongful sale of cigarettes. 20-921.

What may be considered by jury.

Jury's right to consider fact that an implement which broke, to injury of one engaged in unloading a vessel, was furnished by the owner of the vessel, as bearing upon the question of his knowledge of the defect. 20-1079.

Questions of law and fact—cause.

Shooting of insured by another as an accident. 20-1118.

—relation of parties.

Who is independent contractor. 20-678.

—fraud.

Insured's fraudulent intent in overvaluing property in proofs of loss. 20-1172.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

— contracts.

Abandonment of contract as question for jury. 20-357.

Independent contractor, question whether contract creates relation of. 20-678.

— negligence.

Bank's negligence in maintaining two doors in vestibule to bank, one of which leads to a flight of steps to the basement. 20-1138.

Negligence of foreman of bridge gang in loosening stump on hillside, causing stone to roll down upon workman. 20-671.

Contributory negligence of one entering business place in failing to look to the floor of the vestibule before crossing the threshold of an open door, apparently leading into the business room. 20-1138.

Court's duty to declare contributory negligence as matter of law where, on facts disclosed, all fairminded men would agree. 20-1138.

Infant's negligence when acting in emergency as question for jury. 20-1239.

Direction of verdict.

Viewing evidence in aspect tending to support verdict upon review of denial of motion to direct verdict for defendant. 20-1118.

Refusal to direct verdict for defendant in action on accident insurance policy where court could not have said, as matter of law, that death was not accidental. 20-1118.

Verdict not directed for defendant if, on any reasonable view of evidence, plaintiff could recover. 20-83.

Discharge of jury.

Bail bond, discharge of jury as terminating liability of sureties. 20-623.

Instructions.

Necessity of exception or objection to failure or refusal to instruct, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Prejudicial error as to, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Homicide by killing officer raiding gambling house, instruction as to effect on defendant's right of self-defense of fact that he was a participant in the game. 20-1180.

— on evidence and facts; reasonable doubt.

Duty to charge as to reasonable doubt as between different degrees of crime or included offenses. 20-1258 (case p. 1249).

Homicide, effect of instruction in prosecution for killing officer raiding gambling house, that if jury believed defendant was not interested in running any of the tables, but was only a patron of the place, his right of self-defense was not abridged by the fact that he was participating in the game, to place upon him the burden of proving that he was not the proprietor of the house. 20-1180.

— as to negligence.

General terms in instructions given at request of plaintiff, that they should find for him if defendant was found to be negligent. 20-525.

Instruction to find for plaintiff if defendant is found negligent as charged in complaint as incorporating exaggerated forms of lack of ordinary care charged in the complaint. 20-525.

Instruction exempting driver of automobile from liability for injuring pedestrian if she temporarily took her eyes off the street to give attention to her children. 20-525.

Verdict.

Direction of verdict, see supra.

Review of verdict on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

TROVER AND CONVERSION.

Agent's liability, see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Servant's liability, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Bailee's liability in action of trover for money commingled with his own funds. 20-378 (case p. 374).

Set-off or counterclaim of judgment under which exempt property has been seized in action for conversion based on the wrongful seizure. 20-276.

Relevancy and materiality of evidence in action for conversion. 20-83.

TRUCKING.

See TEAMING AND TRUCKING.

TRUSTEES.

Bankruptcy trustees, see BANKRUPTCY.
In general, see TRUSTS.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

TRUSTS.

In deposit received after insolvency of bank, see BANKS.

Agreement to devise property to certain person as impressing a trust upon the property in the hands of devisees to whom the property is given in violation of the agreement. 20-1272.

Gift, recipient of money intended as, as a trustee for the donee. 20-392.

TRUTH.

Purging from contempt by showing truth of charge, see CONTEMPT.

TUBERCULOSIS.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that tuberculosis contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-75.

TUMOR.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that tumor resulting from accident to applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-80.

TYPHOID FEVER.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that typhoid fever contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-80.

UNBORN CHILDREN.

See AFTER-BORN CHILDREN.

UNCERTAINTY.

In statute, see STATUTES.

UNFINISHED DWELLINGHOUSE.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-243.

UNOCCUPIED HOUSE.

As an "outhouse" or "outbuilding." 20-243.

UREMIA.

Workmen's compensation, necessity and sufficiency of evidence that uremia suffered by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-80.

VACATION.

Of judgment, see JUDGMENT.

VALUATION.

For rate-making purposes, see GAS; PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

Overvaluation by insured in proofs of loss, see INSURANCE.

VARIANCE.

Between name in bail bond and in judgment of forfeiture. 20-411 (case p. 410).

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Abandonment or termination of contract, see CONTRACTS.

Specific performance of contract, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

VENUE.

Contempt, right of one charged with, to change of venue. 20-900.

VERDICT.

Review of, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Direction of, see TRIAL.

Bail bond, return of verdict as discharging sureties from liability. 20-624.

VERIFICATION.

Of affidavits in support of motion for new trial. 20-1180.

VERMIN.

Tenant's rights and remedies where his possession or enjoyment is interfered with by vermin. 20-1804.

VESTED RIGHTS.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

VIOLATION OF LAW.

Homicide while engaged in unlawful act, see HOMICIDE.

Coasting, effect of ordinance against, on right to recover for injury while coasting in street. 20-1434.

WAGERING CONTRACTS.

See CONTRACTS.

WAIVER.

Of rights by accused, see CRIMINAL LAW.
Tenant's waiver of rights, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

WAR.

Political, social, or industrial propaganda interfering with military forces or war, validity of legislation directed against. 20-1547.

Public utility rate valuations as affected by advance in price conditions due to World War. 20-555 (case p. 542).

WARD.

See GUARDIAN AND WARD.

WAREHOUSE.

Freight car used as warehouse as an "outhouse." 20-237.

WARRANT.

Arrest without warrant, see ARREST.

WATER.

Tenant's rights and remedies for landlord's failure to furnish water where tenant remains in possession. 20-1412.

WATERS.

In general.
Right to fish, see FISHERIES.

Logs, right of owner of land on lake to use submerged land for storing. 20-197.

Public water supply.

Valuations for rate-making purposes as affected by advance in price conditions due to World War. 20-555.

WEATHER.

State of weather as affecting liability for injury to one struck by train or street car. 20-1064 (case p. 1061).

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

WIDOW.

Dower of, see DOWER.

Second wife's right to take under insurance policy designating wife or widow as beneficiary issued during life of first wife. 20-959.

WIFE.

See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

WILLS.

In general.

Power conferred by, see POWERS.

Specific performance of contract to will property, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Right of one party to contract to execute mutual wills to repudiate contract. 20-1272.

What passes by.

Property not owned by testator at time of death not affected by will. 20-1272.

Testamentary character.

Necessity that agreement to will property be executed as a testamentary instrument. 20-1272.

Probate.

Estoppel of husband by probating wife's will and electing not to take under it, to set up contract by which he was to have her entire estate. 20-1272.

Description of beneficiaries; class gifts.

Right of devisee of precedent estate to take under limitation over to heirs or next of kin of the testator. 20-356 (case p. 351).

Devise to next of kin as referring to those entitled to take under Statute of Distribution. 20-351.

WIND STORM.

As affecting liability for injury to one struck by train or street car. 20-1072.

WITHDRAWAL.

Of plea, see PLEADING.

WITNESSES.

Impeaching.

Evidence of statement by witness in homicide case which he denied having made. 20-1249.

Lapse of years since conviction of witness for crime as preventing evidence thereof to affect his credibility. 20-1249.

Credibility.

Evidence to impeach credibility, see ante.

Reversal or new trial in criminal case because of statement in jury room affecting credibility of witness. 20-1193.

WORDS AND PHRASES.

Anthrax. 20-1.

Cause. 20-606, note.

Cerebral embolism. 20-81, note.

Check. 20-174.

Contractor. 20-658.

Criminal contempt. 20-900.

Criminal syndicalism. 20-1544, note.

Delivered. 20-425, note.

Emergency. 20-972.

Greenhouse. 20-230.

Hedge. 20-1417.

Hedging. 20-1422, note.

Incite. 20-1527.

Independent contractor. 20-678.

Inevitable casualty. 20-1101, note.

Malfeasance. 20-86, 20-104, note.

Misfeasance. 20-86, 20-104, note.

Next of kin. 20-351.

Nonfeasance. 20-86, 20-104, note.

Option. 20-846.

Out building. 20-230, 234, note.

Outhouses. 20-230, 234, note.

Owned. 20-253.

Pulmonary embolism. 20-81, note.

Red flag. 20-1548, note.

Revolution. 20-1527.

Sabotage. 20-1544, note.

Tax. 20-994.

Unavoidable casualty. 20-1098, 1101, note.

Value. 20-542.

Wages. 20-665.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.Constitutionality of statute.

Constitutionality of provision of Workmen's Compensation Act for contribution to general fund in absence of dependents of deceased workman. 20-1001 (case p. 994).

Judicial power, legislative power to confer upon industrial commission. 20-994.

Rehabilitation of disabled employees generally, legislative power to provide for. 20-994.

Construction of statute generally.

Presumption that word "contractor" is used in the sense commonly employed. 20-658.

Power to determine whether liability exists to compensate a workman as judicial. 20-994.

Persons and employments within statute.

Ohio corporation, with branch at Minneapolis, as within Minnesota compensation act as to employees of branch. 20-316.

Who is an independent contractor, not entitled to benefit of compensation act. 20-658.

Traveling salesman injured outside of state. 20-316.

What injuries or diseases are within act.

Death or injury while traveling as arising out of and in the course of employment. 20-319 (cases pp. 309, 316).

Necessity and sufficiency of evidence that disease contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-4 (case p. 1).

Right to compensation in case of injuries sustained through horseplay or fooling. 20-882 (cases pp. 870, 872).

Necessity that injury occur in the service of the master and by reason thereof. 20-309.

Injury to boy while he was playing a joke upon a fellow servant. 20-872.

Defenses.

Rule of master, disregard of, by employee which results in injury, as affecting right to compensation. 20-872.

Practices.

Necessity and sufficiency of evidence that disease contracted by applicant for compensation is attributable to his employment. 20-4 (case p. 1).

Judicial notice by compensation commission. 20-1.

— review of decisions of commissions.

Evidence, examination of, by court on review of decision of commission. 20-872.

WORSHIP.

Freedom of, see SCHOOLS.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

Absence of, or defect in, as ground for setting aside judgment, see JUDGMENT.

Resignation of officer of corporation before service of process on him. 20-264.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

L.R. ries vol-2).

ce of.

ke

ree
ng that for his mis-

lena.
re-son.

se-NT
it?

L

1873

